18 This verse can be read as a continuation of Abraham's address to his people or as the beginning of a break in the story of Abraham, which then resumes in v. 24 (IK). In either reading, communities have certainly denied before you serves as a reminder and a consolation to the Prophet Muhammad that, as in the case of Abraham, previous communities rejected the messengers sent to them, though the messengers eventually prevailed. That Muhammad and other prophets are only responsible for the clear proclamation—that is, for delivering God's Message—is emphasized in many passages (e.g., 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 36:17; 42:48; 64:12).

19–23 Most commentators see these verses as a break in the story of Abraham, which is resumed in v. 24. Others interpret them as a continuation of Abraham's words in vv. 16–18.

19 This verse is one of many instances in which the Quran refers to God's Ability to "originate creation" as an argument for His Ability to resurrect, both of which are said to be easy for God, as in 30:27: He it is Who originates creation, then brings it back, and that is most easy for Him (see also 10:34; 27:64; 64:7; 10:4c; 30:11c).

20 Although here the call is to journey upon the earth and observe or reflect upon the created order, other instances call for one to journey in order to observe how the deniers fared in the end (3:137; 16:36; cf. 6:11; 27:69; 30:42). Regarding the spiritual value of journeying, see 30:9c. The next genesis (cf. 53:37) refers to resurrection after death (IJ, Ṭ).

21 This verse refers to God's Punishment and Mercy either in this life or after the next genesis (IJ), or both.

22 People cannot thwart God on earth, and the inhabitants of the heavens cannot thwart God in Heaven; or people cannot thwart God on earth, and were they in Heaven, they could not thwart Him there either (IJ, Q, Ṭ); cf. 8:59; 9:2–3; 11:20; 35:44; 42:31; 46:32; 72:12. And they have no protector or helper near at hand to benefit them or prevent God's Punishment from coming upon them (IJ); cf. 2:107; 9:116; 42:31.

23 Those who disbelieve in and thus deny God's signs, meaning His proofs (Ṭ), such as the Quran (IJ, Ṭ, Z), evidentiary miracles (Z), and the Resurrection, will despair of ever reaching the Garden (IJ) or of receiving God's Forgiveness (IJ).

24 His people means Abraham's people. For the story of Abraham and the fire, see 21:66–70c.

despair of My Mercy, and for them there shall be a painful punishment. (24) Yet the answer of his people was but to say, "Slay him, or burn him!" Then God saved him from the fire. Truly in that are signs for a people who believe. (25) And Abraham said, "You have taken idols apart from God on account of affection between you in the life of this world. Then on the Day of Resurrection you will disown one another, and you will curse one another; your refuge will be the Fire, and you will have no helpers." (26) And Lot believed him and said, "Truly I am fleeing unto my Lord. Truly He is the Mighty, the Wise." (27) And We bestowed upon him Isaac and Jacob, and We established prophethood and scripture among his progeny. We gave him his reward in this world, and in the Hereafter he shall truly be among the righteous. (28) And [We sent] Lot, when he said to his people, "Truly you commit indecency such as none in the worlds committed before you. (29) What! Do you come unto men, cut off the way, and commit reprehensible deeds in your gatherings?" Yet the answer of his people Truly in that are signs for a people who believe (cf. 6:99; 16:79; 27:86; 30:37; 39:52) refers to God saving Abraham from the fire. That the believers will be saved, despite severe trials, is a major theme of this sūrah.

25 That they have taken idols on account of affection . . . in the life of this world indicates that their love for the world is what leads them to worship idols, but as this love pertains entirely to this world, it will bring them no benefit in the Hereafter, and their affection will also be cut off (Ṭ). That the disbelievers will disown one another, and . . . curse one another points to the rancor within their breasts (see also 2:166–67; 7:38–39c; 34:31–33), since friends on that Day will be enemies to one another, save for the reverent (43:67).

26–35 For other narrative accounts of Lot (who is considered to be either Abraham's nephew or cousin) and his people, see 7:80–84; 11:77–83; 15:57–77; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 54:33–38. A similar Biblical narrative is found in Genesis 19.

26 Lot's declaration I am fleeing unto my Lord indicates that he is emigrating from Sodom to wherever God will provide him refuge, a practice similar to what is enjoined upon the first Muslim community in Makkah and lauded in 16:41–42: And those who emigrate for the sake of God, after having been wronged, We shall surely settle them in a good place in this world—and the reward of the Hereafter is greater, if they but knew—those who are patient and trust in their Lord (see also 2:218; 3:195; 4:100; 8:72–75; 9:20; 16:110; 22:58; 24:22). The present verse can thus be read as an extension of the theme in v. 10, when that verse is interpreted as being addressed to those Muslims who had failed to emigrate and thus suffered affliction and nearly apostatized.

27 Here him refers to Abraham. Isaac and Jacob are also identified as Divine gifts in 6:84 and 19:49 and referred to as an added gift in 21:72 (called added because Ishmael was born before Isaac). For the account of Abraham and his wife, Sarah, receiving the news of Isaac's impending birth, see commentary on 37:101; 51:28–30.

28–29 For the story of Lot, who was sent to the people of Sodom, see 7:80–84; 11:77–83; 15:57–77; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 54:33–38; and Genesis 19. Similarly in 7:80, Lot proclaims, What! Do you commit an indecency such as none in the worlds committed before you? In both accounts, indecency renders fāḥishah, which denotes an abominable sin and is most often used with reference to sexual transgression (see 4:15c). Here indecency is understood as a specific reference to was but to say, "Bring us God's Punishment, if you are among the truthful." (30) He said, "My Lord, help me against the people who work corruption." (31) And when Our envoys came unto Abraham with glad tidings, they said, "We shall surely destroy the people of this town; truly its people are wrongdoers." (32) He said, "Verily, Lot is in it." They said, "We know better who is in it. Assuredly We shall save him and his family, save for his wife; she is among those who lagged behind." (33) And when Our envoys came unto Lot, he was distressed on their account; yet he was constrained from helping them. And they said, "Be not afraid, nor grieve. We shall surely save thee and thy family, save for thy wife; she is among those who lagged behind. (34) Truly we shall bring down upon the people of this town a torment from Heaven for having sexual relations between men (cf. 7:81; 26:165–66; 27:55), a transgression that, based upon this verse, commentators say no people had committed on such a wide scale before Lot's people (IK; cf. 7:81).

Given the aggressive manner in which the men of Sodom are said to have approached other men in 11:77–79; 15:67–71; and Genesis 19, some maintain that Lot reproaches them for forcible rather than consensual sexual relations. However, the emphasis here and in 7:81; 26:165–66, and 27:54 is upon approaching men with desire and lust, whether consensual or not, and thus "leaving their spouses their Lord created for them" (see 26:166); also see 7:80–81c. That they cut off the way by preferring men over women means they cut off the way to having children (Ṭs), or they cut off the way of travelers, as, according to some accounts, they specifically targeted travelers to rape them (Ṭs). Their challenge to Lot is similar to the one the people of ʿĀd pose to the prophet Hūd (Then bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are among the truthful; 46:22; cf. 7:70) and the one the people of Thamūd pose to the prophet Ṣāliḥ (see 7:77).

30 Elsewhere, "working corruption" is connected in a more general manner to committing physical violence (see 2:11, 27, 30, 205; 5:33, 64; 7:127; 17:4; 26:183; 27:48–49; 28:4; 29:30; 38:28; 47:22). In other verses, it often implies a combination of spiritual and worldly corruption; see 7:74, 85–86, 103; 11:85; 13:25. For the Quranic understanding of corruption, see 30:41c.

31–32 For a more complete account of Abraham's encounter with the angels, to whom reference is made elsewhere as the guests of Abraham (15:51), see 51:24–34; 15:51–60; and commentary on 11:69–74. This town refers to the towns of Sodom and Gomorrah. Abraham also pleads with the angels concerning the people of Lot in 11:74, but here and in 15:58–60 the angels explain that they will destroy everyone in it, save for the family of Lot . . . except for his wife. . . . She is indeed among those who lagged behind (15:59–60; cf. 7:83; 26:171; 27:57). The angels' statement We know better who is in it means that they know better than Abraham who the wrongdoers and believers are, and that Lot is not among the wrongdoers (Ṭ). Those who lagged behind renders ghābirīn and indicates that they are destroyed in this life, completely covered over by dust (ghubār), and that they will be disgraced in the Hereafter, when their faces shall be covered with dust (ghabarah), overspread with darkness (80:40–41). For more on Lot's wife, see 7:83c.

33–34 Torment, which also appears in 2:59 and 7:134, renders rijz, a word that can also be understood to mean "defilement," as in 8:11, where God purifies Lot and his people from the defilement of Satan (rijz al-shayṭān), or to mean "plague." This verse could thus indicate that God will send a plague or some form of defilement upon Lot's people, though it most likely refers to the stones of baked clay (11:82; 15:74) or torrent of stones (54:34) said to have rained down upon them; see also 7:84.

been iniquitous." (35) And We indeed have left of it a manifest sign for a people who understand. (36) And unto Midian, [We sent] their brother Shuʿayb; he said, "O my people! Worship God and hope for the Last Day, and behave not wickedly upon the earth, working corruption." (37) But they denied him, and so the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode; (38) and ʿĀd, and Thamūd; [their fate] is certainly evident to you from their dwellings. Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them and thus turned them from the way, though they had been discerning; (39) and Korah, and Pharaoh, and Hāmān! Indeed, Moses brought them clear proofs, but they waxed arrogant upon the 35 God has left the punishment that He inflicted upon the people of Lot as a sign, a proof and a warning, for those who understand (Ṭ). It could refer to the ruins of their town, the stones or rain that came down upon them, or the account of their story (Z).

36–37 This discussion of Shuʿayb likely comes after that of Abraham and Lot, because the Midianites are said to take their name from Midian, the son of Abraham from whom they descended (see Genesis 25:2); see 7:85c. Though considered an Arab prophet, Shuʿayb is usually identified with the Biblical figure Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, since the Quran mentions that Moses met his future wife and father-in-law in the area of Midian (see 26:22–23). According to some commentators, Shuʿayb was sent both to the people of Midian and to "the inhabitants of the thicket" (al-aykah), while others consider "the inhabitants of the thicket" to be another reference to the people of Midian (see 15:78; 26:176; 38:13; 50:14c). The warning given here is part of a longer warning delivered by Shuʿayb in 7:85 (see also 11:85; 26:183). For the meaning of working corruption and its place in the Quran, see 30:41c. For more complete accounts of the story of Shuʿayb, see 7:85–93; 11:84–95; 26:176–89.

The description in v. 37 of the destruction of the Midianites for their rejection of Shuʿayb (cf. 7:91; 11:94) is identical to the description of that of the tribe of Thamūd for their rejection of the prophet Ṣāliḥ (see 7:77–78c; 11:67–68c). Lying lifeless can be understood to mean that they were rigid corpses or that they were prostrate upon their knees, dead (Z), which would imply a humiliating position with their faces on the ground and their hindquarters in the air.

38 The ʿĀd and the Thamūd were pre-Islamic Arabian tribes that rejected the prophets sent to them, Hūd and Ṣāliḥ, respectively. For the tribe of ʿĀd, see commentary on 7:65–72; 11:50–60. For the tribe of Thamūd, see commentary on 7:73–79; 11:61–68. That Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them (cf. 8:48; 16:63; 27:24) means that he made them consider their disbelief in God and their rejection of His messengers to be a mark of their excellence (Ṭ). That Satan turned them from the way can also mean that he blocked the way for them. Though they had been discerning implies that they were people of intelligence who nonetheless did not act in accord with the truth (Q, Z), or that they had seen clearly that a punishment would come upon them (IJ, Q), but followed Satan nonetheless (Z). It could also be rendered "Though they had understood," referring to the fact that they had been shown the truth through the messengers God had sent (R) and were thus aware that they were in error (Q, Ṭ).

39 The initial and connects those listed in the verse to the fates of the tribes of ʿĀd and Thamūd in the previous verse or to the phrase Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them and thus turned them from the way (Ṭ). For the story of Korah, a great grandson of Levi (Numbers 16:1) with vast wealth who was swallowed by the ground for opposing Moses (Numbers 16:32), see commentary on 28:76–82. For Hāmān, a member of Pharaoh's court who was ordered to light a fire and make a tower (28:38) to proclaim Pharaoh a deity, see 28:6, 8, 38; 40:24, 36–37; 28:6c. Although some earth, and outstripped [Us] not. (40) Each We seized for his sin. Among them are some upon whom We sent a torrent of stones, and among them are some whom the Cry seized, and among them are some whom We caused the earth to engulf, and among them are some whom We drowned. God wronged them not, but themselves did they wrong. (41) The parable of those who take protectors apart from God is that of the spider that makes a house. Truly the frailest of houses is the spider's house, if they but knew. (42) Truly God knows whatsoever they call upon apart from Him. And He is the Mighty, the Wise. (43) These are have confused this Hāmān with the Haman mentioned in the Biblical book of Esther (9:5–14), it most likely refers to the head of Pharaoh's stone quarries; see 28:36c. Here clear proofs refers to the miracles that Moses performed, such as the white hand and the staff turned serpent, as well as the plagues against the Egyptians in 7:133, in the face of all of which Pharaoh and "his notables" waxed arrogant (cf. 7:133; 10:75; 23:46; 28:39). That they cannot "outstrip" God means they cannot escape what God has decreed (Ṭ, Z), as in v. 22: You thwart naught on earth, nor in Heaven; see also 56:60c.

40 A torrent of stones (cf. 17:68; 67:17) was sent against the people to whom Lot preached (see 15:74; 29:33; 54:34). Those whom the Cry seized (cf. 15:73, 83; 23:41) were the tribe of Thamūd (11:66–68; 11:95) and the Midianites (11:94–95). Those whom the earth swallowed (cf. 16:45; 34:9; 67:16) were the people of Korah (28:81). Those drowned refers to Noah's people, and Pharaoh and Hāmān. The Cry is also interpreted to indicate lightning and its accompanying thunder. Thus in this verse human beings are destroyed by the four traditional elements: fire, through lightning or the Cry; water, through drowning; earth, which engulfed them; and air, by whose wind God sent a torrent of stones. None of these punishments were arbitrary, but were, from a Quranic perspective, the outcome of the people's own iniquity. Thus God wronged them not, but themselves did they wrong (cf. 2:57; 7:160; 9:70; 16:33, 118; 30:9).

41 The Quranic criticism of those who take protectors apart from God (cf. 7:30; 39:3; 42:6; 45:10) is directed against those who take other human beings as protectors (see, e.g., 4:139c; 5:51c; 9:23–24c), those who take satans as protectors (see 7:27c; 18:50c), and those who take idols as protectors (see 2:257). From a Quranic perspective, God is the ultimate Protector (Walī), and the Prophet and the community of believers are the only true protectors for Muslims in the human realm (see, e.g., 2:107, 257; 3:68, 122; 4:45, 139; 5:55; 6:14, 127; 7:196; 8:72; 9:71, 116), whereas the idolaters seek protection from their idols (e.g., 2:257; 13:16) and disbelievers seek protection from Satan and each other (e.g., 7:30; 8:73; 16:100).

Just as a house provides shelter and protection, while a spider's house, or web, does not, so too do true protectors provide nourishment and shelter, while false protectors taken by the disbelievers do not (R). They are thus afflicted with the forms of destruction mentioned in the previous verse and with punishment in the Hereafter. And just as the spider's house becomes scattered dust, so too do the creeds and rituals that the idolaters have constructed for their religion become scattered dust and their deeds have come to naught (2:217; 3:22; 5:53; 7:147; 9:17; 18:105). In this way, this verse also points to the hidden polytheism of those who worship God to be seen of men (2:264; 4:38, 142; 8:47), for they have, in effect, taken a god other than God (R). From this perspective, any religion or ideology produced by human beings is the frailest of houses.

42 Even though the idolaters are unaware of the emptiness of whatsoever they call upon, or worship, apart from Him, God knows and will not reward them for it.

43 These are the parables refers to the parable of the spider's house and similar parables found throughout the Quran (Sh). Similarly, 59:21 states that God sets forth parables for mankind, that haply they may reflect. Commenting upon the present verse, al-Tustarī writes, "God sets forth the parables; We set them forth for mankind. But none understand them, save those who know. (44) God created the heavens and the earth in truth. Surely in that is a sign for believers. (45) Recite that which has been revealed unto thee of the Book, and perform the prayer. Truly prayer prevents against indecency and abomination, but the remembrance of God is surely greater. And God knows the parables for mankind in general, since those things that bear witness to power point to the Powerful. But none understands them, save His elect. Thus knowledge is rare and comprehension of God even rarer. Whosoever attains knowledge by himself through his natural self is deluded. And whosoever comes to know Him through the knowledge of God, God knows what He Himself desired for him. The creature has no knowledge of the truth beyond that. This allusion [to the parables] was made due to the distance of hearts from the knowledge of reality" (ST).

44 That God created the heavens and the earth in truth (cf. 6:73; 16:3; 39:5; 45:22; 64:3) is reiterated in various ways in several verses (see 10:5; 14:19; 15:85; 30:8; 46:3; see also 44:38–39c). In truth translates bi'l-ḥaqq, which can also mean "for the truth," indicating that creation was brought forth to manifest the truth (IJ). In this context, that in that is a sign for believers (cf. 15:77) alludes to the frailty of the created order, of which the spider's web described in v. 41 is a symbol, and evokes the idea that every created thing can be used by God as a parable, as in 2:26: Truly God is not ashamed to set forth a parable of a gnat or something smaller.

45 Here prayer refers to the obligatory prayers (IJ, Q, R). Some say it means the act of reciting the Quran (IJ, Ṭ), which is another form of supererogatory worship, but al-Rāzī argues against such an interpretation, given that the verse already begins with the mention of reciting the Quran. The combined command to recite the Quran and perform the prayer can be understood to mean that if one performs the prayers and then reflects upon the words of the Quran recited in them, it will prevent one from committing indecency and abomination (IJ), though others understand this verse to mean that prayer in and of itself fulfills this function (IJ). According to a saying sometimes attributed to the Prophet and sometimes to his Companion Ibn Masʿūd, "He whose prayer does not prevent indecency and abomination, his prayer increases him in naught but distance [from God]" (IJ, R, Sh, Ṭ). From this perspective, prayer in and of itself may not prevent indecency and abomination unless it is combined with sincerity and repentance, as in 5:27: God accepts only from the reverent (Z). Nonetheless, it is thought that the grace of prayer itself can move one away from bad deeds and toward good deeds, as when the Prophet said of a young man who prayed with him but inclined toward indecent acts, "Surely his prayer will soon prevent him [from doing that]" (Bḍ, Q, Z). Here indecency may refer to fornication and abomination to disobedience (Ṭ). Prayer prevents these and other sins in that it purifies the heart, a function alluded to when the Prophet asked his Companions, "Tell me, if one of you had a river at his door in which he washed five times a day, would any of his filth remain?" To which the people replied, "Nothing of his filth would remain." He said, "That is a likeness of the five prayers. God obliterates sins with them" (Q). In this vein, al-Ghazzālī advises penetrating deeper into prayer, since it was not prescribed merely for the words and motions it entails, but for "polishing the heart and renewing the remembrance of God" (Iḥyāʾ ʿulūm al-dīn [Beirut, 1998], 1:142). Regarding the function of prayer in protecting against indecency and abomination, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, "Every prayer that does not restrain shameful and unjust deeds and is devoid of the adornment of shunning these deeds is tainted, and it is incumbent upon one to purify it" (ST, Su).

The remembrance of God is surely greater (or "greatest") means that to remember God is greater than all else (IJ, Sh, Ṭ), including other acts of worship. From another perspective, it means that God's remembrance of human beings is greater than their remembrance of God (Bḍ, IJ, Sh, Su, Ṭ, Z), since His remembrance is eternal and theirs is temporal (Su), or both meanings can obtain at the same time (Sh, Ṭ). From a Sufi perspective, whatsoever you do. (46) And dispute not with the People of the Book, save in the most virtuous manner, unless it be those of them who have done wrong. And say, "We believe in that which was sent down unto us and was sent down unto you; our God and your God are one, and unto Him are we submitters." (47) Thus have We sent down unto thee the Book. So those unto whom We have given the Book believe in it. Among those are some who believe in it; and none reject Our signs, save the disbelievers. (48) And thou didst not recite before this any Book; the two meanings together indicate that the fullness of remembrance comes only when individuals have been annihilated before God, so that no selfhood or egotism remains, and they thus realize that their remembrance of God is in fact God's remembrance of God Himself through and within them. Only this form of remembrance can be truly "great," since only this form of remembrance is beyond the contingencies of time and place, to which any ordinary human remembrance of God would, by definition, be bound.

Some also understand this verse to mean that remembering God in prayer is better than the indecency and abomination that it prevents (IJ, Ṭ), that believers' remembrance of God is better than idolaters' remembrance of their gods (R), or that prayer, which some understand to be what is meant by the remembrance of God in this verse, is better than all other acts of obedience (Bḍ, Z). Regarding the preeminence of the remembrance of God, whichever of the meanings above may obtain, the Prophet is reported to have said, "The world is accursed, accursed is all that is in it, save the remembrance of God and that which supports it."

46 This verse is an injunction to the Prophet and Muslims to not argue with Jews and Christians, except in a beautiful manner that calls them through God's signs and draws evidence from God's proofs (Ṭ) or in a manner that exhorts them to good, as in 16:125: Call unto the way of thy Lord with wisdom and goodly exhortation. And dispute with them in the most virtuous manner (IK); this means that even if others speak poorly, Muslims should still speak well (Ṭ). Those of them who have done wrong means those People of the Book who turn away from the signs delivered by God's prophets and remain stubborn and arrogant (IK), or those who engage in physical conflict against the Muslims and who will not enter into a treaty with them (Ṭ). According to some, this verse was abrogated by 9:29, but al-Ṭabarī argues that this verse is in effect and not abrogated, emphasizing that a verse cannot be considered abrogated in the absence of definitive proof.

Muslims are then ordered to declare the fundamental similarities between the revelations sent to them and those sent to previous religious communities, as in 2:136: Say, "We believe in God, and in that which was sent down to us, and in that which was sent down to Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, and the Tribes, and in what Moses and Jesus were given, and in what the prophets were given from their Lord. We make no distinction among any of them, and unto Him we submit" (cf. 3:84). Regarding discussions with the People of the Book, the Prophet is reported to have counseled his followers, "Do not confirm the People of the Book and do not deny them; say, 'We believe in that which was sent down unto us and that which was sent down unto you; our God and your God are one, and unto Him are we submitters'" (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z).

47 Among those are some who believe in it means that among the People of the Book, here referred to as those unto whom We have given the Book, are some who believed in the Quran and the prophethood of Muhammad (Ṭ, Z); or it means the Makkans (Z), some of whom believed in the Quran, but many of whom did not. When understood as a reference to the People of the Book, most commentators interpret it to mean those Jews and Christians who became Muslim (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z). But this need not be the case, as in 3:199: And truly among the People of the Book are those who believe in God and that which has been sent down unto you, and that which has been sent down nor didst thou write it with thy right hand, for then those who make false claims would have doubted. (49) Nay, it is but clear signs in the breasts of those who have been given knowledge, and none reject Our signs, save the wrongdoers. (50) And they say, "Why have signs not been sent down unto him from his Lord?" Say, "Signs are with God alone, and I am only a clear warner." (51) Does it not suffice them that We have sent down unto thee the Book that is recited unto them? Surely in that is a mercy and a reminder for a people who believe. (52) Say, "God suffices as a Witness between you and me. He knows whatsoever unto them. Such people would not have rejected God's signs and thus would not have been those who opposed the Muslims; also see commentary on 3:110–15; 5:82–83.

48 This verse is understood to mean that the Prophet had no part in authoring the Quran, one of the fundamental beliefs of all schools of Islamic thought. Addressing him directly, it alludes to his having lived among his people for many years, during which time he had never recited another book or made any claims to have composed one, since he was "unlettered" or "unschooled" (ummī), as in 7:157, where Muhammad is referred to as the unlettered Prophet (IK, Ṭ, Z). Both 26:224–27 and 36:69 also reject the idea that the Prophet was a poet. This verse then proposes that, had the Prophet engaged in recitation and composition, those who make false claims, meaning either the Quraysh (Ṭ, Z) or those among the People of the Book who opposed him (Z), may have had more reason to doubt the origin of the revelation, as in 25:5: And they say, "They are fables of those of old which he has had written down, and they are recited to him morning and evening" (cf. 6:25; 8:31; 16:24; 23:83; 27:68; 46:17; 68:15; 83:13).

49 Some understand this verse to mean that the Quran is composed of clear signs or verses that are easy to memorize, as in 54:17: And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember (cf. 54:22, 32, 40), and that these signs or verses are preserved, recited, and interpreted by those who have been given knowledge (Aj, IK, Z). Others interpret those who have been given knowledge (cf. 22:54; 34:6; 58:11) as a reference to those among the People of the Book who had found references to or clear signs of the Prophet Muhammad in their scriptures (Aj, Ṭ).

50 This is one of several verses in which the disbelievers call for a miraculous sign as proof of the reality of the revelation (see 2:118; 10:20; 13:7; 17:90–93; 20:133; 6:37c; 54:1–2c). That the signs are with God alone refers to God alone having the keys to the treasuries of the Unseen and dispensing signs as He alone wills, as in 6:50, where the Prophet is enjoined, Say, "I do not say to you that with me are the treasuries of God; nor do I know the Unseen; nor do I say unto you that I am an angel. I follow only that which is revealed unto me." The Prophet is told to say, "I am only a clear warner" or "I am naught but a warner" in several verses (22:49; 38:70; 46:9; 67:26; also see 27:92), and other verses instruct the Prophet, Thou art but a warner (13:7; 79:45), and Thou art naught but a warner (35:23).

51 This verse is a response to the objection raised in the previous verse (Q) meaning, "Does it not suffice as a sign that God has sent the Quran as a revelation?" (Ṭ). See also 20:133: They say, "Why has he not brought us a sign from his Lord?" Has there not come unto them the clear proof of that which is in the scriptures of old? Regarding the sufficiency of the Quran as a sign, the Prophet is reported to have said, "There is no prophet who was not given miracles that would make the people believe in him. What I have been given is revelation that God reveals to me, and I hope that I will have the greatest number of followers on the Day of Resurrection" (IK). The Quran is a mercy, since it tells of the Blessings and Bounty of God, and a reminder, or admonition, regarding God's Punishment (IK).

52 In 17:96, the Prophet is also enjoined to say God suffices as a Witness between you and me when the disbelievers object to his prophethood by is in the heavens and on the earth." And those who believe in what is false and disbelieve in God, it is they who are the losers. (53) And they bid thee hasten the punishment. Yet were it not for a term appointed, the punishment would have come upon them. And it will surely come upon them suddenly, while they are unaware. (54) And they bid thee hasten the punishment. Truly Hell shall encompass the disbelievers (55) on the Day when the punishment will cover them from above and from beneath their feet, and We shall say, "Taste that which you used to do!" (56) O My servants who believe! Truly My earth is vast. So saying, Has God sent a human being as a messenger? (17:94). In the present sūrah, the disbelievers ask for a sign, meaning a miracle, as proof of the Prophet's claims, and in 17:92 they ask why God did not send angels. In both instances they seek an undeniable supernatural proof, but as 6:25 states, Were they to see every sign, they would not believe in it (cf. 7:146). Thus the Prophet is enjoined to respond by letting them know that God suffices as a Witness (cf. 4:79, 166; 13:43; 17:96; 46:8; 48:28), meaning that He will settle their differences, since He knows those who believe in what is false and those who attest to the truth. In a similar vein, the Prophet is enjoined to say to the disbelievers who reject his prophethood, God and whosoever possesses knowledge of the Book suffice as a witness between you and me (13:43).

53–54 That they seek to hasten the punishment refers to the manner in which disbelievers ignore the warnings of the prophets and mock the punishments they foretell, saying, When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25), even going so far as to say, O God, if this be the truth from Thee, rain down stones upon us from the sky, or bring us a painful punishment (8:32). This attitude of derision is attributed to all disbelievers in one way or another and is elsewhere contrasted with that of the believers: Those who believe not in it would seek to hasten it, and those who believe are wary of it and know that it is the truth (42:18; for other passages in which the disbelievers seek to hasten their punishment, see 10:50–51; 13:6; 22:47; 26:204; 27:46, 72; 37:176–77; 38:16; 51:14). In response to this attitude, the Prophet is told to say, That which you seek to hasten is not within my power. Judgment belongs to God alone, He relates the Truth, and He is the best of deciders (6:57; see also 22:47).

A term appointed appears in several contexts in the Quran, most often as a reference to the span of a human being's life (6:2, 60; 11:3; 14:10; 22:5, 33; 39:42; 40:67; 71:4); in other instances, as here, it alludes to Divine Punishment (16:61; 20:129; 29:53; 35:45) and is a reference to the Day of Judgment (35:45; 42:14). It also appears in reference to the spans decreed for the trajectories of the moon and the sun (13:2; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5), the span of existence of the heavens and the earth (30:8; 46:3), and paying one's debts (2:282). For more regarding the interpretation of a term appointed, see 35:45c.

55 That the punishment covers the disbelievers from above and from beneath their feet is an idiomatic expression meaning that punishment will envelop them from all sides (cf. 5:66; 6:65; 33:10). It may also refer to the various forms of punishment that come from above, such as floods of rain, torrents of stones, and a destructive thunderbolt, and from below, such as earthquakes; see 6:65c. Taste that which you used to do implies taste the punishment everlasting for that which you used to do (32:14; cf. 3:106; 6:30; 7:39; 8:35; 46:34).

56 This verse was reportedly revealed to advise some Muslims to emigrate from Makkah to Abyssinia, where they would be able to practice their religion freely (IK, Q). Similar to vv. 1–10, it indicates that those who are unable to worship God in the land in which they live should migrate to another land where they will be able to be true to their religion (Z). In this regard, it is related to 4:97: When the angels take the souls of those who were wronging themselves, [the angels] say, "In worship Me. (57) Every soul shall taste death. Then unto Us shall you be returned. (58) And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, We shall surely settle them in lofty abodes of the Garden with rivers running below, therein to abide. Excellent indeed is the reward of the workers [of righteousness], (59) those who are patient and trust in their Lord. (60) And how many a beast bears not its own provision, yet God provides for it and for you? And He is the Hearing, the Knowing. (61) Wert thou to ask them, "Who created the heavens and the earth and made the sun and the moon subservient?" They would surely say, "God."

what state were you?" They say, "We were weak and oppressed in the land." [The angels] will say, "Was not God's earth vast enough that you might have migrated therein?" These shall have their refuge in Hell—what an evil journey's end!

57 Cf. 3:185; 21:35. In the immediate context, this frequently quoted verse explains why the previous verse enjoins worship of God. Since death is inevitable, everyone must prepare for it by worshipping God.

58–59 After souls have returned to God, each is informed of its place in the Hereafter. Believers are given lofty abodes of the Garden, which are elsewhere described as lofty abodes above which are lofty abodes (39:20). Regarding them the Prophet is reported to have said, "In the Garden there are rooms whose outside can be seen from the inside, and whose inside can be seen from the outside. God has prepared them for those who give food, those who speak well, those who pray and fast continually, and those who stand in prayer at night while others sleep" (IK). That God shall settle them alludes to the difficulties some may confront in emigrating, addressed in v. 56, assuring the believers that whatever they give up, if they emigrate for the sake of God (16:41), they will receive lofty abodes in the Hereafter, if not in this life. Elsewhere, they are assured: Those who emigrate for the sake of God, after having been wronged, We shall surely settle them in a good place in this world—and the reward of the Hereafter is greater, if they but knew (16:41). In contrast to the disbelievers, who sought to hasten their final end (vv. 53–54), such individuals are patient with what confronts them in the present and trust in their Lord regarding what He will provide them in the future (cf. 16:42; R).

60 Here the manner in which wild animals trust in God for their provision is cited as an example for believers, as in a famous ḥadīth: "Were you to trust in God as He merits, He would provide for you as He provides for the birds; they depart with empty stomachs and return full" (Q). In this context, that God is the Hearing, the Knowing serves as a reminder that God is aware of and provides for the needs of all things. It can also be understood to mean that He hears believers when they make supplication and knows their needs when they are silent (R).

61 Cf. 43:87. When asked who is creator and master of all things, they—that is, the idolaters among the Quraysh—would surely say, "God" (cf. 10:31; 23:84–85; 29:63; 31:25; 39:38; 43:9, 87), because they still believed in a supreme deity, though they nonetheless worshipped idols alongside—that is, attributed partners to—this deity. The Prophet is then told to respond, saying, Praise be to God (v. 63), meaning that only God should be praised for everything in creation and not those partners they attribute to Him, partners who had nothing to do with creation, and that no one other than God should be worshipped (Z).

How, then, are they perverted translates annā yuʾfakūn (cf. 43:87), which is literally, "How are they turned away?" and which always carries a negative connotation, meaning turning away from truth toward falsehood—turning from telling the truth to lying or from beautiful actions to ugly ones (Iṣ)—and thus becoming perverted or deluded (Tāj al-ʿarūs). Here it is an expression of astonishment meaning, "How could they turn away from the Oneness of God and attribute partners to Him, even while they affirm that He is the

How, then, are they perverted? (62) God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will among His servants. Truly God is Knower of all things. (63) And wert thou to ask them, "Who sends down water from the sky and revives thereby the earth after its death?" They would surely say, "God." Say, "Praise be to God!" Nay, but most of them understand not. (64) The life of this world is naught but diversion and play. And surely the Abode of the Hereafter is life indeed, if they but knew. (65) And when they board a ship, they call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him, but when He delivers them to land, behold, they ascribe partners [unto Him]. (66) So let them be ungrateful for that which We have given them, and let them enjoy themselves, for soon they will know! (67) Or have they Creator of the heavens and the earth?" (Z). In this sense, it relates to the prevalent Quranic theme that many believe in God, but do not act in accord with their belief; see 23:84–89.

62–63 God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (cf. 13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 30:37; 34:36, 39; 39:52; 42:12; see 34:39c) serves as a transition from the discussion of God as Creator to God as Sustainer. Here, that the disbelievers would surely say, "God" (cf. 10:31; 23:84–85; 29:61; 31:25; 39:38; 43:9, 87) indicates that just as they acknowledge a Supreme Creator, so too should they acknowledge that God provides for them. Nonetheless, they fail to draw the proper conclusion because most of them understand not (cf. 5:103; 49:4). God's Ability to revive barren land also stands as an argument for His Ability to resurrect (cf. 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 30:19, 24, 50; 35:9; 36:33; 41:31, 39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11).

64 This world is also described as naught but play and diversion (6:32; cf. 47:36), indicating the rapidity with which it dissipates (Aj), and as naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185). In 57:20 the world is described more fully as play, diversion, glitter, mutual boasting, and vying for increase in property and children—the likeness of a rain whose vegetation impresses the farmers; then it withers such that you see it turn yellow; then it becomes chaff; see 57:20c. The Abode of the Hereafter (cf. 2:95; 6:32; 7:169; 12:109; 16:30; 28:77, 83; 33:29) refers to Paradise.

65 Cf. 10:22–23; 17:67; 31:32. A storm at sea can be seen as a parable for the afflictions that beset one in life. Devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 31:32; 40:14, 65; 98:5) refers to the singularity of people's devotion in the face of the severity of the afflictions that befall them (T). Yet when they are delivered to safety, they turn away and are ungrateful (17:67), return to their polytheism, and behave tyrannically upon the earth without right (10:23). In the context of the previous verse, this verse can be understood as an allusion to religious and spiritual hypocrisy, as many will pray, turning to God briefly in their state of dire need, but then when no longer in need turn away, forgetting God and devoting themselves to seeking the things of this world. In this sense, it is attachment to the life of this world that prevents many people from believing in God (R).

66 Cf. 16:55; 30:34. If people do not want God's Blessings, they may choose to reject them and disbelieve, as in 18:29, when the Prophet is enjoined to say, So whosoever will, let him believe, and whosoever will, let him disbelieve. The phrase let them enjoy themselves follows upon v. 64. Though they think the diversion and play of this world is good, as they are able to enjoy a little (77:46), in fact this respite that God has granted them lets them dig a deeper hole for themselves, as in 31:24: We grant them enjoyment a little, then We compel them toward a grave punishment (see also 3:178; 10:69–70; 15:3; 16:55; 26:205–7). Thus soon they will know how their attempt to direct their own affairs led to their destruction (Aj).

67 The secure sanctuary is Makkah. Traditionally, no fighting was to take place within its not considered that We have made a secure sanctuary while people are snatched away all around them? Do they believe in that which is false? And are they ungrateful for God's Blessing? (68) Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God or denies the truth when it comes unto him? Is there not in Hell an abode for the disbelievers? (69) But as for those who strive for Us, We shall surely guide them in Our ways. Truly God is with the virtuous.

confines, and the Makkans were well protected from possible incursions by other tribes. This verse thus rebukes the Quraysh for not reflecting upon the security with which God has blessed them in contrast to other tribes (Ṭ, Z; see also commentary on 106:1–4). Do they believe in that which is false? is a rhetorical question rebuking them both for believing in the idols they worshipped and for believing themselves to be the source of their own security. God's Blessing, for which they are ungrateful, refers to both the security He provides and His having sent them a prophet (Aj). The secure sanctuary can also be read as a reference to any form of security or stability that God grants human beings in the face of the instability and uncertainty of the storms of life. On a spiritual level it refers to being preserved from the diversion and play (v. 64) of the world that ensnares those who believe in falsehood and are ungrateful for God's Blessings.

68 The condemnation of one who fabricates a lie against God is a recurring Quranic theme (see 3:94; 6:21–23, 93, 144; 7:37; 10:17; 11:18; 18:15; 61:7c). In the end, they will surely be questioned concerning that which they used to fabricate (29:13), and that which they used to fabricate will forsake them (10:30; 16:88; 28:75; see also 6:24; 7:53; 11:21). The truth that the creators of lies deny may refer to the Prophet, to the Quran (Aj), to the general message of Divine Unity and all that it entails (Ṭ), or to all of them. Is there not in Hell an abode for the disbelievers? (cf. 39:32), or elsewhere an abode for the arrogant (39:60), is a rhetorical question meaning that they are undoubtedly in Hell (Ṭ, Z).

69 Those who strive for Us refers to those who strive with their very souls against Satan, against their own lower souls, and against the enemies of religion (Aj). That God will guide them in His ways indicates that they will be guided on the straight path (Ṭ) or on ways that lead to good and to Divine Succor (Z), and that they will be guided to God (Aj). This verse is subject to many interpretations, each reflecting the belief that striving to obtain one good will lead to another good. Among these, some say it means that those who strive to act upon what they know will be guided to greater knowledge that they did not have before (Aj, IK); those who strive to obtain knowledge will be guided to the ways of acting in accord with it; those who strive to do what is pleasing to God will be guided to the attainment of contentment; those who strive in repentance will be guided upon the paths of sincerity; or those who strive to serve God will be guided upon the path of intimate converse with God (Aj).

Although several verses speak of God's Love for the virtuous (2:195; 3:134, 148; 5:13, 93), this is the only verse to say that God is with the virtuous. Here, the virtuous translates muḥsinīn, which means those who do what is beautiful or who make things beautiful. It is related to iḥsān, "making or doing what is beautiful," and is thus related to "virtue" or "goodness" and to ḥusn, meaning both "good" and "beauty." Regarding iḥsān, the Prophet said to his Companions, "God has ordained doing what is beautiful for all things." From this perspective, at the core of the Quran's message stands the idea that one must do all things with beauty and goodness (ḥusn).

The Byzantines

al-Rūm

All commentators agree that al-Rūm was revealed during the Makkan period, although some maintain that v. 17 is from the Madinan period (Aj, Āl) and others maintain that vv. 27–28 are from the Madinan period (IJ). The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the defeat of the Byzantines, or Romans, al-Rūm, in v. 2. According to some commentators, God's promise that the Byzantines would prevail after having been defeated (v. 3) follows upon the last verse of the previous sūrah, which promises that God will guide those who strive for His sake (Āl, Sy). Others maintain that the two *sūrah*s are linked by the promise that truly God is with the virtuous, which ends Sūrah 29, and the promise in vv. 4–5 that on that day the believers shall rejoice in God's Help (Aj).

From the mention of the battle between the Sassanids and the Byzantines and the prediction of the eventual victory of the Byzantines (vv. 2–6) followed by a criticism of the disbelievers for failing to reflect upon the signs of God (vv. 7–9), the sūrah proceeds to a discussion of the disparate ends of believers and disbelievers (vv. 10–16). This leads into the sūrah's central theme, the abundance of signs of God in the created order and the inability of many human beings to understand them, because they follow caprice rather than knowledge (vv. 17–29). Beginning with a reference to the original or primordial nature of human beings, the fiṭrah, in one of the Quran's more famous verses (v. 30), vv. 30–34 contrast those who follow the upright religion with those who divide religion into factions (v. 32). Challenging the disbelievers to bring something to substantiate their claims (v. 35), the sūrah then touches upon several broader Quranic themes, such as virtue toward relatives and employing one's wealth in a just manner (vv. 38–39), the phases of human existence (v. 40), and the extent of human corruption (v. 41).

After calling again to the upright religion (vv. 43), al-Rūm returns to the contrast between the believers and disbelievers (vv. 44–45), which leads into another extended passage on its central theme, the importance of reflecting upon God's signs (vv. 46–51). A reminder of the Prophet's inability to guide those whom God has not guided (vv. 52–54) is then followed by a discussion of the difficulties that will confront the guilty upon the Hour of Judgment (vv. 55–57). The sūrah concludes with a reminder that their hearts are sealed (v. 59) and that one must thus remain steadfast when confronted by them (v. 60).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Alif. Lām. Mīm. (2) The Byzantines have been defeated (3) in a land nearby. Yet after being defeated they will prevail (4) within a few years—unto God belongs the affair, before and after, and on that day the believers shall rejoice (5) in God's Help. He helps whomsoever He will, and He is the Mighty, the Merciful.

2–5 These verses provide the only reference in the Quran to political events contemporary to Muhammad and his followers beyond the Arabian Peninsula. According to the majority of commentators, these verses were revealed in response to the disbelievers heckling the Muslims after the Persian Empire had defeated the Byzantine Empire in Syria. In the first part of the seventh century, the Persian ruler Khusraw Parwīz (r. 590–628) sent an army under the command of General Shahrbarāz (d. 630) to Byzantium. These forces conquered parts of Syria, taking Damascus in 613 and Jerusalem in 614, during which time another Sassanid army under General Shāhīn had conquered Egypt and laid siege to Constantinople. For many people the complete defeat of the Byzantine Empire seemed imminent. The Byzantine ruler had entrusted the command of his army to a man called Juhannas. In a land nearby most likely refers to the battles that he lost to Shahrbarāz at Adhriʿāt and Buṣrā, which are the closest parts of Syria to the land of the Arabs. The Prophet and his Companions heard of this defeat while in Makkah and were saddened. The Prophet disliked the fact that the Sassanids had the upper hand over the Byzantines, as the former were Magians and the latter were followers of an Abrahamic religion. The disbelievers of Makkah, however, were said to have been exultant and gloating. When they met the Prophet's Companions, they said to them, "You are People of the Book, and the Christians are People of the Book. We are without a revealed scripture, and our brothers the Persians have defeated your brothers the Byzantines. If you ever fight us, we will defeat you too" (Ṭ, W).

Despite the defeats they had suffered, the Quran predicted that the Byzantines would prevail within a few years. In this context, a few translates biḍʿ, which indicates a period between three and nine years (Sh, Ṭ, Z). In 622 the tide began to turn when the Byzantine emperor Heraclius defeated the Persians at Issus, south of the Taurus Mountains. This was the first in a series of victories that culminated in the Battle of Nineveh in 627, after which the Persian Empire weakened considerably, having fallen from the apparent greatness it had reached at the time these verses are said to have been revealed. In the context of the geopolitical events to which these verses refer, unto God belongs the affair, before and after refers to God's ability to make one army victorious over another. Metaphysically, it can also be understood to mean before everything existed and after everything ceases to exist, since God is the Originator

(6) [This is] God's Promise—God fails not His Promise, but most of mankind know not. (7) They know some outward aspect of the life of this world, but of the Hereafter they are heedless. (8) Do they not reflect upon their souls? God did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth and for a term appointed. Yet truly many among mankind believe not in the meeting with their Lord. (9) Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were greater than they in strength. They tilled the earth and built upon it more than have they, and their messengers brought them clear proofs. For God would never wrong them, of all things and the One to Whom all things return (ST).

6 The first phrase of this verse can also be read as an abbreviated structure substituting for a verbal construction meaning, "God has promised them [victory]." In both readings, it refers to God's Promise that the Byzantines would defeat the Sassanids (IK, Sh). That God fails not His Promise (cf. 22:47; 39:20) is a general statement confirming the repeated Quranic assertion that God's Promise is true (see 30:60c).

7 This verse refers to those who know how to prosper in this world, but who are ignorant of religious and spiritual matters (IK, Ṭ). They know the outward vanities of this world, but are ignorant of the inner realities and final ends of all things (R, Z).

8 Do they not reflect upon their souls? represents one of the Quran's many invitations to reflect upon the nature of God's creation in order to facilitate spiritual understanding; see also 11:24, 30; 13:3; 16:17; 37:155; 56:62; see commentary on 3:191; 45:3–6, 23. Many understand this verse to mean that were the disbelievers to reflect upon themselves and how they were created, they would find evidence of both the Oneness of God and God's Ability to resurrect them (Bḍ, IK, R, Sh, Ṭ). In this sense, it is similar to the question posed to the disbelievers in 23:115: Did you suppose, then, that We created you frivolously, and that you would not be returned unto Us? (R). To reflect upon their souls could also be understood to mean to reflect "within themselves" and upon themselves (Aj, Q, Sh). Here, as in many verses, the Quran maintains that were human beings to reflect, they would see that God did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth (cf. 15:85; 46:3; see also 10:5; 14:19; 16:3; 39:5; 45:22; 64:3; 6:73c; 29:44c; 44:38–39c). That all things are created for a term appointed (cf. 13:2; 22:5; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5; 46:3), which is understood as a reference to the Day of Resurrection (Sh), points to the finitude of all that exists and to their being created with a final end in mind (R). That they disbelieve in or deny the meeting with their Lord (cf. 6:31; 32:10) would thus mean both that they deny the Resurrection and that they do not understand that everything in the created order will eventually come to an end, since all things perish, save His Face (28:88).

9 Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? (cf. 12:109; 30:42; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:10) refers to the ruins and traces of bygone peoples that the Arabs would have seen when traveling, vestiges that provide profound lessons regarding the nature of life on earth, as indicated in 22:46: Have they not journeyed upon the earth, that they might have hearts by which to understand or ears by which to hear? The call to reflect upon the fate of bygone peoples complements the call in the previous verse to contemplate their own souls, since all peoples and all souls eventually pass away. In the context of pre-Islamic Arabia, such a call would have served as a reminder that even an individual's legacy as preserved by the tribe would eventually be wiped away with the tribe itself. The Quran mentions frequently the fate of the guilty, but themselves did they wrong. (10) Then the end of those who committed evil deeds was most evil, for they denied God's signs and mocked them. (11) God originates creation, then brings it back; then unto Him shall you be returned. (12) And on the Day when the Hour is come, the guilty shall despair. (13) They have no intercessors from among those they ascribed as partners, and they will then disbelieve in those they ascribed as partners. (14) And on the Day when the Hour is come, that Day they will be separated. (15) As for those who believe and perform righteous deeds, they will be made joyous in a Garden. (16) But as for those who disbelieve and deny Our signs and the meeting of the Hereafter, the corrupt, the wrongdoers, and those who denied God's messengers as an admonition to the disbelievers (see 3:137; 6:11; 7:84, 86, 103; 10:39, 73; 16:36; 27:14, 69; 37:73; 43:25). That they were greater in strength, tillage, and building indicates that, although they had greater control over the world around them than those who now oppose the Prophet, they too were destroyed (see 35:44; 40:21, 82). That their messengers brought them clear proofs (cf. 7:101; 9:70; 10:13, 74; 14:9; 35:25; 40:22, 83) refers to prophetic miracles or to the rulings of Divine Law (Q, Sh). God would never wrong them, because they had been given fair warning through the sending of a messenger (Q), but themselves did they wrong (cf. 2:57; 9:70; 16:33, 118; 29:40) by failing to follow the prophets and clear proofs that had been sent to them.

10 In the Hereafter the evildoers will receive the worst of all fates, that of being cast into the Fire (Z). Some say this verse refers to their punishment within the Fire, while others say it refers to the Fire itself (IJ).

11 Originates creation, then brings it back (cf. 10:4, 34; 27:64; 30:27) refers to the composition of human beings from dust and their resurrection, or to the beginning of all creation and the eventual return of all things to God; see 10:4c. Then unto Him shall you be returned (cf. 2:28, 245; 10:56; 11:34; 21:35; 28:70, 88; 29:17, 57; 39:44; 41:21) refers to the Resurrection and the return of all things to God; see 2:28c.

12–13 Despair translates yublisu, which indicates being broken and silent, having lost any opportunity to present an argument on one's own behalf, and being acutely aware of this state (Q). Just as they despair of being able to argue on their own behalf, those whom they claimed could intercede for them (see 39:3c) now declare themselves innocent of what the disbelievers worshipped, as in 2:166, which describes the Day of Judgment as one when those who were followed disavow those who followed, and they see the punishment, while all recourse will be cut off from them (Ṭ; also see 14:22c; 59:16); regarding the question of intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c. And they will then disbelieve in those they ascribed as partners can also be understood to mean "though they disbelieved on account of those they ascribe as partners" (Z). Although they have now learned that believing in them was incorrect, this knowledge has come too late to save them.

14 On the Day the believers and the disbelievers will be separated from one another in a definitive and lasting manner. For this reason the Day of Resurrection is also referred to as the Day of Division (37:21; 44:40; 77:13–14, 38; 78:17; see also 10:28).

15 Made joyous translates yuḥbarūn, which also indicates being blessed and honored (Q, Ṭ). In this context Garden renders rawḍah, which means a place where water collects and vegetation is abundant, such as the verdant land that surrounds a spring or well (Q).

16 The signs denied by the disbelievers could refer to revelation in general, the verses of the Quran in particular, the signs of God in the created order, the signs of the end of time, or to all of these, as each of these is mentioned in the

they will be arraigned unto the punishment. (17) So glory be to God when you enter upon the eve and when you rise at morn; (18) His is the praise in the heavens and on the earth—when the sun declines and when you reach noontide. (19) He brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living, and He revives the earth after its death. Even so shall you be brought forth. (20) Among His signs is that He created you from dust. Then, behold, you are human beings ranging far and wide. (21) And among His signs is that He created mates for you from among yourselves, that you might find rest in them, and He established affection and mercy between you. Truly in Quran as being among God's signs; see commentary on 2:106; 30:20, 22; 45:3–6. All people will be arraigned before God (see 36:32, 53), but only the disbelievers will be arraigned unto the punishment (cf. 34:38).

17–18 In this context, glory be to God is understood as an injunction to glorify or praise God, either generally or specifically within the five daily prayers, in which one recites "Glory be to God, the Magnificent" when bowing and "Glory be to God, the Most Exalted" when prostrating (Q). Together, these two verses are interpreted as a reference to the five daily prayers: the eve refers to the sunset prayer (maghrib) and the night prayer (ʿishāʾ); at morn, to the morning prayer (fajr); when the sun declines, to the late afternoon prayer (ʿaṣr); and noontide, to the early afternoon prayer (ẓuhr; Q).

19 This verse answers the rhetorical question posed in 10:31: And who brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living? God brings forth the living from the dead when creating human beings the first time and when resurrecting them after death. God brings forth the dead from the living when causing them to die. These functions are related to the two Divine Names Muḥyī ("Giver of Life"; 30:50; 41:39) and Mumīt ("Bringer of Death"); see also 3:27c; 6:95c; 10:31c. This is one of many verses where the manner in which God revives the dead earth is employed as a metaphor for resurrection; see also 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 25:48–49; 29:63; 30:24, 50; 35:9; 36:33; 41:31, 39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11.

20 Among His signs, which begins vv. 20–25 and v. 46 as well as 41:37, 39 and 42:29, 32, can be understood to mean that these signs are indications of God's complete Power and Lordship over all things (Aj). On one level, God's having created human beings from dust is a reminder of their humble origins and of God's Ability to resurrect them from dust, just as He brought them forth from clay, as in 36:79: He will revive them Who brought them forth the first time. It can also be understood as a reminder that human beings are of two natures, one spiritual and one physical, and that the physical nature, made of clay and dust, must not be allowed to dominate over the luminous spiritual nature (Aj). Behold translates the particle idhā, which in this context indicates immediacy, thus conveying the manner in which God is believed to bring forth creation suddenly through the command "Be!" (R; see 2:117c; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 36:82c; 40:68). That human beings range far and wide alludes to all races being of one origin, as in the ḥadīth: "God created Adam from a handful [of dust] taken from throughout the earth. Hence the sons of Adam vary as the earth varies; so they are white, red, black, and [colors] in between" (IK).

21 That God made for human beings mates from among yourselves (or "from your souls"; cf. 16:72; 35:11; 42:11; 78:8) is also understood to mean "from yourselves" when seen as an allusion to the creation of Eve from Adam's rib (IK, Ṭ), though some commentators are skeptical of this association, feeling it relies too heavily on the Biblical tradition (see Genesis 2:21–23). A direct account of Eve's creation is not found in the Quran, only in the Ḥadīth literature; see 4:1c. Although many understand the present verse as an address that are signs for a people who reflect. (22) And among His signs are the creation of the heavens and the earth and the variation in your tongues and colors. Truly in that are signs for those who know. (23) And among His signs is your sleep by night and day and your seeking His Bounty. Truly in that are signs for a people who hear. (24) And among His signs is that He shows you lightning, arousing fear and hope, and that He sends down water from the sky, then revives thereby the earth after its death. Truly in that are signs for a people who understand. (25) And to men, telling them of the benefits to be found in their wives (Aj, IK, R), viewed in a broader Quranic context, especially in relation to those verses that state that God created human beings from a single soul (4:1; 6:98, 7:189, 31:28, 39:6) and its mate from that same soul (see 7:189c and 39:6), it is most likely an address to both men and women, telling of the manner in which God has extended His own Love and Mercy to them through the love and mercy that they manifest toward one another. In this sense, the purpose of marriage is not limited to producing children; it also represents a spiritual good in and of itself and a means by which men and women can encounter God's Love and Mercy in each other. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "The believer whose faith is most complete is the one whose character is the best; and the best among you are those who are best to their wives."

22 That the created order serves as a sign of God's Omnipotence and Oneness is a theme found throughout the Quran, though it is stated more explicitly in this pericope (vv. 20–25) than in most others. The variation in the tongues and colors indicates the differences between languages and races. The difference in tongues can also be understood as a reference to different types of speech, as individuals reveal something of their true nature by the content of their speech. Colors can, moreover, be understood as a reference to different states or conditions of human beings. Variation can also be seen as a reference to the different means by which people see and understand God's signs. As Ibn ʿArabī writes, "The Divine signs that have come in the Wise Reminder [i.e., the Quran] have come in great variation. Because of their variation, those addressed by them have a variety of descriptions. Among them are signs for a people who reflect (13:3; 30:21; 39:42; 45:13; cf. 10:24); signs for a people who understand (2:164; 13:4; 16:12; 30:24); signs for a people who hear (10:67; 16:65; 30:23); signs for a people who believe (45:3; cf. 6:99; 15:77; 16:79; 27:86; 29:24, 44; 30:37; 39:52); signs for those who know (30:22); signs for a people who are reverent (10:6); signs for those possessed of intelligence (20:54, 128); signs for the possessors of intellect (3:190); and signs for those who possess insight (3:13)." Ibn ʿArabī then enjoins, "So differentiate as He has differentiated and do not step beyond to what has not been mentioned [in the Quran]. On the contrary, put every sign and everything else in its place" (Futūḥāt, IV 105.30–33). In this sense, those who discern signs (15:75) are those who know which signs speak to which human types and to which faculties and are able to differentiate between them accordingly.

23 This verse could be understood to mean "your sleep by night and your seeking His Bounty by day" (Aj, Q), in which case sleep by night refers to death and day and your seeking His Bounty refers to Resurrection (Q). It could also be understood to mean your sleep during both night and day and your seeking His Bounty during both (Aj). A people who hear, or "listen," is understood to mean those who reflect upon and understand what they hear (Aj, IK, Q). What is heard could be the Quran, the truth, God's exhortation (Q), or all three.

24 Lightning arouses fear of the destructive forces it may herald, yet hope for the rain it may bring; see 13:12–13c. This is one of several verses to invoke God's ability to revive the earth after its death as an argument for His ability to resurrect human beings (cf. 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 29:63; 30:19, 50; 35:9; 41:39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11; 57:17).

25 That all things stand by His Command indicates that nothing would exist, were it not for among His signs is that the sky and the earth stand fast by His Command. Then, when He calls you forth from the earth with a single call, behold, you will come forth. (26) Unto Him belongs whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth; all are devoutly obedient unto Him. (27) He it is Who originates creation, then brings it back, and that is most easy for Him. Unto Him belongs the loftiest description in the heavens and on the earth, and He is the Mighty, the Wise. (28) He sets forth for you a parable from yourselves: have you, among those whom your right hands possess, partners in what We have provided for you, such that you are equal with respect to it, with you fearing them as you fear each other? Thus do We expound the signs for a people who understand. (29) Nay, God's Direction and Wisdom, or His Permission (Q); see also 22:65; 35:41. Then when God calls human beings to the Resurrection (Aj, IK, Q), they rise again, by His Command; see also 17:52; 36:53; 79:13–14. As in v. 20, behold renders the particle idhā, indicating a sudden event. Just as God is said to create human beings out of nothing in an instant through His Word and Command, so too will He resurrect them suddenly, and they will have as much choice in the matter as they did when they were brought forth the first time.

26 That all of creation is devoutly obedient (qānit) indicates an existential and spiritual obedience that carries with it a sense of constancy and in the human order also serenity (cf. 2:116, 238; 3:17, 43; 4:34; 16:120; 33:31, 35; 39:9; 66:12). In this sense, everything is also said to prostrate unto God, as in 16:49: And unto God prostrates whatever crawling creatures or angels are in the heavens or on the earth, and they do not wax arrogant (cf. 13:15; 22:18; 55:6), and in the repeated assertion that whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorify God (59:1; 61:1; 62:1; 64:1; also see 17:44; 24:41; 57:1; 59:24).

27 Regarding the assertion that it is God Who originates creation, then brings it back (cf. 10:4, 34; 27:64), see v. 11; 10:4c. That is most easy for Him is understood to mean that the process of creation and resurrection is easy for God (T), or resurrecting human beings could be even easier for God than creating them the first time (IK, Q, R, T). Unto Him belongs the loftiest description (cf. 16:60) is understood to mean the most exalted description, which cannot be attributed to anything else (Aj). Thus some link it to the phrase Naught is like unto Him (42:11; Aj, IK, T) or to the Muslim testimony of Divine Unity, "There is no god, but God" (Aj, IK, R, T); see 16:60c.

28 The parable established here compares the relationship between God and those whom the idolaters ascribe as partners to God to the relationship between human beings and their own slaves or servants. The rhetorical questions indicate that no one would envision a slave or servant having an equal share in the master's wealth or fear that the slave would have an equal right to it, just as God, the Absolute Sovereign, would not fear anything else sharing in His Power. The argument is that if one cannot envision this state of affairs for one's own limited sphere of sovereignty, how can one attribute it to the universal sovereignty of God (IK, Q, T)? Also see commentary on 16:71, 75–76. This verse is understood by some as a response to the devotional chant that the idolaters are reported to have sung when circumambulating the Kaʿbah, "At Thy service, Thou hast no partner, save the partner that Thou hast. Thou dost possess him and whatsoever he doth possess" (IK, Q). Regarding the manner in which God is said to expound the signs, see 6:97–98, 126; 7:32, 174; 9:11; 10:5, 24; 13:2; 41:44; 6:46c; 6:55c; 41:3c.

29 From a Quranic perspective, to follow one's own caprices and desires is the opposite of following God and God's messengers; see commentary on 2:120; 45:18; 23. Those who follow caprice have thus taken a course directly opposite those who do wrong follow their caprices without knowledge. So who will guide those whom God has led astray? And they shall have no helpers. (30) Set thy face to religion as a ḥanīf, in the primordial nature from God upon which He originated mankind—there is no altering the creation of God; that is the upright religion, but most of mankind know not— (31) turning unto Him. And reverence Him and perform the prayer; and be not among the idolaters, (32) among to that of guidance, as in 47:14: Is one who stands upon a clear proof from his Lord like one whose evil deeds are made to seem fair unto him, and like those who follow their caprices? The answer to the rhetorical question So who will guide those whom God has led astray? is found in 4:88: Whomsoever God leads astray, thou wilt not find a way for him. There could therefore be no helpers among human beings, jinn, or angels who would help the disbelievers (see also 3:22, 56, 91; 16:37; 42:8; 48:22), as none can thwart God.

30 To set, "turn," or "submit" one's face to or toward religion (see 6:79; 10:105) means to orient one's whole being toward worship and obedience to God (see also 2:112; 3:20; 7:29; 30:43; 31:22). The present verse is thus taken by most commentators to be a command to follow the religion for which God created human beings. It is addressed directly to the Prophet or to all who hear the message (Aj). Some commentators take the first phrase to mean, "Follow the religion as a ḥanīf and follow the primordial nature in which God created you" (Q, Ṭ). In another interpretation, primordial nature (fiṭrah) modifies religion, which is referred to as "primordial" because human beings were originally created for religion, as in 51:56: I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me (Q). As a ḥanīf is understood by most to mean in a straight and upstanding manner, neither inclining nor adhering to past religions that have been altered or abrogated (Q). For ḥanīf (pl. ḥunafāʾ), which derives from the verb ḥanafa, meaning "to incline," see 2:135c. Ḥanīf is usually employed in the Quran with reference to Abraham (2:135; 3:67, 95; 4:125; 6:79, 161; 16:120, 123), but in general it indicates one who inclines away from misguidance and toward belief in the Oneness of God (tawḥīd; Iṣ). Thus in 10:105, the Prophet is enjoined, Set thy face toward the religion as a ḥanīf, and be thou not among the idolaters (see also 22:31; 98:5). The basic understanding of ḥanīf may best be illustrated by a famous ḥadīth qudsī: "God says, 'Verily I created My servants as ḥunafāʾ. Then the satans came to them and distracted them from their religion'" (IK). Seen in this light, to be truly devout (ḥanīf) and incline toward the worship of God and away from idolatry is to live according to one's primordial nature (fiṭrah), in which all human beings have been created. One cannot change this underlying nature as a servant or worshipper of God, because there is no altering the creation of God (Q, R). This phrase is also understood to mean that there is no change in God's religion (IK, Q); that is, there is no change in the substance or universal truths of religion, only in the forms in which these truths are revealed in different religions.

The reference to the fiṭrah is read by some to mean that human beings are born for Islam, so that anyone who follows any other religion is "astray" or "misguided" (IK). But al-Qurṭubī maintains that it is impossible for the fiṭrah mentioned here to be Islam in its particular sense, because "Islām (submission) and īmān (faith) are declaring with the tongue, embracing with the heart, and performing with the limbs," implying that if fiṭrah pertains to the original human nature, which is related to the spirit, it cannot pertain to the specific practices of a particular religious tradition because these can only be performed while a spirit resides in a body in this world. From this perspective, the upright religion (cf. 6:161; 9:36; 12:40; 30:43; 98:5) could refer to religion as such and thus to any religious practice that accords with the fiṭrah. Nonetheless, most interpret upright religion as a reference to Islam in particular (IK, Q). Regarding the upright religion, see 6:161c.

31–32 Turning unto Him translates munībīna ilayhi, which can mean turning unto God in repentance or returning to God (Q). In this those who have divided their religion and become factions, each party rejoicing in that which it has. (33) And when harm befalls the people, they call upon their Lord, turning to Him in repentance. Then, when He lets them taste of His Mercy, behold, a group among them ascribe partners unto their Lord. (34) Let them be ungrateful for that which We have given them: "Enjoy yourselves! For soon you will know." (35) Or have We sent down upon them any authority that speaks of that which they ascribe as partners unto Him? (36) And when We context, perform the prayer can be seen as a general injunction to follow all of the practices of religion (Ṭū), as these are the means by which one acts in accord with the fiṭrah while in this world. Although the injunction to be not among the idolaters or polytheists is clearly a call to monotheism, in this context it is also seen as a call to avoid hidden polytheism, meaning that one should seek only to please God in one's worship (R). To do otherwise constitutes a hidden polytheism on account of which human beings have divided their religion and become factions (R). Being divided into factions is understood by many as a reference to being divided into various sects or even making false religions out of true religion (Ṭs), but it can also be seen as a reference to those who worship God with the goal of seeking something of this world, or even those who do so seeking Paradise, rather than those who do so with a sincere heart, seeking only God (R).

In other passages, dividing religion into factions is an error attributed to previous religious communities, one that Muslims are enjoined to avoid (see 3:103–5; 6:65; 42:13–14; 98:4; 6:159c). When understood as a reference to religious sects, each party rejoicing in that which it has can be understood as a reference to competing creeds and tenets (Ṭs, Ṭū). But when understood as a reference to different modes of worship, it can be seen as a reference to the different aspects of God's Bounty and Mercy in which different types of worshippers rejoice (R) and the injunctions that God has promulgated for each religious community.

33 This is one of several verses to mention human beings' tendency to call upon their Lord in times of peril or adversity (cf., e.g., 10:12; 17:67; 39:8; Ṭ), such as illness and poverty (JJ); see 6:40–41c. Then, when He lets them taste of His Mercy by relieving them of such afflictions, they revert to heedlessness and to pursuing their caprices (Ṭ, Ṭb); see also 7:189–90c; 10:12c.

34 Cf. 16:55; 29:66c. Enjoy yourselves is an ironic injunction indicating that people will continue to follow their caprices (v. 29) and rejoice in the tenets of their ways (v. 34), but that these are merely the ephemeral delights of this world, which stand in stark contrast to the rewards of the next life (see 3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 40:39; 42:36; 43:35), since the world itself is naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20). In this regard, the Prophet is instructed to say to disbelievers, Enjoy your disbelief a little; truly you shall be among the inhabitants of the Fire (39:8). In this sense, those who disbelieve enjoy themselves and eat as cattle eat (47:12) and give no thought to anything beyond their immediate interests and desires.

35 Here authority can be understood to mean a revealed book (Q, Ṭ), as in passages that speak of God having sent Moses with a manifest authority (4:153; 11:96; 23:45; 40:23; 44:19; 51:38). It can also be understood to mean any proof that would attest to the truth of the idolaters' position (IK, Q, Z). In this vein, 37:156–57 asks the disbelievers: Or have you a manifest authority? Bring your Book, then, if you are truthful. Elsewhere the Quran asks rhetorically, Did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it? (35:40; see also 6:148; 34:44; 43:21; 53:28; 68:37–38, 47).

36 Cf. 42:48. People rejoice in their blessings, which they attribute to their own merits and which they believe are a testament to their own superiority, as in 39:49: And when harm befalls man, he calls upon Us. Then, when We confer upon him a blessing from Us, he says, "I was only given it because of knowledge." The judgment wrongdoers cause the people to taste some mercy, they rejoice in it. But should an evil befall them because of that which their hands have sent forth, behold, they despair. (37) Have they not considered that God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will? Truly in that are signs for a people who believe. (38) So give unto the kinsman his right, and unto the indigent and the traveler. That is better for those who desire the Face of God. It is they who shall prosper. (39) That which you give in usury, that it might increase through other people's wealth, does not increase with God. But that which you give in alms, desiring the Face of God—it is they who receive a manifold increase. (40) God it is Who created receive in the next life is the result of the acts of disobedience that their hands have sent forth (Q; 2:95; 4:62; 28:47; 42:48; 62:7; see also 5:80; 18:57; 36:12; 78:40), reinforcing the idea that human beings are responsible for their fate in the Hereafter. But there is also the suggestion that the misfortunes generated by their wrongdoing might be visited upon them in this life. From one perspective, their actions are sent forth to be confronted again at a later point in time or on the Day of Judgment, though from another perspective, actions are "brought forth" by their hands, thus making manifest what is in their hearts (Ṭs). Those who do not succumb to the tendency to turn away from God when evil befalls them are the patient who, when affliction befalls them, say, "Truly we are God's, and unto Him we return" (2:156).

37 For Truly in that are signs for a people who believe, cf. 6:99; 16:79; 27:86; 29:24; 39:52. Regarding God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (cf. 13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 34:36, 39; 39:52; 42:12); see 34:39c.

38 According to Shiite commentaries, the first phrase of this verse is a specific injunction for the Prophet to give his family members their due (Ṭs, Ṭū). In accordance with this injunction, the Prophet is reported to have given his daughter Fāṭimah a garden. But due to different understandings of what the Prophet had intended, this garden was viewed by the first Caliph, Abū Bakr, as property that belonged to the Muslim polity and not to Fāṭimah (Qm, Ṭs, Ṭū). In contrast, most Sunni commentators see this as one of several injunctions to observe the rights of kin found throughout the Quran. The right, or due, that one is to give can be seen specifically as charity or generally as virtuous conduct toward relatives (see 2:83). It is even said that giving charity to others while one's relatives are in need will not be accepted by God as a good deed (Q). For a broader discussion of the categories of people among whom one's wealth should be distributed, see 2:177c. That giving others their right, or due, is better means that it is better than keeping wealth just for oneself (Q). To give charity because one desires the Face of God indicates that one does not do it to obtain favors from others or for some other form of worldly gain (see 2:264c).

39 This is the earliest mention of usury (ribā) in the chronological order of the Quran. The last verses in the chronology of revelation (2:275–81) also deal with the concept of ribā, but are ambiguous enough to have led to centuries of debate over how one defines "usury"; see 2:275–81c; 3:130; 4:161c. In the context of this verse, ribā is understood as a reference to either usury, which is forbidden (see 2:275–81) or the seeking of increase, which is permissible (Ṭs). It is permissible to present a gift to another in the hopes of receiving something greater than it from that person, although it does not bring increase with God, because it is thought that actions are rewarded in accord with the intentions behind them (Q). That one receives a manifold increase from paying alms (zakāh) is meant as a contrast to the practice of ribā in pre-Islamic Arabia, where loans could compound exponentially, to the point of leaving the borrower in complete ruin (see 2:275–81c).

40 This is one of many verses that refer to all the stages of existence and God's function as the you, then nourished you; then He causes you to die; then He gives you life. Is there anyone among those you ascribe as partners who does aught of that? Glory be to Him and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe. (41) Corruption has appeared on land and sea because of that which men's hands have earned, that He may let them taste some of that which they have done, that haply they might return. (42) Say, "Journey upon the earth and observe how those before fared in the end, most of whom were idolaters." (43) And set thy face to the creative agent for each. For then He causes you to die; then He gives you life (cf. 2:28; 22:66; 45:26), see 2:28c. Glory be to Him and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe (cf. 10:18; 16:1; 39:67) is an affirmation of God's utter transcendence.

41 Corruption (fasād) implies all manner of decadence and injustice, in regard to both rebelling against God and oppressing others, thus failing to recognize the rights of all. It is often understood by commentators to mean open disobedience toward God. In both 2:27 and 13:25, corruption is presented as part and parcel of breaking the covenant: those who break God's pact after accepting His covenant, and sever what God has commanded be joined, and work corruption upon the earth; and in 5:33 working corruption is linked to rejecting God's messengers. In general, when human caprice is followed rather than Divine ordinances, corruption ensues, as in 23:71: Were the truth to follow their caprices, the heavens and the earth and those therein would have been corrupted. As such, corruption can be linked to all manner of iniquity, such as arrogance (see 7:74), oppression (26:183; 28:4), and failing to honor family relations (47:22). Though working corruption is an accusation made against several specific human collectivities, such as the Children of Israel (17:4) and the pre-Islamic Arabian tribes of Thamūd (26:152) and Midian (7:85; 29:36), it is recognized as a general human shortcoming. Thus the angels are reported to have said to God regarding the creation of the human being on the earth, Wilt Thou place therein one who will work corruption therein, and shed blood? (2:30). Working corruption implies a combination of spiritual and worldly corruption (e.g., 2:27; 7:74, 85–86, 103; 11:85; 13:25); and it is implicitly or explicitly connected to physical violence in several verses (e.g., 2:205; 5:64; 26:183; 27:48–49; 28:4). The opposite of working corruption (ifsād) is iṣlāḥ, "setting things aright" or "making amends," and elsewhere corruption is put in direct contrast to performing righteous deeds (ṣāliḥāt): Or shall We make those who believe and perform righteous deeds like those who work corruption upon the earth? Or shall We make the reverent like the profligate? (38:28).

In the present verse corruption is said to appear because of that which men's hands have earned while elsewhere it is said that it is through the works of men that corruption is repelled: And were it not for God's repelling people, some by means of others, the earth would have been corrupted (2:251). The final ends of those who work corruption and those who oppose it are thus divergent. Heaven is ordained for the latter: That is the Abode of the Hereafter, which We ordain for those who desire neither dominance upon the earth, nor corruption (28:83); and punishment for the former: Those who disbelieve and who have turned from the way of God, for them We shall add punishment on top of punishment, for their having worked corruption (16:88).

That God will let them taste some of that which they have done means that God will allow them to experience some form of trial or punishment in this life in hopes that it may help them turn toward repentance and thus be forgiven and absolved of experiencing the full punishment in the Hereafter. That haply they might return thus implies that they might repent (Ṭ) and refrain from committing acts of disobedience in the future (IK, Ṭs).

42 Cf. 12:109; 22:46; 30:9; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:10. See 30:9c.

43 Set thy face to the upright religion is understood to mean to not turn away from it in the least, lest one be unable to return to it, as in 9:127:

upright religion before there comes a day from God that none can repel. That Day they will be spread asunder. (44) Whosoever disbelieves, his disbelief is to his own detriment. And whosoever works righteousness, they make provision for their souls, (45) that from His Bounty He may recompense those who believe and perform righteous deeds. Truly He loves not the disbelievers. (46) And among His signs is that He sends the winds as bearers of glad tidings to let you taste of His Mercy, and that ships may sail by His Command, and that you may seek of His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks. (47) We have indeed sent messengers unto their people before thee, and they brought them clear proofs. Then We took vengeance upon those who were guilty; and it is incumbent

Then they turn away. God has turned their hearts away, because they are a people who understand not (Ṭs). For set thy face, see 30:30c. Regarding the upright religion (cf. 6:161; 9:36; 12:40; 30:30; 98:5), see 6:161c.

None can repel the Day of Resurrection, just as naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God (35:44; cf. 8:59; 9:2–3; 11:20; 24:57; 29:22; 42:31; 46:32; 72:12). Thus none can avert the punishment that is their due, as in 6:134: Indeed, that which you are promised shall come to pass, and you cannot thwart [it]. Here a Day from God that none can repel can also be read, "a Day on which none can repel God" (R, Ṭs), but the former meaning is more likely, as such a reading more closely corresponds to other Quranic verses, such as 21:40: Nay, but it will come upon them suddenly, and confound them. Then they will not be able to repel it, nor will they be granted respite. That people will be spread asunder refers to their being divided into those destined for the Garden and those destined for the Fire (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z); see 30:14c.

44–45 That his disbelief is to his own detriment (cf. 35:39) relates to the broad Quranic teaching that those who turn away from God and deny God's signs ultimately do wrong to themselves, as in 7:177: Evil is the parable of the people who denied Our signs and wronged themselves. That the righteous make provision for their souls means that their good deeds will translate into their being recompensed from God's Bounty in the Hereafter. Make provision translates yamhadūn, which can also mean "to spread out." Some thus relate this verse to their spreading beds for themselves in the grave before the Resurrection (Ṭ) or in the Garden (Bḍ), or both (Ṭs). Others relate it to the manner in which God rewards good deeds with ten times the like thereof (6:160; IK).

46 That the winds come as bearers of glad tidings refers to their heralding rain, as in v. 48, and all the benefits that derive from it (cf. 7:57; 25:48; 27:63). Regarding the Quranic use of "winds" and "wind," see 30:48–49c. Seafaring is invoked as a blessing from God in several verses (14:32; 17:66; 23:21–22; 31:31; 35:12; 40:80; 42:32–34; 43:12; 45:12; 55:24; see also 2:164c). Here, as in other verses, the ships are understood by some as a spiritual symbol: the winds are the winds of guidance, spiritual inspiration, and the mercy of spiritual knowledge, and the ships allude to the meditations by means of which one courses upon the ocean of Divine Oneness to seek God's Bounty (Aj).

47 Regarding the meaning of clear proofs, see 30:9c. To this same opening phrase, 13:38 adds and it is not for a messenger to bring a sign, save by God's Leave; and for every term there is a book, which follows upon other verses maintaining that for every people there is a guide (13:7), that there has been no community but that a warner has passed among them (35:24), and that God has sent a messenger unto every community (16:36). From this perspective, God takes vengeance upon those who were guilty, because they have rejected guidance and failed to heed the warnings that were sent to them by God (see 26:208–9c).

upon Us to help the believers. (48) God is He Who sends the winds, then they cause clouds to rise, and He spreads them in the sky as He will and makes them into fragments, whereupon you see the rain emerging from their midst. Then, when He bestows it upon whomsoever He will among His servants, behold, they rejoice, (49) though previously, before it was sent down upon them, they had been in despair. (50) So observe the vestiges of God's Mercy, how He revives the earth after its death. Truly that is the Reviver of the dead, and He is Powerful over all things. (51) And were We to send a wind and they were to see it turn

The translation of the last phrase, and it is incumbent upon Us to help the believers, is based upon reading upon Us to help the believers as modifying incumbent, which here renders ḥaqqan. But ḥaqqan can also be read as the end of a sentence (Aj), in which case the phrase might best be rendered, "and it was due. Ours is to help the believers," as it is often by means of other people that God repels the unjust (see 2:250–51c; 22:40c). Both readings indicate that God took vengeance in order to aid the believers, but the second reading is somewhat more emphatic, indicating that God's Vengeance was due and that it was just. The means by which God aids human beings can also be seen as a reference to His saving them in the Hereafter, as in a famous saying of the Prophet, "No Muslim defends the honor of his brother but that it is incumbent upon God to defend him from the Fire of Hell on the Day of Resurrection," after which he recited and it is incumbent upon Us to help the believers (Bḍ, IK, Q, R, Ṭs).

48–49 Winds appears in the plural form ten times in the Quran, and each time it expresses God's Mercy, as in 7:57: He it is Who sends forth the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy (see also 25:48; 35:9). In contrast, when wind occurs in the singular, it is usually used to convey God's Wrath and Punishment (see 3:117; 10:22; 17:69; 22:31; 30:51; 33:9; 41:16; 46:24; 51:41; 54:19; 69:6). This distinction is likely made because the winds of the south, east, and north are all said to bring mercy; only the west wind is said to bring punishment and destruction. Fragments renders kisaf, which could also mean "piled up" (IK). The people to whom the rain came may have been in despair because they were in need, and the rain relieved their despair (IK). Or they may have been in despair when the winds first arose, thinking that a violent storm was coming, and then became relieved when it only brought rain.

50 The vestiges of God's Mercy refers to the rain and all of the things that are given life through it (Bḍ). Vestiges translates āthār, which can also be read athar, meaning "the effect of God's Mercy" (IJ, Ṭ). As with other passages that refer to the revival of dead earth (e.g., 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 30:19, 24; 35:9; 36:33; 41:31, 39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11), this passage also uses such imagery to argue for God's ability to resurrect decayed bones (Aj). That is the Reviver of the dead thus indicates that God and no other has the ability to revive the earth, since He is Powerful over all things, and that God has the ability to resurrect human beings. God's reviving the earth by sending water is also understood as a symbol for spiritual revival. Thus al-Tustarī writes, "In its outer meaning it refers to the rain, and in its inner meaning it alludes to the life of hearts through remembrance" (ST).

51 In contrast to their positive reaction to the winds of mercy and blessings mentioned in vv. 46–50, when people are confronted with a wind that removes those blessings, they think poorly of God, fail to reflect upon the blessings that they have been given, fail to trust in God (Bḍ), and thus come to disbelieve. In this context, turn yellow refers to either plants turning yellow from lack of rain or clouds changing color (N). After that means either after they were made glad or after the plants or clouds turned yellow (N). Together, vv. 48–51 indicate the manner in which disbelievers vacillate, first despairing of God's Mercy and provision, then becoming glad yellow, after that they would surely disbelieve. (52) Surely thou dost not make the dead to hear; nor dost thou make the deaf to hear the call when they turn their backs; (53) nor dost thou guide the blind from their straying. Thou makest none to hear, save those who believe in Our signs and are submitters. (54) God is He Who created you from weakness, then ordained strength after weakness, then ordained weakness and old age after strength. He creates whatsoever He will, and He is the Knowing, the Powerful. (55) And on the Day when the Hour is come, the guilty will swear that they had tarried naught but an hour; thus were they perverted. (56) And those who have been given knowledge and belief will say, "Indeed, you tarried in God's Book until the Day of Resurrection; and when they arrive, and then disbelieving in God and God's Mercy when some of the blessings are removed (N).

52–53 Cf. 27:80–81. Just as the Prophet is unable to make the dead hear in their graves, so too is he unable to make those who turn away from the revelation hear, as this ability lies with God alone (IK, Ṭ). A similar parallel is drawn in 6:36: Only those who hear will respond. As for the dead, God will resurrect them, and unto Him they shall be returned. That the Prophet cannot cause the dead to hear can also be understood as an allusion to those whose hearts are dead or sealed (N), as in v. 59. Blind then refers to those whose hearts are blind (Aj), as in 22:46: Truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind. From a Quranic perspective, the Prophet cannot cause their hearts to see or hear because his function is only to convey the revelation (see 3:20; 13:40), and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he (7:186; 13:33; 39:23, 36; 40:33); the Prophet should thus concern himself only with guiding those who do listen.

54 That human beings were created from weakness (cf. 4:28) refers either to their having been made from a base fluid (77:20; cf. 32:8; 86:5–7; Aj, Q, Ṭ), or to the weakness of a child at the beginning of life (Aj, Q, Z). Strength then refers to the period of youth and maturity, followed by the period of decline in old age. See also 22:5, where all of the stages of earthly life from conception to old age are cited as signs of God's Power (see also 22:5c) as well as 36:68, which speaks of those whom God causes to regress in creation, and 16:70, which speaks of those who are brought back to the weakest of ages, such that they know nothing after having had knowledge (cf. 5:17; 24:25; 42:49).

55 That the guilty seem to have tarried naught but an hour (cf. 10:45; 17:52; 20:102–4; 46:35; 79:46) refers either to their experience of the period in the grave before the Day of Resurrection or to their period of time on earth (Q), whose duration is as an hour or less in relation to the eternity of the Hereafter. Their claim may be made in ignorance or in order to argue that there is not enough proof against them (IK). Perverted translates yu'fakūn, which literally means "turned away," but which always carries a negative connotation, meaning turning away from truth toward falsehood—turning from telling the truth to lying or from beautiful actions to ugly ones (Iṣ)—and thus becoming perverted or deluded (Tāj al-ʿarūs). In this latter sense, the last phrase can also mean "thus were they deluded" (Z) in their understanding of the relationship of this world to the Hereafter.

56 Here, those who have been given knowledge and belief is understood to mean those who are given knowledge of and belief in God's Book (Ṭ), which some identify specifically as the angels or the believers (IJ) or more generally as the angels, the prophets, and the believers (Aj, Z). In God's Book means in God's Knowledge that is written on the Preserved Tablet (85:22), in God's this is the Day of Resurrection! But you knew not." (57) On that Day the excuses of those who do wrong will benefit them not; nor can they make amends. (58) And indeed We have set forth for mankind in this Quran every kind of parable. And if thou bringest them a sign, those who disbelieve will surely say, "You make naught but false claims." (59) Thus does God seal the hearts of those who know not. (60) So be patient. God's Promise is indeed true. And let not those without certainty disquiet thee.

Judgment and Decree (Aj), in the Quran (Aj), or in the book of deeds that is with God (IK). Their saying This is the Day of Resurrection implies a rebuke, similar to the disbelievers being told, This is the Day of Division that you used to deny (37:21).

57 The wrongdoers' excuses do not benefit them, because they have been provided ample warning through the messengers and ample opportunity to repent, as in 35:24: And there has been no community but that a warner has passed among them (cf. 16:36). Thus they are commanded, O you who disbelieve! Make no excuses this day! You are only requited for that which you used to do (66:7); see also 16:84; 45:35.

58–59 That God has set forth . . . every kind of parable (cf. 39:27) and employed every kind of parable (17:89; 18:54) means that God has shown people the truth, so that they may understand and follow it (IK), thus indicating why it is that the disbelievers have no excuse. Here a sign can mean verses of the Quran (Aj) or prophetic miracles (Aj, IK), such as Moses' staff turning into a snake and his hand turning white (IJ) or the Prophet Muhammad's cleaving of the moon (IK; see 54:1c). In this context, them in if thou bringest them a sign refers to the guilty (v. 55) as well as those whom the Prophet cannot make hear (v. 52) because God has "sealed their hearts" (v. 59); thus they will not believe, though every sign should come unto them, till they see the painful punishment (10:97). God's sealing hearts (see also 2:7; 6:46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 40:35; 63:3) indicates that He has cut off the faculties of understanding. In some instances it is combined with a reference to God taking away both hearing and sight (e.g., 6:46; 16:108), for although one may still have the use of these faculties, one does not understand the images one perceives through them; see 2:7c; 63:3c.

60 That God's Promise is indeed true (cf. 4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:21; 28:13; 31:33; 35:5; 40:55, 77; 45:32; 46:17) hearkens back to v. 6. Here it is understood as a reference to God's Promise to aid the Prophet, to make him prevail (IJ, Ṭ, Z), and to render his veracity clear (R). The command to not be disquieted by the uncertainty of the disbelievers can mean to not let them make one restive regarding one's own religion (IJ, Q). Thus although the address is in the second-person singular, which ordinarily signifies an address to the Prophet alone, it is understood as having been addressed to the Prophet's community as a whole (Q). Disquiet translates yastakhiffa, which can also mean to induce another to levity or to force another to do something in a hurry and so become unsteady. It is also understood to mean making another heedless or ignorant, so that the person then falls into error and transgression (Q).

Luqmān

Luqmān

Luqmān is believed to have been revealed during the Makkan period immediately after the previous sūrah, al-Rūm, although some maintain that vv. 27–29, perhaps the most frequently cited verses of the sūrah, were revealed during the Madinan period (Āl, IJ, JJ). The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the sage or prophet Luqmān (vv. 12–13), who conveys wisdom to his son (vv. 13, 16–19). The beginning of the sūrah can be seen as flowing directly from the last verse of the previous sūrah in that being steadfast in adhering to the Wise Book (v. 2) and following its guidance are what prevent one from being disquieted, while following idle discourse (v. 6) will lead to disquiet. The observation in v. 7 that the disbelievers turn away from God's signs as if they do not hear also echoes the assertion in 30:52 that the Prophet cannot cause the deaf to hear.

The focus of this sūrah is upon worship, obedience, and gratitude. Luqmān enjoins his son to recognize the Greatness of God, His Oneness, and the need to worship only Him. As in several other passages, this injunction is linked to obedience and gratitude toward parents, so long as they do not challenge one's allegiance to God. In this teaching one can see an important component of the Quranic social message: people should support the community and maintain familial allegiances, but not to the detriment of their relationship with God. The sūrah closes with a warning that neither parent nor child can help one another on the Day of Judgment (v. 33).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Alif. Lām. Mīm. (2) These are the signs of the Wise Book, (3) guidance and mercy for the virtuous, (4) who perform the prayer and give the alms and who are certain of the Hereafter. (5) It is they who are upon guidance from their Lord, and it is they who shall prosper. (6) And among mankind are those who purchase idle discourse to lead astray from the way of God without knowledge

1 The Arabic letters alif, lām, and mīm, which also appear in 2:1; 3:1; 29:1; 30:1; 32:1, are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine *sūrah*s and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c.

2 Cf. 10:1. The Wise Book is a reference to the Quran, which is also described as wise in 10:1 and 36:2; and the Mother of the Book—interpreted to mean the Quran or the source of all revelation—is described as wise in 43:4. Wise translates ḥakīm, which can also mean "determined" or "made firm" (muḥkam), as in 11:1, where the Quran is described as a Book whose signs have been determined (uḥkimat). According to Ibn Kathīr, its being determined (muḥkam) indicates that falsehood comes not upon it from before it or from behind it (41:42). Ḥakīm is also interpreted to mean that which makes wise (muḥkim), since the Quran clarifies and explains (Ṭ). For other *sūrah*s that open with references to the signs of the Book, see 12:1; 13:1; 15:1; 26:1; 27:1; 28:1.

3 If read in the nominative, guidance and mercy describes the Wise Book (IJ, Ṭ); if read in the accusative, it is the reason for which its signs were revealed, that is, as guidance and mercy. Guidance and mercy also characterize the revelation sent to Moses (6:154; 28:43) and describe the Quran in 7:52; 16:64; 16:89. That it is for the virtuous means it is for those who act in accord with it (Ṭ); regarding the virtuous, see 29:69c.

4 In this context, performing prayer can be seen as virtue with regard to oneself, while paying alms (zakāh) can be seen as virtue with regard to one's property. Prayer also indicates virtue in relation to God, while alms indicates virtue in relation to other human beings. See commentary on the similar verse 27:3; cf. 5:55.

5 Upon guidance means that they see, have clarity, and are following a clear way (IK), since they "ride upon guidance and are made firm by it" (Aj) and are "upon a light from their Lord" (Ṭ, Sh on 2:5). For prosper, see commentary on the identical verse 2:5.

6 Idle discourse can be a reference to all forms of speech that hinder one from seeing the signs of God and following in the way of God (IK). In this sense, it is a contrast to the Quran, which is referred to as the most beautiful discourse, or "the best discourse," in 39:23. Idle translates lahw, which can also mean "diversion" or "distraction." Thus some say it means whatever diverts or distracts one from God (IJ), while others say it refers to disputing in matters pertaining to religion and becoming engrossed in falsehood (ST). This verse was reportedly revealed in relation to stories related by one Naḍr ibn al-Ḥārith, who would return from his travels to distant lands with stories, those of the Byzantines and Sassanids in particular. Idle discourse would then refer to the stories he transmitted to the Quraysh, saying, "Muhammad relates to you the events of ʿĀd and Thamūd, and I relate to you the events of Rustam, Isfandiyār, and Khosro." Some found his tales more entertaining than listening to the Quran, and so this verse was revealed (IJ, JJ, W, Z).

According to others, idle discourse refers to singing (IK, Ṭ), and the verse refers to those who hired singing girls for amusement (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z), a practice forbidden in several sayings of the Prophet (Ṭ, Z). Others maintain that purchase does not refer to spending money, but to prefer-and who take it in mockery; for them there shall be a humiliating punishment. (7) And when Our signs are recited unto him, he turns away arrogantly as if he did not hear them, as if there were deafness in his ears. So give him glad tidings of a painful punishment. (8) Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be Gardens of bliss, (9) therein to abide—God's Promise in truth. And He is the Mighty, the Wise. (10) He created the heavens without pillars that you see, and cast into the earth firm mountains, lest it shake beneath you, and spread about all manner of beast therein. And We sent down water from the sky and caused every noble kind to grow therein. (11) This is the creation of God; so show me that which those apart from Him have created. Nay, the ring idle discourse and thus being lead astray by it (IK, Ṭ), choosing false or empty discourse over true discourse and discourse that harms over discourse that benefits (Ṭ). Such people purchase idle discourse . . . without knowledge (R), ignorant of what the outcome of such actions will be (Ṭ). What they take in mockery is understood to be the way of God (IJ, R, Ṭ) or the signs of God (IJ, Ṭ).

7 Because some prefer idle discourse to the Quran, they turn away arrogantly. When such people do hear the Quran, however, they do not understand it, because they are spiritually deaf, as in 6:25: Among them are those who listen to thee, but We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand it not, and in their ears a deafness (cf. 2:171; 5:71; 6:39; 8:22; 10:42; 17:46; 18:57; 21:46; 41:5, 44; 47:23); see 6:25c. This is one of many verses to speak of the various ways in which the disbelievers react to the recitation of God's signs, that is, verses of the Quran; cf. 8:31; 19:73; 22:72; 34:43; 42:25; 46:7; 68:15; 83:13. Glad tidings usually indicates the good news of salvation that prophets bring, but here, as elsewhere, it is used with a sense of irony (cf. 3:21; 4:138; 9:3, 34; 45:8; 84:24; see also 5:60), indicating that hypocrites and disbelievers will receive the painful punishment that actions such as purchasing idle discourse and turning away from God's signs merit.

8 In other verses, those who believe and perform righteous deeds are said to have Gardens with rivers running below (47:12; 85:11) and the Gardens of Paradise as a welcome (18:107) as well as a reward unceasing (41:8).

9 God's Promise in truth, which could also be rendered "God's True Promise" or "God's Promise is true," means that God has given believers a true promise (Ṭ), the Gardens of bliss (Z). In this context, the combination of the Divine Attributes Mighty and Wise indicates that, while God is the Mighty, Whom none can overcome or thwart and Who thus blesses whomsoever He wills, He is also the Wise, so such blessings are not bestowed arbitrarily, but in a manner that is wise and just (Z).

10 As translated, that you see refers to pillars. But it could also be understood as a reference to the heavens, in which case it would be rendered, "He created the heavens, and you see them without pillars" (Q, Ṭ, Z). See commentary on 13:2: God it is Who raised the heavens without pillars that you see. Regarding cast into the earth firm mountains, see 16:15c. That God has spread about all manner of beast (cf. 2:164) upon the earth indicates God's Mercy in providing nourishment (Ṭ) and the extent of His Knowledge and Power (IK). Beast can be understood as a reference to all animals, and every noble kind (cf. 26:7) can be understood as a reference to every form of vegetation (Ṭ). Noble translates karīm, which also means "generous" and is thus understood by some as a reference to the manner in which vegetation gives abundantly without asking anything in return (R).

11 This verse challenges the idolaters to substantiate their claim that their idols have some part in the creative process, as in 52:35–36: Were they created from naught? Or are they the creators?

wrongdoers are in manifest error. (12) And indeed We gave Luqmān wisdom: "Give thanks to God!" And whosoever gives thanks, he gives thanks for his own sake. And whosoever is ungrateful, truly God is Self-Sufficient, Praised. (13) And behold, Luqmān said to his son, admonishing him, "O my son! Do not ascribe partners unto God. Truly ascribing partners is a tremendous wrong." (14) And We have enjoined man concerning his parents—his mother bore him, weakness upon weakness, and his weaning was two years—give thanks unto Me and unto thy parents. Unto Me is the journey's end. (15) But if they strive to make thee ascribe as a partner unto Me that of which thou hast no knowledge, then obey them

Or did they create the heavens and the earth? Nay, but they have no certainty (cf. 7:191; 16:20). For manifest error, see 36:24c

12 Vv. 12–13 provide the only direct reference to Luqmān in the Quran. There is extensive debate regarding his identity. A minority of commentators propose that he was a pre-Islamic Arabian prophet (Ṭ, Z), but most commentators maintain that he was simply a righteous man (IK, Ṭ) or a sage (ḥakīm). Some identify him as a Nubian, an Ethiopian, or an Egyptian slave (IK, Ṭ, Z). Others claim that he was the nephew of the Prophet Job who lived a thousand years and acquired knowledge from the prophet David (Z), or that he was a judge among the people of Israel (Z). In the modern period, some scholars have attempted to identify him with such ancient figures as Prometheus, Alcmaeon, or the Biblical Balaam. It is most likely that he was a pre-Islamic Arabian sage revered during the time of Muhammad. That he was given wisdom is thus interpreted to mean comprehension and understanding rather than revelation (Ṭ).

Thankfulness toward God is for one's own benefit, because God gives generously in accord with one's thankfulness toward Him (Ṭ). Whosoever is ungrateful is ungrateful to the detriment of his or her own soul (Ṭ), as in 30:44 and 35:39: Whosoever disbelieves, his disbelief is to his detriment (cf. 40:28). In this context, that God is Self-Sufficient means that He has no need for human gratitude, since it adds nothing to God (Ṭ, Z), but that human beings are in need of being grateful toward God. That God is Praised means that it is in God's Nature to be praised whether human beings praise God or not (Ṭ, Z). From this perspective, participating in the praise of God is itself a gift for which human beings should give thanks.

13–14 The advice given by Luqmān to his son combined with the "charge" given to human beings about parents constitute protection against the two greatest sins, as when the Prophet asked his Companions, "Shall I tell you what are the greatest of major sins? . . . To attribute partners to God and to be disrespectful toward parents." Goodness, gratitude, and virtue toward parents are enjoined in several verses (4:36; 29:8; 46:15) and often combined with the command to worship none but God (see 17:23); see 29:8c. In 2:83, Be virtuous toward parents is listed as the first injunction of the covenant (mīthāq). Weakness upon weakness refers to the hardships of childbearing (IK, Ṭs) and can also mean "exhaustion upon exhaustion" (IK). His weaning was two years means that it is best for a child to be breast-fed for a full two years when possible, as in 2:233: And let mothers nurse their children two full years, for such as desire to complete the suckling (see also 46:15c). Giving thanks unto God is said to be accomplished through praise and obedience, while giving thanks to parents is demonstrated through righteousness and maintaining ties of kinship (Ṭs).

15 Although this verse should be understood as a general address to all human beings (Ṭū), according to several accounts this verse and the preceding one were revealed in connection with Saʿḍ ibn Mālik. Saʿd had always honored his mother, not. Consort with them in the world in a kindly manner, and follow the way of those who turn in repentance unto Me. Then unto Me is your return, and I shall inform you of that which you used to do. (16) "O my son! If it be but the weight of a mustard seed, be it in a rock, in the heavens, or on the earth, God will bring it forth. Truly God is Subtle, Aware. (17) O my son! Perform the prayer, enjoin right and forbid wrong, and bear patiently whatever may befall thee. That is indeed a course worthy of resolve. (18) And turn not thy cheek at men in scorn, nor walk exultantly upon the earth. Surely God loves not any vainglorious boaster. (19) And but when he embraced Islam, his mother asked him to leave Islam, saying that if he persisted, she would not eat or drink until she died, and people would all declare his shame by saying that he had killed his mother. But after two days she gave up her hunger strike when she saw that it had no effect upon him (IK, Q, Ṭ). The command to follow the way of those who turn in repentance unto God is understood as an address to all human beings to follow the way of the prophets (Q) or the way of the Prophet Muhammad (Qm, Ṭs) as well as the way of the believers (Ṭs, Ṭū). Some who read the verse as addressing the situation of Saʿd ibn Mālik understand it as a command to follow the way of Abū Bakr, under whose tutelage Saʿd is reported to have entered Islam (Q, Ṭ, W). This is one of several verses where it is said that at the Final Judgment, God will inform people about their actions in this life; see also 5:14, 105; 6:60, 108, 159; 9:94, 105; 10:23; 24:64; 29:8; 31:23; 39:7; 41:50; 58:6–7; 62:8; 64:7; 75:13. In this context, God's "informing" human beings stands as a reminder that among the things for which they will be called to account are their attitude and actions toward parents.

16 All deeds, no matter how small, will be accounted for on the Day of Judgment, as in 99:7–8: So whosoever does a mote's weight of good shall see it. And whosoever does a mote's weight of evil shall see it. Thus it is said that all deeds will be weighed, as in 21:47: We shall set the just scales for the Day of Resurrection, and no soul shall be wronged in aught. Even if it be the weight of a mustard seed, We shall bring it. That God is Subtle indicates that God has knowledge of the minutest details, while Aware indicates that He is aware of all things at every moment.

17 To enjoin right and forbid wrong is a major ethical injunction of the Quran; see 3:104c, 110, 114; 7:157; 9:71, 112; 22:41. In this context, where it follows Luqmān's initial command to give thanks to God, ascribe no partners to Him (vv. 12–13), and perform the prayer, the injunction to enjoin right and forbid wrong can be understood to mean that after individuals have perfected their own worship of God, then they can help others perfect theirs (R). As translated, That is indeed a course worthy of resolve (cf. 3:186; 42:43) indicates that the phrase relates to the importance of human beings resolving to follow such a course. But it can also be understood to mean that it is a course or matter that God has resolved, determined, or commanded (Ṭ), in which case it might be rendered, "That is indeed among the matters resolved."

18 Turn not thy cheek at men in scorn is understood as a general command not to be arrogant with others, especially when conversing with them, but is also said to refer specifically to shunning a companion for whom one had affection (Ṭ). Others understand it as an injunction to avoid speaking in a boastful manner (Ṭ). The injunction to walk not exultantly upon the earth (cf. 17:37) means that one's reason for walking about should not be vanity and insolence (Z). In the contemporary period, this phrase is invoked by some environmentalists to argue against human beings' arrogant behavior toward nature, which is seen as an abuse of their role as God's vicegerents on earth. When seen in relation to the injunctions Luqmān gives his son in vv. 13 and 17–18, this verse can be understood to mean that once people have achieved the level where they truly enjoin right and forbid wrong, they should not be condescending toward others or put be moderate in thy pace and lower thy voice. Truly the vilest of voices are those of asses." (20) Have you not considered that God has made whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth subservient unto you and has poured His Blessings upon you, both outwardly and inwardly? Among mankind are those who dispute concerning God without knowledge, without guidance, and without an illuminating Book. (21) When it is said unto them, "Follow that which God has sent down," they respond, "Nay, but we follow that which we found our fathers following." What! Even though Satan is calling them to the punishment of the Blaze? (22) And whosoever submits his face to God and is virtuous has indeed grasped the most unfailing handhold, and unto God is on airs (R), and they should not turn their backs on those who seek guidance (ST).

19 Be moderate in thy pace means to be neither lazy nor hasty (IK). Combined with the injunction to lower thy voice, it can be understood as counsel to be moderate and deliberate in all of one's affairs (R). Be moderate in thy pace can also be understood to mean "direct thy walking" (Z), indicating that one should direct one's course to avoid being influenced by forces that might lead one astray. The command to lower one's voice is connected to the general advice to be cautious in speech, as the tongue is said to "translate" or manifest the heart (R). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have asked rhetorically, "Is there anything that drags people on their faces"—or he said, "on their noses"—"into the Fire other than the jests of their tongues?" In relation to the Prophet, lowering the voice is also connected to reverence, as in 49:3: Truly those who lower their voices before the Messenger of God, they are the ones whose hearts God has tested for reverence.

20 God has made all things subservient to human beings (cf. 14:33; 22:65; 45:13) insofar as He has made human beings vicegerents upon the earth (6:165; 35:39; cf. 2:30). In this context, the subservience of creation to human beings highlights the importance of being moderate in one's actions and one's speech, as the deeds of human beings can have an exponential impact on the world around them. Here outwardly describes blessings that are attained through the senses, while inwardly describes those attained through the mind, the intellect, and the heart (Aj). Outward blessings could also be seen as the health and comfort God provides, while inward blessings could be seen as faith, certainty, and knowledge (Aj). That people dispute without knowledge, without guidance, and without an illuminating Book (cf. 22:8) indicates that they have no rational arguments, no transmitted knowledge, and no revelation to support their claims (cf. 34:44; 35:40; 43:21; 46:4; 68:37–38).

21 Similar to this verse is 5:104, in which, when the Makkan idolaters are called to follow the Quran, they respond, Sufficient for us is that which we have found our fathers practicing; this is then countered with a rhetorical question, What! Even if their fathers knew naught and were not rightly guided? Likewise, when the prophets Moses and Aaron call their people to follow the Torah, they respond, Have you come unto us to turn us away from that which we found our fathers following? (10:78). All such verses indicate an unequivocal rejection of blind adherence to the ways of previous generations (Bd).

22 Submitting one's face to God (cf. 2:112; 3:20; 4:125) implies submitting one's entire being to Him, as in Arabic the face is a metonym for one's essence. Virtuous renders muḥsin, which indicates one who performs iḥsān, that is, virtue, or literally doing what is beautiful or what makes things beautiful; see 29:69c. The manner in which being virtuous or doing what is beautiful is connected to submitting one's face, or essence, to God indicates that the full depth of islām—the reality the end of all affairs. (23) And whosoever does not believe, let not his disbelief grieve thee. Unto Us is their return; then We shall inform them of that which they did. Truly God knows what lies within breasts. (24) We grant them enjoyment a little, then We compel them toward a grave punishment. (25) And wert thou to ask them, "Who created the heavens and the earth?" they would surely say, "God." Say, "Praise be to God." Nay, but most of them know not. (26) Unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth. Truly God is the Self-Sufficient, the Praised. (27) And if all the trees on earth were pens, and if of "submission"—is attained by performing all actions with virtue and beauty. Both islām and iḥsān control passions and conceits, the former by channeling and neutralizing them from without through the dictates of the Shariah, and the latter by dissolving them from within. But when passions and conceits are dissolved from within, many of the prescriptions and prohibitions that pertain to the outer neutralizing discipline of islām do not need to be imposed, because the actions they enjoin arise organically from within. Submitting one's face as a muḥsin could thus be understood to be the most unfailing handhold (cf. 2:256), a term understood as a metaphor for salvation (Ṭb) and by some Shiites as a reference to the sanctity of the Imams (Ka, Qm). Regarding the most unfailing handhold, ʿAbd Allāh ibn Salām is reported to have said, "I saw myself in a garden, and there was a pillar in the middle of the garden, and there was a handhold at the top of the pillar. I was asked to climb it. I said, 'I cannot.' Then a servant came and lifted up my clothes, and I climbed [the pillar], and then got hold of the handhold, and I woke up while still holding it. I told the Prophet of it, and he said, 'The garden symbolizes the garden of Islam, and the handhold is the firm Islamic handhold, which indicates that you will be adhering firmly to Islam until you die.'"

23 As the disbelievers will return to God on the Day of Resurrection, be informed of their deeds (see 31:15c), and be punished for them, the Prophet is enjoined not to grieve regarding them (Ṭ), since they will not be able to overcome God's Plan (Z; see also 3:176; 5:41, 68; 6:33; 10:65; 15:88; 16:127; 18:6; 26:3; 27:70; 35:8; 36:76). In this context, that God knows what lies within breasts (cf. 3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13) means that God knows the disbelief hidden within their hearts (Ṭ). It could also be understood as a general statement that God will deal with all human beings in accord with their true natures (Z).

24 This verse could also be read, "And We grant them a little enjoyment." In both readings, the implication that God is allowing the disbelievers to enjoy the blessings of this life for a while should not be a cause for consternation, since their being given more time and more blessings often allows them more time to commit sin and thus prove their true character. In this regard, 15:3 says of the disbelievers, Leave them to eat and enjoy themselves and to be beguiled by hopes, for soon they will know. And in 14:30, the Prophet is told to say to the disbelievers, Enjoy yourselves! For truly your journey is unto the Fire! See also 3:178; 10:69–70; 16:55; 26:205–7; 29:66; 30:34c; 77:46.

25–26 When questioned about the source of creation, they—that is, the idolaters among the Quraysh—would surely say, "God" (cf. 10:31; 23:84–85; 29:61, 63; 39:38; 43:9, 87), because the agency of a creator above all others is evident to them, given that many of them still believed in a supreme deity. The Prophet is then told to say, Praise be to God, meaning that only God should be praised for the existence of the created order, not those who had nothing to do with bringing forth creation (Ṭ), and that no being other than God should be worshipped (Z). Regarding the Divine Names the Self-Sufficient, the Praised, see 31:12c.

27 This verse evokes the inexhaustibility of God's creation through Divine Speech (R), as in 36:82: His Command when He desires a thing is the sea and seven more added to it [were ink], the Words of God would not be exhausted. Truly God is Mighty, Wise. (28) Your creation and your resurrection are as naught but a single soul. Truly God is Hearing, Seeing. (29) Hast thou not considered that God makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and that He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed, and that God is Aware of whatsoever you do? (30) That is because God, He is the Truth, and whatsoever they call upon only to say to it, "Be!" and it is (cf. 2:117; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 40:68). In this context, seven more is not literal, but is meant to indicate an immeasurable quantity (IK, R). Thus, were one to attempt to bring forth all of the creations of God, the possibilities of which are infinite, immeasurable seas of ink and innumerable pens would be exhausted before God's creative speech would be exhausted (Aj, Ṭb); see 18:109c.

This verse was reportedly revealed in response to a dispute the Prophet had with some Jews. After he had migrated to Madinah, a group of Jewish leaders went to see him and said, "O Muhammad, you have said, And you have not been given knowledge, save a little [17:85]. Are you referring to us or to your people?" The Prophet said, "Both." To which they replied, "Do you not recite in what has come to you that we have been given the Torah as a clarification of all things [16:89]?" The Prophet answered, "In relation to God's Knowledge it is little, and you have from [God's Knowledge] what suffices you." Then God sent this verse in response to what they had asked (Ṭ). According to another account, the Prophet responded, "The knowledge that you have is very little in comparison with God's Knowledge. God has given you something that would benefit you, were you to act in accord with it." They said, "O Muhammad, how can you claim this when it is you who says, Whosoever is granted wisdom has been granted much good [2:269]? How can little knowledge and much good be combined together?" Then as a response, God revealed this verse (W). Others say that this verse may have been revealed in relation to a group of disbelievers after they had remarked, "What Muhammad transmits will soon be exhausted" (R).

28 God only needs to command a thing once and it will be (Q), as in 54:50: Our Command is naught but one, like the blinking of an eye (IK). Likewise, the Resurrection shall be but a single cry (36:53; 79:13). Thus it is no more difficult for God to create all human beings and to resurrect them than it is for God to create a single human being (Aj, IK, Q). In this way, this verse reaffirms the idea that God's Power would not and could not be exhausted (v. 27) by the process of creation or resurrection. In somewhat different contexts, however, the Quran mentions that God created human beings from a single soul and that from this single soul was created its mate (see 4:1c; 6:98; 7:189; 39:6). That God is Hearing, Seeing (4:58, 134; 22:61, 75; 58:1) reinforces the fullness of God's Omniscience; see 4:58c.

29 Cf. 35:13. The passing of the night into the day and the day into the night (cf. 3:27; 22:61; 57:6) can refer to the daily exchange of light and darkness (Aj), to seasonal variations in the length of days and nights (IK, JJ), or to both. That God has made the sun and the moon subservient (cf. 7:54; 13:2; 14:33; 16:12; 29:61; 39:5) refers to God's control over all celestial bodies (IK), as in 16:12: The sun, and the moon, and the stars are subservient by His Command. It can also be understood as a reference to the manner in which they are made to serve human beings, as in 14:33: He has made the sun and the moon subservient unto you, constant, and He made the night and the day subservient unto you (cf. 22:65; 31:20; 45:13). That each runs for a term appointed (cf. 13:2; 35:13; 39:5) refers to their termination at the end of the world (IK, JJ) or to their cyclical rotation.

30 That refers to all that is mentioned in the previous verse (Aj, Q, Ṭ, Z), or it can be understood to begin an emphatic statement meaning "Witness that God, He is the Truth" (Aj). The Truth renders al-Ḥaqq, which can also mean "the Real."

other than Him is false, and God is the Exalted, the Great. (31) Hast thou not considered that the ships sail upon the sea by God's Blessing, that He may show you His signs? Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful. (32) And when waves enshroud them like awnings, they call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him. Then when He has delivered them safely to land, some of them take a middling course. And none reject Our signs, save all who are perfidious, ungrateful. (33) O mankind! Reverence your Lord and fear a day on which no parent will avail his child aught and no child will avail his parent aught. Surely God's Promise is true. So let not the life of this world delude you, nor let the Deluder delude you concerning God. (34) Truly with God lies knowledge of the Hour, and He sends down the rain and knows what lies in wombs. And no soul knows what it will earn on the morrow, and no soul knows in what land it will die. Truly God is Knowing, Aware.

This verse is thus understood as an affirmation that God is the Ultimate Reality beyond and behind all of creation and that all of the things to which anyone ascribes ultimate power or upon which anyone calls for intercession are entirely dependent upon God, possessing no reality in and of themselves. God is the only reality or being that is necessary, while all other realities are contingent (Ṭb).

31 That seafaring is a blessing bestowed by God (cf. 14:32; 17:66; 22:65; 30:46; 43:12) reiterates the manner in which God makes creation subservient to human beings, as in 45:12: God it is Who made the sea subservient unto you, that the ships may sail upon it by His Command, that you may seek His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks; see 31:20c. Patient and thankful describe those who are steadfast in the face of affliction and thankful when in a state of ease (IK).

32 Cf. 10:22–23; 17:67; 29:65. A storm at sea can be seen as a parable for every affliction that besets human beings in life. Devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 29:65; 40:14, 65; 98:5) refers to the singularity of their devotion in the face of severe afflictions (Ṭ). Yet when they are delivered to safety, some take a middling course, wavering away from the sincerity they had declared when they feared for their lives (Z), or turn away and are ungrateful (17:67), returning to their polytheism or their forgetfulness of God and behaving tyrannically upon the earth without right (10:23). Perfidious translates khattār, which means one who betrays or stabs in the back or who breaks every promise made (IK). Such people deny that their good fortune is a blessing from God and do not give thanks for it (IK).

33 On the Day of Judgment none can avail another against God's Punishment (2:48, 123; 3:10, 116; 26:88; 44:41; 86:10). On the one hand, this means that even if a parent wanted to take the place of a child, or vice versa, he or she would not be able to do so (IK), since none shall bear the burden of another (6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; 53:38). On the other hand, it indicates that on the Day of Judgment, everyone will be too concerned with his or her own state of affairs to give thought to the condition of those he or she had loved in this world, as alluded to in 80:37: For every man that Day his affair shall suffice him (see also 70:10–14). This present verse is also one of several that warn against being deluded by the life of this world (cf. 6:70, 130; 35:5; 43:35). The Deluder is a reference to Satan, the nature of whose delusion is made clear in 4:120: He makes them promises and stirs in them desires, but Satan promises naught but delusion (cf. 14:22). Deluder translates gharūr, which could also be taken as a reference to "delusion" in general.

34 That knowledge of the end of time, or the Hour, lies only with God is mentioned in several verses (see 7:187; 33:63; 41:47; 43:85; 67:25–26; 79:42–46). Similarly, only God knows when the rain will fall or what is decreed for children in wombs, since with Him are the keys of the Unseen. None knows them but He (6:59). Ibn ʿUmar related that the Prophet said, "The keys of the Unseen are five, and none knows them except God: none knows the timing of the Hour except God; none knows what is hidden in wombs except God; none knows what is in store for tomorrow except God; no soul knows in which land it will die; only God knows this; and none knows when it will rain except God" (IK, Ṭ). According to some accounts, after making this statement, the Prophet recited this verse.

This verse was reportedly revealed in response to a man who asked the Prophet about the Hour and its exact timing, adding, "Our land has dried up. When is it going to rain? And I left my wife pregnant. When is she going to give birth? And I know in which land I was born, but in which land am I going to die?" (W). But according to others, the verse had been revealed before this encounter, and the Prophet simply responded to these questions by saying, "If God wanted to take the soul of a servant in a particular land, He would place within that servant a need, such that he would not cease until he had reached that land," after which he recited this verse (Q).

That no one knows the time or place of death is understood as an admonition to be always prepared for death and thus ever mindful of God. In this vein, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, "No soul knows what it will earn on the morrow; that is, [no soul knows] what [counts] for it and against it in what has been measured out from the Unseen. So, be wary of [what has been measured out] by upholding the remembrance of Him and crying out to Him for help, until He Himself takes care of your affair; as He has said: God effaces what He will and establishes [13:39; ST]."

Prostration

al-Sajdah

Al-Sajdah is from the Makkan period, although many scholars maintain that vv. 16–20 are from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ, Q), and others maintain that only vv. 18–20 are Madinan, or that only v. 16 is (IJ). Such interpretations may, however, derive from a desire to attach these verses to occasions of revelation for which there is not strong support; al-Ālūsī observes that the strength of the connection of these verses to the preceding verses makes it seem unlikely that they are from a different period. Believed to have been revealed after Sūrah 23, al-Muʾminūn (JJ), this sūrah takes its name from the mention of those who fall prostrate and hymn the praise of their Lord in v. 15. It was also known to some as Sūrat al-Maḍājiʿ, meaning "Sūrah of the Beds," after the reference to those who shun their beds in order to devote themselves to God in v. 16 (Āl; Sy). Many also refer to this sūrah by its first words, "Alif, Lām, Mīm, the Revelation" (Al, Bq, Q), as a way to distinguish it from other *sūrah*s that begin with the Arabic letters alif, lām, and mīm.

Many aḥādīth attribute great favor to this sūrah. It is reported that the Prophet would read both al-Mulk (Sūrah 67) and al-Sajdah every night before going to sleep (Āl, Q, Sy, Ṭs), and that he would often recite al-Sajdah and al-Insān (Sūrah 76) during the morning prayer on Fridays (Āl, Q, Sy). Some attribute the reverence for this sūrah to the way it covers the major themes of the Quran in a succinct manner. The first half of the sūrah discusses revelation (vv. 2–3), God (vv. 4–6), creation, especially of human beings (vv. 7–9), and Resurrection and Judgment (vv. 10–14). The second half provides an eloquent contrast between those who prostrate before God in beholding His signs and those who turn away from them (vv. 15–22), employing the Children of Israel as an example of those who were guided so long as they followed God's signs (vv. 23–25). A call to reflect upon the end of civilizations past and the signs of God in creation (vv. 26–27) then segues into a call for the Prophet to challenge the disbelievers and await the answer (vv. 28–30).

① Alif. Lām. Mīm. ② The revelation of the Book in which there is no doubt, from the Lord of the worlds. ③ Or do they say, "He has fabricated it"? Nay, it is the truth from thy Lord, that thou mayest warn a people to whom no warner has come before thee, that haply they may be guided. ④ God it is Who created the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in six days. Then He mounted the Throne. Apart from Him you have neither protector,

2 This is the first of five sūrahs to begin with the revelation of the Book (cf. 39:1; 40:2; 45:2; 46:2). In each of these instances, revelation translates tanzīl, which literally means "descending" or "descent." From one perspective, "Although the Quran is a single reality, it has many levels of descent and is called by various names corresponding to each particular level of descent" (MṢ). The Book refers to the Quran (JJ). In which there is no doubt may refer to either the Book itself (IK), meaning its contents, or to the revelation of the Book, meaning that there is no doubt regarding its Divine provenance (IK, Ṭ, Z).

3 The beginning question asks whether people attest to the Book or claim the Prophet has fabricated it (cf. 10:38c; 11:13, 35; 46:8). Or translates the particle am, which can be read as an interrogative particle or as particle for continuing the previous discussion, in which case the verse would read, "Yet they say . . . " or "Nay, but they say . . . ," a reading preferred by several commentators (Ṭ, Z). To whom no warner has come before thee indicates that the Arabs of the Prophet's generation had not received a revelation (R, Ṭ, Z), though earlier Arabs, such as the tribes of ʿĀd and Thamūd, had received revelations. In this sense, this verse is similar to 34:44, which says of the Arabs, We have not given them any books that they study; nor have We sent them a warner before thee; and 36:6, which states that the Quran was sent that thou mayest warn a people whose fathers were not warned; so they were heedless. Similar to 36:6, the present verse could also be read to mean "that thou mayest warn a people of that which came to them by a warner before thee," in which case it refers to the fact that their ancestors were warned in earlier epochs, but these revelations were forgotten over time.

4 Regarding the creation of the heavens and the earth . . . in six days (cf. 10:3; 11:7; 25:59; 50:38; 57:4), after which God mounted the Throne on the seventh day (IK, Ṭ), an allusion to God's Sovereignty (R), see 7:54c. Some maintain that then, here rendering thumma, can be understood to mean "and" (Q), which would appear to contest the interpretation that God mounted the Throne on the seventh day. That people have neither protector, nor intercessor other than God means that none may intercede or help without God's Permission (IK, Z), as in 10:3: There is no intercessor, save by His Leave (see also 19:87; 20:109; 39:44; 43:86; 53:26; 74:48; 2:48c; 2:255c), which is another means of confirming God's absolute sovereignty (see 2:107). Will you not, then, remember (cf. 6:80; 45:23) can be understood as a reference to remembering the pretemporal covenant made between God and all human beings in 7:172 (K) or to remembering the Reality of God. The phrase can also be rendered, nor intercessor. Will you not, then, remember? (5) He directs the affair from Heaven unto earth; then it ascends unto Him in a day whose measure is as a thousand years of that which you reckon. (6) Such is the Knower of the Unseen and the seen, the Mighty, the Merciful, (7) Who made beautiful all that He created, and Who began the creation of man from clay. (8) Then He made his seed from a draught of base fluid. (9) Then He fashioned him, and breathed "Will you not, then, be admonished?" meaning, "Will you not take heed of this warning?"

5 After mounting the Throne, God directs the affair (cf. 10:3, 31; 13:2), making it descend from the highest heaven to the lowest level of the earth (IK), which refers to His control over all affairs (Ṭ) and the carrying out of His Decree (IJ) for the duration of the world (JJ) or to the descent of revelation (IJ). What ascends to God are the angels (IJ) or the Command, meaning that everything that was created by the Command ascends unto Him on the Day of Resurrection (IJ, Z). That its measure is as a thousand years of that which you reckon (cf. 22:47) indicates the severity of the terrors of that Day for the disbelievers and is elsewhere likened to fifty thousand years (70:4; JJ). Such disparity also indicates the difference between duration in the spiritual world and that in the world of form and matter; see 22:47c; 70:4c.

Regarding the importance of understanding the manner in which God directs the affair, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, "He reveals to His servants from His Knowledge that which is a means of guidance and salvation for them. The person who is content with the decreed provision resulting from God's directing for him will have the evil of his own directing disposed of and removed from him. Thus [God] will have returned him to a state of contentment with the Divine Decree and rectitude in the face of the unfolding of what is destined for him. [Such people] are among those who are brought nigh [unto God (al-muqarrabūn; see 56:11–12c)]. Truly, God created people without any veil, and then made their directing [for themselves] their veil."

6 Regarding God as Knower of the Unseen and the seen (cf. 6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 39:46; 59:22; 62:8; 64:18), see 59:22c.

7 Made beautiful translates aḥsana, which can also be understood to mean "perfected" or "completed with precision," although in this context some understand it to mean "determined" (aḥkama; Ṭ). Regarding the creation of human beings, God is also said to have made beautiful their forms (40:64). This verse implies that the quality of "making beautiful" is something in which human beings can partake by beautifying the world around them and by beautifying their character. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "Verily God has enjoined making beautiful (iḥsān) for everything. So, when you kill, kill in a beautiful manner; when you sacrifice, sacrifice in a beautiful manner."

The clay from which Adam and, by extension, all human beings were created is variously described as being like potter's clay (55:14); dried clay, made of molded mud (15:26); a draught of clay (23:12); and viscous clay (37:11). These different forms of clay can be seen as describing stages of human creation: from dust (3:59), to viscous clay, to molded mud, to dried clay, like earthen vessels (55:14), at which point it is ready for the spirit to be blown into it, as in v. 9.

8 His seed, meaning human progeny (R, Ṭ), hence all human beings, is from an extract of clear liquid (Iṣ, Ṭ). Base fluid (cf. 77:20), like the gushing fluid in 86:6, refers to semen. Draught renders sulālah, which implies something drawn forth or gently flowing forth; the semen is referred to as such because it flows gently from the loins (Ṭs). It is mentioned in part as a reminder for human beings of their humble origins. God's Ability to create human beings out of such lowly materials can also be seen as testimony to God's Ability to resurrect human beings from mere dust and bones.

9 A similar account of the creation of Adam is phrased as an address from God to the angels: When I have proportioned him and breathed into him of My Spirit, fall down before him prostrating (38:72; cf. 15:29). Breathed into him of His into him of His Spirit, and endowed you with hearing, sight, and hearts. Little do you give thanks! (10) And they say, "What! When we have become lost in the earth, shall we indeed be created anew?" Nay, they believe not in the meeting with their Lord. (11) Say, "The Angel of death, who has been entrusted with you, will take you; then unto your Lord shall you be returned." (12) Couldst thou but see when the guilty bend their heads low before their Lord: "Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain." (13) And had We willed, We would have given every soul Spirit indicates that God made Adam, who had been inanimate, into a living conscious being (JJ). The Spirit can also be understood to represent the bestowal or activation of the intellect by which human beings control hearing, sight, and hearts. The order in which these three terms are mentioned can be understood as an allusion to the path by which one acquires knowledge, first hearing of things from others, then seeing them and attaining to them for oneself, then perceiving their true nature and coming to a more direct and complete understanding of them (R). Those who do not give thanks for these faculties are those whose hearing, sight, and hearts availed them naught, since they rejected God's signs (46:26), meaning that they do not use these faculties to act in accord with God's teachings, but simply to follow their own desires and caprices.

10 The question in this verse may be seen as meaning, "When our bodies have decomposed, are we to be reconstituted?" (IJ, JJ). This is similar to the more common objection voiced by disbelievers, What! When we are dead and have become dust and bones, are we to be resurrected? (56:47; cf. 17:49, 98; 23:82–83; 36:78; 37:16–17, 53; 50:3; 79:11). Regarding those who deny resurrection and the meeting with their Lord (cf. 6:31), see 30:8c.

11 In Islamic angelology, the Angel of death is understood to be Azrael (IK, Q), who is in charge of removing spirits from bodies at the moment of death, for which he is said to have helpers among the angels (IK, Ṭ; see 4:97c; 8:50; 16:32), though it is also said that God takes souls at the moment of their death (39:42). Al-Qurṭubī reconciles these verses by saying that the Angel of Death seizes them, the helping angels, referred to as guardians and as Our messengers in 6:61, attend to them, and God brings about their end; see also 6:61–62c; 7:37; and the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran."

12 Couldst thou but see is an address directly to the Prophet or a general address (R). In either case, it refers to the amazement one would experience upon witnessing the state of the disbelievers in the Hereafter (R). Now that the souls of disbelievers have been taken by the Angel of Death, seen the realities of Resurrection and Judgment that they had denied (cf. 19:38), and been made to admit their sin (67:11; cf. 40:11), they say, We are certain, meaning they believe with certainty or that they are simply claiming to believe in order to avoid the punishment, as in 6:23: Then their contention will be but to say, "By God, our Lord, we were not idolaters" (R). In another verse, God responds to the same request that they be sent back, in their words, so that they may work righteousness, saying, Did We not give you long life, enough for whosoever would reflect to reflect therein? And the warner came unto you; so taste [the punishment]! (35:37). In 23:100, when the same request is made by one person, the evaluation is Nay, indeed these are words that he speaks. God thus denies all such requests, because even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28). For the manner in which this and other verses can be seen as part of an extended discourse between God and the denizens of Hell, see 40:11–12c.

13 This verse is an address to those who despair over the attitude of the disbelievers, as the Prophet did, letting them know that it is God's Decree that some turn away, as in 10:99: And had thy Lord willed, all those who are on the earth its guidance. But the Word from Me comes due: "I shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together!" (14) So taste [the punishment] for having forgotten the meeting with this your Day! Verily, We have forgotten you! And taste the punishment everlasting for that which you used to do. (15) Truly they believe in Our signs who, when reminded of them, fall prostrate and hymn the praise of their Lord and wax not arrogant, (16) whose sides shun [their] beds, calling upon their Lord out of fear and hope, and who spend from that which We have provided them. (17) No soul knows what comfort is kept hidden for it would have believed all together. Wouldst thou compel men till they become believers? That God will fill Hell with jinn and men all together (cf. 11:119; 38:85) then speaks to the fact that the Prophet can only call people to guidance, but must leave their final end in the Hands of God.

14 These words are spoken by God or by the angels who serve as the keepers of Hell to the disbelievers as the latter enter Hell (JJ). In other verses, God or the keepers say, Taste the punishment for having disbelieved (3:106; 6:30; 8:35; 46:34; cf. 7:39). This is one of several verses that speak of the disbelievers being forgotten by God, as in 45:34: And it will be said, "Today We forget you just as you forgot the meeting with this your Day; your refuge is the Fire and you have no helpers" (see also 7:51; 9:67; 20:126; 59:19). Such verses mean that they are cast out of God's Mercy or into the state of punishment (Bḍ), since God does not "forget" (IK). Many understand such verses to mean that disbelievers are left to wallow in the punishment of the Fire (JJ), but it also speaks to the importance for one's spiritual life of remembering the meeting with God and thus death. In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, "The intelligent person is one who knows his soul and works for what follows death." And when asked, "Who is the most intelligent of believers?" he replied, "The most frequent in remembering death, and the best prepared for what follows it, they are the most intelligent."

15 Our signs refers to the verses of the Quran (Aj, JJ), to all revelations, to prophetic miracles, or to all of the signs of God in the created world. According to a ḥadīth, "The closest that a servant can be to his Lord is when he is prostrating" (IK, Q). Nonetheless, this verse cautions that for such prostration to be efficacious it must not be mixed with arrogance. According to the Islamic tradition, this is one of fifteen verses after which one prostrates when reciting the Quran; see 19:58c.

16 This verse was reportedly revealed with regard to some Companions of the Prophet who would stand in prayer from after the sunset prayer (maghrib) until the time of the night prayer (ʿishāʾ; W), while others say it refers to those who pray the night vigil (tahajjud; W). Given that they shun [their] beds, the second interpretation is more plausible. In this context, fear is understood to mean fear of punishment and hope is understood to mean hope for mercy (JJ). From a spiritual perspective, it can be understood to mean the fear of being separated from God and the hope of meeting Him (Qu, ST). Al-Maybudī writes, "Sleeplessness and wakefulness at night are the cause of nearness to the Truth and evidence of the perfection of love, for the first degree of love is seeking conformity, and the attribute of the Truth is that neither slumber overtakes Him nor sleep [2:255]." In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "My eyes sleep, but my heart waketh" (My).

As the reference to prayer is understood by most to mean the supererogatory night vigil, the reference to spending is understood to mean charity (ṣadaqah) beyond the required alms tax (zakāh). Spending of what God has provided is extolled alongside prayer and belief in several verses (e.g., 2:3; 8:3; 4:39; 35:29), and human beings are called upon to spend of that which We have provided you before death comes upon one of you and he says, "My Lord, wouldst that Thou grant me reprieve until a term nigh, that I might give charity and be among the righteous!" (63:10; cf. 2:254; 14:44).

17 Comfort translates qurrat aʿyun, which literally means "coolness of the eyes" and conveys as a recompense for that which they used to do. (18) Is one who believes like one who is iniquitous? They are not equal. (19) As for those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be Gardens of refuge, as a welcome for that which they used to do. (20) And as for those who are iniquitous, their refuge is the Fire. Whenever they desire to go forth therefrom, they are returned unto it, and it is said unto them, "Taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny!" (21) And We make them taste the lesser punishment before the greater ease, comfort, and joy. In the Quran, some understand it as an allusion to the vision of God (Aj), because "the eye is only cooled by the vision of the one it loves" (Qu). In relation to this verse, it is reported that the Prophet said, "God says, 'I have prepared for My righteous servants what no eye has seen and no ear has heard and what has not occurred to the heart of any human being.'" Then the Prophet recited, No soul knows what comfort is kept hidden for it (Q).

One of the Prophet's Companions, Muʿādh ibn Jabal, reported that the Prophet cited this verse and the previous one when teaching him the practice of Islam: "I said, 'O Messenger of God, tell me of an act that will take me into the Garden and will keep me away from the Fire.' He replied, 'You have asked me about a significant matter; yet it is easy for him for whom God Almighty makes it easy. You should worship God, associating nothing with Him, perform the prayers, pay alms (zakāh), fast during Ramadan, and make the pilgrimage to the House.' Then he said, 'Shall I not show you the gates of goodness? Fasting, which is a shield; charity, which extinguishes sin as water extinguishes fire; and the prayer of a man in the depths of night.'" Then the Prophet recited vv. 16–17.

Interpreting the comfort or cooling of the eyes as an allusion to the joy one finds in the attainment of spiritual realities, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, "Their eyes [are cooled] at the outward and inward realities that they witness, which are disclosed to them by way of unveiling. Then they behold them and adhere to them, so that their eyes are cooled and their hearts repose in them" (ST).

18–19 V. 18 is one of several verses to ask a rhetorical question aimed at indicating the utter disparity between believers and disbelievers. Elsewhere, their disparity is likened to that between the blind and the seeing (see 11:24; 13:19; 35:19; 40:58), the living and the dead (35:22), or those who know and those who do not know (39:9; see also 3:162; 5:100; 38:28; 39:9; 47:14–15; 59:20; 68:5). These two verses, along with the following two, can be read as part of the continuing response to the disbelievers who in v. 12 asked to be sent back in order to perform righteous deeds. In these four verses, it is made clear that the stark difference between believers and disbelievers in this world portends an even starker contrast in their final ends, since the declaration of faith with the tongue is believed to have little efficacy if it is not put into practice with the limbs and manifest in the heart.

20 The desire of the disbelievers to leave the punishment can be understood as evidence of the continuing inability of some of them to realize that they have in fact earned their punishment through their own actions. Having failed to grasp the true nature of their iniquity, as evidenced by their request to be returned to this world to work righteousness (see v. 12c), they are condemned to be cast in the Fire over and again. Also see 22:22: Whensoever they desire, in their grief, to leave it, they shall be returned unto it, while [being told], "Taste the punishment of the burning!"

21 The lesser punishment is punishment in this world (IK, JJ), which can come through the humiliation of defeat, through illness, or by natural disaster (JJ), among other afflictions. Others say it refers to the legal punishments brought against the disbelievers in this world or to the punishment in the grave that comes before the eternal punishment (IK). The greater punishment is that of the Hereafter (JJ). From one punishment, that they might turn back. (22) And who does greater wrong than one who has been reminded of the signs of his Lord, then turns away from them? Truly We shall take vengeance upon the guilty. (23) And indeed We gave unto Moses the Book; so be not in doubt regarding the meeting with Him. And We made him a guide for the Children of Israel. (24) And We appointed leaders from among them who guided by Our Command when they were patient and perspective, they are afflicted with the lesser punishment as a mercy from God, as it might make them reflect and thus turn back to belief (JJ), which is considered the natural state of human beings (see 7:172c; 30:30c).

22 The first sentence of this verse is repeated in 18:57, followed by Surely We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand not, and in their ears a deafness. Even if thou callest them to guidance, they will never be rightly guided. It is not that such people cannot see the signs if left to themselves, but that God veils the signs from them due to their arrogance and disbelief, as in 7:146: I shall turn away from My signs those who wax arrogant upon the earth without right. Even if they were to see every sign, they would not believe in them. A subtle theme throughout the Quran is that miracles by themselves do not convince people of religious truth if their souls are set against it, as in 6:25, which says of the disbelievers, Were they to see every sign, they would not believe in it, so that when they come to thee, they dispute with thee (see also 2:145; 7:146; 10:96–97). With regard to the present verse, Qatādah is reported to have said, "Whosoever turns away from the remembrance of God has been beguiled by the greatest delusion, rendered destitute by most severe penury, and oppressed by the greatest of sins" (IK), and that is the most severe form of vengeance. Regarding the manner in which God takes vengeance, see also 44:16c.

23 This sudden change of subject to a discussion of Moses may suggest that the revelation given to him was among those signs from which one should not turn away (v. 22). As translated, the meeting with Him refers either to Moses' meeting with God when he received revelation or to the meeting with God that awaits every soul. Many commentators understand the pronoun Him in this phrase as a reference to the Prophet Muhammad's meeting with Moses on his ascent from Jerusalem to the Throne of God (see 17:1c; 53:1–18), in which case it would be translated "with him" (IK, R, Ṭ); or to the Prophet Muhammad's receiving revelation (Bḍ, R); or to Moses' receiving revelation, in which case it would be rendered "with it." Such interpretations are possible, but would not be consistent with the common Quranic use of "meet" (laqiya) and "meeting" (liqāʾ) to indicate the meeting with God (see 2:4, 223, 249; 6:31, 154; 8:46; 9:77; 10:7, 11, 15, 45; 11:29; 13:2; 18:105, 110; 29:5; 30:8; 32:10; 33:44; 41:54c); the meeting with death (see, e.g., 3:143; 62:8); or the meeting of the Day of Judgment (see, e.g., 6:130; 23:14; 39:71; 45:34). "Meeting" is, however, never used as a direct reference to receiving revelation. The most consistent interpretation of this verse would thus be to see it as a reference to the meeting with God. In this context, it would then mean that any who have received a revelation, like the people of Moses, should not be in doubt about the meeting with God. We made him a guide could also be rendered "We made it a guide," referring to the Torah (IK, JJ, Ṭ).

24 The leaders in this verse likely refers to the scribes, priests, Pharisees, and rabbis. The verse indicates that so long as the religious leaders patiently adhered to God's commands, confirming God's messengers and following them, they were guided. But when they altered the scriptures or the correct interpretation of the scriptures (see 4:46; 5:15, 41), they were deprived of that station and their hearts hardened (IK). Their being patient can also be seen as a reference to enduring the attractions of this world and not succumbing to them (IK, Ṭ). Thus some see this verse as evidence that one cannot be a religious leader unless one has attained the virtue of patience (IK). The last phrase could also be read as a new sentence, "And they were certain of Our signs."

were certain of Our signs. (25) Truly thy Lord will distinguish between them on the Day of Resurrection regarding that wherein they used to differ. (26) Does it not serve as guidance for them, how many generations We destroyed before them, amidst whose dwellings they walk? Truly in that are signs. Will they not listen? (27) Have they not considered how We drive the water to the barren earth and bring forth crops thereby, whereof they and their cattle eat? Will they not see? (28) And they say, "When is this victory, if you are truthful?" (29) Say, "On the Day of Victory, faith will not benefit those who disbelieved; nor shall they be granted respite." (30) Then turn away from them and wait; they, too, are waiting.

25 This verse is either specific, referring to the Children of Israel, or general, referring to all of humanity. On the Day of Judgment, God distinguishes between them regarding the different understandings of religious matters, resurrection, reward, and punishment and then sends them to the Garden or the Fire (T); see also 2:113; 10:93; 16:124c; 39:3; 45:17.

26 This is one of several verses to allude to the towns (6:6; 7:4; 21:11; 22:45, 48; 47:13) and whole generations (17:17; 19:74; 20:128; 36:31; 38:3; 50:36) that were destroyed for their iniquities and for their refusal to accept the messengers whom God had sent to them. Amidst whose dwellings they walk refers to the remains of bygone towns and settlements that the Arabs would pass on their travels.

27 They is most likely a reference to disbelievers among the Quraysh. The discussion of God's reviving barren earth indicates that they fail both to be thankful for the manner in which He provides for them, as in 56:68–70, and to understand the manner in which God can resurrect human beings after they have died. All such verses that refer to the revival of the earth can also be understood as a reference to spiritual revivification, with the dead land serving as a metonym for the dead heart (see, e.g., 25:48–49; 30:19; 36:33; 50:9–11).

28 The disbelievers ask the believers, When is this victory, if you are truthful? meaning, "When is the Day of Resurrection?" Victory translates fatḥ, which can also mean a decisive arbitration between parties. Fatḥ is thus understood by some commentators as a reference to God's Decree and to His distinguishing between the believers and disbelievers (IK), as in 34:26: Say, "Our Lord will gather us together; then He will decide between us with truth; and He is the Arbiter, the Knower."

29 When the Day of Judgment comes, even though the disbelievers say, Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard. . . . Truly we are certain (v. 12), their acknowledgment of the truth will be of no benefit. They will not be granted respite to make amends, because they had already been warned and been shown God's signs in this life, but they turned away in arrogance.

30 Believers are counseled to wait for the punishment to be sent down upon the disbelievers (JJ). They, too, are waiting means that the disbelievers are expecting and awaiting the believers' destruction as well (JJ). They, too, are waiting can also be read with a sense of irony, meaning that the disbelievers are waiting for their own destruction, though they do not know that this is what they are awaiting. For other instances of this ironic statement with slight variations, see 6:158c; 7:71; 9:52; 10:20, 102; 11:122; 20:135; 52:31.

The Parties

al-Aḥzāb

A Madinan sūrah, al-Aḥzāb is believed to have been revealed immediately after Sūrah 3, Āl ʿImrān. The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the parties (al-aḥzāb), or confederates (an alliance consisting of the Makkan Quraysh and other Arab and Jewish tribes), who fought the Muslims at the Battle of the Trench (5/627), also known as the Battle of the Parties and as the Siege of Madinah.

The strength of the confederate armies is estimated to have been around ten thousand men with six hundred horses and many camels; the Madinans numbered around three thousand. When news of the forces marching upon Madinah reached the Prophet, the outnumbered defenders of Madinah, mainly Muslims, had only six days to prepare. They employed a strategy suggested by the Persian Salmān al-Fārsī and heretofore unknown to the Arabs: they dug a trench on the northern outskirts of Madinah that connected its natural fortifications, large lava tracts to the east and west whose rough, irregular surface impeded cavalry attacks. The earth and rock excavated from the trench were heaped up on the defenders' side, giving them protection from projectiles and providing them with many rocks as ammunition. The trench also made it almost impossible for horses to leap to the other side. Hundreds of high-walled gardens that created serpentine pathways already impeded attack from the south, because any attacking army would be forced to march in long columns that would be open to ambush.

The Muslim forces patrolled the approximately three-and-a-half-mile trench day and night. These defenses limited the fighting to small skirmishes and turned the battle into a test of wits and wills that resulted in a month-long siege. The confederate army made several attempts to cross the trench at night, but repeatedly failed. Hoping to make several attacks at once, the confederates persuaded the Jewish tribe of Banū Qurayẓah, who resided in Madinah, to allow them through their fortifications to attack the city from the south. The Muslims, however, caught wind of this plan and managed to sow dissension between the Quraysh and the Banū Qurayẓah and thus derail their negotiations.

They further weakened the confederacy by offering one of its key tribes, the Banū Ghaṭafān, one-third of the date harvest of Madinah if they left the battlefield. Although terms of the treaty with the Banū Ghaṭafān could not be agreed upon, the fact that a large part of the confederacy had entered into negotiations with the Prophet strained the already tense relations within the confederacy. The dissension between the parties, the sinking of confederate morale, and a sandstorm that lasted several days helped bring the siege to an end.

In the aftermath, the Muslim army laid siege to the Banū Qurayẓah and forced their unconditional surrender. For their act of treason in negotiating with an opposing force and thus breaking the treaty of Madinah, the men of the Banū Qurayẓah were all sentenced to death and the women and children taken captive. The defeat also caused the Makkans to lose much of their prestige and was the last major battle between the Muslims and the Quraysh before the conquest of Makkah in 8/630.

In addition to addressing this major turning point in early Islamic history, al-Aḥzāb is significant for highlighting the importance of the Prophet in Islam and the status of his wives. He is said to be closer to the believers than they are to themselves (v. 6) and a beautiful example for those who hope for God and the Last Day, and remember God much (v. 21). The believers are thus counseled to obey him (vv. 33, 36, 66, 71), especially when he has decreed a matter (v. 36). The sūrah further confirms that he is not the biological father of any of the men among the believers (v. 40), but in extolling the virtues of the Prophet's wives and declaring them to be the mothers of the believers (v. 6), it confirms his status as a spiritual father to all believers. In addition to affirming that the Prophet is a witness, a warner, a bearer of glad tidings, and one who calls unto God (vv. 45–46), as do many other passages of the Quran, this sūrah refers to him as the Seal of the prophets (v. 40) and a luminous lamp (v. 46).

In one of the most celebrated verses of the Quran, al-Aḥzāb declares that God and His angels invoke blessings upon the Prophet and enjoins the believers to do so as well (vv. 56–57). Finally, the Prophet's wives are afforded a status above other women (vv. 31–32), and the family of the Prophet, here referred to as the People of the House, are said to be those whom God desires to purify of all defilements (v. 33). Based upon such verses and many aḥādīth, love for the Prophet and his family has long been regarded as a foundational component of faith. In the words of the Prophet, "Love God for how He nourishes you from His Blessings. Love me for the love of God. And love the people of my house for the love of me." In this regard, the famous scholar and ascetic Sufyān al-Thawrī (d. 161/778) is reported to have said, "Whosoever loves one whom God loves only loves God. And whosoever honors one whom God has honored only honors God."

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) O Prophet! Reverence God and obey not the disbelievers and the hypocrites. Truly God is Knowing, Wise. (2) And follow that which is revealed unto thee from thy Lord. Truly God is Aware of whatsoever you do. (3) And trust in God; God suffices as a Guardian. (4) God has not placed two hearts in the breast of any man. Nor has He made your wives whom you repudiate with the practice of ẓihār your mothers. Nor has He made those whom you claim [as sons] your sons. Those are mere words from your mouths. But God speaks the

1 The Prophet is commanded to not compromise with the disbelievers in a manner that would contravene the revealed law. Throughout the Quran, the Prophet is warned to avoid any such concessions, as in 45:18: Then We placed thee upon a clear path from the Command; so follow it, and follow not the caprices of those who know not (cf. 5:48–49; 42:1). The present verse was reportedly revealed with regard to some leaders of the Quraysh who had traveled to Madinah after the Battle of Uḥud (3/625) to see the Prophet. Muhammad had allowed them to come to speak with him with his assurance of protection. They requested that he cease rejecting their idols and recognize the idols' ability to intercede on behalf of those who worship them. Upon hearing this, ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb said to the Prophet, "Let me kill them, O Messenger of God!" The Prophet replied, "I have given them my assurance of protection," upon which ʿUmar said to them, "Leave with God's Curse and Wrath upon you." The Prophet then ordered ʿUmar to drive them out of Madinah (Ṭs, W). In this context, the command to reverence God, though general, can also be understood as a specific reminder to those who wanted to kill the delegation from the Quraysh that they must honor their agreement to grant them protection (Ṭs).

2 The first verse makes clear who Muslims should not follow, and this verse reiterates what they should follow, namely, the Quran and the revealed laws (Ṭs). In a variant reading, whatsoever you do could also be "whatsoever they do" (Ṭs).

3 In this context, that God suffices as a Guardian (cf. 4:81, 132, 171; 33:48; see also 17:65) affirms that the Muslims do not need to make alliances that would compromise the principles of the revelation.

4 When viewed in relation to the previous verses, that no one has two hearts refers to one's inability to follow two contrary ways: those who believe in the revelation and the Quran, on the one hand, and the people of disbelief and rebellion, on the other (Ṭs); that is, one cannot both believe and disbelieve at the same time (Ṭs). It can also refer to the Quranic position that no person can have any true guardian other than God (R), just as no person can serve two masters. From a Quranic perspective, true reverence for God does not allow one to rely upon the teachings of God in some matters and upon the caprices of people in others, for one would then not reverence God as He should be reverenced (3:102). That one cannot have two hearts is also understood as a reminder that a heart preoccupied with one thing is distracted from anything other than that; so a heart preoccupied with this world is separated from the next (Qu), and the heart preoccupied with what is other than God cannot be focused upon God. In this regard al-Tustarī states, "So as long as one is preoccupied with oneself, one will be veiled from God."

When viewed in relation to the remainder of this verse, that no person has two hearts means that just as a man's wife cannot be his mother, because one cannot have two mothers, and that just as someone claimed as a son is not one's true

Truth and guides upon the way. (5) Call them after their fathers. That is more equitable before God. And if you do not know their fathers, then they are your brethren in religion and your clients. There is no blame upon you for being mistaken therein, but only for that which your hearts intend. And God is Forgiving, Merciful. (6) The Prophet is closer to the believers than they are to offspring, because no one can have two fathers, so too no one can have "two hearts" (IK, Z). To be both mother and wife of someone would also require existing in two mutually incompatible states (Z), which a heart cannot do.

Ẓihār was a pre-Islamic Arabian practice in which a man could repudiate his wife by declaring, "You are to me as my mother's back." By custom this implied that the husband was now free of all duties toward the wife, but the wife was not free to leave the husband and contract another marriage. For a more extensive discussion of ẓihār, see commentary on 58:1–4, which abolished this practice.

Nor has He made those whom you claim [as sons] your sons was reportedly revealed to clarify the nature of the Prophet's relationship with Zayd ibn Ḥārithah, a freed slave of the Prophet who remained a part of the Prophet's extended household. Sometime before the beginning of the revelations, Zayd's father had repudiated him when Zayd declared that he preferred to remain with Muhammad as his slave rather than return to his family. Muhammad then declared Zayd to be his son and proclaimed, "He inherits from me, and I inherit from him." When the Prophet married Zaynab bint Jaḥsh, the ex-wife of Zayd (see 33:37c), some of his detractors said, "Muhammad has married the wife of his son while forbidding people to do the same!" And so this verse was revealed clarifying that, although the Prophet had claimed Zayd as his son, such bonds were not subject to the same restrictions as bonds of blood (IK, Q, Ṭs, W).

Those are mere words from your mouths refers to those who criticized the Prophet, maintaining that Zayd was indeed his son. More generally, it indicates that words from the mouth are nothing more than words, but that words from the heart are true (R). Whereas the words spoken by a human being may arise from the mind, the heart, or the emotions, those spoken by God have only one source (R). God speaks the Truth can also be understood as a reference to God bringing all things into existence through Divine Speech, since His Command when He desires a thing is only to say to it, "Be!" and it is (36:82; cf. 2:117; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 40:68), and He created the heavens and the earth in truth, or "through truth" (39:5).

5 Regarding this verse, ᶜAbd Allāh ibn ᶜUmar is reported to have said, "We did not use to call Zayd ibn Ḥārithah by any name other than Zayd ibn Muhammad until the Quran revealed, Call them after their fathers. That is more equitable before God" (Q, Ṭs, W). This verse abolished the pre-Islamic custom of adopting others the way the Prophet had adopted Zayd, enjoining Muslims instead to adopt one another as brothers and as clients (Q, Z). Clients translates mawālī (sing. mawlā), which is elsewhere translated heirs (4:33; 19:5), and which in other verses refers to God as Master (e.g., 2:286; 3:150; 6:62; 8:40), and is etymologically related to walī (pl. awliyāʾ), meaning "protector" or "protecting friend." Both mawlā and walī are employed throughout the Quran to refer to a variety of close relations, such as inheritance, kinship, servitude, friendship, and alliance. There is no blame upon those who had engaged in the practice of adoption as the Prophet did in Zayd's case, since they did not intend to go against God's Will (Ṭs). Applied more broadly, this verse is understood to mean that people are not taken to account for unintended mistakes, regarding which the Prophet is reported to have said, "God exonerates my community of being mistaken, of forgetting, and of that which they are forced to do" (IK, Z).

6 Closer to the believers could also be rendered, "More worthy of the believers," meaning he has more right over them than they have over themselves. In both renderings it refers to the centrality of the Prophet in the lives of Muslims. This applies legislatively, as in 4:65: By thy Lord, they will not believe until they have made thee the judge themselves, and his wives are their mothers. Family relations are closer to one another, according to the Book of God, than are the believers and the emigrants. Nonetheless, you should act rightly toward your friends. That is inscribed in the Book. (7) And [remember] when We made with the prophets between them in their disputes, and find no resistance in their souls to what thou hast decreed, and surrender with full submission; and spiritually, as in a famous ḥadīth: "By the One in Whose Hand is my soul, none of you truly believes until I am more beloved to him than his own self, his wealth, his children, and mankind all together" (IK). Commenting upon this verse and citing this ḥadīth, al-Tustarī writes, "Whoever does not see himself [or his soul] as belonging to the Messenger and does not see the patronage (wilāyah) of the Messenger in every situation has in no way tasted the sweetness of his wont (sunnah). This is because the Prophet is the closest to the believers" (ST). From the logic of the Quran, this is because the Prophet is troubled by what the believers suffer and is solicitous, kind, and merciful toward them (9:128; Aj). It is also understood to mean that his supplication for the believers is more efficacious than their supplication for themselves (Ṭs).

This verse and v. 53 elevate the status of the Prophet's wives. Thereafter they were known as the "mothers of the believers," and marriage to them after the Prophet's death was forbidden. Their position as the "mothers of the believers" implies by extension that, although the Prophet is not the biological or adoptive father of the believers (see 33:40c), from a spiritual perspective he is the father of all believers (Qm), which is also a basis for their brotherhood (Ṭs). That family relations are closer means that despite the bonds of brotherhood between Muslims, inheritance was based upon blood relations. When the Prophet first arrived in Madinah, he joined the Emigrants from Makkah and the Helpers from Madinah together in pacts of brotherhood, but the Prophet and the members of his family made the pact with one another. Until the revelation of this verse, it was reportedly the practice to observe these pacts of brotherhood when dividing the property of the deceased. After this verse, that practice was no longer followed (IK, Q, Ṭs), but believers were permitted to make limited bequests to nonrelatives (Ṭs). That refers to the abrogation of inheritance based upon religion and emigration (IK, JJ, Ṭs); see also 8:72–75, which is interpreted as having nullified the legal implications of the pacts of brotherhood. Here the Book refers to the Preserved Tablet (85:22; JJ, Ṭs) or to the Quran (Ṭs).

Some Shiite commentaries connect this verse to the events at Ghadīr Khumm, which took place during the Prophet's return from Makkah to Madinah after the Farewell Pilgrimage in 10/632, at which time 5:67 is reported to have been revealed. After this revelation, the Prophet called for the people to gather. When they had gathered, he delivered a lengthy sermon during which he said, "I have been called [by God], and I shall answer. I am leaving for you two great things. If you adhere to them both, you will never go astray after me. They are the Book of God and my progeny, that is, the People of my Household. The two shall never separate from each other until they come to me by the Pool [of Paradise]." Toward the end of the sermon, he took the hand of ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib and said, "O people! Am I not closer to you than yourselves?" To which they responded, "Indeed! O Messenger of God." Then he said, "For whosoever I am his master (mawlā), ʿAlī is his master," to which some report he added, "O God, love those who love him, and be hostile to those who are hostile to him." He is also reported to have then said to ʿAlī, "You are to me as Aaron to Moses, save that there is no prophethood after me." For the Shiites, this event is understood to mean that ʿAlī had been designated the successor to the Prophet and to have been given the same rights over the believers that the Prophet had over them, and the reference to family relations is understood as a reference to the Shiite Imams who came after him (Qm). According to this interpretation, the reference to the covenant in the next verse then applies to the Shiite Imams as well.

7 Covenant (mīthāq) can be understood as a reference to the covenant made by all of humanity while they were still in Adam's loins (Mw) or to the pacts (ʿuhūd) made by the messengers to convey the message and call to the upright religion their covenant, and with thee, and with Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus the son of Mary; We made with them a solemn covenant, (8) that the truthful may be questioned concerning their truthfulness. And for the disbelievers He has prepared a painful punishment. (9) O you who believe! Remember the Blessing of God upon you when the hosts came upon you and We sent against them a (30:30; Bg, Mw, Q, Z). According to some commentators, this verse pertains to a covenant that is particular to the prophets in which they pledged to worship God, call others to worship God, and confirm one another (Mw, Sh). Some say that this was an additional covenant made after the covenant to which all of humanity bore witness on the Day of the Covenant (see 7:172; IK). These five prophets are said to be mentioned for their exalted status as the resolute among the messengers (46:35), who brought the known Divine laws (Bg, Q, Sh) and revealed books (Q). The mention of the five prophets can also be understood to stand for all prophets. With regard to the order in which the prophets are mentioned, the Prophet is reported to have said, "I was the first prophet to be created and the last of them to be sent; so He began with [the mention of] Me before them" (IK, Mw, Q). In this regard, a Companion of the Prophet said, "I asked, 'O Messenger of God, when were you a prophet?' and he replied, 'While Adam was between spirit and body.'" Another ḥadīth states, "Truly I was with God, the Seal of Prophets, when Adam was still kneaded in his clay."

The second mention of covenant in the verse can be seen as a repetition and reaffirmation of the first; or the first mention can be seen as a covenantal affirmation of God's supreme Sovereignty and the second as pertaining to the particularities of prophethood; see 3:81. According to al-Zajjāj, "[God] made the covenant when they were brought forth from Adam's loins as progeny, then He affirmed the covenant He had made with the prophets by repeating the mention of it and describing it as a solemn covenant, meaning 'a pact firm in fulfillment' of that which they had been made to carry and of that which God had enjoined upon them" (Sh).

The present verse could also be understood to mean that God made a covenant with them twice, the first time without "making it solemn" (taghlīẓ) and without firmness (tashdīd), then a second time making it solemn and firm, as in 3:81 (Sh). Its being solemn can also be understood as a reference to the sobering obligation of bearing God's message and conveying Divine laws (Ṭs). Although the covenant is mentioned throughout the Quran (see the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions"), a solemn covenant is only mentioned here, in 4:21, where it describes the marriage pact, and in 4:154, where it describes the covenant with Moses and the Israelites.

8 God made the covenant with the prophets so that He could ask "the believers who confirm their pact when He makes them testify about themselves regarding their truthfulness toward their pact" (Bg); for had God not enjoined the prophets to deliver revelation, it would be unjust to hold human beings accountable for having failed to uphold the covenant, as they would have received no specific reminders. In this respect, al-Zamakhsharī relates the mention of the covenant in the previous verse to the pretemporal covenant alluded to in 7:172. When they are questioned, the response of the truthful will be, The messengers of our Lord certainly brought the truth (7:43; IK).

9 The first mention of hosts refers to the Quraysh and their allies, who came upon Madinah "as parties" at the Battle of the Trench in 5/627; see the introduction to this sūrah. A wind refers to the sandstorm that came at the end of the siege of Madinah and eventually led many members of the confederacy to quit the battlefield. Hosts that you saw not is understood as a reference to angels who untied the tents of the confederacy during the storm, leaving them exposed to the elements (Ṭ). In an alternate reading, the last sentence could also be understood to mean, "God sees whatsoever they do," referring to the disbelievers (Ṭs).

wind and hosts that you saw not—and God sees whatsoever you do— (10) when they came upon you from above you and below you, and when eyes swerved and hearts reached into throats, and you thought many things regarding God. (11) It was there that the believers were tried and shaken in a manner most severe. (12) And when the hypocrites and those in whose hearts is a disease said, "God and His Messenger promised us naught but delusion." (13) And when a group among them said, "O people of Yathrib! There is no stand for you; so turn back." And a group among them sought permission from the Prophet, saying, "Truly our houses are exposed," though they were not exposed. They wanted naught but to flee. (14) Had they been entered upon from the sides of the city, 10 From above you and below you (cf. 5:66; 6:65; 29:55) is an idiomatic expression meaning to be enveloped on all sides. In this context it refers to the Muslims being surrounded by the confederate forces on all sides (JJ). From above could thus be seen as a reference to the tribes that came upon Madinah from the east, those of Qurayẓah, Naḍīr, and Ghaṭafān. Below you would then refer to those who came from the west, meaning the Quraysh and the smaller tribes that followed them (Ṭs). Eyes swerved to gaze upon the enemy, and hearts reached into throats due to the intensity of their fear (IK, JJ). During the siege of Madinah, in which any severe lapse could have led to the downfall of Madinah, some had misgivings, others thought they would receive Divine assistance, and others despaired (JJ). As the situation worsened, a Companion of the Prophet is reported to have asked, "O Messenger of God, is there anything we should say, for our hearts have reached our throats?" He replied, "Yes. Say, 'O God, cover our weaknesses and calm our fears'" (IK, Ṭs). The different groups involved thought many things regarding God: the believers were certain that God's Help would come and they would be victorious; the hypocrites believed that the Prophet and his followers would be eliminated; and others despaired of the situation (IJ, IK, Ṭ, Ṭs). Thought many things regarding God could also refer only to those whose hearts were weak and thus doubted God or to the general state of mind in which those who lack courage might find themselves (Ṭs).

11 The nearly month-long siege the Muslims endured was a test through which their faith and patience became manifest (Ṭs), and the true believers were clearly distinguished from the hypocrites (IJ, Ṭ). For the spiritual benefit of trials, see commentary on 29:2–3.

12 Those in whose hearts is a disease (2:8–11; 5:52; 24:47–50; 33:60; 47:20, 29; 74:31) is usually employed to describe the hypocrites and those with impure intentions (see v. 32). But its use here for a separate group in addition to the hypocrites may indicate that it refers to those believers whose convictions were weak because they still harbored some doubt within their souls (Ṭs).

13 A group among them refers to the hypocrites, here identified by most as ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy and those with him. Yathrib was the name of Madinah before Islam; so their call is to all the inhabitants of Madinah. There is no stand for you is meant to communicate to the Madinans that there is no way for them to oppose the forces now gathered against them (JJ) or that their particular strategy of manning the trench leaves them unduly exposed to attack (IJ). Turn back enjoins them to retreat to their houses in the city rather than man the trench on its outskirts. A group sought to leave the hardships of maintaining watch over the trench by claiming that their houses were in need of defense (IJ, JJ). Before the siege, this same group had argued that it was better to fight the confederates from within the city.

14 Had the confederates entered the city and exhorted the hypocrites to revert to polytheism, then were exhorted to treachery, they would have committed it and would not have hesitated, save a little, (15) though previously they had made a pact with God that they would not turn their backs; and the pact with God is called to account. (16) Say, "Fleeing will not benefit you if you flee from death or killing, for you will not be granted enjoyment, save a little." (17) Say, "Who is it who will protect you from God if He desire for you evil or desire for you mercy?" They will find no protector or helper for themselves apart from God. (18) Surely God knows those among you who hinder and those who say unto their brethren, "Come hither unto us"; yet they come not to the battle, save a little, (19) greedy toward you. But when fear comes, thou seest them looking at thee with their they would have done so with little hesitation (IJ, Ṭs) and would have fought against the Muslims (Z). Alternately, and would not have hesitated, save a little could mean "and would not have remained in it, save a little"; that is, had they reverted and fought against the Muslims, they would not have remained in Madinah very long, because God would have destroyed them (Z) or the believers would have expelled them soon thereafter (R).

15 This verse makes clear the corruption of the hypocrites (R). They had previously pledged to fight with the Prophet, aiding him in defending Madinah, just as he had pledged to aid in their defense. Some say that this verse refers to the pledge taken with the Prophet at ʿAqabah before the emigration (Ṭs, Z). Others say that it refers to those who were absent from the Battle of Badr, but vowed to fight in the future if called upon to do so (Ṭ, Z). Another opinion names the tribe of Banū Ḥārithah, who had abandoned the Muslim armies at the Battle of Uḥud, leading to their rout that day; they vowed that they would never do the same, but now wavered again in the face of the enemy (Ṭ). That the pact with God is called to account (cf. 17:34) means that one is bound to it until it has been fulfilled (Z) and that one will be held accountable for it in the Hereafter (Ṭs).

16 Fleeing will benefit the hypocrites in neither a metaphysical sense, because they cannot escape what is destined to befall them, whether natural death or being slain (Z), nor an earthly sense, because they would not be able to escape the confederate army that would deal with them after having dealt with the other forces. You will not be granted enjoyment, save a little then means that there will only be a short respite before they too would be overwhelmed by the Quraysh and the confederates. Alternately, it could mean that they might only have comfort for the remainder of life in this world (JJ), thus indicating that they might receive some comfort during the time that God has decreed for them, but no reward in the Hereafter (Ṭ).

17 That no one can find any protector or helper apart from God is a recurrent Quranic theme (cf., e.g., 2:107; 4:123, 173; 9:74, 116; 11:113; 29:22; 33:65; 42:8, 31), as from a Quranic perspective God suffices as a Protector, and God suffices as a Helper (4:45); see 29:22c. In relation to the Battle of the Trench, this verse also evokes 3:28: Let not the believers take the disbelievers as protectors apart from the believers (cf. 4:144; 5:55–57; 9:71).

18–19 Those among you who hinder refers to the hypocrites who sought to dissuade others from manning the defenses with the Prophet and the believers (R, Ṭs). They come not to the battle, save a little means that they engage in the battle only for outward show and to maintain their reputations (JJ, Ṭs), or because they are greedy toward you, meaning greedy to attain the material spoils of victory (Ṭ). Greedy toward you could also mean "miserly toward you," referring to their refusal to "spend in the way of God" (Ṭ, Ṭs) and to the fact that they would not fight on the side of the Muslims (Ṭs). But when they fear defeat, they look to the Prophet as if they were in the throes of death, seeking shelter and aid from him (Ṭ). Yet afterwards they turn their focus again to the objects of eyes rolling like one whom death overwhelms. Then when fear subsides, they assail thee with their sharp tongues, greedy for good things. Such as these have not believed; so God made their deeds come to naught, and that is easy for God. (20) They suppose that the parties have not withdrawn, and if the parties were to come, they would wish they were in the desert among the Bedouin, seeking news of you. And were they among you, they would not fight, save a little. (21) Indeed, you have in the Messenger of God a beautiful example for those who hope for God and the Last Day, and remember God much. (22) When the believers saw the parties, they said, "This is what God and His Messenger promised; God and His Messenger spoke true." And it increased them in naught but faith and this world. Then they assail the Prophet and the believers, claiming it was they themselves who had fought and through whose help the enemy had been defeated (R) and that the Prophet has no more right to the spoils than do they (Ṭs), because they are greedy for good things, that is, for the spoils of war (R, Ṭ). They have not believed; so although they may obtain some of the spoils of victory in this life, in the absence of sincere belief, their deeds will provide no reward in the next life. Regarding the broader Quranic discussion of deeds coming to naught, see 2:217; 5:5, 53; 7:147; 9:17; 11:16; 18:105; 33:19; 47:9, 28, 32; 3:22c; 6:88c; 39:65c.

20 That the hypocrites think that the parties had not withdrawn implies the depth of their fear and cowardice (Z), for they fear an enemy that is no longer there. If the parties were to come a second time (Ṭs, Z), the hypocrites would prefer to be with the tribes in the desert awaiting news of the Muslims' defeat (Ṭ). Similar to v. 18, that they would not fight, save a little indicates that they would only do so halfheartedly, out of concern for maintaining their reputations (Ṭs, Z), rather than out of a sincere desire to aid the Prophet and his followers or to strive in the way of God.

21 This is among a number of verses that establish the importance of obeying the Prophet and following his example, even in matters not addressed directly by the Quran (see also 3:31; 4:59, 83; 24:63; 33:21). In the immediate context, the beautiful example that is found in the Prophet refers to being steadfast in combat and holding one's ground (JJ), but this verse is also among the most important regarding the position of the Prophet in Islam in general. Although his function as God's messenger is unique and inimitable, the Prophet's words and actions are considered to provide the archetype of a life lived in full submission to God. Regarding the Prophet's example, ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, "He was the most generous of people, the most truthful of the people in speech, the gentlest of them in temperament, and the noblest of them in social affability. If someone saw him unexpectedly, he was awestruck by him, and if someone associated with him knowingly, he loved him.... I have never seen the like of him, either before him or after him." The example provided by the Prophet is for those who look forward to reward from God (Q, Ṭs) or to the meeting with God (Q), thus for those who believe in the Resurrection (Q). In this context, and remember God much can be seen as a reference to the heart of the prophetic example, since to live in accord with the prophetic model is to live in constant remembrance of God. For more on the nature of the Prophet, see commentary on 68:4, which addresses the Prophet saying, Truly thou art of an exalted character.

22 In contrast to the hypocrites, when the disbelievers saw the confederate troops amassed on the other side of the trench, they saw that it was a manifestation of God's Promise, as in 2:155: And We will indeed test you with something of fear and hunger, and loss of wealth, souls, and fruits (cf. 2:214; 29:2). Whereas the hypocrisy of the hypocrites became manifest when they wavered, as in vv. 12–18, the faith of the believers was strengthened.

submission. (23) Among the believers are men who have been true to that which they pledged unto God. Among them are those who have fulfilled their vow, and among them are those who wait, and they have not changed in the least, (24) that God may recompense the truthful for their truthfulness and punish the hypocrites if He will, or relent unto them. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. (25) And God turned back those who disbelieved in their rage; they attained no good. God sufficed the believers in battle; and God is Strong, Mighty. (26) He brought the People of the Book who supported them down from their strongholds and cast terror into their hearts—some you slew and some you took captive. (27) And He bequeathed unto you their land, their homes, their property, 23 True to that which they pledged refers to those who remained alongside the Prophet in battle (JJ) and more broadly to those who complete their religious commitments in full (cf. 2:40; 3:76; 5:1; 13:20; 16:91). Those who have fulfilled their vow refers to those who died or were killed while remaining steadfast (JJ), which many take as a reference to those killed at the Battle of Uḥud (Ṭs), such as the Prophet's uncle Ḥamzah ibn ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, regarding whom some say this verse was revealed (Ṭs, Ṭū). Those who wait refers to those who remain true to their vow or those who wait patiently for the help that God has promised and do not waiver or become changed in the least (JJ), as did the hypocrites (IK, Ṭs).

Some relate this verse specifically to the death of Anas ibn al-Naḍr, who had been absent from the Battle of Badr and said, "O Messenger of God! I was absent from the first battle you fought against the idolaters. By God, if God affords me the opportunity to fight the pagans, no doubt God will see how I shall fight." Then at the Battle of Uḥud, when the Muslims turned their backs and fled, he said, "O God! I apologize to Thee for what these [Muslims] have done, and I denounce what these [idolaters] have done." While advancing toward the enemy, he met Saʿd ibn Muʿādh and said "O Saʿd! By the Lord of al-Naḍr, the Garden! I smell its aroma coming from before [Mount] Uḥud." Later Saʿd said regarding Anas, "O Messenger of God! I cannot achieve or do what he did. We found more than eighty wounds by swords and arrows on his body" (IK, Q, W).

24 Within the context of this sūrah, this verse can been seen as a continuation of v. 11; that is, It was there that the believers were tried and shaken in a manner most severe . . . that God may recompense the truthful for their truthfulness. In this regard, Ibn Kathīr glosses this verse with a reference to 47:31: And We shall test you until We know those among you who strive and those who are patient, and We shall test your proclamations. The truthful are then recompensed for having remained true to their covenant (IK, Ṭs).

25 In this context, those who disbelieved refers to the confederate troops that gathered outside of Madinah at the Battle of the Trench (JJ). They attained no good in that their siege of Madinah was unsuccessful (JJ). God sufficed the believers in battle by sending upon the disbelievers a violent sandstorm and a host of angels who untied their tents. This demoralized the confederates, and they disbanded, thus sparing the Muslims from the need to fight. This is also understood as a reference to a major turning point in the relations between the Muslims and the Quraysh, as the Battle of the Trench was the last occasion when the Quraysh sought to launch an assault against Muhammad and his followers. Thus the Prophet is reported to have said, "Now we will attack them, and they will not attack us" (IK).

26–27 In this context, the People of the Book refers to the Banū Qurayẓah, the last remaining Jewish tribe in Madinah; the others, Banū Naḍīr and Banū Qaynuqāʿ, had previously been exiled from Madinah for breaking their treaty with the

and a land you had not trodden. And God is Powerful over all things. (28) O Prophet! Say unto thy wives, "If you desire the life of this world and its ornament, then come! I shall provide for you and release you in a fair manner. (29) But if you desire God and His Messenger and the Abode of the Hereafter, then truly God has prepared a great reward for the virtuous among you." (30) O wives of the Prophet! Whosoever among you commits a flagrant indecency, her Prophet and the Muslims. (Regarding the expulsion of Banū Naḍīr, see the introduction to Sūrah 59). After the confederate troops had abandoned the siege of Madinah, the Muslims laid siege to the tribe of Banū Qurayẓah for having plotted against the Muslims and having actively supported the efforts of the Quraysh and their allies. Rather than fighting, the Banū Qurayẓah retreated to their strongholds, and the Muslims surrounded them for twenty-five days (IK). Eventually both sides agreed to let the matter of the tribe's treason be decided by Sa^{c}d ibn Mu^{c}ādh, a prominent Madinan Companion and the leader of the Aws tribe, who had been a close ally of the Banū Qurayẓah. Despite the pleas of many in his tribe, Ibn Mu^{c}ādh decreed, "My judgment is that their fighters should be killed and their children and wealth should be seized" (IK). The Prophet is said to have approved of Ibn Mu^{c}ādh's judgment, saying, "You have judged in accord with the judgment of the Sovereign" (IK). Some you slew refers to the adult males who were offered the opportunity to renounce the treason of their tribe and accept Islam or be executed. A few accepted Islam, but the majority (between four and nine hundred, depending upon the account) did not do so and were executed. Some you took captive then refers to the women and children, who were not slain. He bequeathed unto you their land, their homes, their property then sanctions the Muslims' taking the possessions of the Banū Qurayẓah as booty; a land you had not trodden is understood as an allusion to the eventual conquest of Khaybar in 629 (IK, JJ), some of whose inhabitants had been among the confederate forces. Others say it refers to the lands of the Persian and Byzantine empires, or to all three (IK).

28–29 These verses shift the discussion from the Battle of the Trench to the Prophet's marital affairs. The Prophet's wives, seeing the spoils of war that the Muslims had acquired, reportedly asked the Prophet for more of the "ornaments of this world." The Prophet is thus told to offer them the option of divorce or remaining married to him. I shall provide for you means, "I will pay you the appropriate compensation for divorce," and release you in a fair manner means, "I will not coerce you" (JJ), and that his wives would then be free to remarry. When the Prophet offered this choice to his wives, they each chose to remain with him (IK). The juxtaposition between the two choices that the Prophet is here told to offer his wives is similar to the one in 3:145: Whosoever desires the reward of this world, We shall give him of it; and whosoever desires the reward of the Hereafter, We shall give him of it. Throughout the Quran it is emphasized that the Abode of the Hereafter is better than the abode of this world (see 16:30, 41; 28:60, 79–80; 29:64; 40:39; 42:36; 43:35; 57:20–21; 87:16–17; 93:4).

30 Inasmuch as the Prophet's wives chose to remain with him, this verse now clarifies that the privilege pertaining to their status carries with it responsibilities. In this context, indecency is understood to mean disobedience toward the Prophet (Q, Z) or "discord and animosity" (nushūz; IK, Z). Indecency (fāḥishah) usually implies more severe transgressions, such as adultery (see 3:135–36c; 4:15c), and is interpreted by some as having that same meaning in this context (Bḍ). But here the use of fāḥishah may also be meant to express the gravity of the offense in bringing discord into the household of the Prophet. Her punishment will be doubled means either that she will be punished in this life and in the Hereafter or that her punishment will be twice the punishment for other women (IK, JJ, Q, Ṭ), because, in view of their greater blessings and place of honor, an offense punishment will be doubled; and that is easy for God. (31) And whosoever among you is devoutly obedient to God and His Messenger and works righteousness, We shall give her her reward twice over, and We have prepared for her a generous provision. (32) O wives of the Prophet! You are not like other women. If you are reverent, then be not overly soft in speech, lest one in whose heart is a disease be moved to desire; and speak in an honorable way. (33) Abide in your homes and flaunt not your charms as they did flaunt them in the prior Age of Ignorance. Perform the prayer, give the alms, and obey God and His committed by the Prophet's wives would be greater than one committed by other women (Q, Z).

31 To be devoutly obedient translates the verb yaqnut, which indicates spiritual and religious obedience rather than obedience (ṭāʿah) in the general sense (cf. 2:116, 238; 3:17, 43; 4:34; 16:120; 30:26; 33:35; 39:9; 66:12) and also conveys a sense of constancy and serenity. Nonetheless, most commentators interpret devoutly obedient here as obedience (ṭāʿah) generally (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z). Her reward twice over means that their reward is twice that of others (JJ, Q, Ṭ). A generous provision refers to a life of ease in Paradise (Ṭ).

32 Previous verses (vv. 28–31) clarified some aspects of the Prophet's relations with his wives and their special status; this verse follows upon v. 6 in clarifying the relationship between the Prophet's wives and the Muslim community. Although the Prophet's wives are the "mothers of the believers" (see 33:6c), they are not to have any unduly familiar interactions with the men of the community. This was ordered to avoid any misunderstandings that could arise. Be not overly soft in speech, though addressed to the wives of the Prophet, is also understood as counsel for all Muslim women; they should avoid the soft, sweet, and flirtatious affectations employed by women in the pre-Islamic period (Q), as this can give rise to sexual desire (Ṭ). More broadly, the Quran enjoins speaking in an honorable (or goodly) way to others (2:83, 235; 4:5, 8) as well as speaking justly (4:9; 33:70).

33 As with the previous verse, although the injunction is directed to the Prophet's wives, this verse is understood by some as an injunction pertaining to all Muslim women (IK, Q), as in 24:31: And tell the believing women to lower their eyes and to guard their private parts, and to not display their adornment except that which is visible thereof. And let them draw their kerchiefs over their breasts, and not display their adornment.

Abide translates qarna, which derives from either waqara or qarara (R, Ṭ, Z), both of which mean "to stay" or "to settle," but carry different implications. The latter derivation indicates that one should remain in one's residence, and viewed in this manner, it has led to strident puritanical interpretations that severely limit the freedom of women. Waqara, however, conveys a sense of dignity and sobriety. Abide in your homes can thus be understood as counsel to be people of sobriety and tranquility (Ṭ). The phrase is understood to mean that the Prophet's wives should not leave the home unnecessarily (IJ, IK), an injunction that is then interpreted by some as applying to all women (Q). The "flaunting of charms" renders tabarruj, which is understood to mean "walking flirtatiously" (IJ, IK, Ṭ), exposing one's ornaments (IJ, Ṭ), or exposing one's ornaments that arouse the desire of men (IJ, Sh); see 24:31c.

This is one of four verses counseling Muslims to abandon the ways of pre-Islamic Arabia, referred to as the Age of Ignorance (jāhiliyyah; 3:154; 5:50; 48:26), or the age of impetuous and destructive behavior; for the zealotry of this period, see 48:26c. In this context, the prior Age of Ignorance may mean the period between the prophets Adam and Noah or Idrīs and Noah, the time in which Abraham lived, or the period between Jesus and Muhammad (IJ, Ṭ, Z). To obey God and His Messenger (8:1, 20, 46; 58:13; cf. 3:32; 4:59; 5:92; 24:54; 47:33; 64:12; see also 3:132) is held to be a virtue of the believers (see also 5:80; 24:56; 49:14), since from a Quranic perspective whosoever obeys the Messenger obeys God (4:80; see also 24:56; 49:14c).

Messenger. God only desires to remove defilement from you, O People of the House, and to purify you completely. (34) And remember that which is recited unto you in your homes from among the signs of Wisdom and God. Truly God is Subtle, Aware. (35) For submitting men and submitting women, believing

According to some commentators, People of the House refers to the wives of the Prophet (IK, JJ, Ṭ, W, Z). Other commentators understand it as a reference to the Prophet's blood relations, and still others say that it refers to both (Bḍ, Q). In this regard, in the famous "Ḥadīth of the Cloak," the Prophet's wife Umm Salamah is reported to have said that the Prophet was in her house when he said to his daughter Fāṭimah, "Call for me thine husband and thy sons!" Then ᶜAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib and his sons, al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn, came in and sat down to eat while the Prophet was sitting on his bed on top of a cloak. He grabbed the extension of the cloak and covered them with it. Then he raised his hands toward Heaven and said, "O God, these are the people of my house and my closest family members; remove defilement from them and purify them completely." Umm Salamah reported that when she asked, "And I am with thee, O Messenger of God?" he answered, "Thou shalt obtain good. Thou shalt obtain good" (IK, Sy, Ṭb, W; similar versions of this ḥadīth can be found in Bḍ, Bg, and Qm, among others). Based upon this event, some say People of the House applies only to those who descended from the Prophet through Fāṭimah and ᶜAlī. But others say that it also applies to his cousins, such as the families of ᶜAbbās and Jaᶜfar ibn Abī Ṭālib, or to those among them who were close to the Prophet (Ṭb). The Shiite commentator al-Qummī argues that the use of the second-person plural masculine pronoun in from you means that this verse applies to blood relations and not the Prophet's wives. Such a position would hold when arguing against limiting the term "People of the House" to the wives of the Prophet, but it does not preclude them from being among the People of the House.

Defilement indicates the evil deeds and false beliefs that arise from the sickness of the heart, as in 9:125: As for those in whose hearts is a sickness, it added defilement to their defilement, and they die while they are disbelievers. God's desire to purify the People of the House completely of all defilement is thus understood as a reference to God's wanting to remove any incorrect action or belief from them and to provide them with ᶜiṣmah, an innate protection against any and all false beliefs or evil deeds (Ṭb). ᶜIṣmah can be understood as a God-given form of knowledge or consciousness that is completely different from other types of knowledge in that it can never be overpowered by any other faculty; rather, it overpowers all other faculties and uses them according to its own wisdom. In this way, one who is endowed with ᶜiṣmah is completely protected from going astray and committing sins (Ṭb).

Regarding the importance of the People of the House, the Prophet is reported to have said to his followers, "I am leaving behind two things with you, the first of which is the Book of God, in which is guidance and light; so seize the Book of God and hold fast to it, and [the second] the People of my House. Heed God with regard to the members of my family. Heed God with regard to the members of my family. Heed God with regard to the members of my family" (IK). The Prophet is also reported to have said regarding those who did not exhibit love for his family members, "By Him in Whose Hand is my soul, faith will never enter a person's heart until he loves them for the sake of God and for the fact that they are my kin." Furthermore, the Prophet is reported to have said, "The likeness of the People of my House is the ship of Noah: whosoever boards it is saved and whosoever abandons it is drowned."

34 The wives of the Prophet are enjoined to remember their special blessings in living in houses in which the verses of the Quran were revealed (Ṭ, Z). The signs of . . . God refers to the verses of the Quran, while Wisdom refers to the wont, or sunnah, of the Prophet (JJ, R, Sy, Ṭ). According to some, this verse is meant to encourage the Prophet's wives to memorize the Quran and his sayings (Ṭs). For the combination of the Divine Names the Subtle and the Aware, see 67:14c.

35 Regarding the revelation of this verse, it is reported that when Asmāᵓ bint ᶜUmays returned men and believing women, devout men and devout women, truthful men and truthful women, patient men and patient women, humble men and humble women, charitable men and charitable women, men who fast and women who fast, men who guard their private parts and women who guard [their private parts], men who remember God often and women who remember [God often], God has prepared forgiveness and a great reward. (36) And it is not for a believing man or a believing woman, when God and His Messenger have decreed a matter, to have a choice regarding the matter. Whosoever disobeys God and His Messenger has strayed into manifest error. (37) And [remember] when thou saidst unto him whom God has blessed and whom thou hast blessed, "Retain your wife for yourself and reverence God," thou wast hiding in thyself that with her husband, Jaʿfar ibn Abī Ṭālib, from Abyssinia, she went to the wives of the Prophet and asked, "Has anything from the Quran been revealed about us [women]?" When they answered that nothing had been revealed about them, she went to the Prophet and said, "O Messenger of God, women are disappointed and at a loss!" He asked, "How is that?" She replied, "They are not mentioned [in the Quran] in goodness as are the men," after which this verse was revealed (Ṭs, W). Others say that it was revealed after Umm ʿUmārah al-Anṣāriyyah came to the Prophet and said, "I do not see but that everything is about men, and I do not find the women mentioned with regard to anything." According to another account, Umm Salamah said to the Prophet, "Why is it that we are not mentioned in the Quran as are the men?" Then later that day she heard him reciting this verse in the mosque (IK, Ṭ). This verse may also be related to 4:32 and 3:195, both of which explicitly confirm an otherworldly reward—without differentiation—for both men and women who uphold the moral requirements of Islam; see 4:32c.

Regarding men and women who remember God often, al-Tustarī writes, "One who observes true remembrance (al-dhākir ʿala'l-ḥaqīqah) is one who is aware that God witnesses him. He perceives Him with his heart as being close to him, and therefore feels shame before Him. Then he gives Him priority over himself and over everything else in every situation."

36 The meaning of this verse is general, indicating that one cannot contravene the Divine Law. In this way, it reiterates the Quranic injunction to obey God and obey the Messenger (3:32; 4:59; 5:92; 24:54; 64:12; see also 3:132; 4:80; 7:156–57; 8:1, 20, 46; 33:33; 49:14; 58:13); see 3:32c; 4:59c. The revelation of this verse was reportedly connected to one of two historical events. In the first account, it is said to refer to Zaynab bint Jaḥsh, who at first declined the Prophet's recommendation that she marry Zayd ibn Ḥārithah (IJ, IK, Ṭ, Z), but then accepted after the revelation of this verse (IK, Ṭ). In the second account, it is said to refer to Umm Kulthūm, who offered herself in marriage to the Prophet, but the Prophet suggested she marry Zayd ibn Ḥārithah, to which both she and her brother objected (IJ, IK, Ṭ, Z). For manifest error, see 36:24c.

37 Him whom God has blessed and whom thou hast blessed refers to Zayd ibn Ḥārithah, who was blessed by God when He guided him to Islam and by the Prophet when he set him free (JJ). When Zayd told the Prophet that his wife, Zaynab bint Jaḥsh, wished to divorce him, the Prophet replied, Retain your wife for yourself and reverence God (IJ, IK, Q), in order to dispel the appearance that he was in favor of the divorce so that he himself could marry Zaynab. Apparently he was hiding what was in his soul, which could have been his love for Zaynab, or that God had willed Zaynab to be his wife, or that he preferred that she divorce which God was to disclose; and thou didst fear the people, though God has more right to be feared by thee. Then when Zayd relinquished his claim upon her, We wed her to thee, so that there should be no restriction for the believers in respect to the wives of their adopted sons when the latter have relinquished their claims upon them. And the Command of God shall be fulfilled. (38) There is no restriction for the Prophet in what God has ordained for him. [That is] the wont of God with those who passed away before—and God's Command is a decree determined, (39) those who convey God's messages and fear Him, and fear none but God. And God suffices as a Reckoner. (40) Muhammad is not the Zayd, or that he would marry Zaynab, were Zayd to divorce her (IJ). That the Prophet "feared the people" refers to his worrying that people would misunderstand and say, "He commands a man to divorce his wife and then marries her" (IJ, Q), or, "He has married his son's wife," since at that time Zayd was still known by his adopted name, Zayd ibn Muhammad (JJ). The Prophet is thus reminded that God has more right to be feared than do people. Given the rebuke that is here delivered to the Prophet, it is said that no verse was more severe with him and that were the Prophet to have hidden any verse of the revelation, it would have been this verse (IJ, Q).

Despite the Prophet's advice to remain married, Zayd divorced Zaynab. Then God reportedly announced to the Prophet that Zaynab was now his wife. Thus Zaynab is said to have boasted to the Prophet's other wives, "You were given in marriage by your family, but I was given in marriage by God from above the seven heavens" (Q).

38–39 As God is reported to have commanded the Prophet to marry Zaynab, he is here reminded that he cannot be blamed for following anything that God has ordained for him (IK, JJ), even though others may deride him for it. That is the wont of God (cf. 3:137; 33:62; 35:43; 40:85; 48:23) with the prophets who came before him (IK, JJ, Q). These verses also refer to God having allowed the Prophet to now take more than four wives, which was the wont of God with previous prophets such as David and Solomon (Q). The prophets fear none but God, as their function is to implement His Law rather than follow human laws. In this vein, 49:7 states, Know that the Messenger of God is among you. Were he to obey you in many matters, you would suffer. In the context of this passage, the idea that God suffices as a Reckoner (cf. 4:6) thus alludes to the belief that in the end the only account with which one must reckon is the one kept by God.

40 Muhammad is not the father of any man among you refers to the Prophet's relationship with Zayd ibn Ḥārithah, whom the Prophet had claimed as his son after Zayd's father disowned him and whom others had referred to thereafter as the "Son of Muhammad" before the revelation of this sūrah; see 33:5c. Although this proclamation clarifies the Prophet's biological relationship with members of his community and the rights and restrictions pertaining thereto, it is also understood as opening onto the spiritual reality of the Prophet as the father of all true believers (Aj, Ṭs); see 33:6c. That the Prophet is the Seal of the prophets is understood to mean that he is the last Prophet sent to humanity. The Prophet is reported to have said, "No prophethood shall remain after me, save for true visions" (IK, Q), and "Messengerhood and prophethood have ceased. There will be no messenger or prophet after me" (IK). The most frequently cited ḥadīth pertaining to his place as the Seal of the prophets states, "My likeness among the prophets before me is that of a man who has built a house, completed it, and beautified it, yet left empty a place for a brick. Then the people come to the house, are amazed by it, and say, 'If only you were to place this brick, your house would be complete!' I am this brick" (IK, Q). According to the Prophet, being the Seal of the prophets is one of six qualities father of any man among you; rather, he is the Messenger of God and the Seal of the prophets. And God is Knower of all things. (41) O you who believe! Remember God with frequent remembrance, (42) and glorify Him morning and evening. (43) He it is Who blesses you, as do His angels, that He may bring you out of darkness into light. And He is Merciful unto the believers. (44) Their greeting on the day they meet Him will be "Peace." And He has prepared for that distinguish him from other prophets: "I have been favored above the prophets in six things: I have been endowed with consummate succinctness of speech; I have been made triumphant through dread; war booty has been made lawful for me; the whole earth has been made a place of worship for me and a means of purification; I have been sent to all created beings; and the succession of prophets has been completed in me" (IK).

41 This verse instructs one to not forget God ever, at any moment (Aj), as when the Prophet counseled a man, "Let thy tongue be always moist with the remembrance of God," and when he is reported to have said, "Remember God much, till they call [you] mad" (Aj). Regarding this verse, Ibn ᶜAbbās is reported to have said, "God did not enjoin any duty upon His servants without setting known limits and accepting the excuses of those who have a valid reason, except for remembrance, for God has not set any limits for it, and no one has any excuse for not remembering God, unless he is oppressed and forced to neglect it" (IK). It is said that remembering God frequently arises from the sincerity of the heart, while remembering God little arises from hypocrisy, like the remembrance that is only upon the tongue (Q). Thus Ibn ᶜAjībah says that what is meant by this verse is remembrance of the heart, as that is the one type of remembrance that does not cease. The remembrance and invocation of God (dhikr Allāh) is considered the quintessential prayer and thus to be at the core of every act of worship. In this vein, it is reported that when the Prophet was asked, "Which of those who strive has the greatest reward?" he responded, "Those who remember God most." When asked, "Which of the righteous has the greatest reward?" he replied, "Those who remember God most." Then when asked the same about prayer, alms (zakāh), pilgrimage, and charity, he said, regarding each, "Those who remember God most." Then Abū Bakr said to ᶜUmar, "Those who remember have acquired every good," to which the Prophet replied, "Indeed" (Aj). For more on the remembrance of God, see 13:28c; 29:45c.

42 Glorify Him morning and evening (cf. 6:52; 18:28; 19:11; 24:36; 48:9; 76:25) can be understood as an injunction to glorify God at all times. It is also interpreted as a reference to the morning prayer and the afternoon prayer, or to the five daily prayers, or to performing supererogatory devotions such as night vigil (R, Ṭ); cf. 30:17–18. Some relate this verse specifically to acts of prayer and invocation performed between the morning prayer and sunrise, and then between the sunset prayer and the night prayer.

43 God has mercy upon the believers who remember God much and perform the prayers enjoined in the previous verses, and His angels watch over them and make supplications for them, thus bringing them out of darkness into light (2:257; 5:16; 14:1, 5; 57:9; 65:11; see also Isaiah 42:16: "I will turn the darkness before them into light," and 1 Peter 2:9), which is understood to mean bringing them from being astray to being guided (Ṭ), from disbelief to belief (Aj, JJ), from disobedience to obedience (Aj), or from the darkness of heedlessness to the light of awareness (Aj). For a fuller discussion of the Quranic symbolism of light, see 6:1c; 24:35c.

44 The greeting of "Peace" may be from God, the angels (Aj), the other people of Paradise (Ṭ), or perhaps all of them. This is one of several verses that speak of the greeting of "Peace" that awaits believers in the Hereafter, as in 16:32: Those whom the angels take while they are in a state of goodness. They will say, "Peace be upon you! Enter the Garden for that which you used to do" (see also 7:46; 10:10; 13:23–24; 14:23; 19:62; 25:75; 36:58c; 39:73; 56:25–26).

them a generous reward. (45) O Prophet! Truly We have sent thee as a witness, as a bearer of glad tidings, and as a warner, (46) as one who calls unto God by His Leave, and as a luminous lamp. (47) Give glad tidings to the believers that there will be for them a great bounty from God. (48) Obey not the disbelievers and the hypocrites; disregard their affront, and trust in God. God suffices as a Guardian. (49) O you who believe! If you marry believing women and then divorce them before you have touched them, there shall be no waiting period for you to reckon against them. But provide for them and release them in a fair manner. (50) O Prophet! We have made lawful for thee thy wives to whom thou hast given their 45 Cf. 48:8. The Prophet is a witness to the Oneness of God and for the people, as in 2:143: Thus did We make you a middle community, that you may be witnesses for mankind and that the Messenger may be a witness for you (cf. 4:41; IK), or against the disbelievers and for the believers in the Hereafter, as in 73:15: We have indeed sent you a messenger as a witness concerning you, just as We sent unto Pharaoh a messenger. This is one of several passages that refer to the Prophet as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner (5:19; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 25:56; 34:28; 35:24; 48:8); in other verses these functions are also attributed to all prophets (2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56).

46–47 That the Prophet was sent as a luminous lamp refers foremost to his function as a spiritual guide. According to many reports this inner reality was also manifest in his outward physical nature and countenance. When asked to describe the Prophet, one of his Companions replied, "My son, had you seen him, you would have seen the shining sun." The Prophet's stepson is also reported to have said, "He was dignified and awe-inspiring, and radiant like the radiance of the moon on the night when it is full." In this same vein, the Prophet's servant Anas ibn Mālik is reported to have said, "On the day when the Messenger of God entered Madinah, everything in it was illuminated. Then, on the day when he died, everything in it became dark. And we had barely dusted off our hands after burying him when our hearts changed."

48 The Prophet is enjoined to not follow the disbelievers' and hypocrites' caprice and thus not assent to what contravenes the revelation. Similarly, the believers are told, And know that the Messenger of God is among you. Were he to obey you in many matters, you would suffer (49:7). Here, disregard their affront means not to retaliate against them unless a command to do so is issued (JJ) and to bear their insults patiently (Ṭ). In this regard, the Prophet is also told to bear patiently that which they say (20:130; 38:17; 50:39; 73:10). That God suffices as a Guardian (4:81, 132, 171; 33:3; see also 17:65) means that one should entrust all of one's affairs to Him (Ṭ).

49 Before you have touched them refers to the consummation of marriage; see also 2:236c. This verse clarifies that women do not need to observe any waiting period before contracting another marriage, if the previous marriage had not been consummated (IK, Q). Nonetheless, some jurists maintain that a woman must still observe the waiting period of four months and ten days, if the woman's husband dies before the consummation of the marriage (IK). In the case of divorce, when the bridewealth has been paid, women are entitled to retain half the bridewealth even if the marriage has not been consummated (JJ), and all of it if the marriage has been consummated. When the amount of the bridewealth has not yet been settled, the man should provide something for the woman according to his means; this is what some understand by release them in a fair manner (IK).

50 That God has made lawful the Prophet's wives indicates that God has made lawful the various means by which the Prophet obtained his wives (IJ). In this context, those whom thy right hand possesses . . . as spoils of war refers to two of the Prophet's wives, Ṣafiyyah bint Ḥuyayy, who had bridewealth, as well as those whom thy right hand possesses of those whom God has granted thee as spoils of war, and the daughters of thy paternal uncles and the daughters of thy paternal aunts, and the daughters of thy maternal uncles and the daughters of thy maternal aunts who emigrated with thee, and any believing woman if she gives herself [in marriage] to the Prophet and if the Prophet desires to marry her—for thee alone, not for [the rest of] the believers. We know well what We have enjoined upon them with respect to their wives and those whom their right hands possess, that there may be no blame upon thee. And God is Forgiving, Merciful. (51) Thou mayest put off whomsoever of them thou wilt and receive whomsoever thou wilt. And as for whomsoever thou mightest desire of those whom thou hast set aside, there is no blame upon thee. Thus is it likelier that they will be comforted, that they will not grieve, and been among the captives of the Battle of Khaybar and whose father had been among the staunchest opponents of the Prophet, and Juwayriyah bint Ḥārithah, whom the Prophet had purchased from Thābit ibn Qays after the Muslims had defeated her tribe, the Banū Muṣṭaliq. After the marriage, the Muslims released the captives from the Banū Muṣṭaliq, as they were now kinsmen of the Prophet. In both instances the Prophet freed his prospective wives before marrying them (IJ).

The reference to women who emigrated with thee is understood to mean that Muslim women who had the opportunity to emigrate and did not do so were not permitted to become wives of the Prophet (IJ, Q). The Prophet is then told that he may take in marriage the believing women who offered themselves to him, without the need to pay a bridewealth (IJ, IK), a ruling for him alone, not for [the rest of] the believers. Some maintain that despite the permission granted here and in the following verse, the Prophet did not marry any of the women who had offered themselves to him (IK), while others maintain that he did, but that he did not consummate the marriages (IJ, Q), and they were thus annulled. We know well what We have enjoined upon them with respect to their wives refers to the limit of four wives for Muslims, which this verse makes clear is not the same limit set for the Prophet. With this verse, all the limitations of marriage set for other Muslims were removed for the Prophet. He does not need to pay the bridewealth, the woman does not need a protector (as in the case of Zaynab), the marriage does not need to have witnesses (as in the marriage to Zaynab), and he may marry as many women as he wishes.

51 Put off . . . and receive whomsoever thou wilt means that the Prophet may accept or decline marriage to the women who offered themselves to him as he desires (IK). The next sentence then allows the Prophet to return to those whom he had previously declined to marry (IK). According to others, this verse was revealed in relation to those to whom the Prophet was already married. Some of his wives were jealous of other wives and asked that their own maintenance be increased. Their jealousy reached the point where they became harsh with him, and the Prophet said to ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, "They ask of me what I do not have." The Prophet was vexed by this matter and did not sleep in the same bed with them for a month until vv. 28–29 were revealed, granting them the choice between remaining wed to the Prophet or accepting an amicable divorce. God commanded him to ask them to choose between this life and the Hereafter and then to divorce those who chose this life and keep those who chose the Hereafter. They all chose the latter, were then referred to as "mothers of the believers," and undertook to never remarry after him. Then in this verse he was given permission to receive any that they will be content, all of them, with that which thou hast given them. God knows what is in your hearts. And God is Knowing, Clement. (52) Women are not lawful for thee beyond that, nor [is it lawful] for thee to exchange them for other wives, though their beauty impress thee, save those whom thy right hand possesses. And God is Watcher over all things. (53) O you who believe! Enter not the dwellings of the Prophet for a meal without waiting for its time to come, unless leave be granted you. But if you are invited, enter; and when you have eaten, disperse. Linger not, seeking discourse. Truly that would affront the Prophet, and he would shrink from telling you, but God shrinks not from the

of his wives he wanted to receive and defer anyone he wanted to defer (W), meaning that he could postpone the days allotted to spending time with them. He nonetheless continued to divide his time equally between each of his wives. This made it likelier that they will be comforted, that they will not grieve, because they would know that he did not spend time with them out of an obligation toward God, but out of a genuine desire on his own part (IK). Some reconcile these two interpretations by saying that this verse applied to both those who had offered themselves to the Prophet in marriage and his wives (IK, Ṭ).

52 According to many early commentators, although the permission granted to the Prophet to marry Zaynab bint Jaḥsh (see 33:50c) allowed him to marry more than four wives, this verse, revealed some time later, restricted the Prophet to the wives he had already chosen (IK, Ṭ). In this way it was revealed as a reward to the wives for their decision to choose the Prophet in vv. 28–29 (IK, Ṭ). Though the Prophet is said to have been granted the opportunity to take more wives again before he died (IK, Q), he nonetheless took no more wives after the revelation of this verse. Beyond that would thus refer to the number of his wives, which was nine at this time, and the prohibition against exchanging them for other wives would mean that he could not divorce them and take other wives (IK). According to others, beyond that means beyond the types of women described in v. 50 (IK, Ṭ).

53 The first part of this verse, known as the "Veiling Verse," was reportedly revealed to clarify proper conduct with the Prophet. Anas ibn Mālik said, "When the Messenger of God married Zaynab bint Jaḥsh, he invited people to a wedding ceremony. People ate and then remained in their seats talking to each other. The Prophet acted as if he was preparing himself to leave, but people did not take the hint. He then left the room and people left with him, except for three people who remained sitting. When the Prophet returned and found them still sitting, he went out again. When they saw this, the three men left. I went and informed the Messenger of God that they had left. He returned and entered his room. I wanted to enter with him, but he drew the curtain between us. Then God revealed [this verse]" (IK, Q, Sy, Ṭ, W). If you are invited, enter is also understood as a general injunction to accept invitations from other Muslims, as in a saying attributed to the Prophet, "When one of you invites his brother, be it for a wedding or something else, he should respond" (IK). In the immediate context, God shrinks not from the truth refers to God's telling others to respect the Prophet's privacy (JJ). More broadly, it means that God does not prevent truth from being manifested and clarified (Q).

That men must ask the Prophet's wives from behind a veil indicates that, just as it is forbidden for a man to be alone in an intimate manner with a woman to whom he is not related, so too it is forbidden for a man to look upon the wives of the Prophet. This injunction may be a clarification, lest anyone think that the Prophet's wives' status as "mothers of the believers" would allow for the same familiarity that a man would have with his truth. And when you ask anything of [his wives], ask them from behind a veil. That is purer for your hearts and their hearts. And you should never affront the Messenger of God, nor marry his wives after him. Truly that would be an enormity in the sight of God. (54) Whether you disclose something or conceal it, surely God is Knower of all things. (55) There is no blame upon them with regard to their fathers, or their sons, or their brothers, or their brothers' sons, or their sisters' sons, or their own women, or those whom their right hands possess. And reverence God. Truly God is Witness over all things. (56) Truly God and biological mother. The prohibition against marrying the Prophet's wives is linked by some to the prohibition against marrying one's mother (4:23) and against marrying those women whom your fathers married (4:22), since the Prophet is closer to the believers than they are to themselves, and his wives are their mothers (33:6). This may also be because the Prophet's wives are believed to continue to be his wives in the Hereafter (IK, Q).

54 All human beings will be taken to account for everything that they have done and said in this world, as in 2:284: And whether you disclose what is in your souls or hide it, God will bring you to account for it (cf. 4:149), an idea mentioned throughout the Quran, since God knows what lies within breasts (3:119, 154; 5:7c; 8:43; 11:5; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13).

55 This verse clarifies which of the relations of the Prophet's wives were exempt from the requirement to address them from behind a veil (Q). The list is similar to those men in whose presence women are not required to wear the veil in 24:31. For God as Witness over all things, see also 4:33; 5:117; 22:17; 34:47; 41:53; 58:6; 85:9. Regarding the requirements of the veil, or ḥijāb, see 24:31c.

56 This frequently cited verse is among the most important in the Quran for understanding the place of the Prophet in Islam. In its immediate context, it answers questions one might ask of the previous verses: why the Prophet should be obeyed (v. 33), why he is a beautiful example (v. 21), and how it is that he is a luminous lamp (v. 46). That he is a human being of another order also explains why he is permitted more than four wives (v. 50), why he can marry without giving a bridewealth (v. 50), why his wives are "the mothers of the believers" (v. 6), and why they may not remarry after his passing (v. 53).

Invoke blessings translates the verb ṣallā/yuṣallī, which is from the same root as ṣalāh, "prayer." In this context, commentators differentiate between the manner in which this verb relates to God and the angels, saying that God's ṣalāh is loving Mercy and that of the angels is seeking forgiveness (IK, Ṭ). Human beings then invoke blessings by supplicating for the Prophet (Aj) and by following him and loving him (Su). Regarding the role of human beings in invoking blessings upon the Prophet, the Companions are reported to have asked the Prophet after this verse was revealed, "We know how to give thee greetings of peace, but how do we invoke blessings upon thee?" To which he answered, "O God! Bless Muhammad and the family of Muhammad as Thou hast blessed Abraham and the family of Abraham. And shower grace upon Muhammad and upon the family of Muhammad as Thou hast showered grace upon Abraham and upon the family of Abraham in all the worlds. Truly Thou art Praised, Glorious" (IK, Ṭ, R). As al-Ālūsī observes, the manner in which human beings invoke blessings upon the Prophet, by calling for God's Blessings upon him, means that they are in fact realizing their inability to do anything more than to ask God to shower His Blessings upon the Prophet. In this sense, to say, "O God! Grant blessings upon the Messenger!" is not so much a request as it is participation in and affirmation of the Divine Act (see also 3:194c). Thus from a metaphysical perspective, in all modes of asking blessing upon the Prophet, it is only God Who invokes blessings upon him (K).

His angels invoke blessings upon the Prophet. O you who believe! Invoke blessings upon him, and greetings of peace! (57) Truly those who affront God and His Messenger, God has cursed them in this life and the Hereafter, and has prepared for them a humiliating punishment. (58) As for those who affront believing men and believing women for other than what they may have committed,

On one occasion the Prophet told his Companions that the Angel Gabriel came to him and said, "O Muhammad, does it not please thee that thy Lord says, 'No member of thy community invokes blessings upon thee but that I bless him tenfold, and no member of thy community offers thee greetings of peace but that I offer him greetings of peace tenfold?'" To which the Prophet responded, "Indeed!" (IK). In another account, the Prophet said, "The miser is one who when I am mentioned in his presence does not invoke blessings upon me" (IK). Once when the Prophet overheard a man making supplications in a hasty manner, he called to him and said, "When one makes supplication, let him begin by praising God. Then let him invoke blessings upon the Prophet. Then let him make supplication after that as he wishes" (IK). In this regard, ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb is reported to have said, "A supplication is suspended between Heaven and earth and does not ascend any further until you invoke blessings upon your Prophet" (IK).

In all such sayings, invoking blessings upon the Prophet is not a benefit for the Prophet, but for the believers themselves. For this reason this verse is understood as a command for all believers. Some say that invoking blessings upon the Prophet is a commendable deed (mandūb), while others consider it to be obligatory (wājib; IK, Q, R). Some maintain that its being obligatory may simply mean that such blessings must be invoked at some point during the course of one's life, while others maintain that it must be said in every prayer (Aj). According to Imam al-Shāfiʿī and many followers of his legal tradition, one must invoke blessings upon the Prophet in every prayer in order for that prayer to be valid (Aj, Q). From a spiritual perspective, invoking blessings upon the Prophet is essential for drawing closer to God. Increasing invocation of blessings upon the Prophet therefore engenders love for him, which in turn engenders love for God, and God's Love for the human being attracts the human being to His Presence (Aj).

The injunction to invoke . . . greetings of peace refers to the standard Muslim greeting, "Peace be upon you," but it also indicates being at peace with the Prophet, in accord with what he has brought, and yielding to him and the Divine Law (Āl). According to Islamic tradition, just as trees, stones, and all creation prostrate to God (see 16:40; 22:18; 55:6), so too do they extend greetings of peace to the Prophet. ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, "I went out with the Prophet through the environs of Makkah. Every rock and tree welcomed him, saying, 'Peace be upon thee, O Messenger of God.'"

57 An affront to God is understood as disbelief and attributing partners to Him (Q). Although this verse is addressed to all who do the Prophet harm in word or deed (IK), it is said to have been revealed in response to those who criticized the Prophet for his marriage to Ṣafiyyah bint Ḥuyayy (IJ, IK), whose father had been among the staunchest of the Prophet's opponents. It may also refer to all those who remained opposed to him (IJ, Ṭ). Others say that it refers to those who created graven images (IJ, IK, Ṭ).

58 This verse is understood by some as a reference to those who accused others falsely (IK, JJ), as calumny is considered a serious crime in 24:4: And as for those who accuse chaste women, but then do not bring four witnesses, flog them eighty lashes, and never accept any testimony from them. See also 49:12c. Others understand this verse as having been revealed regarding fornicators who would follow women when they would leave their houses at night to answer a call of nature. When they saw a woman, they would make an advance. If the woman did not say anything, they would follow her; but if she rebuked them, they would leave her alone. These fornicators were only after slave girls. But at that time, free women were indistinguishable from slave girls, since all women used to go out wearing a long dress and a headscarf.

they bear the burden of calumny and manifest sin. (59) O Prophet! Tell thy wives and thy daughters, and the women of the believers to draw their cloaks over themselves. Thus is it likelier that they will be known and not be disturbed. And God is Forgiving, Merciful. (60) If the hypocrites do not desist, and likewise those in whose hearts is a disease, as well as those who spread false rumors in the city, We shall surely spur thee against them; then they will not be thy neighbors therein, save for a short while. (61) Accursed! They will be seized wheresoever they are found and utterly slain. (62) [That is] the wont of God with those who passed before; and you will find no alteration in the wont of God. (63) People question thee concerning the Hour. Say, "Knowledge thereof lies

The women complained of these advances, and so God revealed this and the following verse (W, Z on v. 59).

59 This is one of the most important verses for understanding the Quranic teaching regarding wearing the veil (see also 24:31c). As with the previous verse, it seeks to establish social norms that will protect all members of society. The injunction to draw their cloaks over themselves is thus meant to ensure modesty and distinguish the free women from the slave women (Ṭ), so that men do not seek illicit relations with the former (R). Cloaks translates jilbāb, which means a piece of fabric that is larger than a shawl but smaller than a large sheet and derives from the root j-l-b, which describes an object that completely covers something, like the darkness of night (Lisān al-ʿarab). It is here employed to mean the outer cover (IK), which would cover the entire body (Āl, Ṭ). The manner in which one draws the cover has been debated. Some say that it is to be done in such a way that it covers all but one eye, while others say it means that it must cover the forehead and most of the face, but not the eyes (Āl, IK, Q, Ṭ).

60–61 Those in whose hearts is a disease describes those of impure intentions (v. 32) or those who "secretly harbor in their souls" deep religious hypocrisy or doubt (2:8–11; 5:52; 24:47–50; 33:12; 47:20; 74:31). In this instance, some understand it as a specific reference to adulterers (IK, Ṭ, Z), and others see it as a general reference to those whose faith is weak (Z). Those who spread false rumors refers to hypocrites who would attempt to undermine the Madinan community by reporting that the Prophet's expeditions had been defeated or its members slain (Z). We shall surely spur thee against them means that God will grant the Prophet power over the hypocrites and inform him about them, after which they will soon cease to dwell in Madinah (IK, Ṭ). Then, wherever they may flee, they will be seized by God, taken to task for their disbelief, and utterly slain if they manifest their hypocrisy in word or deed (Ṭ).

62 The wont of God (cf. 3:137c; 33:38; 35:43c; 40:85; 48:23) refers in general to the manner in which God conducts all affairs. In this context, it refers specifically to the manner in which God deals with the likes of the hypocrites mentioned in v. 60, who seek to sow dissension among the followers of a prophet. That there is no alteration in the wont of God (cf. 35:43; 48:23) thus means that God will not deal differently with the hypocrites of Madinah than He did with the hypocrites and disbelievers among previous communities (Ṭ, Z); see 35:43c.

63 That knowledge of the end of time lies only with God is mentioned in several Quranic verses; see, e.g., 7:187; 31:34; 41:47; 43:85; 67:25–26; 79:42–46. That the Hour may be nigh (cf. 42:17) is understood as an injunction to prepare for death and the end of time, since both will come upon people while they are unaware (12:107; 26:202; 29:53; 43:66; cf. 39:55). It is said that the time of the final hour is hidden and known only to God so that people will always be prepared for it (Q); see 42:17c.

only with God. And what will apprise thee, perhaps the Hour is nigh." (64) Truly God curses the disbelievers and prepares for them a blazing flame, (65) therein to abide forever; they will find no protector or helper. (66) On the Day when their faces are turned about in the Fire, they will say, "Oh, would that we had obeyed God and obeyed the Messenger!" (67) They will say, "Our Lord! Truly we obeyed our leaders and elders, and they caused us to stray from the way. (68) Our Lord! Give them a twofold punishment, and curse them with a great curse." (69) O you who believe! Be not as those who affronted Moses, whereat God declared him

64–65 That God curses the disbelievers means that God casts them far from any good and drives them far away from Himself (Ṭ). It also indicates that no one can save them from this predicament, since whomsoever God curses, thou wilt not find for him any helper (4:52).

66 That their faces are turned about in the Fire indicates that whichever way they turn, the Fire smites their faces (Ṭ) and that they are tormented by the Fire in different ways (Q). As the face is considered the most noble part of the human body, revealing the soul most directly, that it is subject to the Fire indicates that they are completely debased (Z). Elsewhere it is said that their faces shall be cast down into the Fire (27:90), and the Fire is said to cover their faces (14:50) or to smite their faces (23:104), while the angels are said to strike their faces (8:50) and they are gathered upon their faces (25:34; cf. 17:97), all of which points to their utter humiliation and suffering in the Hereafter. This is one of several passages to convey the regrets of the disbelievers in the Hereafter. Elsewhere, it is reported that they will say, "Would that we were sent back! Then we would not deny the signs of our Lord, but we would be among the believers!" (6:27). That they express such regrets and admit their sin (67:11; cf. 40:11) is, nonetheless, of no avail to them, since they had been offered ample opportunity to repent and make amends during the life of this world; see 32:12c; 35:37c.

67–68 Rather than following God and His Messenger, the disbelievers followed human beings who led them astray (R). Leaders are often considered partially responsible for people's rejection of the messages with which prophets have been sent, since the leaders have influence over their communities and usually stand to gain the most from the maintenance of a corrupt social order, alluded to in 6:123: Thus have We made great ones among the guilty in every town, that they may plot therein (cf. 25:31), and stated most clearly in 43:23: We sent no warner unto a town before thee, but that those living in luxury therein said, "We found our fathers upon a creed, and we are surely following in their footsteps" (cf. 34:34). One who chooses to follow the leaders and reaffirm their creed will then bite his hands, saying, "Would that I had taken a way with the Messenger! Oh, woe unto me! Would that I had not taken so-and-so for a friend!" (25:27–28). But when people realize they have been led astray, they ask that the leaders receive twice the punishment that they themselves are to receive (JJ), that is, punishment for having been astray and punishment for having led others astray (Z). In this vein, 29:13 says of those who sought to lead others astray, Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others' burdens along with their own (see also 7:38–39c).

69 This verse was reportedly revealed to chastise those who spoke ill of the Prophet because of his marriage to Zaynab bint Jaḥsh (Z); see 33:37c. The affront to Moses is said to refer to the people's suspicion that Moses had a physical defect, because he was extremely modest and never showed his skin. Then at one point when bathing, he was forced to chase after his clothing and suddenly came upon a group of his followers, who then knew that what had been said of him was false, because God had shown him to be innocent of what they alleged (IK, Q).

innocent of what they alleged, and he was honored with God. (70) O you who believe! Reverence God and speak justly, (71) that He may set your deeds aright for you, and forgive you your sins. And whosoever obeys God and His Messenger has achieved a great triumph. (72) Truly We offered the Trust unto the heavens and the earth and the mountains, but they refused to bear it, and were wary of it—yet man bore it; truly he was ignorant, a wrongdoer. (73) That God may punish the hypocritical men and the hypocritical women, the idolatrous men and the idolatrous women, and that God may relent unto the believing men and the believing women. And God is Forgiving, Merciful.

70–71 Speak justly (cf. 4:9) enjoins testifying truthfully, speaking in a manner that is upright and free from any corruption, and speaking so that the outward locution corresponds to the inward meaning (Ṭs). The injunction to truthful testimony is most evident in 6:152: And when you speak, be just, even if it be [against] a kinsman (cf. 4:135). The injunction to speak with integrity is found in other verses that enjoin speaking in an honorable (or goodly) way (2:83, 235; 4:5, 8; 33:32). If one does so, then God will rectify one's deeds by facilitating travel upon the straight path and purifying them (Ṭs). Forgiveness in this context is understood to be manifest through the ability to perform good deeds that will be accepted by God (ST, Ṭs). Obeying God and His Messenger leads to the Garden, the attainment of which is referred to as a great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of the Garden, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57. In contrast, whosoever takes Satan as a protector apart from God has surely suffered a manifest loss (4:119).

72 The Trust is understood as relating to the dictates of faith and belief, as in a famous saying: "Whosoever has no trust has no belief" (Q, Sy). Many relate the Trust to obedience (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), and it is thus understood by most as a reference to the requirements (farāʾiḍ) of religion (IJ, JJ, Q, Ṭ), though others see it as a reference to prayer alone (Q). The Trust can also be understood as pertaining to the manner in which one manages each aspect of one's being, such as the tongue, the eye, the stomach, the private parts, and so forth (IJ, Q). Thus some connect it to 8:27: Betray not God and the Messenger, and betray not your trusts knowingly (M). It is also said that the Trust pertains to faith inwardly and performing the requirements of religion outwardly (Aj). Some also allow that the Trust refers to the pact or covenant of tawḥīd (Divine Oneness) and the witness to God's Lordship made with all of humanity before they came into this world (Aj; see 7:172c).

That the Trust was offered to the heavens and the earth and the mountains is taken literally by many commentators, but is understood by some to mean that it was offered to their inhabitants (R), that is, to all the people of the earth, the jinn, and the angels (Ṭs, Ṭū). They refused to bear it not out of defiance, but because they shrank from what they knew to be too heavy a burden. Many understand this to mean that they knew they would be subject to reward and punishment and thus chose to remain passively obedient rather than risk the consequences of being held accountable before God (Bḍ, IJ, IK, Q, Ṭ). In this sense, the heavens, the earth, and the mountains saw their own weakness, but human beings realized their place and assumed their responsibility (R) as creatures possessing intellect and thus fit to observe the obligations of religion (Z).

This passage can also be seen as a metaphorical account to show that the heavens, the earth, and the mountains, despite their tremendous size and magnificent bearing, do not have the capacity to undertake the burdens of revealed laws (Q, Ṭū), as in 59:21: Had We made this Quran descend upon a mountain, thou wouldst have seen it humbled, rent asunder by the fear of God. That man bore it thus indicates the unique responsibility human beings bear to remain in a state of tawḥīd and to follow the practices of their respective religious laws. When they do not, they break the covenant they made with God before entering this world (see 7:172c) and thus fail to live in accord with their true nature.

Man . . . was ignorant, a wrongdoer insofar as he has failed to bear the full weight of the Trust. Thus some understand this phrase as a reference only to disbelievers and hypocrites, who are ignorant of God, and tyrants or wrongdoers (Q), though others take it as a reference to Adam, meaning that when he accepted the Trust, he did not realize its full import (M). It can also be understood as a reference to all human beings who are ignorant of the responsibility of the Trust and wrong themselves by committing acts of disobedience (Ṭū), thus failing to fulfill the Trust (Z).

In a minority reading, the expression "bear the Trust" is understood to mean failing to uphold it and thus failing to bear the burden that it implies (IJ, Ṭū). In this sense it is said that Cain bore the burden of the Trust for having murdered Abel (IJ).

73 God punishes the hypocrites and the idolaters, because they have broken the Trust that man bore; yet God relents to the believers who keep the Trust and forgives their sins (JJ, M).

Sheba

Saba'

Saba' is a Makkan sūrah, although some scholars maintain that v. 6 is from the Madinan period (Aj, Āl, IJ, Q). It takes its name from the mention of the story of Sheba in vv. 15–21. Although some relate the story here to the queen of Sheba mentioned in 27:22–44, it more likely refers to a tribe in the same region of Yemen from later times. When asked, "O Messenger of God, what is Sheba, a land or a woman?" the Prophet is reported to have replied, "Neither a land nor a woman, but a man who had ten Arab sons, six of whom he regarded auspicious and four inauspicious" (Āl).

The beginning of this sūrah, with the mention of God's Praise and Omnipotence, can be seen as following upon the mention of the Trust in the second to last verse of the previous sūrah (Aj, Bq). Such praise reiterates God's complete independence of those who carry the Trust and those who neglect to carry it, thus emphasizing that those who carry the Trust do so to their own benefit, while those who neglect to carry it do so to their own detriment (Aj); they do not do so for God, because all praise is already His.

After the first two verses reaffirming the Nature of God, Saba' launches into its primary subject, a critique of the disbelievers that emphasizes the vacuity of their claims (vv. 3–9). Brief allusions to the accomplishments of the prophets David (vv. 10–11) and Solomon (vv. 12–14) are then followed by a discussion of the people of Sheba, whose arrogance at their good fortune led them to be destroyed by a flood (vv. 15–19). Two verses regarding the nature of Iblīs (vv. 20–21) then segue into a series of challenges the Prophet Muhammad is told to pose to the disbelievers (vv. 22–30). An account of the discussion described as taking place sometime in the Hereafter between the leaders among the disbelievers and those who followed them in rejecting the prophets (vv. 31–33) then leads into a critique of those whose wealth, power, and social status delude them into believing they are arbiters of truth (vv. 34–45). This is followed by injunctions to the Prophet Muhammad to clarify the nature of his mission (vv. 46–50), which transitions into a concluding section on the consequences that will befall the disbelievers (vv. 51–54).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Praise be to God, unto Whom belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. His is the praise in the Hereafter, and He is the Wise, the Aware. (2) He knows that which enters the earth and that which issues therefrom, that which descends from Heaven and that which ascends thereto. And He is the Merciful, the Forgiving. (3) Those who disbelieve say, "The Hour will never come upon us." Say, "Nay! By my Lord, by the Knower of the Unseen, it will surely come unto you." Not a mote's weight evades Him in the heavens or on the earth, nor smaller than that, nor larger, but that it is in a clear Book, (4) that He may recompense those who believe and perform

1 This is one of five sūrahs that begin with Praise be to God (see 1:2; 6:1; 18:1; 35:1). That whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth belongs to God is reiterated in several verses (cf. 2:255, 284; 3:109, 129; 4:126, 171; 14:2; 22:64; 42:4, 53) and mentioned in various ways throughout the Quran. In this verse His is the praise in the Hereafter, but elsewhere it is stated that His is the praise in the heavens and on the earth (30:18) and at the beginning and at the end (28:70), meaning that God is praised in every place and at every time; see 1:2c.

2 That which enters the earth could refer to rain (JJ, Q), corpses (Q, R), or seeds (R), among other things, while that which issues therefrom refers to vegetation and things extracted from the ground (JJ, Q), such as minerals and jewels. That which descends from Heaven can refer to natural elements, such as rain (Q, R), or to God's decrees (maqādīr) and blessings (barakāt; Q), or other mercies, such as His angels and the Quran (R), while that which ascends thereto can refer to the angels (Q), a good word (35:10) and righteous deeds (Q, R), or the souls of human beings that ascend upon death (R). Together these four realities can also be seen as allusions to all the phases of existence. God is the Merciful in what He sends down to the earth and the Forgiving in allowing souls to return to Him (R).

3 That the disbelievers deny the coming of the Hour (cf. 25:11; 41:50; 45:32) indicates that they do not understand the full cycle of life alluded to in v. 2. Nay translates the emphatic particle kallā, which in this context can be read as either "Nay" or "Yea." The former negates their belief that the Hour will not come upon them. The latter affirms that the Hour will come even though they do not believe in it. To deny the Hour in which there is no doubt (see 18:21; 40:59; 45:32) is to also deny the meeting with God; thus 6:31 states, Lost indeed are those who deny the meeting with God till, when the Hour comes upon them suddenly, they say, "Alas for us, that we neglected it!" In this context, the idea that not a mote's weight evades Him (cf. 10:61; 99:7–8) alludes to the reckoning when all deeds will be weighed on the Day of Judgment. From one perspective, what does not evade God in the heavens refers to the inner reality of the human spirit, as the spirit is closer to the heavens than the body. What does not evade God on the earth then refers to actions performed with the body, whose realm is this world (R). That everything is recorded in a clear Book (6:59; 10:61; 11:6; 27:75; see also 20:52; 22:70; 35:11; 57:22; 78:29) refers to all deeds being recorded in the books that are handed to people on the Day of Judgment (see commentary on 18:49; 84:7–12) or to all that exists being inscribed upon the Preserved Tablet (85:22).

4 Cf. 30:45. From one perspective, God's Forgiveness is the reward for faith and belief, while a generous provision is the reward for performing righteous deeds (R). Elsewhere, those who believe righteous deeds; theirs shall be forgiveness and a generous provision. (5) But those who endeavor to thwart Our signs, for them there shall be a painful punishment of torment. (6) Those who have been given knowledge see that what is sent down upon thee from thy Lord is the truth and that it guides to the path of the Mighty, the Praised. (7) And those who disbelieve say, "Shall we show you a man who will inform you that, when you have been completely torn to pieces, you shall be in a new creation? (8) Has he fabricated a lie against God, or is he possessed?" Nay, but those who believe not in the Hereafter shall be in punishment and extreme error. (9) Have they not considered that which is and perform righteous deeds are promised recompense with justice (10:4).

5 Cf. 45:11. Those who endeavor to thwart God's signs are also said to be the inhabitants of Hellfire (22:51) who will be arraigned unto the punishment (v. 38; 30:16). In all of these verses, signs could refer to revelations in general, the verses of the Quran in particular, the signs of God in the created order, the signs of the end of time, or to all of these, as each is one type of God's signs; for the different meanings of sign in the Quran, see 2:106c. In an alternate reading of the present verse, punishment is read as the attribute of torment (rijz), meaning, "Theirs shall be the torment of a painful punishment." Rijz (also used in 2:59; 7:134) can also be understood either to mean "defilement," as in 8:11, where God purifies Lot and his people from the defilement (rijz) of Satan, or to mean "plague." This verse could then be read, "Theirs shall be a painful punishment due to defilement," or it could allude to punishment through the sending of a plague.

6 Those who have been given knowledge (cf. 22:54; 29:49; 58:11) is understood to mean the Companions of the Prophet (T) or the People of the Book (JJ, Q, T); see 22:54c. The latter interpretation likely follows upon 17:107, which refers to those who were given knowledge before it, meaning before the Quran. Nonetheless, those who have been given knowledge could simply be understood to mean anyone who has knowledge, since from a Quranic perspective authentic knowledge leads to truth and guidance (R). In this way, they stand in direct opposition to those mentioned in v. 5. Regarding the place of knowledge in the spiritual life and its relationship to faith and belief, see commentary on 58:11: And God will raise in degrees those among you who believe and those who have been given knowledge. God is Aware of whatsoever you do.

7 This is one of several verses where the disbelievers are said to mock the claim of bodily resurrection, though it is usually expressed with reference to bones and dust, as in 17:49: What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation? (cf. 13:5; 17:98; 23:35, 82–83; 27:67; 36:78–79; 37:16–17, 53; 50:3; 56:47–48; 79:11). Although new creation usually refers to the Resurrection (see 13:5; 14:19; 35:16), it can also be understood as a reference to the ongoing renewal (tajdīd) of the world in which God's creative act renews the world at every instant, an interpretation often evoked by Sufis and philosophers.

8 The first sentence of this verse is either a continuation of what the disbelievers say in the previous verse or a sarcastic response from those who hear their charge against the Prophet (R). To have fabricated a lie against God implies having invented false teachings knowingly, while being possessed implies having imagined it under the influence of psychic forces such as the jinn. Those who make such accusations experience punishment in this life and the next because they are in extreme error, which could also mean "far astray." The punishment can also be seen as what is received for claiming that the Prophet is a fabricator, while being in extreme error describes those who say that he is possessed (R), although from another perspective to be in extreme error is already a kind of grievous punishment.

9 Here, as in many verses, the created order is cited as evidence of God's Oneness and before them and that which is behind them of the sky and the earth? If We will, We cause the earth to engulf them or fragments from the sky to fall upon them. Truly in that is a sign for every penitent servant. (10) And indeed We gave David bounty from Us: "O mountains! Echo God's praises with him, likewise you birds!" And We made iron supple for him, (11) [saying], "Make coats of mail, and measure well the links thereof, and work righteousness. Truly I see whatsoever you do." (12) And unto Solomon the wind, whose morning course was a month and whose evening course was a month. And We caused a fount of molten copper to flow for him. And of the jinn some worked before him by the leave of his Lord—and those of them that deviated from Our Command, We would Omnipotence, as in 30:25: And among His signs is that the sky and the earth stand fast by His Command; and 36:81: Is not He Who created the heavens and the earth able to create the like thereof? (R); see especially the story of Abraham's spiritual argument in 6:75–78. That the heavens and the earth continue to function as they do is also a sign of God's Mercy, for they could crumble at any moment, as they did in some of the forms of punishment that came upon certain disbelievers in the past. In this regard, the prophet Shu'ayb's people challenged him, saying, so make fragments from the sky fall upon us, if you are among the truthful (26:187), and the Quran asks whether wrongdoers feel secure that God will not cause the earth to engulf them (16:45; cf. 17:68; 67:16). Several verses speak of signs for the believers (15:77; 29:44; 48:20) and those who reflect (16:11, 13, 69; 45:13), but this is the only reference to signs for every penitent servant. In the present context, it implies that reflecting upon the true nature of the created order can protect one from the punishments mentioned in this verse, as an understanding of them would bring one to believe and thus to turn to God in repentance. Elsewhere, the wonders of the created order are cited as a source of insight and a reminder for every penitent servant (50:8) and for a people who understand (16:67).

10–11 Bounty from Us may be a reference to prophethood and revelation (JJ), as in 4:163, And unto David We gave the Psalms, or to the judgment and knowledge that God is said to have given both David and Solomon (21:79; cf. 27:15). The mountains and birds are compelled to glorify God with David (cf. 21:79; 38:18–19), because he has been appointed as a vicegerent upon the earth (38:26), meaning that in him are all things contained in principle (see 6:165c; 35:39c). That iron was made supple for David indicates that God taught him the art of metalworking, which allowed him to make coats of mail (cf. 21:80) and weapons. The prophets David and Solomon are cited in several Quranic passages as rulers who were given power over certain aspects of nature and who exercised these powers wisely. For a more extensive discussion of the powers bestowed upon David, see 38:17–20c.

12 The verb in the first clause is implied and could be either "gave," following upon v. 10, or "made . . . subservient," as in 38:36: So We made the wind subservient unto him, coursing gently by his command whither he wished (cf. 21:81). Though David figures more prominently in the Bible than does his son Solomon, Solomon figures more prominently in the Quran and is described as having greater powers. In addition to inheriting David's kingdom and being given judgment and knowledge (21:79) and the ability to communicate with the animals, Solomon was also given power over the winds. Similarly, he is said to have had power over the jinn. Just as iron was made pliable for David, so too were more aspects of metallurgy taught to Solomon. The jinn who deviated from God's Command to serve Solomon are said to have been punished in the Fire in the Hereafter (JJ, Ṭ) or to have been punished in this world with a strike from an angel that would scorch them (JJ).

cause them to taste the punishment of the Blaze, (13) making for him whatsoever he willed: places of worship, statues, basins like reservoirs, and cauldrons firmly anchored. "Work, O family of David, in thankfulness, though few of My servants are thankful." (14) And when We decreed death for him, naught showed his death to them save a creeping creature of the earth eating his staff. And when he fell down, the jinn saw clearly that, had they known the Unseen, they would not have tarried in humiliating punishment. (15) For Sheba too there was certainly a sign in their dwelling—two gardens, one to the right and one to the left: "Eat of the provision of your Lord and give thanks to Him—a good land, and a forgiving Lord." (16) But they turned away. So We sent the flood of ᶜArim upon them and exchanged their two gardens for two gardens bearing bitter fruit, tamarisks, and a few lote trees. (17) Thus did We recompense them for 13 Places of worship translates maḥārīb, the plural of miḥrāb, which is the word most commonly used to designate the niche that marks the direction of prayer in a mosque. In pre-Islamic times, miḥrāb was used to designate the private chamber within a house or a large Bedouin tent to which one could retire alone and which was thus a sanctuary of sorts, or the most honored sitting place in the tent. Thus miḥrāb came to be used to designate the prayer niche, because it was regarded as a place of honor in the mosque (Iṣ). Other etymological derivations propose that the miḥrāb is so named because it is the place in which one combats (ḥāraba, from the same root as miḥrāb) Satan and caprice, or because it is a place in which one is displaced from (ḥarīb min) the preoccupations of the world (Iṣ). In this context, it can also be understood to mean the honored places in which people would sit, alluding to castles (Ṭ), or places in which the direction of prayer was clearly delineated, thus places of worship or prostration (Ṭ).

Here the Command to work is understood to mean work in obedience to God (Aj, Ṭ) and strive to serve or worship God (Aj). In thankfulness can also be read as a direct object (Aj), so that the sentence would mean, "Work or offer thanks to God." Though few of My servants are thankful can be understood as the end of God's address to Solomon or as the beginning of a new sentence (Aj), in which case "though" would be replaced with "and" or "yet."

14 When Solomon died, he reportedly remained supported by his staff while the jinn continued working to carry out his command, until, when a termite ate through his staff, he fell to the ground (JJ, Q). This was reportedly done at Solomon's request to demonstrate to the jinn that they did not have the knowledge of the Unseen that they had claimed (Q). That they would not have tarried in humiliating punishment is understood to mean that, had the jinn been aware that Solomon had passed away and thus had the knowledge they claimed, they would have immediately ceased to carry out the tasks that he had appointed them (JJ).

15–17 Sheba is the name of a tribe in Yemen whose land is said to have had pure air and to have been free of dung, gnats, flies, fleas, scorpions, and snakes (JJ). Despite the great fortune that God had bestowed upon them, they turned away, meaning from worshipping God alone (IK), failed to give thanks, and thus became disbelievers (IK, JJ). Some commentators connect these verses to the reference to the people ruled by the Queen of Sheba, who are said to have prostrated to the sun (see 27:22–24; IK), but as the people ruled by the Queen of Sheba lived at the time of Solomon, the present verses likely refer to a much later group of people from the same region. ᶜArim can be having disbelieved. And do We recompense any but the disbeliever? (18) And We set between them and the towns that We had blessed towns easily seen, and We measured the distance between them: "Journey between them in security by night and by day." (19) But they said, "Our Lord, increase the distance of our journeys." And they wronged themselves; so We made them as tales [of old] and tore them completely to pieces. Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful. (20) And Iblīs did indeed prove his opinion of them to be true; and understood as a proper name, to mean "powerful" or "violent," or to mean "dam." The latter meaning appears to be substantiated by inscriptions from around AD 450 to 540 that use this same root, ʿayn-rā'-mīm, to refer to a dam system in southern Arabia. This passage would then refer to the ancient society of Mārib, whose people had constructed a sophisticated dam system that enabled them to create two vast irrigated tracts. When the dams gave way, the rich landscape of these irrigated tracts, or gardens, was then returned to desert, thus bearing bitter fruit.

The last sentence of v. 17 can also be read, "And is any recompensed but the disbelievers" (Q, Ṭ). In both readings the implication is that God forgives the sins of believers but makes the disbelievers bear the consequences of their sins (Q). In both readings, the Arabic interrogative particle hal can alternately be read as a particle of negation, meaning, "We do not recompense any but the disbeliever," or "None but the disbeliever is recompensed" (Ṭ).

18 Another of the blessings God had given Sheba was to facilitate trade for them by providing towns where they could rest and obtain water during their journeys from Yemen to those lands blessed with water and trees in Syria (IK, JJ). Measured the distance between them indicates that the towns were spaced so that they would always find a resting place where they could renew their provisions without needing to travel too far (IK). The final enjoinder thus means that one should journey in security and peace protected by God. In this manner it is similar to the blessings that God is said to have bestowed upon the Quraysh; see 106:1–2c.

19 The people of Sheba had reportedly wanted the distances between the way stations of their journeys to be lengthened, so that they could boast of traveling long distances and of being able to carry all of their provisions with them (JJ). God made them as tales [of old], that is, as a bygone people of whose might, wealth, and destruction others would speak, and tore them completely to pieces, that is, scattered them throughout the land (IK, JJ). In this context, Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful (cf. 14:5; 31:31; 42:33) indicates that reflecting upon the manner in which past societies had their fortunes and blessings removed from them should cause one to be thankful for what one has received from God and to bear afflictions with patience.

20 The opinion of Iblīs, or Satan, regarding human beings is most likely what he expresses in 17:62: If Thou dost grant me reprieve till the Day of Resurrection, I shall surely gain mastery over his progeny, all save a few; and in 7:17: And Thou wilt not find most of them thankful. The phrase and they followed him would then mean that his assessment was correct (JJ), except with regard to a group among the believers.

21 That he had no authority over them means that the only ability Satan has to make human beings swerve from the truth is what was granted to him by God. Satan only has authority to lead astray those who already have the tendency to stray; thus God says to him in 15:42, As for My servants, truly thou hast no authority over them, save for those in error who follow thee (cf. 16:99; 17:65). God grants Satan the opportunity to lead human beings astray, so that He might know one who believes in the Hereafter from one who is in doubt thereof, meaning to let their true natures become manifest, for ultimately God already knows those who are truthful, and surely He knows the liars (29:3; see 29:3c).

they followed him, save for a group among the believers. (21) And yet he had no authority over them, save that We might know one who believes in the Hereafter from one who is in doubt thereof. And thy Lord guards over all things. (22) Say, "Call upon those whom you claim apart from God; they have not a mote's weight of power in the heavens or on the earth, and they have no share in either; nor has He a helper among them." (23) And intercession will benefit none with Him, save whomsoever He gives leave, such that when terror is banished from their hearts, they will ask, "What did your Lord say?" They will reply, "The truth, and He is the Exalted, the Great." (24) Say, "Who provides for you from the heavens and the earth?" Say, "God. And surely either we or you are upon guidance or in manifest error." (25) Say, "You will not be questioned concerning that of which we were guilty; nor will we be questioned concerning that 22 Those whom you claim means "those whom you claim to be gods" (JJ). Whereas the Prophet is commanded to challenge the disbelievers to call upon their deities here and in 7:195; 10:38; 11:13; 17:56; 46:4, a statement with similar effect is made in 35:13: As for those upon whom you call apart from Him, they do not possess so much as the husk of a date stone (cf. 7:194; 22:73). Then on the Day of Judgment, it will be said, "Call upon your partners." So they will call upon them, but they will not answer them. And they will see the punishment—if only they had been rightly guided! (28:64), and that is because God, He is the Truth, and whatsoever they call upon other than Him is false (31:30). The statement that God has no helper among them is a response to the attitude of some of the idolaters who maintained that their idols and deities could function as intercessors, saying, We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God (39:3).

23 Continuing the last line of the previous verse, this verse responds to those who maintained that their gods could intercede for them with God (JJ). Whomsoever He gives leave then clarifies that there can be intercession through others, understood in Islamic tradition to mean specifically prophets, angels, and God's pious servants, but only insofar as God permits. For the Quranic understanding of intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c. When terror is banished from their hearts—that is, from the hearts of the angels—the angels will turn to one another and ask, "What did your Lord say?" meaning, "What did He command?" (Q). The angels' hearts are filled with terror or fear, because of the awe they have for God, as in 21:28, They are wary, for fear of Him (Q), where they are in awe of His Word or in awe of the end of the world (IJ). They thus do nothing until they receive the Command from God.

24 The question means, "Is there a creator other than God who provides for you from the heavens and the earth?" (35:3; cf. 10:31; 27:64); from the heavens alludes to rain and the earth, to plants (IJ). These verses can also be understood to imply, Who is it that will provide for you if He withholds His provision? (67:21). In the second part of the verse, some commentators interpret or, which here translates the particle aw, to mean "and" and thus interpret this verse to mean, "And surely we (the believers) are guided and you (the disbelievers) are in manifest error" (IJ, Ṭ). Others maintain that the verse means, "We are astray or guided and you are astray or guided" (IJ, Ṭ). The slight ambiguity that disbelievers might see in this verse is then understood by some as a gentle invitation to embrace faith (JJ). For manifest error, see 36:24c.

25 On the one hand, this verse recalls that the Muslims and the disbelievers bear no responsibility for the religion of the other, similar to 10:41, which you do." (26) Say, "Our Lord will gather us together; then He will decide between us with truth; and He is the Arbiter, the Knower." (27) Say, "Show me those whom you have joined with Him as partners. Nay! Rather, He is God, the Mighty, the Wise." (28) And We sent thee not, save as a bearer of glad tidings and a warner to mankind entire. But most of mankind know not. (29) And they say, "When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful?" (30) Say, "Yours shall be the tryst of a Day that you cannot delay by a single hour, nor advance." (31) The disbelievers say, "We shall not believe in this Quran, nor in that which was before it." Couldst thou but see when the wrongdoers are made to stand before their Lord, hurling reproach upon one another! Those who had been where the Prophet is enjoined, And if they deny thee, say, "Unto me, my deeds, and unto you, your deeds. You are quit of that which I do, and I am quit of that which you do" (IK). On the other hand, it evokes the general principle that none shall bear the burden of another (6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; 53:38).

26 On the Day of Judgment, God will gather all human beings together on an open plain (18:47) and judge between them, and their differences will be made clear. Those who are truthful will then be admitted to the Garden and the deniers to the Fire (IK, JJ). Hence it is also known as the Day of Gathering (42:7; 64:9). The Arbiter translates al-Fattāḥ, from the root f-t-ḥ, which can also mean "to open." It could thus also be rendered "the Opener." Here al-Fattāḥ indicates the One Who judges in accord with the truth and makes that truth clear by piercing through what had been closed.

27 Regarding the challenge to disbelievers to show those whom they claim to be God's partners, see 34:22c. Here Nay! means that there are no equals to God (IK) or that there is no way that they could show them, since in reality they do not exist.

28 That the Prophet is sent to mankind entire is taken as an indication that his mission is of universal scope for all races and lands (IK, R, Ṭ), as in 21:107: And We sent thee not, save as a mercy unto the worlds and 4:79: We sent thee as a messenger unto mankind (see also 7:158). Entire translates kāffah, which could also be understood to modify the manner in which the Prophet was sent, thus meaning that he was sent "combining" the functions of bearing glad tidings and delivering warnings (Q, R, Z). The Prophet is referred to as both a bearer of glad tidings and a warner in several verses (5:19; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 25:56; 33:45; 35:24; 48:8), while in other verses these functions are attributed to all prophets (2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56).

29 Cf. 10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 36:48; 67:25. This line of questioning is one of the ways in which the disbelievers would mock the Prophet when he spoke of matters pertaining to the Resurrection and Judgment; see 36:48c.

30 In other verses the assertion that the moment in question cannot be delayed by a single hour, advanced, or hastened comes in reference to the particular end that iniquitous civilizations face (see 7:34c; 10:49; 15:5; 16:61; 23:43). Here it most likely refers to the Day of Judgment, the tryst, which is the moment of gathering that is fixed and cannot be changed, as in 71:4: Truly when the term of God comes, it will not be delayed; see also 11:104.

31 In the preceding verses the idolaters' disbelief in the Oneness of God, the reality of prophethood, and the reality of the Resurrection were exposed. It thus follows that they do not believe in the revelations that contain these teachings, namely, the Quran and that which was before it. This phrase is understood by the majority of commentators to mean the Torah and the Gospel, but could also be seen as a general reference to every revealed book denied by disbelievers in any land. The implied answer to the conditional phrase beginning couldst thou but see is "thou weak and oppressed will say to those who had waxed arrogant, "If not for you, we would have been believers." (32) Those who waxed arrogant will say to those who had been weak and oppressed, "Did we turn you away from guidance after it had come unto you? Nay! But you were guilty." (33) Those who had been weak and oppressed will say to those who waxed arrogant, "Nay! But there was plotting by night and day when you ordered us to disbelieve in God, and to set up equals unto Him." And they will hide their remorse when they see the punishment, and We put shackles upon the necks of those who disbelieve. Will they be requited for aught but what they used to do? (34) And We sent no warner wouldst be amazed" (R) or something to this effect. Those who had been weak and oppressed refers to the followers of disbelievers, while those who had waxed arrogant refers to their leaders (IK, JJ, R), whose influence prevented many of their followers who otherwise would have believed from doing so (R). Those who merely claim that they were weak and oppressed and thus unable to practice religion as they desired are understood to have their refuge in Hell (4:97), but in some instances for those who truly were oppressed it may be that God will pardon them, for God is Pardoning, Forgiving (4:99).

32 The response of the oppressors to those whom they oppressed and sought to turn from the way of God is to say that they had only called them; the oppressed who followed went against the evidence and proof that the messengers brought because of their own desires (IK). They thus disbelieved of their own accord (IK, JJ), because they followed freely the wealthy and influential rather than God and His Messenger; see 33:66–68; 71:21.

33 The weak and oppressed here claim that, although they did follow the wealthy and influential, they would not have done so had they not been confused by the lies and false deities set up by their oppressors (IK). They—that is, both the oppressors and the oppressed (JJ)—hide their remorse (cf. 10:54). That the dispute concludes in a state of remorse for both sides could be understood to mean that they realize the truth of one another's claims. On the one hand, the rulers have a greater share in guilt for having sought to preserve their power by establishing false religions and false deities. On the other hand, many of those who followed them still chose to do so without attempting to discern the matter for themselves. The concealment of their remorse is understood by some to come after their having made it manifest, as in 32:12: Couldst thou but see when the guilty bend their heads low before their Lord: "Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain." Then, after being informed that there is no opportunity for them to make amends, they are no longer able to voice their remorse (R). Regarding the shackles that are put upon them, see 36:8c. The concluding rhetorical question is answered in 37:39: And you shall not be requited, save for that which you used to do (cf. 40:40). In this context it indicates that both the oppressors and the oppressed will be requited in accordance with the degree of their guilt (IK), though some verses allude to the leaders receiving a twofold punishment (33:68; cf. 7:38), one punishment for having been astray and another punishment for leading others astray.

34 Cf. 43:23. Here, those living in luxury translates mutrafū, which could also be translated "the indulgent" or "the sybarites." In other verses, it is the notables (malaʾ) who are said to reject God's prophets and revelations; see 7:60, 66, 75, 88, 90, 103, 109, 127; 10:75, 83; 11:27, 38, 97; 23:24, 33, 46; 38:6. Like Jesus in the New Testaunto a town, but that those living in luxury therein said, "We disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent." (35) And they say, "We are greater in wealth and children, and we shall not be punished." (36) Say, "Truly my Lord outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will, but most of mankind know not." (37) It is not your wealth or your children that bring you nigh in nearness unto Us, save those who believe and work righteousness—theirs is a manifold reward for what they did, and they will be secure in lofty chambers. (38) And those who endeavor to thwart Our signs, they will be arraigned unto the punishment. (39) Say, "Truly my Lord outspreads and straitens provision for whom-ment and many prophets in the Hebrew Bible, the Prophet Muhammad was rejected by those of his native city and suffered for his testimony. As in the Hebrew Bible, it is implied that Divine Punishment will soon come for those who reject God's prophets; see Kings 19:10–14; Jeremiah 11:18–19; 18:18–20; 20:1–2; 26:7–11; 38:4–6. This widespread teaching of the Abrahamic scriptures is perhaps best expressed in Luke 4:24: "Truly, I tell you, no prophet is accepted in the prophet's hometown" (see also Matthew 13:57; Mark 6:4; John 4:44).

35–37 The objection expressed in these verses reflects a common response of those who reject revelation because they think only in terms of this world, rather than in terms of this world and the next, as when the people said to Noah, We see none who follow you, save the lowliest among us (11:27), and asked, Shall we believe you, when the lowliest follow you? (26:111). On the one hand, wealth and status should be a cause for gratitude and should be managed properly, as in 28:77: And forget not your portion in this world. On the other hand, the Quran cautions, Your property and your children are only a trial (8:28; 64:15). In this sense, God outspreads . . . provision for whomsoever He will as a test, and then straitens provision as a trial (JJ); cf. 13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:36, 39; 39:52; 42:12. From this perspective, the provisions of wealth and children, among other things, can only be a source of good when one conducts oneself righteously in relation to them, for wealth and children are the adornment of the life of this world, but that which endures—righteous deeds—are better in reward with thy Lord (18:46). The Day of Judgment is thus described as the Day when neither wealth nor children avail, save for him who comes to God with a sound heart (26:88–89). Those who meet the challenge, dealing justly with their worldly possessions and responsibilities, shall be rewarded, but for those who disbelieve, neither their wealth nor their children shall avail them aught against God (3:10, 116). In this vein, 9:55 and 9:85 caution, And let not their wealth or their children impress thee. God desires but to punish them thereby in the life of this world, and that their souls should depart while they are disbelievers (cf. 68:14c); see also 2:212; 3:14; 9:69; 26:88; 60:3; 63:9; 64:14–15; 68:14; 71:21. Those who believe and work righteousness will then have a manifold reward, meaning their good deeds will be multiplied ten to seven hundred fold (IK); see 2:261c; 6:160c. They are secure from any harm (IK) and from death (JJ).

38 Cf. 22:51; 34:5. See 34:5c. All human beings will be arraigned before God (see 36:32, 53; 36:32c), but only the disbelievers will be arraigned unto the punishment (cf. 30:16).

39 The first instance of God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (cf. 13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:36; 39:52; 42:12) in this sūrah (v. 36) points to the fact that one's worldly status and possessions do not indicate one's true status before God (R). Here the addition of among His servants can be understood to mean that the phrase relates specifically to the soever He will among His servants. Whatsoever you have spent, He will replace; and He is the best of providers." (40) Upon the Day when He will gather them all together, then He shall say unto the angels, "Were these the ones worshipping you?" (41) They will reply, "Glory be to Thee! Thou art our Protector, apart from them!" Nay, they worshipped jinn, most of them believing in them. (42) And on that Day no one of you will have power over what benefit or harm may come to the other, and We shall say to those who do wrong, "Taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny!" (43) And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, they say, "This is naught but a man who desires to turn you from that which your fathers used to worship." And they say, "This is naught but a fabricated perversion." And those who disbelieve say to the Truth when it comes to them, "This is naught but manifest sorbelievers (R). Whatsoever you have spent means what believers have spent in the way of God. God will replace it with something else in this world and with something better in the Hereafter (IK, Q), because He is the best of providers (cf. 5:114; 22:58; 23:72; 62:11). Regarding this verse, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, "Provision is of two kinds. One is a provision that is remembrance, which is for the spirit itself, the intellect, and the heart. This is like the sustenance of the angels—their very life is through remembrance. Were it withheld from them, they would die. The other provision is that which is eaten, drunk, and the like for the benefit of one's [physical] nature" (ST).

40 Gather them refers to either the gathering of all human beings or the gathering of the disbelievers. Here it is the angels who are questioned, rather than the jinn and idols that were worshipped, because the angels are the highest of those beings to whom the idolaters had attributed divinity and whom they worshipped (R). Regarding the manner in which God questions the angels, 25:17 states, And on the Day He gathers them and that which they worship apart from God, He will say, "Was it you who caused these servants of Mine to go astray, or did they [themselves] go astray from the way?" (see 25:17–18c).

41 That the angels say to God, Thou art our Protector, apart from them indicates that the angels claim to have no bonds of association with those who worshipped them (JJ).

42 This verse can be understood as an address to the angels, saying that they will have no power to aid those who worshipped them, as in 19:87: They have no power of intercession, save the one who has made a pact with the Compassionate; see 25:3c. It can also be understood as an address to the disbelievers, saying that they cannot harm or aid one another (R), since the Day of Judgment is a day when no soul will avail another soul in any way, and no intercession shall be accepted from it, nor ransom taken from it; nor shall they be helped (2:48; cf. 2:123; 82:19).

43 This is one of many verses to speak of the negative reactions of the disbelievers to the recitation of God's signs, that is, the verses of the Quran; see 8:31; 19:73; 22:72; 31:7; 42:25; 46:7c; 68:15; 83:13. Their assertion that it is naught but a fabricated perversion can be understood to mean the Quran or the belief in the Oneness of God, as in 37:86, when Abraham asks his father and other disbelievers, Is it a perversion, gods apart from God, that you desire? and in 46:22, when the disbelievers ask, Have you come to us to pervert us from our gods? (R). This latter interpretation is most likely, since their assertion that this is naught but manifest sorcery would then refer to the Quran.

cery," (44) though We have not given them any books that they study; nor have We sent them a warner before thee. (45) And those before them denied; and these have not attained a tenth of that which We gave them; yet they denied My messengers. How, then, was the change I wrought! (46) Say, "I exhort you unto one thing only: that you stand for God in pairs or singly and then reflect. There is no madness in your companion. He is naught but a warner unto you before a severe punishment." (47) Say, "I ask not of you any reward; that shall be yours. My reward lies only with God, and He is Witness over all things." (48) Say, "Truly my Lord doth cast the truth, Knower of things unseen." (49) Say, "Truth 44 We have not given them any books means they have not been given any revealed scriptures, as the force of their claims regarding the nature of the unseen implies that they are privy to such information. Elsewhere, the Quran asks rhetorically, Or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it? (35:40; cf. 43:21; 46:4; 52:36–37, 41; 68:37–38); see 35:40c; 46:4c.

45 The disbelievers in the time of the Prophet do not have a tenth of the power, blessings, wealth, and length of life as the communities that had been destroyed before them. If God was able to punish those previous communities for having rejected His messengers, then how is it that the disbelievers of this generation think they will be protected from punishment (R)? How, then, was the change I wrought! (cf. 22:44; 35:26; 67:18) could also be rendered, "And how was the nature of My reproach?" Both translations indicate that their punishment will be as severe as the punishment that befell earlier generations; also see 22:44–45c.

46 The Prophet is told to enjoin his followers to one characteristic above all others (Bd, Z), to stand for God or to "rise up for God," meaning to stand before God in complete sincerity without being influenced by caprice, falsehood, or tribalism (IK) and thus to turn away from doubt and blind imitation (taqlīd; Bd). They are to do so in pairs, that is, discussing the matter with one another, or singly, that is, thinking individually to themselves and reflecting upon what the Prophet says and does without being swayed by inherited beliefs (Z). Or they are not to allow the crowds to sway them from the remembrance of God or leave off the remembrance of God when alone (R). In pairs or singly can also be taken together as a reference to reflecting upon religious issues away from large crowds of people who may influence one's mind and cloud one's thoughts (Aj, Bd). Then, having dropped these matters, they should reflect honestly upon the Prophet and what he has brought (Bd, Z), implying that when they reflect honestly upon the evidence at hand, they will see that he is indeed a messenger from God and is not mad, as in 7:184: Have they not reflected? There is no madness in their companion. He is naught but a clear warner.

47 Cf. 10:72; 26:109. Just as the Prophet displays no signs of being mad, neither does he display signs of having brought the message for worldly gain, as he asks nothing of the people other than that they follow the message with which God has sent him. The Prophet is enjoined to make similar statements in 6:90; 25:57; 36:21; 38:86; 42:23, and other prophets are reported to have made the same statement in 11:29; 26:109, 127, 145, 164, 180. For He is Witness over all things, see 4:33; 5:117; 22:17; 33:55; 41:53c; 58:6; 85:9.

48 Cast the truth refers to both God's casting of the truth into the hearts of believers (R) and God's overcoming falsehood with truth, as in 21:18: We cast truth against falsehood, and it crushes it, and, behold, it vanishes (cf. 17:81; IK, R).

49 Truth has come implies that falsehood has been vanquished, as in 17:81: Say, "Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Truly falsehood is ever vanishing." That falsehood originates naught, nor restores refers back to the criticism of those who has come, and falsehood originates naught, nor restores." (50) Say, "If I have gone astray, I have only gone astray to my own loss. And if I am rightly guided, it is through that which my Lord reveals unto me. Truly He is Hearing, Near." (51) Couldst thou but see when they are terrified and there is no escape, and they are seized from a place near at hand. (52) And they will say, "We believe in it." But how can they attain from a place far off, (53) when they had disbelieved in it beforehand, while impugning the unseen from a place far off? (54) And a barrier is set between them and that which they desire, as was done with the likes of them before. Truly they were confounded by doubt.

worshipped idols and jinn in vv. 40–42, as such objects of worship have no ability to create anew or to resurrect, as does God, since nothing will come of nothing; see commentary on 25:3: But they have taken gods apart from Him, who create naught and are themselves created, and who have no power over what harm or benefit may come to themselves, and who have no power over death, or life, or resurrection.

50 Here the implication is that if the Prophet is astray, then his condition is just like that of those who oppose him, but if he is indeed guided, then his guidance comes directly from revelation and is not the same as the guidance that others may claim to have obtained. The Divine Name the Hearing is employed throughout the Quran, but this is the only verse where it is combined with Near, thus indicating that the Lord is the Hearer of supplications (14:39), which evokes 2:186: When My servants ask thee about Me, truly I am near. I answer the call of the caller when he calls Me. So let them respond to Me and believe in Me, that they may be led aright.

51 In this context, from a place near at hand further emphasizes that there is no possible escape from God's Judgment (IK, R), as disbelievers are seized immediately upon being resurrected from their graves (IK).

52–53 Those who denied the Prophet and the Quran disbelieved in it beforehand, meaning during the life of this world, but now, having seen the truth on the Day of Judgment, they believe, as in 32:12, in which the guilty say on the Day of Judgment, Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain (IK). The disbelievers thus admit their sins (see 40:11; 41:47; 67:11) and are terrified of what will become of them. How can they attain from a place far off? means, "How can they attain to the opportunities for repentance and guidance that were offered them during the life of this world, as that is a place to which they can never return?" (R). It in They had disbelieved in it can mean the truth (R), discussed in vv. 48–49, but it can also mean God (Q) in which case it would be translated, "He," the Prophet (Q, R), or the Quran (R). In Arabic the phrase translated impugning the unseen is directly related to my Lord doth cast the truth (v. 48), as both "impugn" and "cast" render the same verb, qadhafa. In this sense, those who disbelieve are the exact opposite of those who believe, as God casts the truth into the hearts of the believers, while the disbelievers cast the truth away. That they impugned or cast off the unseen from a place far off indicates that they had no knowledge upon which to base their position.

54 That which they desire refers to a return to the world in order to repent and make amends, though now it is too late (R), or to repentance itself (IK), or to the delights of this world (R) in which they used to indulge. Regarding their being confounded by doubt, see 11:62, 110; 14:9; 41:45; 42:14.

The Originator

Fāṭir

A Makkan sūrah, Fāṭir was reportedly revealed immediately after Sūrah 25, al-Furqān. According to some, vv. 27 and 32 are from the Madinan period (Ṭs), while others maintain that vv. 29 and 32 are Madinan (Āl). The sūrah takes its name from the reference to God as the Originator of the heavens and the earth in v. 1, but is often known as al-Malāʾikah, "The Angels" (Āl; IJ; Sy, al-Itqān), since v. 1 provides the only description of some aspects of the angels' physical appearance in the Quran.

The main focus of the sūrah is upon the Oneness of God as the only Creator and Sustainer of existence. It begins with an affirmation of God as the sole Originator and Provider (vv. 1–3) and returns to this theme throughout (vv. 13–17, 27–28), contrasting the Power of God with the claims the polytheists make for their idols (vv. 13–14, 40–41). A discussion of Satan as the Deluder and enemy (vv. 5–8) leads into the other major theme of this sūrah, the contrast between the believers and the disbelievers (vv. 7–8, 10); vv. 19–22 provide one of the most poetic contrasts between the two groups. The longest comparison between the two groups (vv. 29–39), followed by a final contrast between the Power of God and that of the idols (vv. 40–41), segues into a final passage on the nature of disbelief and the ends to which it leads (vv. 42–45).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Praise be to God, Originator of the heavens and the earth, Who appoints the angels as messengers, of wings two, three, and four, increasing creation as He will. Truly God is Powerful over all things. (2) Whatsoever mercy God opens unto mankind, none shall withhold. And whatsoever He withholds, none shall release thereafter. And He is the Mighty, the Wise. (3) O mankind! Remember God's Blessing upon you. Is there a creator other than God who provides for you from Heaven and earth? There is no god but He. How, then,

1 This is one of five sūrahs that begin with Praise be to God (see 1:2; 6:1; 18:1; 34:1). Originator translates Fāṭir, a Divine Name related to the verb faṭara, meaning to "split" or "cleave." In the Quran, Fāṭir always occurs as part of the larger phrase Originator of the heavens and the earth (cf. 6:14; 12:101; 14:10; 39:46; 42:11). The verbal form of this word, however, is also used in the context of God's creation of human beings (11:51; 17:51; 20:72; 32:22; 43:27), hence its etymological relation to the fiṭrah, or primordial nature, in which God creates or "originates" human beings (see 30:30c). That God is Fāṭir can also be understood to mean that He is the "Cleaver" or "Splitter," in that God cleaves open the heavens to prepare for the descent of spirits into bodies and then cleaves open the earth for the ascension of the spirits of human beings at the moment of resurrection (R). This relates directly to the function of the angels, who are messengers "conveying" the spirits from Heaven to earth and from earth to Heaven (R), though others understand their function as messengers to be related to the role they play in bringing revelation to the prophets (IK). Increasing creation as He will can be understood to mean that God increases the number of angels (Q) or their wings (Q, Z), as there are many reports of angels with more than two or three wings, and the Angel Gabriel is reported to have appeared to the Prophet with six hundred wings (IK). The phrase can also be understood more generally to mean that God increases whomever and whatever He wills in creation (Ṭ, Z).

2 The reference to God "opening" mercy can be understood as an allusion to 42:12, Unto Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth. He outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (cf. 39:63), since none can open these treasuries but God (Ṭ). In this sense, this verse provides a general assertion that none can withhold what God wills to bestow or release what He withholds, as in 10:107: And if God should touch thee with affliction, none can remove it save He; and if He desires some good for thee, none can hold back His Bounty (IK). The order of the present verse, in which God's opening of mercy is mentioned before the withholding of mercy is related to the idea found in a famous ḥadīth qudsī: "My Mercy precedes My Wrath" (R, Z). None shall release thereafter could also be rendered, "none shall release after Him" (R), meaning that no one can dispense what God has chosen to withhold. In this regard the Prophet is reported to have said, "I cannot put mercy in your heart after God has removed it."

3 This is one of six verses to enjoin Remember God's Blessing upon you (2:231; 5:7, 11, 20; 14:6; see 5:7c). Though some read the present verse as being addressed specifically to the people of Makkah, it can also be extended to all human beings, since all human beings have benefitted from God's blessings (Z). Throughout his commentary, al-Rāzī maintains that there are two general categories of blessings: those of creation, or bringing into being (ījād), and those of perpetuation (ibqā'). He interprets Is there a creator other than God as a reference to the blessing of creation and who provides are you perverted? (4) If they deny thee, messengers before thee were denied, and unto God are all matters returned. (5) O mankind! Surely God's Promise is true. So let not the life of this world delude you, nor let the Deluder delude you concerning God. (6) Truly Satan is an enemy unto you; so take him as an enemy. He only calls upon his party that they may be among the inhabitants of the Blaze. (7) Those who disbelieve, theirs shall be a severe punishment. And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be forgiveness and a great reward. (8) And what of one, the evil of whose deeds for you from Heaven and earth as a reference to the blessing of perpetuation. In this context, How, then, are you perverted? (cf. 6:95; 10:34; 40:62) is answered by the statement There is no god but He, meaning that, since God has provided all the blessings of both creation and perpetuation, how can any turn away from Him and attribute partners to Him (R)?

4 That previous messengers and prophets have been denied is a major theme of the Quran found in the stories of previous prophets and stated explicitly in several verses; see 3:184; 6:10; 13:32; 21:41; 35:4; 38:12; 40:5; 41:43; 54:9. Elsewhere, this reminder to the Prophet is followed by an additional reminder: And they bore patiently their being denied and persecuted till Our Help came to them (6:34). In this sense, the denial and persecution of previous prophets serves to console the Prophet Muhammad and encourage him to bear denial on the part of disbelievers patiently, since from a Quranic perspective all prophetic missions are ultimately victorious (see 9:33; 37:171–73; 40:51; 48:28; 58:21; 61:9). In this context, unto God are all matters returned (cf. 2:210; 3:109; 8:44; 22:76; 57:5) indicates that those who denied God's messengers will be requited in full for what they have done (IK).

5 Cf. 31:33. Here the statement that God's Promise is true (cf., e.g., 4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:21) refers to the promise of Divine Punishment for the disbelievers in the previous verse (Ṭ) or to all of the events pertaining to the Hereafter (IK, JJ). Concerning the last phrase, see 31:33c.

6 That Satan is an enemy of human beings is stated throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 2:168, 208; 6:142; 7:22; 12:5; 17:53; 28:15; 36:60; 43:62) and voiced by Satan himself in 4:119: And surely I will lead them astray, and arouse desires in them. I will command them and they will slit the ears of cattle; I will command them and they will alter God's creation; and 7:16–17: Because Thou hast caused me to err, I shall surely lie in wait for them on Thy straight path. Then I shall come upon them from in front of them and from behind them, and from their right and from their left. And Thou wilt not find most of them thankful. The warning to take Satan as an enemy is understood as an injunction to obey God rather than Satan (JJ, Ṭ) and to perform righteous deeds (R). In this regard, al-Rāzī writes: "Whosoever knows that he has an enemy from whom he has no escape and is certain of that, then focuses upon [opposing him], and forbears in fighting him and being patient shall triumph. Likewise for Satan, the human being cannot escape him, for he is with him. And he ceases not to follow him until he focuses upon him and routs him, for routing Satan comes through a human being's determination, and the path is being firm in intent and trusting in servitude [to God]."

Those who are in the party of Satan are those who do not take him as an enemy and follow him rather than God and the messengers (JJ). He only calls upon his party thus means that Satan summons "the people of caprice, innovation, and error" who obey him and hearken to those who declare such things (ST). Then when they are among the inhabitants of the Blaze, Satan declares himself innocent of all that they have done; see 14:22c; 59:16.

7 This verse juxtaposes those who follow Satan and are thus among his party with those who take him as an enemy and follow God.

8 One for whom the evil of his deeds has been made to seem fair to him is one who has failed to has been made to seem fair to him, such that he thinks it beautiful? Truly God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will; so let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them. Truly God knows that which they do. (9) And God is He Who sends the winds; then they cause clouds to rise. Then We drive them to a land that is dead, and thereby revive the earth after its death. Thus shall be the Resurrection! (10) Whosoever desires might—to God belongs might altogether. Unto Him ascends the good word, and He uplifts the consider Satan an enemy, since it is Satan who has made their deeds seem fair unto them (8:48; 16:63; 27:24; 29:38). Deeds seeming fair and being led astray are one and the same, since it is as a result of following caprice that one comes to see what is ugly as beautiful and what is beautiful as ugly (Z). Such people think their bad deeds are good or that their vice is virtue, for few who commit evil deeds are aware of it, just as few who are ignorant are aware of their ignorance (R). In this context, that God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will (cf. 13:27; 14:4; 16:93; 74:31) can be understood as the reason why the Prophet should not expend regrets over their being astray (Ṭ). Let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them is one of several injunctions enjoining the Prophet not to grieve for those who reject the message (see 3:176; 5:41, 68; 6:33; 10:65; 16:127; 18:6; 26:3; 27:70; 31:23; 36:76). Such passages indicate that the Prophet need not worry about the condition of the disbelievers, but should simply spread the Word of God as he has been enjoined, since God knows that which they do.

9 The positive, revivifying dimension of winds (in the plural) occurs ten times in the Quran and each time conveys an aspect of God's Mercy, as in 7:57 and 25:48: He it is Who sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy (see also 30:46). In contrast, wind (in the singular) is often used to express God's Wrath and Punishment (see 3:117; 10:22; 17:69; 22:81; 30:51; 33:9; 41:16; 46:24; 51:41; 54:19; 69:6). This verse is one of many where the manner in which God revives the dead earth is employed as a metaphor for the Resurrection (IK); see also 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 25:48–49; 29:63; 30:19, 24, 50; 36:33; 41:31, 39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11.

10 Whosoever desires might means whoever desires honor, power, and glory in this world and the next. To God belongs might altogether reminds one to be obedient toward God, as all such qualities come from God (IK); it is thus understood as a command not to seek such might from idols or other gods (IK, Ṭ) or from disbelievers, as in 4:139: Those who take disbelievers as protectors instead of believers—do they seek might through them? Truly might belongs altogether to God (IK). It is also understood to mean that any who seek true honor, power, and glory and are sincere in their desire, so that they seek with humility and poverty before God, will find these qualities with God and they will be unveiled to them (Q); see 10:65c.

The good word may refer to the remembrance and invocation of God, the recitation of the Quran, and supplicatory prayer (IK) or to the declaration of God's Oneness (Q). This sentence can be understood to mean that all good words and righteous deeds ascend to God and that one is thus rewarded for them, or that God uplifts the righteous deed over the good word because the deed constitutes the verification of the word (Q), since it is putting faith into action. The subtle phrasing of this verse also allows for it to be read, "Unto Him ascends the good word and the righteous deed uplifts it," meaning the deed uplifts the word (Q), as in a saying attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās: "The good word is the remembrance of God, which is taken up to God, and the righteous deed is the performance of obligatory duties. Whosoever remembers God while performing an obligatory duty, his deed carries his remembrance of God and takes it up to God. Whosoever remembers God and does not perform the obligatory duties, his words will be rejected, as will his deed" (IK). But it must also be recognized that the good word is a good deed in and of itself (Q). The phrase could also be understood to mean, "Unto Him ascends the good word, and as for the righteous righteous deed. As for those who plot evil deeds, theirs shall be a severe punishment, and their plotting shall come to ruin. (11) God created you from dust, then from a drop, then He made you pairs; and no female bears or brings forth save with His Knowledge. And none who grows old grows old, nor has aught lessened of his life, but that it is in a Book. Truly that is easy for God. (12) Not equal are the two seas: one sweet, satisfying, pleasant to drink, and the other salty, bitter. Yet from each you eat fresh meat, and bring out ornaments that you wear. And you see the ships therein plowing through, that you may seek of His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks. (13) He makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and He has made the sun and deed, it uplifts it" (Q), meaning that the good word uplifts the righteous deed in the sense that no good deed is accepted by God unless there is a sincere declaration of faith that precedes or accompanies it (Q). He uplifts it is thus understood to mean that God makes it reach Him "due to the presence of sincerity toward God within it" (ST). Those who plot evil deeds is understood as a reference to people of duplicity and hypocrisy (IK, Q, Ṭ) who perform "righteous deeds" only to deceive others into thinking that they obey God (IK) and whose deeds do not ascend. Their plotting shall come to ruin, because God knows that they perform such deeds only to be seen of others (see 2:264; 4:38, 142; 8:47) and not because of belief in God (see 4:37–39c).

11 Following upon v. 9, the mention of the stages of creation here is in part a reminder of God's Ability to resurrect, as in 22:5: O mankind! If you are in doubt concerning the Resurrection, [remember] We created you from dust, then from a drop, then from a blood clot, then from a lump of flesh, formed and unformed, that We may make clear for you. As the drop from which human beings were created (cf. 16:4; 18:37; 22:5; 36:77; 40:67; 53:46; 76:2; 80:19) is a draught of base fluid (32:8; cf. 77:20) and was preceded by dust, that God created you from dust, then from a drop also serves to remind human beings of their lowly origins. That God created mates for human beings is attested in several verses (4:1; 16:72; 42:11; 78:8). Here, as in 16:72 and 42:11, the connection to procreation is emphasized. Elsewhere, the emotional, psychological, and spiritual benefits of marriage are emphasized; see 2:187; 30:21c. The remainder of the verse means that the term of one's life has been decreed by God, that one may reach a term appointed (40:67); see 40:67c.

12 Regarding the two seas, also see 25:53, which adds that God has set between them a divide and a barrier, forbidden (cf. 55:20). The fresh meat refers to all the fruits of the sea, and the ornaments that you wear to pearls and coral stones (55:22; JJ, Z). Many commentators understand the two seas as a metaphor for the believer and the disbeliever (Bḍ, Z). But, as al-Rāzī observes, the fact that one brings fresh meat from each sea makes this metaphor difficult to apply. Drawing a spiritual lesson from this metaphor, Ibn ʿAjībah likens the Law to the ocean that is sweet, satisfying, pleasant to drink and the ocean of Reality to the one that is salty, bitter, because the latter requires exerting one's innermost self, lowering one's head, spending of one's wealth, and abandoning the world and its people, whereas the Law does not require as much. Fresh meat and ornaments are retrieved from each sea: From the ocean of the Law "one obtains the sweetness of proper conduct," while from the ocean of Reality one tastes "the sweetness of witnessing [God] and of spiritual knowledge" (Aj). The ships are then seen as the spiritual reflections that are plowing through the seas of Dominion (malakūt) and Majesty (jabarūt) to the completion of spiritual knowledge from God's Bounty in order to be among those who give thanks (Aj).

13–14 Regarding the first sentence of v. 13, see commentary on the almost identical phrasing in 31:29. That the deities called upon do not possess the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed. That is God, your Lord; to Him belongs sovereignty. As for those upon whom you call apart from Him, they do not possess so much as the husk of a date stone. (14) If you call upon them, they hear not your call, and even if they heard, they would not respond to you; and on the Day of Resurrection they will disown your ascribing partners unto God. And none informs you like one who is Aware. (15) O mankind! You are needful of God; and He is the Self-Sufficient, the Praised. (16) If He will, He could remove you and bring a new creation. (17) That so much as the husk of a date stone reaffirms God's absolute sovereignty in that it underlines the complete powerlessness of all upon whom people call apart from God, as in 22:73: Truly those upon whom you call apart from God will never create a fly, even if they gathered together to do so. And if the fly should rob them of aught, they could not rescue it from it. Feeble are the seeker and the sought! (cf. 34:22). Elsewhere, the idolaters are challenged, So call upon them! Let them answer you, if you are truthful (7:194). The idols and gods they call upon are heedless of their calling (46:5). They then disown the idolatry of the disbelievers, as in 10:28, where it is reported that they will say, It was not us that you worshipped, which reflects the manner in which Satan disavows the disbelievers, saying, Surely I am quit of you. Truly I fear God, the Lord of the worlds (59:16), and I cannot respond to your cries for help, nor can you respond to my cries for help. Truly I disbelieved in your ascribing me as partner aforetime (14:22; see commentary). Thus, when mankind is gathered together, such will be enemies unto them and deniers of their worship (46:6). In general, that none informs you like one who is Aware means that no one can inform you in the manner that God informs you (Aj, Q, Z). In context, this phrase can also refer to the account of the idols, meaning that only God tells you the truth regarding this matter (Aj, Z), especially as it pertains to the Unseen and cannot be deduced through reasoning (R). That none informs you like one who is Aware can also refer to the events on the Day of Resurrection (IK, Ṭ).

15 Like God is the Rich, and you are the poor in 47:38, this verse has played an important role in the Sufi understanding of the relationship between the Divine and the created order, especially human beings: God is completely Rich and Self-Sufficient and human beings completely poor, in utter need of God with regard to being both brought into existence and provided sustenance (Aj). From this perspective, realizing the Fullness or Richness of God depends upon the realization of one's complete poverty before God. As al-Tustarī writes, "You [depend] upon Him in your very selves, for when God created creation, He ordained (ḥakama) poverty for His servants in relation to Him, while He is the Rich. So whosoever claims wealth has been veiled from God. And whosoever shows his poverty in relation to Him, God will join his poverty to His wealth. The servant must feel poverty toward Him in his innermost being (sirr), cutting himself off from all that is other than Him, so that his servanthood may be pure; for pure servanthood is abasement and humility" (ST). From this perspective one must cut oneself off from all that is other than God, because poverty toward and need for God is intrinsic to human nature, whereas poverty toward or need for other things is accidental. Therefore, every need that one experiences is ultimately a need for God, since the phenomena for which one experiences need are veils that hide God and also reveal God. That God is the Praised thus indicates that being praised is intrinsic to the Divine Nature and not dependent upon anything to praise Him. In this respect, al-Maybudī states that only those who fully realize poverty truly praise God.

16–17 In this context, that God can make people disappear underlines His Self-Sufficiency (R) and the utter poverty of human beings in that God's making them disappear depends only upon God's Will. Bring a new creation means that God will replace them with other people (IK), either another people who already exist or a whole new is no great matter for God. (18) And none shall bear the burden of another. And though a burdened soul should call for its burden to be borne, naught of it will be borne, even if it be kin. Thou warnest only those who fear their Lord unseen and perform the prayer. And whosoever purifies himself purifies himself only for his own soul. And unto God is the journey's end. (19) Not equal are the blind and the seeing, (20) nor the darkness and the light, (21) nor the shade and the scorching heat. (22) Not equal are the living and the dead. Truly God causes whomsoever He will to hear, but thou canst not cause those in graves to people whom He will create who are better and more perfect than the previous ones (R); see also 4:133; 5:54c; 6:133; 14:19–20; 47:38.

18 That none shall bear the burden of another (cf. 6:164; 17:15; 39:7; 53:38)—that is, that no one will bear the sins or duties of others (Aj, IK, R, Ṭ)—points to God's Justice (Aj). In this context, the phrase can be understood as the introduction of a new discussion (Q), or as connected to the previous verses in that being poor in relation to God (see 35:15c) also means that one cannot take on the burden of another or cast one's burden upon another (R), since human beings are powerless to make such determinations. Commentators reconcile this phrase with 29:13, Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others' burdens along with their own, by saying that their own burdens refers to what corrupt leaders will endure for the sin of having been misled themselves and that others' burdens refers to that for having misled others (Aj). That one who purifies himself purifies himself only for his own soul means that whoever performs good deeds receives the benefit of those deeds (IK), just as the first part of this verse indicates that only those who commit evil deeds suffer the punishment for such deeds. This verse thus demonstrates a moral reflexivity in which the ultimate impact of actions, good or bad, is always upon the one who performs these actions (see 2:9, 272; 3:69; 6:123; 8:60; 9:34–35; 10:23; 29:6).

19 Here, seeing is used as a metaphor for belief and blindness for disbelief (Aj, Ṭ, Q), as in 40:58: And the blind and the seer are not equal; nor are those who believe and perform righteous deeds and the evildoer. Little do you reflect (cf. 6:50; 11:24; 13:16). This juxtaposition can also be seen as a metaphor for knowledge and ignorance, as in 39:9: Are those who know and those who do not know equal? Some also read the present verse as a contrast between God and the idols (Aj), since the Quran often notes the powerlessness and lifelessness of the idols (e.g., 7:194; 22:73; 34:22).

20–21 The contrasts between the darkness and the light and the living and the dead (v. 22) are combined in 6:122: Is he who was dead, and to whom We give life, making for him a light by which to walk among mankind, like unto one who is in darkness from which he does not emerge? Combining vv. 19–22, Ibn Kathīr writes, "The believer sees and hears, and walks in the light upon a straight path in this world and the Hereafter, so that he comes to settle in Gardens wherein are shade and springs. The disbeliever is blind and deaf, walking in darkness from which he cannot escape; he is lost in his misguidance in this world and the Hereafter, so that he ends up amidst scorching wind and boiling liquid, and the shadow of black smoke, neither cool nor refreshing [56:42–44]."

22 This verse can be seen as a response to the rhetorical questions posed in 6:122 and 39:22; that is, not equal are the living, those whose hearts are alive with faith in God, and the dead, those whose hearts are dead because they are covered with disbelief (Ṭ). That God causes whomsoever He will to hear, but thou canst not cause those in graves to hear is related to the first part of the verse in that those whose hearts are alive are those who hear the truth of the revelation, while those whose hearts are buried in the grave of ignorance cannot hear it (Ṭ). God's causing them to hear thus refers to His guiding them and supporting them (Aj); see also 30:52–53.

hear. (23) Thou art naught but a warner. (24) Truly We have sent thee with the truth as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner. And there has been no community but that a warner has passed among them. (25) If they deny thee, those before them also denied: their messengers brought them clear proofs, scriptures, and the luminous Book. (26) Then I seized those who disbelieved. How, then, was the change I wrought! (27) Hast thou not considered that God sends down water from the sky, wherewith We bring forth fruits of diverse colors? And in the mountains are streaks of white and red, of diverse hues, and others pitch-black. (28) And of mankind, beasts, and cattle there are, likewise, those of 23 In this context, that the Prophet is naught but a warner (cf. 11:12; 13:7; 27:92; 34:46; 38:65; 79:45) indicates that it is not his function to cause those in graves to hear; it is only his function to deliver the message, so that those who believe or may come to believe will hear, as in 30:53: Thou makest none to hear, save those who believe in Our signs and are submitters. The Prophet is thus enjoined to leave their belief or disbelief in the Hands of God. In this way, this verse is an extension of v. 8: So let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them (Ṭ).

24 The Prophet is also referred to as both a bearer of glad tidings and a warner in 5:19; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 25:56; 33:45; 34:28; 48:8; in other verses these functions are attributed to all prophets (2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56). According to Islamic belief, every human collectivity has been sent a warner (cf. 16:36) or messenger (10:47) and will thus be held accountable for heeding or ignoring the warning; see 67:9c.

25 Cf. 3:184. Regarding the denial of previous prophets, see 35:4c. That their messengers brought them clear proofs (cf. 7:101; 10:13; 14:9; 30:9; 40:83) refers to the miracles that bear witness to the truth of their prophetic missions (Q, Z) as well as the revealed laws (Q). Scriptures translates zubur, which is the plural of zabūr; a word employed elsewhere to designate the revelation sent to David, hence "the Psalms" (see 4:163; 17:56; 21:105). Zubur, however, is used more broadly in the Quran to denote various different revelations (see 3:184; 16:44; 23:53; 26:196; 54:43).

26 God's seizing the disbelievers indicates that they are being punished, as in 40:5: they disputed by means of falsehood in order to reject the truth thereby; so I seized them. How, then, was My Retribution! (cf. 13:32). How, then, was the change I wrought! (cf. 22:44; 34:45; 67:18) could also be rendered, "How was the nature of My reproach!" Both translations imply "How severe was My Punishment!" (Q), indicating that the punishment that befalls the disbelievers of this generation will be as severe as the punishment that befell earlier ones.

27 Hast thou not considered is addressed to the Prophet, but can also be read as a direct address to the reader or listener (R). It refers to seeing with the vision of the heart (Q), which enables one to know the true nature of things. In this vein, Ibn ʿAjībah relates the fruits of diverse colors to different forms of knowledge, and the different streaks upon mountains to the various paths by which knowledge is obtained; regarding the many signs in God's sending down water from the sky, see 6:99c.

28 This verse refers to the differentiation between races and ethnicities, as in 30:22, And among His signs are the creation of the heavens and the earth and the variation in your tongues and colors (IK), but it can also be understood as a reference to the manner in which the inner states of human beings differ (Q). Those . . . who know is understood by many to mean those who know that God is Powerful over all things (IK, Q, Ṭ). In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, "The one among you who has the most knowledge of God is the one whose fear of Him is most intense" (Z). That only those among His servants who know fear God is understood to indicate the superiority of knowledge over worship (R), as in a famous ḥadīth: "Whosoever sets upon a path to diverse colors. [Yet] only those among His servants who know fear God. Truly God is Mighty, Forgiving. (29) Truly those who recite the Book of God, perform the prayer, and spend from that which We have provided them secretly and openly hope for a commerce that will never perish, (30) that He may pay them their rewards in full and increase them from His Bounty. Truly He is Forgiving, Thankful. (31) And that which We have revealed unto thee from the Book is the truth, confirming what came before it. Verily God is of His servants Aware, Seeing. (32) Then We bequeathed the Book to those of Our servants whom We had chosen. Among them are those who wrong themselves, those who take a middle course, and those who are foremost in good deeds, by God's Leave.

seek knowledge, God will set him upon a path to the Garden. Verily the angels lower their wings being content with the one who seeks knowledge. And whosoever is in the heavens and on earth, even the fish in the sea, ask forgiveness for the person of knowledge. The superiority of one who has knowledge over the worshipper is as that of the moon over all other heavenly bodies. Those who have knowledge are the heirs of the prophets, for the prophets did not leave behind dīnārs and dirhams; they only left behind knowledge; and whosoever receives it, receives an abundance of good fortune." Yet the manner in which this verse is followed by the mention of the obligatory acts of worship demonstrates that such knowledge must be combined with worship and manifest in one's actions in order to be of benefit (Bḍ).

29 Both the obligatory and supererogatory manifestations of the three religious practices mentioned here are extolled (Q). The mention of the three together may be understood as an allusion to worshipping with one's tongue, worshipping with one's body, and expending one's wealth, while the reference to fearing God in the previous verse alludes to remembering God with one's heart (R). Regarding the recitation of the Quran, see 73:3–4c; 47:16c. In this context, some see those who recite the Book of God as a reference to those who recite the Quran constantly (Aj). The injunction to spend of one's wealth secretly and openly (cf. 2:274; 13:22; 14:31; 16:75) indicates that one should give both openly, so that others are encouraged to do the same, and privately, so as not to be boastful. That those who perform these actions hope for a commerce that will never perish (cf. 61:10) alludes to their sincerity in seeking only the Face of God (R), as they do not perform such deeds to be seen of men (2:264; 4:38, 142; 8:47).

30 Cf. 3:57; 4:152, 173. God will reward the devout believers mentioned in the previous verse for what they have done and increase it to an extent that they could not fathom (IK). That God is Forgiving, Thankful (cf. 35:34; 42:23) indicates that He forgives bad deeds and accepts good deeds.

31 From the Book refers either to the guidance and clarifications from the Quran or else to the Quran itself being from the Preserved Tablet (85:22; R), which is held to be the source of all revelation. The Book confirms what came before it, so that there is no difference between it and previous revelations (R), as in 41:43, which addresses the Prophet, saying, Naught has been said unto thee save that which has been said unto the messengers before thee. From this perspective, the Quran cannot but confirm previous scriptures; see 2:41, 89, 91, 97, 101; 3:3, 81; 5:48; 6:92; 10:37; 46:30.

32 The Book refers to the Quran (IK, JJ) or to all revealed books (Ṭ). With regard to the latter, that God has bequeathed it means that God has bequeathed the truth conveyed by all revelations to those who follow the Quran, as these truths are preserved in this revelation. Some see God's having bequeathed it after having revealed it (in v. 31) as an allusion to the fact that there is no revelation after the Quran (R, Ṭs). The chosen to whom the Book is bequeathed refers to the prophets (Ṭb, Ṭs); or the people of knowledge, as in a famous ḥadīth, "The people of knowledge are the heirs of the prophets" (Ṭs, Ṭū); or the whole of the Muslim community (Ṭb, Ṭs). In this last sense, it would be similar to 40:53, which says of the Jews, And indeed We gave Moses guidance, and We bequeathed the Book to the Children of Israel (Ṭb). According to the Shiite tradition, Our servants whom We had chosen refers to descendants of the Prophet (Ṭb) or to the Imams specifically (Qm). The fifth and sixth Shiite Imams are reported to have said of this verse, "This refers specifically to us" (Ṭs). From this perspective, those who wrong themselves refers to those of Our servants who do not follow the Imams (Qm).

That is the great bounty: (33) Gardens of Eden which they will enter, adorned therein with bracelets of gold and pearls; and their garments therein will be of silk. (34) And they will say, "Praise be to God, Who has dispelled grief from us.

From a Sunni perspective, the three types of people listed here refer to three categories of believers (R): those who wrong themselves are believers who are careless, omitting some obligatory actions and committing some that are forbidden; those who take a middle course are those who perform the obligatory actions and avoid what is forbidden, but neglect praiseworthy deeds and do some things that are disliked by God; and those who are foremost in good deeds are those who perform both obligatory and praiseworthy acts and avoid both what is forbidden and what is disliked (IK). Those who wrong themselves are thus forgiven, while those who take a middle course are given an easy reckoning, and the foremost enter the Garden with no reckoning (IK, Q, Ṭ). From this perspective, the Book has been bequeathed to all three groups, and even those who believe yet wrong themselves will be forgiven (IK, Q). Others understand those who wrong themselves as a reference to disbelievers or hypocrites, those who take a middle course as a reference to believers who may still be disobedient, and the foremost as a reference to those who are truly reverent (Q, Ṭ). In this vein, they liken those who wrong themselves to the companions of the left (56:9), those who take a middle course to the companions of the right (56:8), and those who are foremost in good deeds to the foremost (56:10; Q, Ṭ). Those who wrong themselves are then said to be in the Fire, while the two categories of believers attain Paradise (Ṭ). Al-Tustarī is reported to have related these three categories to the attainment of knowledge: "The one who is foremost is the one who is learned; the one who takes a middle course is the one who is learning; and the one who wrongs himself is the one who is ignorant" (ST). Al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī is also reported to have said, "The foremost are those whose good deeds outweigh their misdeeds; those who take a middle course are those whose good deeds and misdeeds balance each other; and the wrongdoers are those whose misdeeds outweigh their good deeds" (ST).

That is the great bounty may refer to the Gardens of Eden (v. 33), but is also understood as a reference to the bequest of the Book (JJ) or to the fact that being foremost in good deeds is a bounty that God may bestow upon those who take a middle course and those who wrong themselves (Ṭ), as it is a degree only attained by God's Leave.

That the Book is bequeathed to all of God's servants may not necessarily introduce the complication that all of the commentators are trying to address here, namely, "How it is that the Book can be bequeathed to those who wrong themselves"? From an Islamic perspective, revelation can be understood as bequeathed to all human beings, even the disbelievers, in that, as the Prophet has said, "The Quran is a proof, either for you or against you," since its truth shows each human being his or her true nature (see 36:7c; 40:6c). This verse could then be understood as addressing the three tendencies within human beings: those who wrong themselves are those who experience God's Anger; those who take a middle course are those who at times are astray; and the foremost are those who follow a straight path. The way they are presented here, from lowest to highest, could also be understood as an allusion to the manner in which the bequest of the Book can bring one from the lowest state, in which one wrongs oneself, to the highest state, in which one is among the foremost, by God's Leave, which is the great bounty.

33 Other references to the raiment and ornaments of the inhabitants of the Garden include 18:31; 22:23; 44:53; 76:21. Regarding bracelets of gold, see 18:31c. The inhabitants of the Garden are also said to be adorned with silvern bracelets

Truly our Lord is Forgiving, Thankful, (35) Who, of His Bounty, has caused us to dwell in the Abode of Everlasting Life, wherein no weariness shall touch us, nor fatigue befall us." (36) As for those who disbelieve, theirs shall be the Fire of Hell. They will neither be done away with so as to die; nor will aught of its punishment be lightened for them. Thus do We requite every disbeliever. (37) They will cry out therein, "Our Lord! Remove us, that we may work righteousness other than that which we used to do." "Did We not give you long life, enough for whosoever would reflect to reflect therein? And the warner came unto you, (76:21). Elsewhere, their garments are said to be of fine silk and rich brocade (18:31; 76:21).

34 Those who praise God for removing their sorrow are either all those who enter Paradise or those who wrong themselves (v. 32) when the latter is understood to mean those believers who nonetheless remained somewhat disobedient to God. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "As for one who wrongs himself, he will be afflicted by distress and sorrow in that state, and that is [the meaning of] Praise be to God, Who has dispelled grief from us" (Ṭ). In either interpretation, the grief that God dispels is the sorrow that arises from the fear of the Fire (Ṭ), the anxieties of this life and the next (IK, Z), or Satan and his whispering (Z). It may also refer to death (Ṭ), as they will not die again. Hence the Quran says of those who attain Paradise, No fear shall come upon them; nor shall they grieve (2:38, 62, 112, 262, 274, 277; 3:170; 5:69; 6:48; 7:35; 10:62; 46:13).

35 Of His Bounty is understood by some as an allusion to the fact that entry into the Garden is entirely in God's Hands, as when the Prophet said to some of his Companions, "None will enter Paradise by virtue of good deeds, not even me, unless God encompasses me with Mercy and Bounty" (IK). In Arabic, weariness (naṣab) and fatigue (lughūb) are practically synonymous. Here, however, many commentators distinguish between them by saying that lughūb is fatigue and weariness, while naṣab is the toil and work that brings it about (R). Others say that these synonyms are used to refer to different types of "weariness," naṣab being weariness of the body and lughūb being that of the soul or spirit (IK).

36 They will neither be done away with so as to die is similar to 20:74: Verily, whosoever comes unto his Lord guilty, surely his shall be Hell, wherein he neither dies nor lives. The punishment is not lightened after the disbelievers have been sentenced, because they had already been granted respite and thus had many opportunities to repent during the life of this world; see 2:162 and 3:88: The punishment shall not be lightened for them; nor shall they be granted respite (cf. 2:86; 16:85; 43:74–75). Rather, God promises, Every time it abates, We shall increase for them a blazing flame (17:97; cf. 78:30).

37 Having witnessed the realities of Resurrection and Judgment that they had denied (see 32:12; 19:38) and been made to admit their sin (67:11; cf. 40:11), the disbelievers ask for a reprieve, claiming that they will now work righteousness, or as they say in 6:27: Would that we were sent back! Then we would not deny the signs of our Lord, but we would be among the believers! (cf. 7:53; 26:102). Yet the warners who had been sent to them and the opportunity to reflect throughout their life constitute such a reprieve; thus 4:18 says, And repentance is not accepted from those who do evil deeds till, when death confronts one of them, he says, "Truly now I repent," nor from those who die as disbelievers. For those We have prepared a painful punishment. In 23:100 it is said of their requests to be sent back and of their repentance, Nay, indeed these are words that he speaks. God thus denies all such requests, because even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28). Thus the wrongdoers shall have no helpers (cf. 2:270; 3:192; 5:72; 22:71), because they turned away from God and the help that He sent them during their life in this world. For the manner in which this and other verses can be seen as part so taste [the punishment]! The wrongdoers shall have no helpers." (38) Truly God knows the unseen of the heavens and the earth. Truly He knows what lies within breasts. (39) He it is Who appointed you vicegerents upon the earth. So whosoever disbelieves, his disbelief is to his detriment. The disbelief of the disbelievers increases them with their Lord in naught but odium. And the disbelief of the disbelievers increases them in naught but loss. (40) Say, "Have you considered your partners upon whom you call apart from God? Show me what they have created of the earth. Do they have a share in the heavens, or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it?" Nay, the wrongdoers promise one another naught but delusion. (41) Truly God maintains

38 Elsewhere God is said to be Knower of the Unseen and the seen (6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 32:6; 39:46; 59:22; 62:8; 64:18), but this is one of only two verses to assert that God knows the unseen of the heavens and the earth (cf. 49:18). That God knows what lies within breasts is repeated in 3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 31:23; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13. This warning can be understood as a reminder not to break the covenant either outwardly or intentionally or secretly, for God always knows and holds one accountable for what lies within breasts (R, in commentary on 5:7).

39 Just as God created Adam as a vicegerent upon the earth (2:30), so too has God appointed all human beings as vicegerents upon the earth (cf. 6:165). Thus humanity is asked, Hast thou not considered that God has made whatsoever is on the earth subservient unto you (22:65; cf. 14:33; 31:20; 45:13); see 2:30c; 6:165c. That a person's disbelief is to his detriment (cf. 30:44) relates to v. 18 (None shall bear the burden of another), since no one can carry the burden of another's disbelief. It also relates to the role of human beings as vicegerents, for insofar as any disbelief is concerned, they reject their true nature and responsibility toward God. Their disbelief increases them in naught but odium means that the longer they persist in their disbelief, the more they will lose on the Day of Resurrection (IK). For other passages where the call of God's messengers increases disbelievers in opposition and other negative reactions, see, for example, 9:125; 17:41; 25:60; 35:42; 71:6.

40 This is one of several verses that challenge the idolaters to bring proof that their idols do indeed have the powers attributed to them. Elsewhere, the Prophet is told to say, Bring me your proof! (21:24). This verse and several others (46:4; 10:34; 21:24) address the inability of their "gods" to create; 25:3 denies all of the powers attributed to them: But they have taken gods apart from Him, who create naught and are themselves created, and who have no power over what harm or benefit may come to themselves, and who have no power over death, or life, or resurrection. The question Do they have a share in the heavens? (cf. 46:4) is connected to the preceding mention of your partners, meaning, "Do the idols they worship have a share in God's Powers?" Alternately, it is connected to what follows, meaning, "Do the idolaters have some access to the heavens by which they perceive these things they claim?" (R). A book means a revelation; so the question asks, "Were they given a revelation that tells them of the things they claim?" (R). This second interpretation could thus allude to their having no way to substantiate their claims through intellect (ʿaql) or transmission (naql; R). Their claims are thus based upon nothing more than their promises to one another, which, having no foundation, are naught but delusion. Did We give them a book? is similar to challenges posed to the idolaters in several verses, such as 43:21: Or did We give them a book beforehand to which they hold fast? (cf. 34:44; 46:4; 68:37–38); see 46:4c.

41 Similar to 22:65, And He maintains the sky lest it fall upon the earth, save by His Leave, this the heavens and the earth, lest they fall apart. And were they to fall apart, none would maintain them after Him. Truly He is Clement, Forgiving. (42) And they swore by God their most solemn oaths that, were a warner to come unto them, they would be more rightly guided than any of the communities. Yet when a warner came unto them, it increased them in naught but aversion, (43) waxing arrogant upon the earth and plotting evil; yet evil plotting besets none but those who plot. So do they await aught but the wont of those of old? Thou wilt find no alteration in the wont of God, and thou wilt find no change in the wont verse confirms that none but God maintains the created order, since the sky and the earth stand fast by His Command (30:25). In this context, that God is Clement, Forgiving (cf. 17:44) alludes to God continuing to uphold the heavens even when the disbelievers declare that others uphold them, thus giving them time to repent (IK, R, Ṭ).

42 Whereas the previous verses (vv. 38–41) discussed the disbelievers' denial of Divine Oneness (tawḥīd), this verse addresses their denial of the Prophet. Before the Prophet had been sent to them, they denied only tawḥīd; afterwards they denied the Prophet and hence the revelation as well (R). It thus increased the idolaters in naught but aversion. Similarly, the disbelievers "increase in aversion" when the Prophet calls them to prostrate before the Compassionate (25:60), and when God expounds His signs in the Quran that they might reflect (17:41); see also 17:60, 82; 71:6, 24. According to some accounts, the Makkans had criticized the Jews, claiming that, were a messenger to be sent to them (the Makkans), they would not deny the messenger in the same way that previous communities had denied their messengers (R), as in 6:157: Or lest you should say, "If the Book had been sent down upon us, we would surely have been better guided than they." Now there has come unto you a clear proof from your Lord, a guidance and a mercy. So who does greater wrong than one who denies the signs of God and turns away from them?

43 Waxing arrogant translates istikbāran, which can be also be read in relation to the previous verse to mean, "It increased them in naught but aversion and arrogance," or "aversion due to arrogance" (R, Z). The verse could also be read to mean, "It increased them in naught but delusion, waxing arrogant upon the earth, and evil plotting" (Z). According to some, waxing arrogant refers to their preventing the weaker ones among them from following the Prophet, while plotting evil refers to their polytheism (Ṭ). Their plotting evil (or evil plotting) could also mean their plotting against the Prophet (Z). That evil plotting besets none but those who plot evokes the Quranic theme of moral reflexivity, as in 10:23: O mankind! Your tyranny is only against yourselves; see 35:18c.

This is one of several verses that reference the wonts or customs of previous peoples (see 3:137; 4:26; 8:38; 15:13; 17:77; 18:55). In this context, the wont of those of old is understood to mean God's wont concerning them (Bḍ, R, Ṭ), thus the forms of punishment with which God afflicted them (Q). That there is no change in the wont of God (cf. 33:62; 48:23) can be understood as a reference to the permanence of the laws and principles God established for creation. In this context, it indicates both that God always allows the plotting of the disbelievers to close in upon them and that the outcome is something decreed, which none can avert (70:2; R). It also has a note of irony, as if to say to those who persist in disbelief, "You want to follow the wont of those of old? Then God will bring a wont in which there is no alteration or change" (R), meaning that their end will be like the end of those before them. The absence of alteration in God's wont can be seen as a reference to the fact that God will always recompense the disbelievers with their just deserts, while the absence of change can be seen as a reference to the fact that none can avert God's Punishment by making the recompense due for one fall upon another (Bḍ, Q, R); for the wont of God, see also 3:137c; 33:38, 62; 40:85; 48:23.

of God. (44) Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end, though they were greater than they in strength? Naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God. Truly He is Knowing, Powerful. (45) Were God to take mankind to task for that which they have earned, He would not leave a single creature upon the surface of the earth. But He grants them reprieve till a term appointed. And when their term comes, truly God sees His servants.

44 The injunction to observe how those before them fared in the end, which is here directly connected to the mention of the wont of those of old in v. 43, is repeated several times in the Quran (12:109; 30:9, 42; 40:21, 82; 47:10). The Quran frequently mentions the fate of the guilty, the corrupt, the wrongdoers, and those who denied God's messengers as an admonition to the disbelievers (see 3:137; 6:11; 7:84, 86, 103; 10:39, 73; 16:36; 27:14, 69; 37:73; 43:25). Those before them is thus understood as a reference to previous tribes and peoples who were destroyed despite being mightier than those who opposed the Prophet (see also 40:21, 82). For more on the Quranic discussion of journeying upon the earth and the spiritual and moral edification to be derived from it, see 30:9c.

In this context, that naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God (cf. 8:59; 9:2–3; 11:20; 24:57; 29:22; 42:31; 46:32; 72:12) reaffirms that those of old could not in any way escape the punishment merited by their aversion, arrogance, and plotting, despite their great material and physical strength (R); thus the disbelievers to whom these verses are addressed will also not be able to avert the punishment that is their due, as in 6:134: Indeed, that which you are promised shall come to pass, and you cannot thwart [it].

45 Were God to give human beings the recompense for their acts of disobedience immediately, rather than granting them respite (Ṭū), no creature would remain upon the face of the earth (Ṭū). The reference to a single creature can be understood to mean only human beings and jinn (Q) or only human beings (Bḍ, Q). But it most likely refers to all living creatures, who will suffer from the sins of human beings, as they did in the flood of Noah (Q), though others say the reference to a term appointed indicates that this applies only to human beings. It is proposed that one of the ways in which God would not leave a single creature upon the surface of the earth is by withholding the rain, which would destroy all living things (Q, Z). The elimination of the creatures of the earth can also be seen as part of the punishment for human beings, since creatures are a means of provision (R). Their elimination from the surface of the earth can also indicate the severity of the punishment and point to the fact that the lives of human beings are integrated with those of the creatures around them, so that the punishment they bring upon themselves cannot but affect other forms of life (R).

In this context, a term appointed (cf. 6:60; 7:34; 10:49; 14:10; 16:61; 39:5, 42; 71:4) indicates the Day of Resurrection (Q, Z). All individuals and communities (7:34; 10:49) as well as all created phenomena (see 13:2; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5; 46:3) have a term appointed, meaning a final end that has been determined or "measured out" by God. That people are granted reprieve until a term appointed points to God's Mercy, but also warns that one has only this life to repent and perform good deeds; otherwise when the punishment comes, those who did wrong will say, "Our Lord! Grant us reprieve for a term nigh, that we might respond to Thy call and follow the messengers" (14:44). The respite granted to all in this life may give some the opportunity to repent, but 3:178 warns, Let not those who disbelieve suppose that the respite We grant them is good for them. We only grant them respite that they may increase in sin, and theirs shall be a humiliating punishment (see also 11:8; 14:42). That God sees His servants when the appointed term has come alludes to His requiting them for all that they have done (Aj, Bḍ).

Yā Sīn

Yā Sīn

There is consensus among all scholars that Yā Sīn is a Makkan sūrah from the early part of the middle Makkan period. Some maintain that the whole of the sūrah is Makkan, though many commentators believe that v. 12 is from the Madinan period. The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the Arabic letters yā' and sīn in the opening verse. Some also refer to it as "The Heart of the Quran," after a well-known ḥadīth: "Everything has a heart, and the heart of the Quran is Yā Sīn. Whosoever recites Yā Sīn, God records for him the recitation of the Quran ten times for his recitation of it" (Āl, Q).

Seen as the heart of the Quran, this sūrah plays a very important role in traditional Islamic piety. Many Muslims recite Yā Sīn regularly as part of their supererogatory devotions, and it is often the only sūrah longer than a page or so that Muslims have memorized in full. A famous ḥadīth says, "Recite Yā Sīn over your dead" (Q, Sy). It is thus recited for those who are close to death, those who have just died, and at the graves of loved ones. It is also recited for those who are sick, for another ḥadīth states, "Verily in the Quran there is a sūrah that intercedes through its recitation and forgives through its being heard—indeed, that is Sūrah Yā Sīn" (Āl, Q). Yā Sīn is also recited by many Muslims after the performance of the obligatory prayers in the morning and the evening. Regarding the latter, another report, sometimes recorded as a ḥadīth, states, "Whosoever recites Sūrah Yā Sīn at night, desiring the Face of God, is forgiven during that night" (IK, Q). Although many believe that the exhortation to recite Yā Sīn in the morning is a ḥadīth, it most likely derives from a saying attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās: "Whosoever recites Yā Sīn when he awakens is given ease for his day until the evening comes. And whosoever reads it in the midst of the night is given ease for his night until he awakens" (Q).

Several scholars maintain that Yā Sīn is the heart of the Quran because it addresses its central teachings regarding God, prophethood, and the Hereafter. The sūrah begins with an address to the Prophet that clarifies both his mission and the nature of revelation (vv. 1–12) followed by a parable regarding those who reject prophets (vv. 13–30) that segues into a discussion of Resurrection and the signs of it in the natural world (vv. 31–44). Responses to various objections common to the disbelievers and the consequences of them (vv. 45–52) then lead into a discussion of the disparate ends of the disbelievers and the believers (vv. 53–68), which concludes with another reflection on the nature of Muhammad's prophethood (vv. 69–70). The final section returns to a discussion of the signs in the created order that serve to inform one of God's creative Power and ability to resurrect (vv. 71–81) and concludes with an affirmation of God's Omnipotence (vv. 82–83).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Yā. Sīn. (2) By the Wise Quran, (3) truly thou art among the message bearers, (4) upon a straight path, (5) a revelation of the Mighty, the Merciful, (6) that thou mayest warn a people whose fathers were not warned; so they were

1 The Arabic letters yāʾ and sīn are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine *sūrah*s and whose meaning is considered by most to be known only to God; see 2:1c. Some allow that yāʾ sīn could be an abbreviation meaning "O human being" (Q). In this interpretation, the yāʾ is the vocative "O," used in many Quranic verses, and the sīn is an abbreviation for unsayn, the diminutive of insān ("human being"). In this context, the diminutive "O little human being" is a term of endearment interpreted as God's address to the Prophet Muhammad. Others say that Yā Sīn is a name given to the Prophet by God whose exact meaning is unknown (Q). For this reason it is sometimes used in the Islamic world as the name for a male. ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, "I heard the Messenger of God say, 'Verily God has named me by seven names in the Quran: Muhammad [3:144; 33:40; 47:2; 48:29], Aḥmad [61:6], Ṭā Hā [20:1], Yā Sīn [36:1], thou enwrapped [al-Muzzammil; 73:1], thou who art covered [al-Muddaththir; 74:1], and servant of God [ʿAbd Allāh; 72:19]'" (IA, Q). Other commentators take Yā Sīn to be a name of the Quran itself, while al-Qushayrī identifies it with the Day of the Covenant (yawm al-mīthāq), when God made a covenant with all the children of Adam (see 7:172c).

2 Ḥakīm, here translated Wise, can also mean "determined" or "made firm" (muḥkam), as in 11:1, where the Quran is described as a Book whose signs have been determined (uḥkimat; Q). According to Ibn Kathīr, its being determined (muḥkam) indicates that falsehood comes not upon it from before it or from behind it (41:42). Ḥakīm could also mean something that makes firm (muḥkim), indicating that the Quran teaches the truth. According to Ibn Kathīr, the use of ḥakīm here alludes to the Quran as a revealed book. The Quran is also described as wise in 10:1; 31:2; 43:3–4.

3–4 These verses affirm the Prophet's mission, thus supporting the interpretations that see Yā Sīn as a reference to the Prophet himself. For straight path, see 1:6c.

5 Revelation can be read as the object of an implied verb, meaning, "We revealed it as a revelation," in which case it refers back to the Wise Quran, or it can be read in the nominative, meaning, "It is a revelation." Most commentators say revelation in either reading refers to the Quran, although some say it refers to the Prophet (Q, R), in which case "it" in the elided phrase would be rendered "he." Both interpretations are possible, as the Prophet is also said to be sent down, as in 65:10–11: God has certainly sent down unto you a reminder: a Messenger reciting unto you the clear heedless. (7) The Word has indeed come due for most of them, for they do not believe. (8) Truly We have put shackles upon their necks, and they are up to their chins, so that they are forced up. (9) And We placed a barrier before them signs of God. The juxtaposition of Mighty and Merciful here and in other verses (esp. throughout Sūrah 26) is seen as an allusion to God being both just and merciful, vengeful toward those who oppose Him and merciful toward those who obey Him.

6 This verse is similar to 32:3, which states that the Quran was sent so that the Prophet might warn a people to whom no warner has come before. Regarding the absence of a previous Arabic revelation, 34:44 says of the Arabs, We have not given them any books that they study; nor have We sent them a warner before. Although the Arabs had been sent messengers before in the intervening generations from the time of Ishmael, who was both a prophet and the progenitor of the Arabs (as Isaac was of the Jews), the pure monotheism of Abraham had become lost, and from the point of view of the Arabs the religion of their fathers was pagan. Read in connection to the following verse and the context of the entire Quran, there is an ominous tone to this verse, for as other verses state, Thy Lord never destroys towns until He sends a messenger to their mother city to recite unto them Our signs (28:59), and Never did We destroy a town save that it had warners (26:208); see also 6:131; 10:13. Some propose that the verse should be read, "of that of which their fathers were warned."

7 The Word has indeed come due for most of them translates ḥaqqa al-qawlu ʿalā aktharihim; which could also be translated, "the Word has indeed proved true against most of them." The Word most likely refers to the Word of punishment (39:71; see also 22:18); it indicates that they will be in Hell, for as 40:6 states, Likewise did the Word of thy Lord come due for those who disbelieve, that they are the inhabitants of the Fire. This is because they do not believe in the warning referred to in v. 6, in the Wise Quran (v. 2), or that the Prophet Muḥammad is among the message bearers (v. 3). The Word that comes due or proves true is seen by some as God's threat in 32:13: But the Word from Me comes due: "I shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together!" Similar threats occur in 11:119 and 38:84–5. The Word could also be a reference to the Quran itself, for it is thought that when one turns away from revelation, it proves one's true nature. In this regard, a famous ḥadīth states, "The Quran is a proof, either for you or against you."

8 The disbelievers' hands are bound to their necks with shackles, which translates aghlāl, specifically indicating iron shackles that bind the hands in cuffs that are attached to an iron ring around the neck. They is thus taken by most to indicate the hands that are bound to their necks (Q, Ṭs) and is seen as related to 17:29, And let not thine hand be shackled to thy neck (IK, Q, Ṭ), which is a warning against miserliness. The binding of their hands to their necks is taken by some to indicate their state on the Day of Resurrection (Ṭs) or in the Hereafter, as in 40:71: They will be dragged, with shackles and chains around their necks (Q). Others say it refers to the state of the idolaters in this life, meaning that those who turn away from the Prophet's call are like those whose hands are shackled to their necks so that they cannot extend them toward what is good (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs). In this interpretation their chins being forced up alludes to their arrogance in the face of the truth (Q).

9 This verse is interpreted to mean, "We have placed a barrier between them (the disbelievers) and the truth" or "We have blinded them to the truth" (IK), in light of 10:96–97: Truly those for whom the Word of thy Lord has come due will not believe, though every sign should come unto them, till they see the painful punishment. Understood in this way, it means that they cannot benefit from guidance, no matter what the Prophet does. Thus God counsels the Prophet in v. 76, Let not their speech grieve thee. Some say the barrier before them refers to their being deluded in the life of this world and the barrier behind them refers to their denying the life of the Hereafter (Q). Others maintain that vv. 8–9 refer to a specific incident in which a leader from the tribe of Quraysh saw the Prophet praying and went to smash his head with a rock; as he moved his hand forward to cast the rock, his hand returned to his neck and the rock was stuck in it (Q, Ṭs). Then another man took the rock with the same purpose, but when he and a barrier behind them and veiled them; so they see not. (10) It is the same for them whether thou warnest them or warnest them not; they do not believe. (11) Thou only warnest whosoever follows the Reminder and fears the Compassionate unseen. So give such a one glad tidings of forgiveness and a generous reward. (12) Truly We give life to the dead and record that which they have sent forth and that which they have left behind. And We have counted all things in did so, he could hear the Prophet but not see him. When a third man went to smash the Prophet's head, he saw before him a tremendous camel that was about to swallow him (Q). These particular examples of the incident to which this verse may refer are not, however, taken to contravene the more general implications, but rather to be manifestations of particular forms of denial and disbelief represented by the acts described.

10–11 Cf. 2:6. The last phrase of v. 10 could also be read, "they will not believe." For similar verses where warnings and guidance are of no avail to disbelievers, see 7:193; 26:136; 63:6. These verses remind the Prophet that he cannot guide those whom God has not guided and should simply leave them to God: Truly God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will; so let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them. Truly God knows that which they do (35:8). The Reminder is a reference to the Quran itself (IK, Q, R, Ṭ); for the Quran as Reminder, see 36:69c. Fears the Compassionate unseen (cf. 50:33) can be interpreted as a reference to worshipping God while God remains unseen or to worshipping God in seclusion (Q, Ṭs). A generous reward here means Paradise or the Garden. See also 67:12c.

12 This verse follows upon the counsel to the Prophet to deliver the warning and leave the disbelievers to their own devices, since the price of their wrongdoing will come due upon the Resurrection. We give life to the dead can be seen as a reference to the Resurrection; to God's bringing the earth back to life, as in 57:17: Know that God revives the earth after its death (IK); to bringing people from idolatry to faith (Z); or to the revivification, through knowledge and truth, of hearts made dead through heedlessness and ignorance (Aj, IK). That which they have sent forth refers to the deeds that will testify for or against them in the Hereafter; see 5:80; 75:13c; 82:5c. Here, that which they have left behind literally means "their footsteps" or "their traces." It is said to refer to one of the tribes of Madinah, the Banū Salamah, who were settled far from the Prophet's mosque and desired to relocate closer to it. This verse was then revealed. So the Prophet said to them, "Your footprints are recorded [i.e., you receive reward for walking to the mosque]. Why then do you want to move?" (IK, Q, Ṭ, W). More broadly, it is understood as a reference to the traces of good deeds that one leaves behind (Aj, Ṭ). As a well-known ḥadīth states, "When the son of Adam dies, all his deeds come to an end except three: knowledge that is beneficial, a righteous child who prays for him, or ongoing charity that he leaves behind" (IK); see 75:13c. And We have counted all things in a clear registry (imām) is taken by some to allude to the inscription of all things from the beginning of time to its end on the Preserved Tablet (85:22; Aj, Ṭb, Ṭs), which is the imām ("leader") of all other books (Aj) and which is said to comprise all of God's Decrees (Ṭb, Ṭs); for the inscription of God's Decrees, see 68:1c. Others say imām refers to the book or "registry" in which all human actions are recorded (Aj, IK, Q, Ṭs); see 17:71c; 18:49c. This is also one of the central verses cited by Shiite theologians as Quranic support for the Shiite understanding of Divinely ordained leadership in the form of the imamate after the death of the Prophet. In this vein al-Qummī relates a saying from ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib: "I, by God, am the clear imām; I clarify truth from falsehood. I inherited it from the Messenger of God" (Qm, Ṭb). Shiite sources also relate that the Prophet said regarding ʿAlī, "He is the Imam in whom God records the knowledge of all things" (Qm, Ṭb).

a clear registry. (13) And set forth for them as a parable the people of the town, when the message bearers came unto it. (14) When We sent two unto them, they denied them. So We strengthened them with a third, and they said, "Verily, we have been sent unto you!" (15) They said, "You are but human beings like us, and the Compassionate has not sent down anything. You are but lying." (16) They said, "Our Lord knows. Verily we have indeed been sent unto you! (17) And naught is incumbent upon us save the clear proclamation." (18) They said, "Truly we augur ill of you. If you cease not, we shall certainly stone you, and a painful punishment will certainly befall you from us." (19) They said, "Your auguring ill is upon yourselves though you have been reminded. Nay, you are a prodigal peo-

13–14 The Prophet is here commanded to provide the Quraysh with an example of the fate that befell those who treated previous message bearers as they were treating him. The first phrase of v. 13 could also be rendered, "Set forth for them a parable, the people of the town." Most identify the town as Antioch (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), though this identification cannot be verified (IK). Most commentators view the message bearers (mursalīn, rather than rusul, "messengers") as apostles sent to the town by Jesus. In this interpretation, that God is said to have sent them indicates that Jesus was commanded by God to send them (Q, Ṭs). After the first two were sent, the people of the town beat and imprisoned them (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs). Some say this punishment was ordered by the king (Aj), after which a third message bearer, whom some identify as Jonas, was sent.

According to another opinion, the message bearers are prophets (Aj, Ṭs) rather than apostles sent by a prophet. This interpretation seems more likely, as the Prophet Muhammad is referred to as a mursal (message bearer) in v. 3 and in 2:252, and other prophets are referred to as mursalūn (message bearers) in over a dozen verses. We have been sent unto you here and in v. 16 could also be rendered, "we are message bearers unto you."

15 In other passages, many communities reject prophets because they are human, claiming that if God had wanted to send a message, He would have chosen an angel as His message bearer or messenger. As 17:94 states, And naught hindered men from believing when guidance came unto them, save that they said, "Has God sent a human being as a messenger?" (see also 6:8–9, 50; 11:12; 14:10; 23:33; 41:14; 64:6). In other verses, this same objection is attributed to those who opposed the Prophet Muhammad: And they say, "What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him?" (25:7).

16 The message bearers' second statement of their mission is more emphatic than the first (v. 14), because it is a reaffirmation in the face of denial and rejection.

17 Like the Prophet Muhammad, the message bearers are only instructed to deliver the message and to guide those who heed it; they are not responsible for those who deny it; see 36:10–11c. That the prophets are only responsible for delivering the message is emphasized in many passages; see, e.g., 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 29:18; 42:48; 64:12.

18 This is the response of the disbelievers to the message bearers, meaning, "We see an ill omen or foretell a punishment that will befall you."

19 The response from the message bearers to the disbelievers is that the punishment the disbelievers foretell will befall them because of their disbelief. In the most widespread reading of this verse, though you are reminded (in dhukkirtum) is read a in dhukkirtum, meaning, "Even if you are reminded..." In this reading, the ellipsis indicates a rhetorical elision that constitutes the object of ple!" (20) And from the outskirts of the city, a man came running. He said, "O my people! Follow the message bearers! (21) Follow those who ask not of you any reward and who are guided. (22) Why should I not worship Him who originated me, and unto Whom you will be returned? (23) Shall I take gods apart from Him? If the Compassionate desired harm for me, their intercession would avail me naught, nor would they save me. (24) Truly would I then be in manifest error.

an interrogative and serves as a rebuke, as if to say, "Do you augur ill and disbelieve, even when you have been reminded?" In another canonical reading, a 'in dhukkirtum is read ayna dhukkirtum, meaning, "now that you have been reminded" (al-āna dhukkirtum; Q, Ṭ). Another reading is an dhukkirtum, meaning, "because you have been reminded" (Z). Cf. 17:13: And [for] every man We have fastened his omen upon his neck, and We shall bring it forth for him on the Day of Resurrection; see also 7:131; 27:47. That the disbelievers' auguring ill rebounds upon them indicates the "reflexive" nature of good and evil deeds, which is emphasized throughout the Quran. For example, if one spends in charity, one spends it for oneself, as in 2:272: Whatever good you spend, it is for yourselves, when you spend only seeking the Face of God. Conversely, whosoever is miserly is only miserly unto himself (47:38); if one tries to deceive, one only deceives oneself (2:9); if one tries to lead astray, one only goes astray (3:69; 4:113); and if some devise a plot against God and His Messenger, God will devise a plot against them (52:42); see 4:111c. For the meaning of prodigal people, see 10:12c.

20 The man in this verse is usually identified by the name Ḥabīb al-Najjār. Some claim that he worshipped God in seclusion, and when the news of the message bearers came, he proclaimed his faith (Aj). Others attribute a saying to the Prophet: "The foremost among the people are three who did not disbelieve in God for the blinking of an eye: ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, the companion of Yā Sīn, and the believer among the people of Pharaoh [see 40:28–29]. They are the truthful (ṣiddīq)" (Sy, Th, Ṭs). Another interpretation says that Ḥabīb al-Najjār followed the first two message bearers after they healed his son (Aj, Q).

21 A mark of prophethood is to ask for nothing from the people, except that they follow the message the prophets are sent to deliver. As Noah says, And if you turn your backs, I have not asked of you any reward. My reward lies only with God, and I am commanded to be among those who submit (10:72). Thus the Prophet Muhammad is commanded in 6:90; 38:86; and 42:23, Say, "I ask not of you any reward for it" (see also 26:109, 127, 145, 164, 180).

22 Originated me translates faṭaranī, which derives from the same root as fiṭrah, or primordial nature, alluded to in 30:30: Set thy face to religion as a ḥanīf, in the primordial nature from God upon which He originated mankind—there is no altering the creation of God; that is the upright religion, but most of mankind know not. Read in light of 30:30 and 51:56, And I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me, this verse implies that the worship of God is central to the primordial nature with which human beings were created.

23 The question means, "Shall I take gods other than God, worship them, and leave the worship of the One Who is worthy of worship?" (Sh). The Quran indicates that angels and prophets will be able to intercede on the Day of Judgment, but that intercession is entirely by the Will of God. As 20:109 states, On that Day intercession will be of no benefit, save [that of] those whom the Compassionate has granted leave and with whose word He is content. Thus 2: 255 asks rhetorically, Who is there who may intercede with Him save by His Leave? For intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c.

24 Manifest error (ḍalāl mubīn) is employed throughout the Quran to indicate one whose wrongdoing makes him stray from the path of truth (Ṭ). It can also be understood to mean "error that makes manifest" or "makes clear." It is also read by some as ḍalāl mubayyan (Bḍ), which would then indicate "error that has been made manifest" or "made clear."

(25) Truly I believe in your Lord, so listen to me." (26) It was said unto him, "Enter the Garden!" He said, "Would that my people knew (27) how my Lord forgave me and placed me among the honored." (28) And after him We did not send down a host from Heaven against his people; nor would We send down. (29) It was but a single cry. Then, behold, they were extinguished. (30) Alas for the servants! Never did a messenger come unto them, but that they mocked him. (31) Have they not considered how many generations before them We destroyed, such that they return not unto them? (32) Each of them shall be a group arraigned before Us. (33) A sign unto them is the dead earth: We revive it and bring forth grain therefrom, that they may eat thereof. (34) And We place gardens of 25 According to some, so listen to me is a call to the people to follow God and His message bearers; others say it is a call to the message bearers, asking them to bear witness for the man before God (IK).

26 Some say that after his declaration to the people (v. 25), the man was stoned and killed (Aj, IK, Ṭs). Then he was told by God, or by the angels and the righteous, Enter the Garden! (Aj, R). Others maintain that God took him alive to heaven.

27 This verse could also mean "for what my Lord forgave me and that He placed me among the honored" (Ṭs), which may imply the bad deeds that were forgiven or the good deed(s) for which God forgave him his sins. According to Qatādah (d. 117/726), one of the foremost commentators from the third generation of Muslim scholars, the people began to stone him while he was praying for God to guide them, and as they continued to stone him, he continued to pray for them, even while suffering a gruesome death at their hands (IK).

28 This verse is taken by many as a reference to the punishment that God inflicted upon his people for rejecting the message bearers and for killing (or seeking to kill) Ḥabīb al-Najjār, in which case it indicates that God wiped them out with a single cry (v. 29) rather than sending angels against them (IK, Q). Others say that a host from Heaven refers to the angels of revelation (Ṭs), meaning that God did not send another revelation after having sent the message bearers (Ṭ). The second interpretation is more consistent with this story in its function as a warning to the Quraysh, for it implies that accepting the revelation sent to the Prophet Muhammad is their only opportunity and they will not receive another. The last phrase could also be rendered "nor what We used to send down" (Ka, Ṭs).

29 This verse indicates that the destruction for having disbelieved was instant.

30 Cf. 15:11. Alas for the servants! is interpreted by most to indicate amazement at the extreme injustice disbelievers do to themselves and the punishment they will suffer (IK, Q). Others take servants as a reference to the prophets, in which case the verse expresses God's lament for the hardships they endure when mocked by disbelievers (Q, Ṭs).

31 They and them can be read as a reference to the former peoples who were destroyed, to the inhabitants of Makkah who deny the prophethood of the Prophet Muhammad, or to both.

32 This verse and v. 53 indicate that all human beings, believers and disbelievers alike, will be arraigned on the Day of Judgment. But other verses indicate that only the disbelievers will be arraigned unto the punishment (30:16; 34:38). It appears that these verses indicate two arraignments: the first is the gathering of all human beings referred to here and in v. 53; the second, which comes after the gathering of all human beings, is the Reckoning the disbelievers will endure before they are cast into Hell.

33–34 These verses mark the beginning of what can be seen as the second section of the sūrah. They employ a common Quranic rhetorical date palms and grapevines therein and make springs flow forth, (35) that they may eat of its fruit and of that which their hands have worked. Will they not, then, give thanks? (36) Glory be unto Him, Who has created the pairs, all of them, from what the earth makes grow, and from themselves, and from what they know not. (37) And a sign unto them is the night: We strip the day therefrom, and behold, they are in darkness. (38) And the sun runs to a dwelling device by which the wonders of creation are cited as signs of God's Oneness, Perfection, Wisdom, and Omnipotence; see 3:190–91c; 41:53c. The phrase a sign unto them can have three meanings: it is something to be contemplated; it is a blessing upon human beings; or it is a warning to human beings (Q). Here God's ability to revive the earth is cited as evidence of His ability to resurrect (cf. 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 29:63; 30:19, 24, 50; 35:9; 41:31, 39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11). As in v. 12, it can also be seen as an allusion to the revivification, through faith and knowledge, of a heart that has been hardened. Gardens of date palms and grapevines (cf. 2:266; 23:19) are specified because they were thought by Arabs to be the best of fruits; they can thus be seen as an allusion to all forms of plant life by which people are nourished (Q).

35 Its fruit refers to the fruit produced by plants through the water from the springs (Q). Or it could be rendered "His fruit," meaning the fruit that God has produced (Aj, IK). As translated, the verse can be read as a positive affirmation of eating the fruits of one's own labor, for as a ḥadīth says, "No one eats any food that is better than that from the work of his own hand." That which their hands have worked could also be rendered "though their hands did not make it" (IK, Q, R, Ṭ), a reference to the fact that all fruits are ultimately produced by God (cf. 27:60; 56:64). People's lack of gratitude is a common Quranic theme, as in 2:243: Truly God is Possessed of Bounty for mankind, but most of mankind do not give thanks (cf. 10:60; 12:38; 22:66; 25:50; 40:61).

36 Glory be indicates both God's being beyond all that the idolaters associate with Him and amazement at what they say. Pairs translates azwāj, which can also mean "kinds" in the sense of species, thus indicating the many different kinds of things that God has created (Q). It can also be seen as a reference to the creation of all things in pairs, as in 51:49: And of all things We created pairs, that haply you may remember (IK). From themselves could also mean "from their souls," in which case it can be seen as a reference to the male and female, as in 53:45, And that He creates the two (zawjayn)—male and female, which are said to be mates (azwāj) created from a single soul (4:1; 6:98; 7:189; 39:6). From what they know not can be seen as an allusion to the unseen realm or to the many things in the created world that humans have not experienced, as in 16:8: And He creates that which you know not.

37 The alternation of night and day are cited throughout the Quran as a sign of God's Power and Perfection, as are the sun and the moon. As 39:5 says, He rolls the night up into the day and rolls the day up into the night, and He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed. For the relationship between night and day, see 10:6c; 17:12c. Strip translates naslakhu, which originally means to remove the skin from an animal.

38 It is reported that a Companion of the Prophet, Abū Dharr, said, "The Prophet asked me at sunset, 'Do you know where the sun goes [when it sets]?' I replied, 'God and His Messenger know best.' He said, 'It travels till it prostrates itself underneath the Throne and asks permission to rise again, and it is permitted. Then it is about to prostrate itself, but its prostration will not be accepted, and it will ask permission to go on its course, but it will not be permitted and will instead be ordered to return whence it has come, and so it will rise in the west'" (IK). In light of this account, the verse alludes to the sun's final dwelling place on the Day of Judgment. Others see the verse as a reference to the sun following its winter and summer orbits until each solstice, when it reaches its northernmost or southernmost extreme before reversing direction (IK). Dwelling place then indicates the solstice. In this interpretation it bears a close resemblance to the place of its own. That is the decree of the Mighty, the Knowing. (39) And for the moon, We have decreed mansions, till it returns like an old palm stalk. (40) It befits not the sun to overtake the moon, nor the night to outstrip the day. Each glides in an orbit. (41) And a sign unto them is that We carried their progeny in the full-laden Ark. (42) And We created for them the like thereof upon which they ride. (43) And if We will, We drown them, such that they would have none to call upon and would not be saved, (44) save as a mercy from Us and an en-word "solstice," which derives from the Latin solstitium, meaning "sun-stopping." Another reading, "And the sun runs; it has no dwelling place (lā mustaqarra lahā)," was reportedly preferred by some of the Prophet's Companions, such as the famous Quran scholars Ibn Masʿūd and Ibn ʿAbbās (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs).

39 This verse is a reference to the waxing and waning of the moon through the twenty-eight stations (manāzil) of a single lunar month (Q). Like an old palm stalk is a reference to the appearance of what remains from a date cluster after its fruit has been removed and it has withered, when it resembles the thin crescent moon in shape, width, and color (Q, Z).

40 Cf. 21:33. The sun, moon, and other celestial bodies move in separate measurable orbits that are essential for navigating space and calculating time; without them human beings would lose their bearings and not be able to continue their lives on earth; more specifically, they would not be able to perform the religious rites required of them. In this way they can be seen as manifestations of God's Guidance and Mercy. As 10:5 states, He it is Who made the sun a radiance, and the moon a light, and determined for it stations, that you might know the number of years and the reckoning [of time] (see also 17:12). In 2:189 the stations of the moon are specifically linked to performing the pilgrimage: They ask thee about the new moons. Say, "They are markers of time for mankind and for the ḥajj." In this way, the sun and the moon serve humanity in this life, though on the Day of Judgment the sun and the moon are brought together (75:9).

41 According to most commentators, this verse refers to Noah's Ark, by which God preserved one generation of humanity and thereby all of humanity (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). Others interpret it as a reference to past generations being carried in the wombs of women, which are here likened to the full-laden Ark (Q, Z).

42 This verse is taken by many as a reference to other ships that are similar to Noah's Ark (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs,), though many understand it as a reference to camels, which were known as "the ships of the desert" (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). Others say that it is a reference to all beasts of burden (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs).

43 This verse indicates that God could drown people at any moment (IK). In this sense it is a reminder that one's life is always in God's Hands, as in other passages that speak of those who remember God when they are on the verge of drowning, yet forget Him when danger is no longer imminent; see 10:22–23; 17:66–67. They would have none to call upon for help or protection. This phrase could also be rendered, "None would call upon them," indicating that they are completely forgotten. This latter interpretation is supported by several verses that speak of the disbelievers being forgotten (e.g., 7:51; 9:67; 20:126; 32:14; 45:34; 59:19).

44 For a while indicates that God will postpone the disbelievers' punishment, thus giving them time until the moment of their death to repent or to prove their true nature, as in 3:178: And let not those who disbelieve suppose that the respite We grant them is good for them. We only grant them respite that they may increase in sin, and theirs shall be a humiliating punishment. In this context, enjoyment for a while indicates the ephemeral delights of this world, which are naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20) and stand in stark contrast to the rewards of the next life (see 3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 40:39; 42:36).

joyment for a while. (45) And when it is said unto them, "Be mindful of that which is before you and of that which is behind you, that haply you may receive mercy." (46) Never did a sign from among the signs of their Lord come unto them but that they turned away from it. (47) And when it is said unto them, "Spend of that wherewith God has provided you," those who disbelieve say to those who believe, "Are we to feed one whom, if God willed, He would feed him? You are in naught but manifest error." (48) And they say, "When will this 45 That which is before you can be taken as a reference to the Hereafter, which is to come and for which one must work, and that which is behind you as a reference to this world, by which one should not be deluded (Q, Ṭs). According to others, the first phrase refers to what is apparent, and the second to what is hidden (Q), as in 34:9: Have they not considered that which is before them and that which is behind them of the sky and the earth? If We will, We cause the earth to engulf them or fragments from the sky to fall upon them. Truly in that is a sign for every penitent servant. According to Mujāhid and Ibn ʿAbbās, the former refers to the sins one has committed (IK, Q), and the latter to the sins one will commit (Q), meaning that one should be mindful of God so as to avoid sin in the future and repent for the sins of the past (Ṭs). "They turn away from it" could be placed at the end of the verse as an implied response to the conditional phrase when is it said unto them (Q, Ṭs).

46 Cf. 6:4. This verse can be understood as a reference to the signs mentioned in the preceding verses, to the whole of the created order, to the whole of revelation, or to all three, as all are said to be signs for those who possess intellect (3:190). Thus 18:57 says, And who does greater wrong than one who has been reminded of the signs of his Lord, then turns away from them and forgets that which his hands have sent forth? Surely We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand not, and in their ears a deafness. Even if thou callest them to guidance, they will never be rightly guided (see also 32:22). It is not that these people cannot see the signs, but that God veils them due to their arrogance and disbelief, as in 7:146: I shall turn away from My signs those who wax arrogant upon the earth without right. Even if they were to see every sign, they would not believe in them.

47 Although there are several different accounts identifying the subject of this verse, they all agree that it responds to those who scoffed at the injunction to spend in the way of God—to feed the poor—found throughout the Quran. It is said that some disbelievers among the Quraysh said to Abū Bakr, who used to feed the destitute among the Muslims from his own wealth, "O Abū Bakr, do you claim that God is able to feed these people?" He replied, "Yes." To which they replied, "So why is it that He does not feed them?" He said, "Some people are tried with poverty, others with wealth. The poor are commanded to be patient, and the wealthy are commanded to give." So they replied, "O Abū Bakr, surely you are in error. Do you claim that God is able to feed these people, yet He does not feed them, then you feed them?" Then this verse was revealed, as were 92:5–6 (Q).

48 Cf. 10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 67:25. The disbelievers are said to have mocked the Prophet for not knowing exactly when the Hour and the Day of Resurrection, about which he warned them, would come to pass, for they expected a prophet to be able to see the future. In response to this expectation, 7:187 states: They question thee about the Hour, when it will set in. Say, "Knowledge thereof lies only with my Lord. None save He shall manifest it at its proper time. Heavy shall it weigh upon the heavens and the earth. It shall not come upon you but suddenly." They question thee as if thou knew it well. Say, "Knowledge thereof lies only with God, but most of mankind know not." According to some, the disbelievers referred to the Resurrection as this promise, because they thought they would be the ones to be rewarded with good. Thus Ibn Kathīr glosses this verse with 42:18: Those who believe not in it seek to hasten it.

promise come to pass, if you are truthful?" (49) They await naught but a single cry that will seize them while they dispute among themselves, (50) and then they can make no bequest, nor return to their people. (51) And the trumpet will be blown. Then, behold, they will rush forth from their graves unto their Lord. (52) They will say, "Oh, woe unto us! Who has raised us from our place of sleep?" "This is that which the Compassionate did promise; and the message bearers spoke true." (53) There shall be but a single cry. Then, behold, they will all be arraigned before Us! (54) This Day no soul will be wronged in any way, and you will not be recompensed, save for that which you used to do. (55) Truly the inhabitants of the Garden on that Day will be busy rejoicing, (56) they and their spouses

49 A single cry refers to the first blast of Seraphiel's trumpet (see 39:68c), which will level all that is on the earth. It will come while they are oblivious to it, disputing, bargaining, eating and drinking, and engaging in other affairs of the world.

50 The Hour will come upon people in an instant, so that they cannot attend to any affairs of this world, thus indicating that one should be ready for death at every moment. Make no bequest could also mean, "Do not exhort or enjoin" or "Give no advice," which would then imply that there must be no delay in following the command to exhort one another to truth, and exhort one another to patience (103:3).

51 The second blast from Seraphiel's trumpet will herald the Resurrection. Between the two blasts there is said to be an interval of forty years (Āl, IK, Q, Ṭ); see also 76:43. For the relation between the two cries or blasts, see 39:68–70.

52 In an alternate reading, Oh, woe unto us! Who has raised us (waylanā man baʿathanā) is understood to mean, "Oh, woe unto us for our having been raised" (waylanā min baʿthinā; Āl, Q). From our place of sleep could also be read "from our sleep" (Āl). The last sentence of the verse is an answer to the question posed by the disbelievers in v. 48, as if to say that it does not matter when the promise will come to pass, only that people must be prepared for it. It can be seen as a continuation of what the disbelievers say to themselves, or as words of the angels addressed to them (IK).

53 Cf. 79:13–14; that it is but a single cry is said to imply that the matter of the Hour is as the blinking of an eye, or nearer still (16:77). For arraigned, see 36:32c.

54 This verse does not mean that none shall be punished; rather, it indicates that the punishment the disbelievers receive is because they have wronged themselves by having disbelieved and turned away from God's signs. This idea is mentioned throughout the Quran, as in 3:117: God wronged them not, but themselves do they wrong; and 10:44: Truly God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves. In this respect, even those who receive the worst of punishments are not wronged in the sense of having been treated unjustly; rather, Judgment will be made between them in truth, and they shall not be wronged (39:69); see also 45:22; 46:19.

55 This verse implies that the inhabitants of the Garden are busy with the delights of Paradise and spiritual realities (IK, Q) rather than preoccupied by the concerns of this world. According to some, those in different levels of Paradise are occupied with different delights (Q), the highest of which involves being absorbed in the vision of God (R).

56 Cf. 43:70. Those in Paradise are reclining upon couches, indicating that they are content and at peace (R on 18:31; 55:54). Some also view the couches as thrones, indicating that they have attained a high rank. Believers are to be rewarded with spouses made pure (2:25; 3:15; 4:57), which can reclining upon couches in the shade. (57) Therein they have fruit and whatsoever they call for. (58) "Peace!"—a word from a Lord most Merciful. (59) Stand apart this Day, O guilty ones! (60) Did I not enjoin upon you, O Children of Adam, that you not worship Satan—truly he is a manifest enemy unto you— (61) and that you worship Me? This is a straight path. (62) For indeed he has led many among you astray. Did you not understand? (63) This is the Hell that you were promised. (64) Burn therein today for having disbelieved! (65) On that Day We be understood as an allusion to spiritual beings particular to Paradise, spouses of this world who have also attained to Paradise, or both. For the connotations of the Quranic use of shade, see 56:30c.

57 According to several aḥādīth, the fruits of Paradise are far superior to those of this world. There are several accounts in which the Prophet is said to have stretched forth his hand as if reaching for something and, when asked about it, responded, "I was shown the Garden and wanted to have a bunch of fruit from it. Had I taken it, you would have eaten from it as long as the world remains." The inhabitants of Paradise will receive whatsoever they call for (cf. 41:31; 44:55), will, or desire (see 16:31; 25:16; 39:34; 41:31; 42:22; 43:71; 50:35; 52:22; 56:20–24; 77:41–44), whereas for the disbelievers a barrier is set between them and that which they desire (34:54).

58 According to a saying attributed to Ibn ᶜAbbās, "God Himself is peace upon the people of the Garden" (IK), perhaps referring to Peace (al-Salām) as one of the Names of God. This is similar to 33:44: Their greeting on the day they meet Him will be "Peace" (IK). According to a ḥadīth, "While the people of the Garden are in their bliss, a light shines upon them. Then they lift their heads, and it is God beholding them from above. Then He says, 'Peace be upon you, O people of the Garden.' And that is [the meaning of] His saying, 'Peace!'—a word from a Lord most Merciful. So He looks at them and they look at Him, and they are not distracted by anything from that bliss so long as they are looking upon Him, until He is unveiled to them and His Light and His Blessing remain upon them in their abodes" (IK, Q).

59 This verse is an allusion to the separation of believers and disbelievers on the Day of Judgment, which because of this separation is also referred to as the Day of Division (37:21; 44:40; 77:13–14, 38; 78:17; see also 10:28; 30:14).

60–61 Enjoin translates aᶜhad, which is from the same root as ᶜahd, meaning "vow," "pact," or "covenant." In this sense it relates to the covenant that all human beings made with God before coming into this world, for in acknowledging that God is their Lord, they acknowledge that only He is worthy of worship; see 7:172c and the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions." For references to Satan as a manifest enemy, also see 2:168; 2:208; 6:142; 7:22; 12:5; 17:53; 28:15; 43:62. For straight path, see 1:6c.

62 This verse asks, "Did you not understand the fundamental difference between worshipping God and worshipping Satan?" (IK).

63–64 These verses say essentially, "This is the Fire the prophets warned you about, but you denied, so taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny!" (32:20; 34:42).

65 On the Day of Judgment people will no longer be able to make excuses and hide their sins with lies and duplicity. Hands and feet are also spoken of in 24:24 as testifying on the Day of Judgment, but there tongues are mentioned as well. According to 41:20, their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do. For a more extensive account of the manner in which one's members and faculties bear witness against one's soul, see 41:20–23. A famous ḥadīth reported by Anas ibn Mālik (d. ca. 91/709), who served the Prophet for many years, says, "We were with the Messenger of God when he laughed and said, 'Do you know at shall seal their mouths, their hands will speak to Us, and their feet will bear witness to that which they used to earn. (66) And had We willed, We would have blotted out their eyes. Then they would race to the path; yet how would they see? (67) And had We willed, We would have transformed them in their places. Then they could neither advance nor go back. (68) And whomsoever We give long life, We cause him to regress in creation. Do they not understand? (69) And We have not taught him poetry; nor would it befit him. It is but a reminder and a clear Quran, (70) to warn whosoever is alive, and so that the Word may come due what I am laughing?' We replied, 'God and His Messenger know best.' He said, 'At what a servant says to his Lord. He says, "O Lord will you not protect me from injustice (ẓulm)?" He replies, "But of course." He says, "I will not accept any witness against myself but myself." God replies, "Today your soul suffices as a witness against you, as do the noble scribes [i.e., the angels who have recorded your deeds; see 80:15–16c]." Then his mouth will be sealed and it will be said unto his limbs, "Speak!" So they will speak of his deeds. Then he will be permitted to speak and will say [to his limbs], "Away with you! Be doomed! It was on your behalf that I contended"" (IK, Q).

66 Blotted out their eyes indicates that God will make them blind to guidance and the straight path (Q, Ṭ); cf. 4:47.

67 In their places could also mean "in their dwellings." In either reading it indicates that no matter where they may be, God can alter people's state instantly or destroy them if He wills. This is seen by some as an allusion to God punishing disbelievers by transforming them into animals such as monkeys and pigs (Ṭs). See also 4:47c.

68 We cause him to regress in creation refers to physical and mental decline in old age. Here it is meant as an argument, as if to say, "Does not the One who has power to do this have the power to resurrect you?" This is similar to 30:54: God is He Who created you from weakness, then ordained strength after weakness, then ordained weakness and old age after strength. See also 22:5, in which all of the stages of earthly life from conception to old age are cited as signs of God's Power.

69 This verse returns to the discussion of the nature of revelation from the beginning of the sūrah. As in 26:224–27, it alludes to those who accused the Prophet of being merely a poet. According to several accounts, the Prophet did not have any facility with poetry, either its rhyme or meter (IK, Q). Regarding the accusations that the Prophet had himself authored the Quran, 29:48 replies, And thou didst not recite before this any Book; nor didst thou write it with thy right hand, for then those who make false claims would have doubted. That the Quran is but a reminder is repeated in several verses (6:69, 90; 12:104; 38:87; 68:52; 74:31; 81:27). To remind is the function of all revelation; hence the Torah is called a Reminder (40:54) and the People of the Book (Jews and Christians) are referred to as the people of the Reminder (16:43; 21:7). In this vein, the Quran is presented as a continuation of the previous Reminders that clarifies what humans may have forgotten from them. Thus 16:44 addresses the Prophet Muhammad: And We have sent down the Reminder unto thee that thou mightest clarify for mankind that which has been sent down unto them, that haply they may reflect.

70 From one perspective, to warn whosoever is alive indicates all of humanity, as in 6:19: And this Quran has been revealed unto me, that thereby I may warn you and whomsoever it may reach (IK). From another perspective, it refers to those whose hearts are alive (Q) and thus able to hear the warning and soften unto the remembrance of God (39:23). For the meaning of the Word coming due, see 36:7c.

for the disbelievers. (71) Have they not considered that among that which Our Hands have wrought We created cattle for them, and that they are their masters, (72) and that We have subdued these for them, such that some are a mount for them and of some they eat? (73) And they have benefits and drinks therein. Will they not, then, give thanks? (74) Yet they have taken gods other than God, that perhaps they might be helped. (75) They cannot help them, though they be a host made ready for them. (76) So let not their speech grieve thee. Truly We know what they hide and what they disclose. (77) Has man not seen that We 71–73 God created Adam as a vicegerent upon the earth (2:30) and has also appointed human beings as vicegerents upon the earth (6:165; 35:39); humanity is thus told, Hast thou not considered that God has made whatsoever is on the earth subservient unto you? (22:65). But this vicegerency requires that a human being remain a servant of God (ʿabd Allāh), recognizing that all these benefits are from that which God's Hands have wrought, and thus be thankful. For vicegerent, see 2:30c; 6:165c.

This passage is one of several to invoke the benefits of cattle—their usefulness for riding and transporting goods, for providing clothing and furnishings, food and drink, and even their beauty—as signs of God's beneficence toward human beings; see 6:142; 16:5, 66, 79; 23:21–22; 40:79; 43:12–13. For v. 73, cf. 16:66; 23:21. Drinks could also mean "drinking places."

74 This verse refers not only to polytheism and idolatry, but also to the fact that in not giving thanks to God and failing to acknowledge that He is the Creator and Sustainer of all things, human beings arrogate powers to themselves and others that have in fact only been lent to them by God. In a ḥadīth the Prophet warns against the subtler forms of idolatry: "The most frightening thing that I fear for my community is associating others with God. I do not mean that they will worship the sun, the moon, or idols. I mean that they will perform works for other than God with a hidden desire."

75 Though they be a host made ready for them may be seen as a reference to the idolaters who are ready to fight on behalf of their gods, though their gods will not be able to fight for them (Ṭ). Some take it as a reference to the gods they worship becoming a host who will testify against them at the Reckoning (IK, Q, Ṭ), but this interpretation is problematic, because it implies that such gods are real beings. The verse also implies that the hidden desires for which deeds are performed are a host of difficulties that continue to create obstacles in this life until one achieves full sincerity and strives only for God.

76 On the one hand, this verse counsels the Prophet that he should not be grieved by the disbelievers' accusations or their plotting against him in secret, since God will protect him in this world and they will receive the proper punishment for their deeds, either in this life or the next. On the other hand, it indicates that the Prophet must not be concerned with their continuing disbelief, for once he has warned them, he has fulfilled his responsibilities (see 3:176; 5:41, 68; 6:33; 10:65; 15:88; 16:127; 18:6; 26:3; 27:70; 31:23; 35:8). As 2:272 says in addressing the Prophet, Thou art not tasked with their guidance, but God guides whomsoever He will (also see 28:56).

77 Cf. 16:4; the creation of the human being from a drop (cf. 18:37; 22:5; 35:11; 40:67; 53:46; 75:37; 76:2; 80:19), meaning sperm or as phrased elsewhere a draught of base fluid (32:8; cf. 77:20), is cited in several verses as testimony to God's ability to resurrect human beings in the Hereafter; see commentary on 32:7–11. For the phases of gestation, see also 22:5; 23:14. An argument implied here and elsewhere is that in not recognizing the nature of one's own creation and that to which it bears witness, one is a manifest adversary to oneself.

created him from a drop, and behold, he is a manifest adversary? (78) And he has set forth for Us a parable and forgotten his own creation, saying, "Who revives these bones, decayed as they are?" (79) Say, "He will revive them Who brought them forth the first time, and He knows every creation, (80) Who made for you fire from the green tree, and, behold, you kindle from it." (81) Is not He Who created the heavens and the earth able to create the like thereof? Yea, indeed, He is the knowing Creator. (82) His Command when He desires a thing is only to say to it, "Be!" and it is. (83) So glory be to Him in Whose Hand lies the dominion of all things, and unto Whom you shall be returned.

78–79 These verses express a common objection to the Quranic understanding of bodily resurrection (cf. 13:5; 17:49, 98; 23:35, 82–83; 27:67; 37:16–17, 53; 50:3; 56:47–48; 79:11). Regarding this particular instance, it is reported that a man by the name of Ubayy ibn Khalaf brought some withered bones to the Prophet and crushed them into pieces saying, "Do you think that God can revive these [bones] after they have decayed and become rot?" The Prophet answered, "Yes, indeed! And He will also throw you into the Fire." Then these verses were revealed (IK; JJ, Q, W). And forgotten his own creation could also be rendered "having forgotten his own creation." For a passage similar to v. 79, see 17:51.

80 Just as God makes fire emerge from wood that is wet and moist, or that had been wet and moist, so too can He make life emerge from bones that are dead and decayed (Q). According to Ibn ʿAbbās, this refers to the Markh and ʿAfār trees that grow in the Hijaz, in western Arabia; rubbing two green branches from these trees together is known to produce fire (IK).

81 Several passages maintain that the first creation itself is clear evidence of God's Ability to re-create and to resurrect: He created you the first time and unto Him shall you be returned (41:21); As We began the first creation, so shall We bring it back—a promise binding upon Us. Surely We shall do it (21:104); see also 50:1; 79:27.

82 This verse is one of the most frequently cited verses of the Quran (cf. 2:117; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 40:68), and points to the fact that God's creative act is dependent upon no other and is like the blinking of an eye (54:50); see 2:117c. Be! and it is (kun fa-yakūn) has become an aphorism in Arabic and other Islamic languages that is used often in daily discourse.

83 Glory be indicates both God's being beyond all that the idolaters associate with Him and amazement at what they say. Dominion translates malakūt, which is closely related to mulk, meaning sovereignty and found in the recurring phrase Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth (e.g., 2:107; 3:189; 5:17, 18, 40, 120; 9:116). Both words derive from the same root, m-l-k, which in verbal form means "to possess," "to control," "to rule," or "to reign." According to some, malakūt and mulk have the same meaning (IK). According to others, malakūt refers to God's Lordship over the unseen realm, and mulk refers to His Lordship over the visible world. In some Islamic cosmologies, this world is designated by mulk, while malakūt is understood as the level of being above this world, and above that lies the archangelic realm, which is designated by the term jabarūt. From one perspective this verse is an answer to the question posed in 23:88: Who is it in Whose Hand lies the dominion of everything, who protects but is not protected against, if you know? The phrase shall be returned could also be rendered "are being returned," which would emphasize the ongoing process of return to God experienced by all beings. The fact that both renderings are in the passive voice indicates that humans have no choice regarding whether they return or not.

Those Ranged in Ranks

A Makkan sūrah, al-Ṣāffāt is believed to have been revealed directly after Sūrah 6, al-Anᶜām (JJ). It takes its name from the reference to those ranged in ranks in vv. 1 and 165, both of which refer to the angels. The sūrah can be seen as connected to the previous sūrah in that it tells the stories of several generations or civilizations that were destroyed for rejecting God's messengers, material upon which readers or listeners are enjoined to reflect in 36:31: Have they not considered how many generations before them We destroyed, such that they return not unto them? (Āl).

After a brief reaffirmation of God's Oneness and Omnipotence (vv. 1–5), al-Ṣāffāt describes the futility of the efforts of those who attempt to obtain knowledge of the Unseen through the jinn (vv. 6–10). It then chastises the disbelievers for rejecting the Oneness of God, the prophethood of Muhammad, and the Resurrection, warning of the ignominious end they will face in the Hereafter and of the manner in which they will challenge and question one another regarding the fate that has befallen them (vv. 11–39). This is followed by a description of the rewards God's sincere servants receive in the Garden (vv. 40–49) and the exchange they will have with the disbelievers they had known in this world, who are now in Hell (vv. 50–60). A description of the punishments in the form of food and drink given to the denizens of Hell (vv. 61–68) is followed by an explanation of their fate (vv. 69–73).

The sūrah then provides accounts of several prophets and the blessings God bestowed upon them: Noah (vv. 75–82), Abraham (vv. 83–113, a passage in which the near sacrifice of his son is also discussed, vv. 101–8), Moses and Aaron (vv. 114–22), Elias (Elijah; vv. 123–32), Lot (vv. 133–38), and Jonah (vv. 139–48). In these accounts, it is only in the story of Jonah that the people repent (vv. 147–48); the people associated with all the others are destroyed for having rejected God's messenger. The discussion of the prophets is followed by a challenge to the worldview of the idolaters of the Prophet Muhammad's time (vv. 149–63) and a refutation in particular of the Divine powers they ascribe to the angels

(vv. 164–66). The sūrah concludes with a final address to the disbelievers and a promise that the Prophet and his followers will triumph, as did the other prophets mentioned in the sūrah (vv. 167–82).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) By those ranged in ranks, (2) and the drivers driving, (3) and the reciters of a reminder, (4) truly your God is One, (5) Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, and Lord of the easts. (6) Truly We adorned the lowest heaven with an ornament, the stars, (7) and a guard against every defiant satan. (8) They listen not to the Highest Assembly, for they are repelled from every side— (9) cast out, and theirs shall be a punishment everlasting— (10) save

1–3 These verses are in the form of a Divine oath, common in the Quran, in which God swears by various created phenomena. The three verses can be understood as descriptions of a single reality or of three different realities (R). Most read them as references to three sets of angels: angels ranged in ranks before God, angels who drive the clouds, and angels who recite the Quran (IJ, Q, Ṭ, Z). Ranged in ranks renders al-ṣāffāt ṣaffan, which can also mean "the spreaders spreading," a reading that may refer to the angels spreading their wings (R) or to birds, as in 24:41, by the birds spreading their wings (ṣāffāt; cf. 67:19; Z). Drivers can also mean the angels who drive human beings away from committing acts of disobedience or who drive the satans away from human beings (Aj, R). Driving renders zajara, which can also mean "to rebuke." In light of this interpretation, some understand reminder as a reference to the Quran, by which God rebukes the disbelievers (Ṭ), or to everything that rebukes those who are disobedient to God (Z). Reciters is then read to mean anyone who recites the Book of God (Z). Additionally, these three verses could also be read as a description of the stages in prayer: ranged in ranks refers to people as they stand for prayer; driving refers to the recitation of the formula "I seek refuge in God from the accursed Satan" (aʿūdhu bi'Llāhi min al-shayṭān al-rājīm), which is recited at the beginning of the prayer and at the commencement of the recitation of the Quran (see 16:98c); and the reciters of a reminder refers to the recitation of the Quran during the prayer (R). A few more speculative interpretations relate these groups to different types of scholars (AJ, R, Z), mujtahids (interpreters of Islamic Law; R), types of Quranic verses (R), or spiritual types (Aj).

4–5 These verses constitute the "answer to the oath" invoked in the previous three verses, as if to say, "The Lord of all that is mentioned above is One" (IJ). Lord of the easts refers to the succession of points on the horizon through the year from which the sun rises (IJ). The rising of the sun, shurūq, derives from the same root, sh-r-q, as the word for "east," mashriq (cf. 55:17; 70:40). In this sense, easts (mashāriq) evokes the sense of "places of rising" for the sun or even "horizons."

6–10 These verses refer to God's having prevented evil jinn, here referred to as every defiant satan, from listening to the discourse of the heavenly assembly, as in 67:5: Truly We have adorned the lowest heaven with lamps and made them missiles against the satans; and We have prepared for them the punishment of the Blaze. The role that certain jinn are said to have played in facilitating the work of fortune-tellers and sorcerers is alluded to in 15:16–18; 67:5; 72:8–9. Made of a more ethereal substance than human beings, the jinn one who snatches a fragment as a piercing flame pursues him. (11) So ask them, are they more difficult to create, or those whom We created? Truly We created them from a viscous clay. (12) Indeed, but thou dost marvel, while they scoff. (13) And when they are reminded, they do not remember. (14) And when they see a sign, they seek to scoff, (15) and say, "This is naught but manifest sorcery. (16) What! When we have died and are dust and bones are we to be resurrected, (17) and our fathers of old?" (18) Say, "Yes, and debased will you be." (19) Then gained access to some aspects of the discourse between the angels, but then deceived human beings, leading them astray with half-truths; see the introduction to Sūrah 72; 72:8–9c; 67:5c. It is believed that after the Prophet Muhammad began receiving revelations, God cut off all such access to angelic discussions for the jinn, establishing angels as sentries and repelling the jinn with meteors.

The Highest Assembly (v. 8) refers to the assembly of the angels, regarding which no one has knowledge unless it is provided directly from God. The Prophet is reported to have said that God asked him about what the Highest Assembly disputed (see 38:69), to which he responded that he did not know. Then he said, "So He put His Hand between my shoulders, and I felt its coolness in my innermost being, and knowledge of all things between the East and the West came unto me." For more on the Highest Assembly, see 38:69–70c.

Save one who snatches a fragment (v. 10) refers to the few jinn who are able to eavesdrop on some part of the heavenly discourse, after which they are struck by a piercing flame (IJ, IK), though on occasion they are able to send what they have heard down to a soothsayer before being struck (IK).

11 A command to the Prophet to ask those who deny the Resurrection whether resurrecting them after they have died would be more difficult than resurrecting other beings God has created (T). Those whom We created refers either to the angels, the jinn, and all that is in the heavens and on the earth or to previous generations of human beings (IJ). The verse can also be seen as a reference to v. 5 and thus to all of the created order, as in 40:57: Surely the creation of the heavens and the earth is greater than the creation of mankind. But most of mankind know not (T). Several verses describe the creation of the human being from various forms of earth: from dust (3:59); from dried clay, made of molded mud (15:26); from dried clay, like earthen vessels (55:14); and, in the present verse, from a viscous clay; for the manner in which these can be seen as representing different phases of human development, see 55:14c.

12 The Prophet marvels at the Quran, while the disbelievers scoff at it (T). Or the Prophet marvels at their disbelief in the Quran and the Resurrection, while they scoff at him (IJ).

13–14 The disbelievers do not benefit from being reminded (T), or when the Quran admonishes them, they do not remember or take heed (IJ). They then scoff at the Quran or at clear evidence and proof of Muhammad's prophethood, such as the splitting of the moon (see 54:1c; IJ).

15 This verse may be a response to the miracles sent as proofs (IJ) or to the Quran itself, as in 46:7: Yet when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, those who disbelieve say to the truth when it comes to them, "This is manifest sorcery." In deriding the Prophet, the disbelievers often labeled him a sorcerer (see also 10:2; 11:7; 34:43; 38:4; 46:7; 51:52; 54:2; 74:24), a charge also leveled against Moses (see 7:109; 10:76; 20:57, 63; 26:34; 27:13; 28:36; 40:24; 51:39) and Jesus (see 5:110; 61:6) by those who rejected the messages they brought.

16–18 These verses express a common objection to the Quranic understanding of bodily resurrection (cf. 13:5; 17:49, 98; 23:35, 82–83; 27:67; 36:78–79; 37:53; 50:3; 56:47–48; 79:11); see 36:78–79c.

19 Cf. 79:13. This is the cry that will call human beings to rise from the grave for the Day of Judgment. Cry translates zajrah, which indicates a sudden cry or shout that directs some kind of there will be but a single cry. And they will then behold. (20) They will say, "Oh, woe unto us! This is the Day of Judgment." (21) This is the Day of Division that you used to deny. (22) Gather those who did wrong together with their spouses and that which they used to worship (23) apart from God, and guide them unto the path of Hellfire. (24) And stop them. Surely they are to be questioned: (25) "What ails you that you do not help one another?" (26) Nay, but this Day they will surrender. (27) And they will turn to one another, questioning each other, (28) saying, "Truly you used to come to us from the right." (29) They reply, "Nay, but you were not believers. (30) And we had no authority over you. Rather, behavior, like halting an animal or making it start (Z). Two cries or blasts are spoken of in 39:68: at the first creation will come to an end, whereupon whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth will swoon, save those whom God wills; at the second everyone will be resurrected for the Judgment. A single cry (ṣayḥah or zajrah; cf. 36:29; 36:49; 38:15; 79:13) is understood as a reference to the second blast (Z), at which the disbelievers will then behold what they had denied.

20–21 Woe unto us translates yā waylanā; wayl, or woe, is an exclamation of existential and spiritual regret found elsewhere in the Quran (see 2:79c; 5:31; 18:49; 21:14, 47, 97; 25:28; 36:52; 68:31), often when the certainty of Divine Punishment is realized. Here it comes when the disbelievers behold the realities of the Judgment that they had denied. The Day of Division (44:40; 77:13–14, 38; 78:17; see also 10:28; 30:14, 43) is another name for the Day of Judgment, evoking the manner in which God will judge between the virtuous and the iniquitous and then divide them from one another in a categorical manner.

22–23 Here those who did wrong may refer to all wrongdoers, only to the idolaters (IJ), or to all those who disbelieve in God (Ṭ). Their spouses translates azwājahum, meaning that the idolatrous men and women would be gathered together (Q, R, Z). Azwājahum can also mean "their companions" or "those of their kind," indicating that those given to particular vices would be gathered with wrongdoers of the same disposition (IJ, IK, Q, Z). It could also mean those of their particular sect or creed (IJ) or their comrades among the satans (IJ, Z, R), to which reference is made in 43:36: And whosoever turns blindly away from the remembrance of the Compassionate, We assign to him a satan who is then a companion unto him. Three different things can be meant by that which they used to worship: idols, Satan himself, or the many satans (IJ). In this context, some understand guide them to mean "show them" or "demonstrate to them" (IJ, Q, R) by informing them about the path of Hellfire that they are following (Z). It can also be understood as a command to the angels to lead them to the Fire (IK).

24 Stop them means to detain them (IJ, R, Ṭ). The content of the question appears in v. 25, but some propose that they are to be questioned means the disbelievers will be asked whether the Fire pleases them (Ṭ) or about the deeds they have committed (IJ, Ṭ).

25–26 By way of rebuke, the disbelievers are asked why they did not help one another as they had claimed they would (IK). But they will be subject to God's Command and Decree; they will not be able to avoid them (IK, Ṭ), and should thus be certain of receiving punishment (Ṭ).

27 Human beings will turn to the jinn and question them (Ṭ), or human beings will question one another, blaming each other for their fate (IK), similar to their lamenting the companionship of other disbelievers in 25:28–29, when they say, Oh, woe unto me! Would that I had not taken so-and-so for a friend! He did indeed cause me to go astray from the Reminder after its having come to me.

28–34 Those who were weak and oppressed will say to those who were in power and used their you were a rebellious people. (31) So the Word of our Lord has come due for us; truly we shall taste [it]. (32) We caused you to err for truly we were errant." (33) Verily that Day they will share in the punishment. (34) Thus do We deal with the guilty. (35) Indeed, when it was said unto them, "There is no god but God," they waxed arrogant, (36) saying, "Are we to forsake our gods for a poet possessed?" (37) Nay! He has come with the truth and confirmed the messengers. (38) Truly you shall taste the painful punishment. (39) And you shall not be requited, save for that which you used to do. (40) Not so for God's sincere power to lead others astray, You used to come to us from the right, meaning, "You came to us from a position of power and influence over us and led us astray," or "You made falsehood attractive and concealed the truth" (IK; see also 33:66–68; 34:31–33; 40:47–48). To which the leaders respond that they (their followers) would not have been led astray if they had not already been inclined to disbelief. The leaders' saying, We had no authority over you, is similar to Satan's statement to his followers, And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves (14:22). Neither the leaders nor Satan had any authority or proof to substantiate their claims; thus the people who followed them did so because they themselves were a rebellious people. For this reason, the corrupt leaders remind those who followed them of their own folly, saying, Nay! But you were guilty (34:32). Although the leaders among the disbelievers and those they led astray will share in the punishment, 29:13 says of those who sought to lead others astray, Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others' burdens along with their own. Those who were led astray by others are also said to request, Our Lord! Give them a twofold punishment, and curse them with a great curse (33:68); see 7:38–39c.

35–36 When, during their life in this world, the disbelievers were told to testify that There is no god but God, they rejected it. And when they were told to hearken to the revelation, their reaction was the same, as in 5:104: And when it is said unto them, "Come unto that which God has sent down, and unto the Messenger," they say, "Sufficient for us is that which we have found our fathers practicing." In the same vein, when it is said unto them, "Believe as the people believe," they say, "Shall we believe as fools believe?" (2:13). They accuse the Prophet of being a poet possessed (see also 52:30; 69:41), because they have no ability to address the content of the message; they thus seek to discredit the messenger, as when the disbelievers scoff, Confused dreams! Nay, he has fabricated it! Nay, he is a poet! (21:5).

37 This is a response to the accusation that the Prophet is a poet possessed (v. 36). Here the truth refers to the Quran (IJ, Q, Ṭ) and its message of Divine Oneness (IJ, Q). Just as the Quran confirms the revelations before it (see 2:41, 89, 91, 97, 101; 3:3, 81; 5:48; 6:92; 35:31; 46:30), so too does the Prophet Muhammad confirm the messengers before him, meaning that he brings what they had brought (IJ).

38 See commentary on 32:14: And taste the punishment everlasting for that which you used to do: and 32:20: Taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny.

39 That the disbelievers are only requited for that which they used to do (cf. 27:90; 52:16; 66:7) indicates that they are only punished for what they have committed and brought upon themselves, as in 10:44: Truly God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves.

40 Those who are sincere will be spared being taken to account for their bad deeds and will be forgiven (IJ); see commentary on 39:10: Surely those who are patient shall be paid their reward in full without reckoning.

servants. (41) For them there shall be a known provision, (42) fruits. And they will be honored (43) in Gardens of bliss, (44) upon couches, facing one another, (45) with a cup from a gushing spring brought round, (46) white, delicious to those who drink thereof. (47) No headiness lies therein; nor are they intoxicated by it. (48) And theirs shall be maidens of modest gaze with lustrous eyes, (49) as if they were hidden eggs. (50) And they will turn to one another, questioning each other. (51) One among them will say, "I had a companion (52) who would say, 'Are you among those who confirm? (53) What! When we have died and are dust and 41–44 Some say the provision is the Garden itself (IJ, IK), while others say it refers to the provisions of the Garden (IJ, Ṭ, Z). That it is a known provision indicates that, unlike the provisions of this world, those in Paradise are certain that heavenly provisions will always be available (R) or that they will receive the provision that they have merited for their deeds in this world (R). That they are honored is considered the greatest recompense (Z) in Gardens of bliss (cf. 5:65; 10:9; 22:56; 31:8; 56:12; 68:34). They are facing one another (cf. 15:47; 56:16), so that no one is facing the back of another (IK, Q, Ṭ); that no one shall be made to sit behind another is thus a sign that they are all being honored. Elsewhere the couches of Paradise are described as embroidered couches (56:15), arrayed (52:20), upon which they recline in the shade with their spouses (36:56); see 52:20c.

45 See also 43:71 and 76:15, where those in Paradise are served from goblets made of gold, silver, and crystal. That the cup, here indicating the drink within the cup, is from a gushing spring (cf. 56:18) indicates that it is pure and the source never runs dry. Every such mention of the heavenly cups or goblets is seen by some as a reference to the wine of heaven (Ṭ); for the positive nature of this paradisal wine, see 56:18–19c. That it is brought round implies that there are servants in attendance (Ṭ).

46 The wine of heaven is said to be whiter than milk (IJ, R), though here some say that white describes the cup rather than the wine (IJ, Ṭ, Z).

47 Cf. 56:18. Headiness translates ghawl, which derives from the verb ghāla, meaning to snatch or grab something or to destroy it. Here the absence of ghawl is understood to mean that heavenly wine does not cause headache or stomach ailment, that it does not destroy the intellect, or that there is nothing harmful, disdainful, or sinful in it (IJ, T). In fact, it can be understood to mean that this wine contains none of the negative effects found in earthly wine (IJ, Ṭ), in which there is great sin and [some] benefits for mankind (2:219), but the harm of which is greater than the benefits. In 5:90 wine is said to be a means of defilement of Satan's doing and is therefore forbidden in Islamic Law.

48 Of modest gaze indicates maidens who look at none but their own husbands (Aj, Q). For other references to the maidens who await the righteous in Paradise, see 38:52; 44:54c; 52:20; 55:56, 72; 56:22; 78:33. Other verses indicate that righteous earthly spouses will join one in the Garden (see 13:23; 36:56; 40:8; 43:70). The sexual joys of Paradise alluded to in this verse are not a sublimated form of the joys of earthly sexuality, but symbolize spiritual union. What one experiences here below is a mere reflection of paradisal joy, but allusion cannot be made to it except by using the language of earthly sexual union, since it is the most intense form of pristine sensual pleasure known in this world.

49 The word for "egg" (bayḍ) is closely related to the word for "white" (bayyāḍ or abyaḍ), which in the context of the maidens of Paradise (Iṣ), as in English, is taken as an allusion to purity. The mention of eggs can also be connected to the use of white in v. 46 to describe the wine of Paradise. In 3:106–7 those who enter Paradise are spoken of as those whose faces whiten. Some say that what is intended by eggs is pearls (IJ, IK, Ṭ), as in 56:22–23: Wide-eyed maidens, the likeness of concealed pearls (Q). Hidden refers to the inside of the egg (or pearl), or it means that the egg (or pearl) itself is never touched (IK, Ṭ).

50–53 The inhabitants of the Garden ask one another about their state in the world (IJ).

bones, are we to be requited?' " (54) He will say, "Will you look?" (55) So he will look and see him in the midst of Hellfire. (56) He will say, "By God! You did well-nigh destroy me; (57) and if not for the blessing of my Lord, I would have been among the arraigned. (58) Are we then not to die, (59) but our first death, and are we not to be punished? (60) This indeed is the great triumph!" (61) For the like of this, then, let the laborers labor. (62) Is this a better welcome or the tree of Zaqqūm? (63) Truly We have made it a trial for the wrongdoers. (64) Truly it is a tree that emerges in the depths of Hellfire. (65) Its spathes are as the heads of satans. (66) They will eat thereof and fill their bellies therewith. (67) Then on top

A companion refers to the satan assigned to each person (see 43:36c; IJ, Ṭ) or to a believer's companion who denied the Resurrection and would ask the believer in astonishment, "Are you among those who confirm the Resurrection?" (IJ, IK, Ṭ). The first part of v. 53 reflects a question posed in several Quranic verses (cf. 13:5; 17:49, 98; 23:35, 82–83; 27:67; 36:78–79; 37:16–17; 50:3; 56:47–48; 79:11), while the second part of v. 53 mocks the belief in a final reckoning. When they have died, and the believer goes to the Garden and the idolater goes to the Fire, the believer sees the state of the disbeliever (Ṭ), and according to 7:46–50, the disbelievers in Hell can see the believers in Paradise. Thus some say this passage refers to the two companions discussed in 18:32–43 (IJ).

54–57 The believer then says to his companions in the Garden, Will you look? (IJ, IK, Ṭ). Then he sees his companion from this world in the midst of Hellfire in the Hereafter and knows that, had he followed him, he would have suffered the same fate and that if not for God's Blessing in guiding him, he too would have been arraigned unto the punishment (30:16; 34:38). Thus Ibn Kathīr glosses these verses with 7:43, where the believers say, Praise be to God, Who guided us unto this. We would not have been rightly guided, had God not guided us.

58–60 These verses are a continuation of the words of the believer from the previous verses or the words of all of the believers in Paradise expressing joy at realizing that they will not suffer death again and that they have avoided Divine Punishment. Attaining to the Garden is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of the Garden, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57.

61 The message of this verse is to let those in this world perform righteous deeds, so that they too may attain the honor that God has bestowed upon these believers in the Hereafter (Ṭ). This verse can be understood as the words of God (Z) or as the words of the believers in the Garden.

62–63 In contrast to the fruits bestowed upon the believers as a known provision in the Garden (vv. 41–42), the disbelievers are given the tree of Zaqqūm, which is said to bear pain and sorrow (Z). As it is known that there is no good in Zaqqūm, the rhetorical question is posed here as a rebuke to the disbelievers for the course they have chosen (Z). Its effects are best described in 44:43–46: Truly the tree of Zaqqūm is the food of the sinner, like molten lead boiling in their bellies, like the boiling of boiling liquid (also see 56:51–53; commentary on 44:43–46). That Zaqqūm is a trial (fitnah) means that eating from it is a punishment in the Hereafter (IJ, Z).

64 That the tree of Zaqqūm emerges from Hell or in the depths of Hellfire means that its roots grow from the bottom of Hell and it is nourished by fire (IK). Some say that its roots reach to the depths of Hell, while its branches rise through its other levels (Z).

65–67 That its spathes are as the heads of satans indicates that it bears sheer evil (Z) or that its spathes are like snakes (IJ). The disbelievers eat thereof because they are commanded to do so of it they will have a brew of a boiling liquid. (68) Then their return shall be unto Hellfire. (69) Truly they found their fathers astray; (70) yet they hasten in their footsteps. (71) And before them most of those of old had indeed gone astray, (72) though We had indeed sent warners among them. (73) So behold how those who were warned fared in the end. (74) Not so for God's sincere servants. (75) And indeed Noah cried out to Us. How excellent are those who respond! (76) We saved him and his people from great distress, (77) and We made his (see 56:53); they fill their bellies either because of severe hunger or because they are forced to eat it even though they despise it (Z). Both interpretations allude to the fact that their own avaricious natures have forced them to continue to eat from Zaqqūm. But if they are satiated, then thirst overwhelms them, and they are given a drink that burns their faces and tears apart their intestines (Z). The brew of a boiling liquid (cf. 6:70; 10:4; 18:29; 38:57; 44:46; 47:15; 78:24–25; 88:5) that the disbelievers are made to drink stands in sharp contrast to the cool and pleasing drinks presented to the believers in the Garden (see 37:45–47; 76:5–6, 17–18, 21; 83:25–28) and to the rivers of water, milk, honey, and wine described in 47:15.

68 After receiving the punishment outlined in vv. 62–67, the disbelievers will be returned to Hellfire (IJ, Z). This verse is thus understood to mean that the boiling water lies outside of Hellfire and that they go back and forth between these punishments, as in 55:43–44: This is Hell, which the guilty denied; to and fro shall they pass, between it and boiling waters (IK, R).

69–70 Because their fathers had followed a different set of beliefs, the disbelievers waxed arrogant when told to bear witness that there is no god but God (Ṭ), preferring the way of their forefathers to the one to which the Prophet called them (R), as in 2:170: When it is said unto them, "Follow what God has sent down," they say, "Nay, we follow that which we found our fathers doing." What! Even though their fathers understood nothing, and were not rightly guided? (cf. 5:104; 7:28; 11:109; 43:22–23).

71–72 These verses serve as an affirmation that most human collectivities have gone astray and rejected the prophets God sent to them. This aspect of history may be cited as counsel for the Prophet to be patient and to continue in calling the people to religion, since the prophets before him, whose stories are recounted in the remainder of this sūrah, had also been rejected, but ultimately prevailed (R).

73 Addressed to the Prophet, this verse also serves as a warning to the disbelievers (R) and as a segue to the stories of Noah, Abraham, Lot, and other prophets in the remainder of the sūrah. This verse, about those who were warned, is repeated as part of 10:73; other verses enjoin people to consider the final ends of the deniers (3:137; 6:11; 16:36; 43:25), the guilty (7:84; 27:69), the workers of corruption (7:86, 103; 27:14), and the wrongdoers (10:39; 28:40); see 10:39c.

74 This verse follows upon v. 71, meaning that those who are sincere have not gone astray, or upon v. 73, meaning that the end of those who are sincere is not the same as that of the disbelievers (R). The latter interpretation is borne out by the following accounts, in which prophets such as Noah and Lot are saved along with small groups of their followers.

75–82 These verses give the broad contours of Noah's story. For more detailed accounts, see 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21, and Sūrah 71. Additional brief accounts are also found in 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 21:76–77; 29:14–15; 54:9–15.

75 Noah cried out may be a reference to Noah's calling upon God to help him against his opponents or to save him from the flood (IJ) or to Noah's supplication to God in 71:5–26 (Ṭ). Those who respond would then refer to God and the blessings He brought upon Noah by saving him and his small group of followers from the flood (IJ).

76 His people refers to those who responded to Noah's call to follow God. According to traditional accounts, though Noah called people to progeny endure, (78) and We left [a blessing] upon him among later generations: (79) "Peace be upon Noah throughout the worlds." (80) Thus do We recompense the virtuous. (81) Truly he was among Our believing servants. (82) Then We drowned the others. (83) And surely among his party was Abraham, (84) when he came unto his Lord with a sound heart, (85) when he said unto his father and his people, "What do you worship? (86) Is it a perversion, gods apart from God, that you desire? (87) What, then, think you of the Lord of the worlds?" (88) Then he cast a glance at the stars (89) and said, "Truly

God for hundreds of years (see 29:14), few people followed him. Great distress refers to the insults he suffered (IJ, IK) or to his being separated from his people (IJ).

77–79 As the only line of human beings to survive the flood, Noah's progeny endured. He was also blessed with being remembered well, in a manner befitting his status, by later generations (IK). His story is thus left as a sign for the worlds (29:15; cf. 54:15). The prayer for peace upon Noah throughout the worlds means, "May all of mankind, the jinn, and the angels wish him peace" (R, Z).

80 Cf. 6:84; 12:22; 28:14; 37:105, 110, 121, 131; 77:44. For the virtuous, see 29:69c. The manner in which God rewards the virtuous, or those who do what is good and beautiful, is with greater beauty, as in 42:23: And whosoever accomplishes a good deed, We shall increase him in goodness thereby; and 55:60: Is the reward of goodness aught but goodness?

81 This refrain appears here for Noah and at the end of three of the other accounts of prophets that follow in this sūrah (Abraham, v. 111; Moses, v. 122; and Elias, v. 132).

82 Those who drowned are elsewhere said to be those who denied God's signs (see 7:64; 10:73), since they were an evil people (21:77).

83 His party could refer to the party of Noah or to that of Muhammad (IJ, R, Ṭ) and in either case means that they were of the same religion and creed (IJ, Ṭ). According to some, the only two prophets between Noah and Abraham were the Arabian prophets Hūd and Ṣāliḥ (R, Z).

84 That Abraham had a sound heart means that he never inclined to idolatry (IJ, R, Ṭ, Z), that his heart was free from doubt (Qm, Ṭb), that his heart was free from all vice and he only desired for others what he desired for himself (R), or that there was none but God in his heart (Ṭb), and that he was completely submitted to Him; see 26:89c.

85–96 This is one of several passages in which Abraham argues with his people regarding the inanity of their idolatry (cf. 2:258; 6:83; 21:51–67). As al-Rāzī observes, the Quran invokes the story of Abraham in the context of the Prophet Muhammad's disputations with the idolaters, because even the idolatrous Arabs had great respect for Abraham as one of their most prominent forefathers; see 43:26–27c.

86 The subtle grammatical structure of this verse allows it to be read in several different ways: "Do you perform perversion and worship gods other than God!" (IJ); "Do you desire gods apart from God out of perversion" (R, Z); "Do you desire perversion—gods apart from God?" (R); or "Do you desire gods apart from God in perversion?" (R). In all four readings, the verse is an expression of rebuke and amazement.

87 This verse may mean, "Do you think that God would permit inanimate objects to share in the worship that is His due alone, or do you think that He is of their same genus, such that you should make them equal in worship?" (R). It could also be understood to mean, "What, then, do you think God will do with you when you meet Him, while you have been worshipping other gods?" (IK, Ṭ).

88–89 Cast a glance at the stars is an idiomatic expression meaning to contemplate something, interpreted here to mean that Abraham cast his glance upward while contemplating what to do. Some say he feigned reading his own future, which is then the basis for his claiming to be sick (IJ). His claim to be sick could also mean that his

I am sick." (90) But they turned their backs on him. (91) Then he went quietly to their gods and said, "Will you not eat? (92) What ails you that you speak not?" (93) Then he turned upon them, striking with his right hand. (94) Then they came to him rushing. (95) He said, "Do you worship that which you carve, (96) while God created you and that which you make?" (97) They said, "Erect a building for him and cast him into the fire." (98) They desired to scheme against him, so We made them the lowest. (99) And he said, "Truly I am going unto my Lord. He will guide me. (100) My Lord, give unto me from among the righteous." (101) So We gave him glad tidings of a gentle son. (102) When he had heart was sickened because of the worshipping of other gods (IJ, IK) or that he was feigning an illness in order to avoid going to a religious festival where idol worship would have occurred (IK, Ṭ). The Prophet Muhammad is reported to have said, "Abraham did not lie, save three times: two were for the sake of God, his saying, Truly I am sick, and his saying, Nay, but it was the largest of them that did this [21:63]; and his saying regarding Sarah, 'She is my sister'" (Ṭ).

90–93 Elsewhere, Abraham warns his people, And by God, I shall scheme against your idols after you have turned your backs (21:57). The people had placed food before the idols, so Abraham mockingly asked why the idols did not eat it (IK). Then he destroyed all but the largest of them (see 21:58–59c), which he accused of having been responsible for smashing the other idols, as a means of mocking their beliefs; see 21:62–63c.

94–96 The question in these verses is, "Do you worship what you make rather than the One Who made you?" V. 96 can also be understood to mean that God creates human beings and all that they do (IK), since He is the only one who can create. In this latter sense, it is related to the affirmation of God's Omnipotence in such verses as 3:128: Naught is thine in the matter; 3:154: The decision belongs entirely to God; and 12:21: And God prevails over His affair, but most of mankind know not.

97–99 For the story of the attempt to burn Abraham in a fire, which God then commanded, Be coolness and peace for Abraham (21:69), see commentary on 21:68–70. Abraham says, I am going unto my Lord, when he decides to leave his people, declaring that he will go where God commands him; or he says it before he is cast into the fire, meaning that he is prepared to die and that God will guide him to the Garden or save him from the Fire (IJ). From a spiritual perspective, this passage alludes to the manner in which people should smash the idols of the things upon which they rely and depend only upon God (Aj).

100 This verse, which is understood by most to be a prayer for a righteous son, can also be interpreted as a prayer asking God to allow Abraham to be among the righteous.

101 The son announced here is understood to be either Isaac or Ishmael (IJ, Ṭ). Here it is God Who gives Abraham glad tidings; in all the other accounts angels come to Abraham with glad tidings of a son (see 11:69c; 15:53; 29:31; 51:28). Together these verses indicate that God gave glad tidings through the intermediary of the angels.

102 Although various aspects of Abraham's prophetic mission are addressed in over two hundred Quranic verses, this is the only passage to address what is known in the Biblical tradition as the Binding of Isaac. Partaking of his father's endeavors refers to joining Abraham in his work, being able to travel with him, or having reached the age at which he could worship (IJ, Ṭ). Some say this phrase refers to his being thirteen years old (IJ). It could also be understood as an allusion to his having begun to manifest some aspects of the gift of prophethood. The Arabic literally reads, "I see in the dream that I sacrifice you," but because the visions of all prophets are said to be true, it is interpreted to mean that he received the command to do so in his dream, not that he had become old enough to partake of his father's endeavors, Abraham said, "O my son! I see while dreaming that I am to sacrifice you. So consider, what do you see?" He replied, "O my father! Do as you are commanded. You will find me, God willing, among those who are patient." (103) But when they had submitted and Abraham had laid him upon his forehead, (104) We called unto him, "O Abraham! (105) Thou hast been true to the vision." Thus indeed do We recompense the virtuous. (106) Truly this was the manifest trial. (107) Then We ransomed a vision of the actual sacrificing (IJ, Ṭ). What do you see employs the same verb, "to see" (raʾā), used in the announcement of Abraham's dream. In this sense, it may allude to the prophethood of Abraham's son.

Commentators are divided as to whether the son to be slain was Isaac or Ishmael (IJ). While many earlier commentators, such as al-Ṭabarī, take Isaac to be the son in question, several later commentators, such as al-Rāzī and Ibn Kathīr, favor Ishmael, some of whom go so far as to assert that the attribution to Isaac derived from a corruption of the Bible (IK). Those who see this verse as a reference to Ishmael interpret 19:54–55 as a reference to his fulfilling his promise to allow himself to be sacrificed: And remember Ishmael in the Book. Verily he was true to the promise, and he was a messenger, a prophet. He used to bid his people to prayer and almsgiving, and he was pleasing unto his Lord (IK, Q, R).

Although this story may appear to be similar to the Biblical account, it differs in several significant details. Abraham does not act immediately upon his dream, but asks the potential "sacrifice," his son, for his opinion. His son then becomes a willing participant in the sacrifice, surrendering himself to the Will of God when he says, You will find me, God willing, among those who are patient. Some say that it was the son who suggested he be laid upon his forehead (v. 103) and that he told his father to use his garment as a shroud when the sacrifice was complete (IK, Ṭ). Thus Abraham's son is not a passive participant, as in the Biblical account, where he remains unaware of the Divine Command and asks, "Where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" (Genesis 22:7). Rather, he is a free and active participant who chooses complete obedience to God at the greatest personal sacrifice.

103 That they submitted means they submitted to God's Command (IJ, IK) or that they devoted themselves completely to God (R). Abraham laid his son upon his forehead, so that he would not have to see his face when sacrificing him (IK, Ṭ). According to Islamic tradition, the ritual of stoning Satan on the ḥajj is connected to this event, as Satan is said to have attempted to intervene in the performance of the sacrifice, at which time Abraham twice stoned him, each time with seven pebbles, until he disappeared (IK, Q, Ṭ).

104 Before Abraham could sacrifice his son, God called to him, and when he turned, Abraham found a fine white-horned ram to take his son's place in the sacrifice (IK). According to some accounts, the horns of this ram were kept in the Kaʿbah, but were lost when the Kaʿbah burned down in 63/683. This substitution of a ram for Abraham's son serves as the basis for the ritual of slaughtering an animal that is required as the final rite of the ḥajj.

105 That Abraham was true to the vision means that he carried out what he was commanded and that he achieved its goal by demonstrating complete obedience to God (R). Regarding the last sentence, which serves as a refrain in this sūrah, see 29:69c; 37:80c.

106 That the command to sacrifice is described as a trial is also understood to mean that it was a blessing (Q), as it is through severe trials that God brings His pious servants the best reward in this life and the next, if they are able to faithfully endure them, as did Abraham (Ṭb).

107 According to tradition, the great sacrifice that ransomed the son was a ram that had grazed in the Garden of Paradise for forty years (IK, Q, Ṭ) and was brought to Abraham by the Archangel Gabriel (Ṭb).

him with a great sacrifice. (108) And We left [a blessing] upon him among later generations: (109) "Peace be upon Abraham." (110) Thus do We recompense the virtuous. (111) Truly he was among Our believing servants. (112) And We gave him glad tidings of Isaac, a prophet from among the righteous. (113) And We blessed him and Isaac. And among their progeny are the virtuous and those who clearly wrong themselves. (114) And We were gracious unto Moses and Aaron. (115) We saved them and their people from great distress (116) and helped them, so that they were the victors. (117) And We gave the two of them the Book that makes clear, (118) and guided the two of them upon the straight path. (119) And We left [a blessing] upon them among later generations: (120) "Peace be upon Moses and Aaron." (121) Thus indeed do We recompense the virtuous. (122) Truly they were among Our believing servants. (123) And truly Elias was among the message

111 See 37:81c.

112 Cf. 11:71; 15:53–54. That Isaac is mentioned here is cited by some as support for the argument that it is Ishmael who is mentioned in v. 101 (IK, Ṭb), since Abraham's fulfillment of the test with his first son is presented as the basis for his being given glad tidings of a second son. Others understand this verse as a separate statement affirming that Isaac was the subject of the sacrifice and was to be given the gift of prophethood (Q, Ṭ).

113 Him can refer to Abraham or Ishmael (Q). The blessing upon them is understood either as a multitude of offspring or the line of prophethood issuing through them (Q). That there will be both the virtuous and those who clearly wrong themselves among their progeny can be understood as a reminder that merely being descendants is not sufficient for salvation; they must also be believers and perform good deeds. In this way it is seen as a response to the attitude of some Jews and Christians when they say, We are the children of God, and His beloved ones (5:18).

114–20 For the Quranic account of Moses, see 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 17:101–4; 18:60–82; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46; 40:23–45; 43:46–56; 44:17–31.

114–15 That God was gracious unto Moses and Aaron is a reference to either all of the worldly and religious blessings they were given (Ṭs) or specifically the gift of prophethood (IJ). Their being saved from the great distress means either that they were saved from the rule of Pharaoh and his people (Z; cf. 44:30–31) or that they were spared from being drowned in the sea like Pharaoh and his host (Q, R, Z).

116 Some see them and they here as references to Moses, Aaron, and their people, though others maintain that they refers only to Moses and Aaron (IJ, Q).

117–18 The Book that makes clear is the Torah, which, like all revealed books, clarifies hidden matters of which people are ignorant (Ṭb). Thus it is also described as a Book wherein is a guidance and a light, by which the prophets who submitted [unto God] judged those who are Jews, as did the sages and the rabbis, in accordance with such of God's Book as they were bidden to preserve and to which they were witnesses (5:44). Regarding their being guided upon the straight path, see 1:6c.

(131) Thus indeed do We recompense the virtuous. (132) Truly he was among Our believing servants. (133) And truly Lot was among the message bearers. (134) Behold! We saved him and his family all together, (135) save for an old woman who was among those who lagged behind. (136) Then We destroyed the others. are two different prophets, Elias (or Elijah) and Idrīs (or Enoch).

124–28 As in the story of Abraham above, Elias rebukes his people for failing to worship God alone. Baal is said to be the name of an idol that the people worshipped, a word in their language for "Lord" (IJ, IK, Q), or the name of a woman whom they worshipped (IJ, Q). For their denial, they are arraigned unto the punishment, except for God's sincere servants (Q).

129–30 See 37:77–79c. The Arabic for Elias in v. 123 (as well as 6:85) is Ilyās, but here it is Ilyāsīn, which many believe is another rendering of the same name (Q, Ṭ). But it can also be read as a plural form, meaning "the Ilyāses," or "the family of Ilyās," which is then understood to mean Ilyās and those who followed his religion (Q, Ṭ, Z).

131 Cf. 6:84; 12:22; 28:14; 37:80, 105, 110, 121; 77:44; see 29:69c; 37:80c.

132 See 37:81c.

133 For other narrative accounts of Lot, who is considered to be either Abraham's nephew or cousin, and Lot's people, see 7:80–84; 11:77–83; 15:57–77; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 29:26–35; 54:33–38, and the similar Biblical narrative in Genesis 19.

134–35 Him and his family refers either to Lot's immediate family or to all those who followed him. The old woman who . . . lagged behind is Lot's wife; see 7:83; 15:59–60; 26:171; 27:57; 29:32.

136 After they refused to pay him any heed, the people of Lot's town were destroyed by stones of baked clay (11:82; 15:74) or a torrent of stones (54:34) that are said to have rained down upon them as a torment from Heaven (29:34); see also 7:84.

137–38 These verses are addressed to the people of Makkah, who some say would pass by the remnants of Lot's town on their travels to Syria (IJ, Ṭ). Others say that they refer to God's having made the region of Lot's people into a foul body of water that is on a well-traveled route (IK). But they fail to reflect upon the implications of these ruins (Ṭ).

139 For other accounts of the story of Jonah, see 6:86; 10:98; 21:87–88; 68:48–50. As in the Bible, Jonah is said to have fled from his prophetic mission upon a ship. Thus in 68:48 Muhammad is counseled, Be not like the companion of the fish, who cried out while choking with anguish. Raised as a poor child and in the care of ascetics and scholars from the age of seven until the age of twenty-five, Jonah was called to deliver God's message to the people of Nineveh (Kisāʾī, Qiṣaṣ al-anbiyāʾ).

140–41 According to the Biblical book of Jonah, Jonah, having fled "from the presence of the Lord" (1:3), is presented as having brought a tempest upon the ship (1:4–6). Realizing that some evil had beset them, the sailors cast lots to see on whose account they were beset. When laden ship, (141) and then cast lots and was among those rejected. (142) Then the fish swallowed him, for he was blameworthy. (143) And had he not been among those who glorify, (144) he would have tarried in its belly till the Day they are resurrected. (145) So We cast him, sick, upon the barren shore. (146) And We caused a gourd tree to grow over him. (147) Then We sent him unto a hundred thousand or more. (148) And they believed; so We granted them enjoyment for a the lots fell to Jonah, they said, "Tell us why this calamity has come upon us? What is your occupation? Where do you come from? What is your country? And of what people are you?" (1:7–8). When they discerned that it was on account of Jonah's "fleeing from the presence of the Lord" that the tempest had come upon them, Jonah told them to cast him into the sea (1:12). They nonetheless strived to reach shore without sacrificing Jonah, but when the seas continued to rage, "they picked Jonah up and threw him into the sea; and the sea ceased from its raging" (1:15). According to some Quranic commentators, the sailors remained hesitant to throw Jonah in the sea; so he threw himself directly into the fish's mouth when it rose, by God's Command, to carry him away (IK). He then remained in the belly of the fish for three, seven, or forty days according to different accounts; according to another account he was swallowed in the morning and cast out in the evening (IK).

142 Jonah was blameworthy for having fled Nineveh. It is reported that when he began calling them to repent, the Ninevites beat him. He continued preaching to them for forty days, but they dismissed him as mad (Kisāʾī, Qiṣaṣ al-anbiyāʾ). God then told Jonah to retreat to a hill above the city to watch the punishment come upon them, but when they repented and were spared, Jonah went away in anger, and thought We had no power over him (21:87). Some say that he was angry that they were not punished for having rejected him, and thus he fled on the ship (Kisāʾī, Qiṣaṣ).

143–44 Had it not been for the life of devotion lived before these events, Jonah would have remained in the belly of the fish (IK, Ṭ). Thus some relate this story to a saying of the Prophet Muhammad, "Seek to know God in times of ease, and He will know you in times of difficulty" (IK). This verse can also be understood as a reference to Jonah's having cried out in the darkness, "There is no god but Thee! Glory be to Thee! Truly I have been among the wrongdoers" (21:87; Aj, IK, Ṭ); for the more extensive prayer and repentance of Jonah in the Bible, see Jonah 2:1–9. If not for his praising God, he would have remained in the belly of the fish alive until the day on which human beings are resurrected (Aj), or the belly of the fish would have been his grave until the Day of Resurrection (Aj, Ṭ).

145 Jonah was washed up on the shore in answer to his prayers while in the belly of the fish, as in 21:88: So We answered him, and saved him from grief. Thus do We save the believers. Jonah's sickness was either that his body was weak or his heart was sick at having disobeyed God.

146 The gourd tree is understood to be beneficial for both the shade and the nourishment it provides (IK). In the Book of Jonah, the tree appears at the end of the story (4:6–10), growing and withering in a miraculous fashion.

147 Having repented, Jonah was then sent back to Nineveh, whose people had also repented and now accepted Jonah. Thus 10:98 says of them, Why has not a single town believed and benefitted from its belief, other than the people of Jonah? When they believed, We removed from them the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world, and We granted them enjoyment for a while.

148 The people of Nineveh now heeded Jonah's warning and, according to the Biblical account, declared a fast to atone for their sins; the king issued a decree declaring that human beings and animals should refrain from food and water, and all people must turn away from evil and violence (see Jonah 3:7–9). God then allowed them to enjoy their life on earth, spared of any Divine Punishment, until their appointed end (IK).

while. (149) So ask them, does your Lord have daughters while they have sons? (150) Or did We create the angels female, while they were witnesses? (151) Behold! It is of their own perversion that they say, (152) "God has begotten," while truly they are liars. (153) Has He chosen daughters over sons? (154) What ails you? How do you judge? (155) Do you not reflect? (156) Or have you a manifest authority? (157) Bring your book, then, if you are truthful. (158) They have made kinship between Him and the jinn—yet the jinn know that they will surely be arraigned; (159) Glory be to God above that which they ascribe. (160) Not so 149–53 These verses, similar to 43:16 and 52:39, now turn to criticism of the belief that God has sons or daughters (cf. 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 39:4; 43:16, 81–82; 52:39; 72:3). The idolaters are initially asked how they can attribute daughters to God, when they themselves prefer sons and are distressed by daughters, as in 16:57–58: And they assign unto God daughters—glory be to Him!—while they have that which they desire. And when one of them receives tidings of a female [child], his face darkens, and he is choked with anguish (cf. 43:17). Criticism is aimed not only at the belief itself, but also at its lack of internal logic; see also 43:16; 52:39; 53:21–22.

150 The question asks, "How have they been able to assign gender to the angels, whom they view as consorts of God, when they have no knowledge of their creation?" See also 43:19: And they have made the angels, who are servants of the Compassionate, females. Did they witness their creation?

151–52 Perversion renders ifk, which is also understood to mean "delusion," "deception," or "falsehood"; see 29:61c. The idolaters' assertion that God has begotten is related to their saying that angels are females, as some of them conceived of God as having consorts with whom He begat other deities. Thus 6:101 asks, How should He have a child when He has no consort, and He created all things?

153 Similar to this verse, 17:40 asks, Did your Lord favor you with sons, while He took females from among the angels [for Himself]? Surely you speak a monstrous word!

154 This verse asks, in effect, "What kind of reasoning would make you say such things?" (IK) or "Given the incoherency of your worldview, how can you maintain such things?" Cf. 10:35; 68:36.

155 This verse is one of the Quran's many invitations to reflect upon the nature of God's creation in order to facilitate spiritual understanding; see also 3:191c; 11:24, 30; 16:17; 30:8; 45:23c; 56:62. Here the implication is that if the idolaters did indeed reflect, they would see the falsity of their claims and the vacuity of their worldview.

156–57 Manifest authority is understood as a reference to revelation, as when Moses is reported to have been sent with a manifest authority (4:153; 11:96; 23:45; 40:23; 44:19; 51:38). Thus, while vv. 154–55 reproach the idolaters for having no intellectual proofs to substantiate their assertion that God has begotten offspring, these verses reproach them for having no revealed source to substantiate their claims. In the same vein, 35:40 asks rhetorically, Do they have a share in the heavens, or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it? (cf. 34:44; 46:4; 57:37–38; 68:47); see 35:40c; 46:4c.

158 Despite all of the claims that the idolaters make regarding the jinn, the jinn themselves know that they are powerless before God and that, like human beings, they will be arraigned before God on the Day of Judgment. Thus Satan, regarded by most as the head of the evil jinn, will say to human beings after they have disbelieved as a result of following his prompting, Surely I am quit of you. Truly I fear God, the Lord of the worlds (59:16; cf. 14:22).

160 Cf. vv. 74, 128. God's sincere servants do not ascribe to the jinn kinship with God, as do the idolaters.

for God's sincere servants. (161) For truly neither you nor that which you worship (162) can tempt any against Him, (163) save he who is to burn in Hellfire. (164) "There is none among us, but that he has a known station. (165) And truly we are those who are ranged [in ranks]. (166) Truly we are those who glorify." (167) Indeed, they used to say, (168) "If only we had a reminder from those of old, (169) then we would indeed be God's sincere servants." (170) But they disbelieved in it. So soon they will know, (171) for indeed Our Word has already gone forth unto Our message bearers (172) that they will surely be helped, (173) and that Our host will surely be victorious. (174) So turn away from them for a 161–63 Neither the disbelievers nor the jinn have any power to misguide or mislead, as God has already decreed each individual's final end. This passage thus reflects another aspect of God's Words to Satan, As for My servants, truly thou hast no authority over them (17:65). Satan himself acknowledges this, saying, I shall cause them to err all together, save Thy sincere servants among them (38:82–83; cf. 15:39–40).

164 These are understood to be the words of the angels (R, Ṭ), each of whom is assigned a station that is never left; some remain bowing, never straightening their spines; others remain prostrating, never lifting their heads (Z). In the immediate context, this verse is a declaration that they, like the jinn, know that any worship of them is misplaced (R). More broadly speaking, that all angels have a known station indicates that they have, like all created things other than human beings and jinn, no freedom to move from one station or level of being to another. In contrast, human beings and jinn have unknown stations and only reach their final known stations at the moment of death. As Ibn ʿArabī writes of human beings and jinn, "[Their] stations are designated and ordained within God's Knowledge and unseen by them. Each of them reaches his station at the end of his breaths. Thus his last breath is in his known station upon which he dies. That is why they have been called to travel. Hence they travel, either upwardly by answering the summons or the revealed Law (Sharīʿah) or downwardly by answering the command of desire whence they know not, until after the object of desire has been attained. Hence each individual among man and jinn reaches in his traveling the known station for which he was created" (Futūḥāt, I 258.35–40).

165–66 The combination of the reference to their being ranged [in ranks] for prayer and worship (IK, R) and their glorifying God indicates that it is the angels who are meant. Ranged [in ranks] can also be understood as a reference to the hierarchy in which the angels are arranged, which is part of the universal hierarchy of existence.

167–70 Before the revelation of the Quran, the idolaters reportedly claimed that were a reminder, meaning a revealed Book like the Torah or the Gospel, to come to them, they would devote themselves to worshipping God. Then when the Quran came, they denied it (R); see also 6:155–57c. This is similar to their denial of the Prophet in 35:42–3. Nonetheless on the Day of Judgment, they will know the truth of what they rejected (cf. 15:3, 96; 29:66; 40:70; 43:89).

171–73 God has already informed His messengers that they will prevail over the disbelievers, in both this world and the next (IK), as in 40:51–52: Truly We shall help Our messengers and those who believe during the life of this world and on the Day when the witnesses arise, the Day when the excuses of the wrongdoers will not benefit them and theirs will be the curse, and theirs will be the evil abode. From a Quranic perspective, all prophetic missions are ultimately victorious, because God has decreed, "I shall surely prevail, I and My messengers!" (58:21).

174 Cf. 3:178. On the one hand, the Prophet is told to turn away from the disbelievers so that he can concentrate upon tending to the believers, as in 51:54–55: So turn away from them, for thou shalt time, (175) and observe them; for they will soon observe. (176) Do they seek to hasten Our Punishment? (177) When it alights in their very midst, evil will be the morning of those who were warned! (178) So turn away from them for a time, (179) and observe; for they will soon observe. (180) Glory be to thy Lord, the Lord of Might, above that which they ascribe. (181) Peace be upon the message bearers. (182) And praise be to God, Lord of the worlds.

not be blamed. And remind, for truly the reminder benefits the believers. On the other hand, he is told to turn away from them, because God will deal justly with them in due time, as in 54:6: So turn away from them on the Day wherein the Caller will call unto a terrible thing. The words for a time are understood to mean until death (IJ, Q), until the Day of Resurrection (R), until the Command is given to fight the disbelievers (IJ), until the Battle of Badr, (IJ, Q, R), or until the conquest of Makkah (IJ, Q, R). Thus some claim that this verse has been abrogated by other verses enjoining the Prophet and his followers to fight (IJ, IK, Q); see also commentary on 9:1–5, 29.

175 Cf. 3:179. The Prophet is told to observe what befalls the disbelievers in this life and the next, for they will observe the Divine Aid and Support that comes to him in this life and the great reward that he will receive in the next (R). It could also be understood to mean that they will soon observe the punishment of the Day of Resurrection (Q).

176 The Prophet had warned the idolaters of an impending punishment, but they mocked the warning, saying things such as When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25), and going so far as to say, O God, if this be the truth from Thee, rain down stones upon us from the sky, or bring upon us a painful punishment (8:32). For other passages where the disbelievers challenge the Prophet to hasten their punishment, see 10:50–51; 13:6; 22:47; 26:204; 27:46, 72; 29:53; 38:16; 51:14.

177 The punishment will then alight upon the disbelievers when they least expect it, as in 29:53: And it will surely come upon them suddenly, while they are unaware (cf. 21:40; 26:201–2; 39:56).

178–79 Cf. vv. 174–75. The repetition of these verses can be seen as a reaffirmation of this essential lesson (IK), or the first instance can be understood as a reference to observing things in this world and this second instance as a reference to observing the events of the Hereafter (R).

180 Cf. 23:91; 37:159. On one level, above that which they ascribe refers to the partners that the idolaters ascribe to God (IJ), but on another level it refers to God's complete transcendence beyond all that is other than Him (Q) and the inability of any human description of God to attain to God's true Nature, since naught is like unto Him (42:11). In this vein, the sixth Shiite Imam, Jaʿfar al-Ṣādiq, is reported to have said, "Whosoever likens God to His creatures assigns partners unto Him. God does not resemble anything, and nothing resembles Him. And whatever occurs to the mind, He is other than that."

181–82 Regarding the messengers, the Prophet is reported to have said, "If you send peace upon me, send peace upon the messengers, for I am a messenger among the messengers" (IK, Q, Ṭ); regarding greetings of peace upon the Prophet, see 33:56c. It is reported that the Prophet would often recite vv. 180–82 at the end of his prayers (Q) and that ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, in a saying sometimes attributed to the Prophet (IK), counseled, "Whosoever desires that the greatest measure of reward be measured for him on the Day of Resurrection, let his last words at any gathering be Glory be to thy Lord, the Lord of Might, above that which they ascribe. Peace be upon the message bearers. And praise be to God, Lord of the worlds" (Bg).

Ṣād

Ṣād

Ṣād is a Makkan sūrah believed to have been revealed directly after Sūrah 54, al-Qamar (JJ). It takes its name from the opening letter, ṣād, one of the separated letters with which twenty-nine sūrahs begin. It also is known to some as Dāwūd, or "David" (Aj), since it provides the most extensive account of the Prophet David in the Quran.

From one perspective, the opening verses are a response to the claim of the disbelievers in 37:168–69: If only we had a reminder from those of old, then we would indeed be God's sincere servants (Aj, Āl). V. 1 alludes to the fact that the Quran contains what they claim to desire, but v. 2 explains that they will not accept it, because of their disposition toward vainglory and schism. From another perspective, this sūrah follows upon the promise that God's host will surely be victorious (37:173) in that it begins by denouncing the Quraysh as a mere host among the parties yonder routed (v. 11), refers to other tribes that were routed for their defiance (vv. 12–16), and then shows the ways in which different prophets triumphed over the trials sent to them by God (Bq).

Ṣād begins by denouncing the Quraysh for their disbelief in the Prophet Muhammad and questioning the internal logic of their beliefs (vv. 1–11). A general recounting of the fate that befell the parties who had denied previous prophets (vv. 12–16) then leads into accounts of the trials that confronted the prophets David (vv. 17–26), Solomon (vv. 30–40), and Job (vv. 41–44). A brief mention of other prophets (vv. 45–48) then segues into a discussion of the blessings of Paradise (vv. 49–54), the punishments of Hell (vv. 55–61), and the way the denizens of Hell wonder why those whom they had thought to be astray are not in Hell with them (vv. 62–64). A brief affirmation of God's Omnipotence and the Prophet's inability to produce anything more than what God has revealed to him (vv. 65–70) introduces the last section (vv. 71–85), which discusses the creation of Adam, God's commanding the angels to prostrate to him, and the refusal of Iblīs, or Satan, to do so. The sūrah closes with a final address in which the Prophet is instructed to promise the Quraysh that they will eventually know the truth of the revelation (vv. 86–88).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Ṣād. By the Quran possessed of remembrance. (2) Nay, but those who disbelieve are in vainglory and schism. (3) How many a generation before them have We destroyed? And they called out when the time for escape had passed. (4) Now they marvel that a warner from among themselves has come unto

1 The Arabic letter ṣād is among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt), which are found at the beginning of twenty-nine *sūrah*s and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. Ṣād is given several possible meanings. It may be an allusion to the Names of God beginning with the letter ṣād (IJ, Ṭs), such as al-Ṣamad, "the Eternally Sufficient unto Himself," al-Ṣāniʿ, "the Maker," and al-Ṣādiq, "the Truthful" (R); an abbreviation for a phrase, such as ṣadaqa ʾLlāh, "God has spoken the truth," or al-Ṣādiq Allāh, "the Truthful One is God," or ṣadaqa Muḥammad, "Muhammad has spoken the truth" (R); one of the names of the Quran (IJ, Ṭs); or a name for this sūrah (IJ, R, Ṭs). Remembrance translates dhikr, which in this context is understood to mean "honor" or "renown" (sharaf; IJ, IK, Ṭ), as it is also understood in 43:44 and 94:4 (R, Ṭs), or clarification (bayān; IJ, R), because the verse mentions those things that, when reflected upon, lead one to the truth (Ṭs). Dhikr is also employed in several verses as a name for the Quran, in which case it is rendered "the Reminder," as in 21:10: We have indeed sent down unto you a Book wherein is your Reminder; see also 36:69c. This verse can thus be understood as an oath invoking the Quran, which is possessed of remembrance, because it possesses those things that remind one of God, His Oneness, His Names and Attributes, His prophets, stories of previous communities, the Resurrection, and the Divine Decree, as alluded to in 6:38: We have neglected nothing in the Book (Ṭs).

2 Vainglory renders ʿizzah, which, when used to describe a human attitude, connotes the belief that one is exempt from following anyone other than oneself, as in 2:206: And when it is said to him, "Reverence God," vainglory seizes him sinfully (R). Schism renders shiqāq (cf. 2:137, 176; 22:53; 41:52), which conveys a sense of fracture or separation and connotes an attitude of enmity, disobedience, opposition, and defiance (Ṭs), because one deems oneself equal or superior to someone whom one opposes (R), in this case the Prophet.

3 God then warns the disbelievers of the destruction that befell those before them who had an attitude of vainglory and schism toward the prophets God had sent them. This is one of several verses to refer to towns (6:6; 7:4; 21:11; 22:45, 48; 47:13) and whole generations (17:17; 19:74; 20:128; 36:31; 38:3; 50:36) that were destroyed for their iniquities and their refusal to accept the messengers God sent. That they called out when the time for escape had passed means that only when the punishment came upon them did they actually believe, but as God had already given them warning and a reprieve so that they could heed the warning, there was no more opportunity for them to achieve salvation; see also 21:12–13; 23:63–65; commentary on 40:83–85; as well as the story of Pharaoh in 10:90–91.

4 Here and in the almost identical 50:2, the incredulity of the idolaters is directed toward God for having chosen as a prophet either someone who did not formerly have high social standing among them, as in v. 8, or a human being rather than an angel, as in 25:7, where the disbelievers ask, What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him? (see also 6:8–9; 11:12; 14:10; 17:94; 23:33; 36:15; 41:14; 54:24; 64:6c). For other verses that speak of their marveling at this phenomenon, see 7:69; 10:2. In deriding the Prophet, the disbelievers labeled him a sorcerer (see also 10:2; 51:52), a charge also leveled against Moses (7:109; 26:34; 51:39) and Jesus (5:110; 61:6).

them, and the disbelievers say, "This is a lying sorcerer. (5) Has he made the gods one God? Truly this is an astounding thing!" (6) And the notables among them set out, [saying], "Go! Be steadfast to your gods. Truly this is a thing desired. (7) We did not hear of this in the creed of latter days. This is naught but an invention. (8) Has the Reminder been sent down upon him among all of us?" Nay, but they are in doubt regarding My Reminder! Nay, they have not yet tasted My Punishment! (9) Or have they the treasuries of thy Lord's Mercy, the 5–7 These verses reportedly repeat the words expressed by some of the leaders among the Quraysh. They had gone with the Prophet to his uncle and protector, Abū Ṭālib, to complain about the Prophet's preaching. When asked by his uncle, "What do you want from your people?" the Prophet responded, "O my uncle! I only want from them a single declaration, which if they say it, the Arabs will follow them and the non-Arabs will pay tribute to them." The leaders of the Quraysh said, "One declaration! By thy father! We will say ten! What is it?" And Abū Ṭālib asked, "What is the declaration, O son of my brother?" And the Prophet responded, "There is no god but God." At which the leaders stood up and scoffed, Has he made the gods one God? Truly this is an astounding thing! (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). According to other accounts, this event occasioned the revelation of vv. 1–7 (IJ).

Rather than heeding the Prophet or considering what he said, the leaders of the Quraysh hardened their opposition to him, agreeing to be steadfast to their gods and firm in their own religion. This was in part because they believed that if they abandoned the worship of their idols, they would be afflicted with famine and distress (Ṭs). Their reasoning was that if they had not heard this message from their predecessors, then it must be something false (R). Thus to their minds the Quran must have been an invention or a fabrication by Muhammad (see 21:5; 25:4; 32:3; 34:8, 43; 42:24; 46:8), a charge also brought against Noah by the leaders among his people (23:38) and against Moses by Pharaoh and his hosts (28:36). For responses to this charge, see 10:37–38; 11:13, 35; 12:11; 46:8. Regarding the tendency of leaders and notables to reject revelation, see 34:34c.

8 V. 4 reflects the disbelievers' astonishment that a human being rather than an angel was sent to them with a revelation, and this verse shows their reticence to accept the fact that, if God were to choose a human being, He would have chosen an orphan with little wealth or political power. Their reaction is similar to the idolaters' question in 43:31: Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns (i.e., Makkah and Ṭā'if)? In this sense, while v. 4 expresses their amazement, this verse and 43:31 reveal their jealousy. They doubt God's Reminder, meaning the Quran. The last sentence can be understood to mean that they continue to doubt, because they have not yet tasted God's Punishment, but that, were they to taste it, they would know (R). Nay translates the emphatic particle bal, which can either negate or affirm. If understood as affirming, the verse would be rendered, "Indeed, they are in doubt regarding My Reminder! Indeed, they will taste My Punishment!"

9 This verse asks whether the disbelievers have the keys to prophecy, so that they can have it come upon whomever they will (IJ, Ṭs). It can also be understood more broadly as a reference to all of the mercies bestowed by God, as in 43:32: Is it they who apportion the Mercy of thy Lord? We have apportioned for them their livelihood in the life of this world and have raised some of them above others in rank, that some of them may take others into service. And the Mercy of thy Lord is better than that which they amass. Elsewhere, the Prophet is told to say to the disbelievers, Were you to possess the treasuries of my Lord's Mercy, you would surely withhold them, out of fear of spending. Man is ever miserly! (17:100).

Mighty, the Bestower? (10) Or have they sovereignty over the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them? Then let them ascend by some means; (11) a host among the parties yonder routed. (12) The people of Noah denied before them, as did ᶜĀd and Pharaoh of the tent poles, (13) Thamūd, the people of Lot, and the inhabitants of the thicket; they are the parties. (14) Each of them did naught but deny the messengers; so My Retribution came due. (15) They await naught but a single cry for which there is no delay. (16) And they say, "Our Lord, hasten our share unto us before the Day of Reckoning." (17) Bear patiently

10 This rhetorical question, posed as both rebuke and derision, is similar to questions posed in 4:53–55; 42:21; 43:79. If the disbelievers do indeed possess such power, then let them ascend through the doors of Heaven by their own machinations (IJ), then send the revelation down upon those whom they choose (R, Z). This verse also evokes imagery similar to that found in 22:15: Whosoever thinks that God will not help him in this world and the Hereafter, let him stretch out a rope to Heaven.

11 This verse serves as a segue into the discussion of earlier peoples who were destroyed for denying the messengers sent to them and promises that those who oppose the Prophet will face the same fate. Yonder is thus understood as an allusion to a point in the future when the disbelievers will be defeated or vanquished or to a place at a distance. Some say that it refers to the Battle of Badr (IJ, Ṭs), which would take place some years later in 2/624, while others consider it to be a reference to the Battle of the Trench in the year 5/627 (Ṭs).

12 For the Quranic account of Noah, see 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 11:25–48; 21:76–77; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; 37:75–82; 54:9–15, and Sūrah 71. ᶜĀd was a pre-Islamic Arabian tribe who rejected the prophet Hūd; see 7:65–72; 11:50–60. The precise meaning of awtād (cf. 89:10), here translated tent poles, is debated. Ibn ᶜAbbās says that awtād refers to the large army that served to establish Pharaoh's rule, as many tent poles bespeak a large army (IJ). Awtād is also said to refer to Pharaoh's alleged practice of using four stakes (awtād) to impale his victims and then leaving them for dead (IJ, Ṭs). Awtād can also mean "pillars," thus evoking an Arabic expression for someone who is always severe or firm, "He has firm pillars" (IJ).

13–14 Like the tribe of ᶜĀd, with whom it is often mentioned, the tribe of Thamūd was a pre-Islamic Arabian tribe who rejected the prophet sent to them; see 7:73–79; 11:61–68. For Lot's rejection by his people, see 15:57–77; 26:160–73. For the inhabitants of the thicket, who are said to have rejected the prophet Shuᶜayb, see 26:176–89. In this context, that they are the parties is meant to convey that the Quraysh constitute another of these parties (IJ, R, Ṭs), all of whom share the same fate of being punished for having denied the messengers sent to them, though in different ways. This last phrase could also be understood to mean, "They were the parties," alluding to the fact that the people of these previous tribes were wealthier and mightier than the Quraysh, but were defeated nonetheless (IK, R).

15 Here they refers either to the Quraysh or to all of the groups mentioned in the previous verses. When taken as a reference to the Quraysh, a single cry (cf. 36:29, 49; 37:19; 79:13) refers to the first blast of Seraphiel's trumpet, which will level all that is on the earth. When taken as a reference to all of the groups, a single cry refers to the second blast, which heralds the Resurrection. For the relation between the two blasts or cries, see 39:68c.

16 This verse is understood to be one of many verses in which the disbelievers mockingly seek to hasten their punishment (see 10:50–51; 13:6; 22:47; 26:204; 27:46, 72; 29:53; 37:176; 51:14). It may also refer to their asking for the rewards of the Garden when the Prophet described them (IJ, IK), thus alluding to their belief that they are in fact good and will receive reward rather than punishment when their account is taken, as in 2:11: And when it is said unto them, "Do not work corruption upon the earth," they say, "We are only working that which they say, and remember Our servant David, possessed of might; truly he turned oft [unto God]. (18) Truly We compelled the mountains to join him in glorifying at eventide and at the break of day. (19) And the birds gathered, each turning oft unto Him. (20) And We strengthened his sovereignty and righteousness." Here our share renders qiṭṭanā, which is also understood to mean "our book on which the record of our deeds is inscribed," "our account," or "our decree" (IJ).

17 The injunction to bear patiently in the face of insults from the disbelievers (cf. 20:130; 50:39; 73:10) is addressed to the Prophet (IJ, Q), but can also be understood as counsel for all believers. It can also be understood to convey an attitude of tolerance and forbearance that should prevail whenever circumstances permit, though many claim it is abrogated by 9:5 (IJ, Q). The combination of injunctions, to be patient and to tell the stories of David and other prophets, implies that conveying these stories may serve to persuade the disbelievers of the reality of Muhammad's prophethood (Q) or to console the Prophet to know of the trials that other prophets faced and their ability to overcome them. That David is possessed of might means that he had strength in both obeying and serving God (IK, Q, Sy) or in both prophethood and kingship, as he was given great strength in both domains (Aj). That he turned oft [unto God] (cf. 38:30, 44) means either that he repented, in the same way that the Prophet would regularly ask forgiveness of God a hundred times every day (Q), that he turned to God in all of his affairs (Aj, IK, R), or that he lived in a state of perpetual servanthood (Futūḥāt II 227.11). The Prophet Muhammad is reported to have said of David, "The prayer most loved by God is the prayer of David, and the fast most loved by God is the fast of David. He would sleep half the night, stand in prayer one-third of the night, and then sleep for its sixth part. And he would fast one day and break fast another day" (IJ, IK).

18 It is already in the nature of the mountains and the birds to glorify God, since whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorify God (59:1; 61:1; 62:1; 64:1; cf. 57:1; 59:24). That they are compelled to glorify God with David (cf. 21:79; 34:10) thus alludes to his properly fulfilling the function of God's vicegerent upon the earth (v. 26; cf. 6:165), in whose prayer all of creation takes part. At eventide and at the break of day may be understood to mean at the two ends of the day or at all times. David's prayer at the break of day is understood by many commentators to mean in the early morning after the time of the obligatory fajr prayer. It is thus taken as an allusion to the supererogatory prayer after sunrise but before noon, al-ḍuḥā (Aj, IJ, IK, Q).

19 The birds would gather, many say, because of the beauty of David's voice when he sang his prayers and would turn to God with their own praise. The pronoun in unto Him could also be rendered "him" if understood as a reference to David, meaning that the birds followed his commands (Aj, IK) and glorified God with him (Q).

20 In the Islamic tradition, David's kingdom was considered to have been the most powerful in the world (IK), but its strength and power derived from Divine Aid (R). Wisdom is understood here as a reference to prophethood (IJ, IK, Q) or to understanding and sound reasoning (IJ, Q). This verse could also be understood to mean that his kingdom was strengthened through the gift of virtuous and truthful ministers to assist him (ST). Decisive speech means clarity and truth of speech, the knowledge of giving decrees and administering justice (IJ), or the ability to make clear and decisive judgments between a plaintiff and a defendant (IJ), and thus denotes sound reasoning or sage judgment. From another perspective, decisive speech is related to the gift of revelation, in which case it refers to God's Speech. Decisive renders faṣl, which means "division" or "separation." Here it connotes speech that makes a clear division between right and wrong or truth and falsehood. Faṣl is also related to faṣṣala, meaning "to expound," which is used to describe the Quran as a Book whose signs have been expounded as an Arabic Quran for a people who know (41:3; cf. 7:52; 11:1). The wisdom given to David and other prophets thus includes the ability to "differentiate" (faṣṣala) between different aspects of reality and to "expound" them for others in a decisive gave him wisdom and decisive speech. (21) Has the report of the dispute come unto thee, when they scaled the sanctuary? (22) When they entered upon David, he was frightened of them. They said, "Fear not! We are two disputants: one of us has transgressed against the other; so judge between us with truth. Be not unjust, and guide us unto the right path. (23) Behold, this, my brother, has ninety-nine ewes, and I have one ewe. Yet he has said, 'Place her under my care,' and has overpowered me in speech." (24) He said, "He has indeed wronged you and clear manner, just as God expounded them for the prophets.

21–24 The plain sense of this story provides an example of David's judging equitably between two parties. Many commentators, however, connect it to the Biblical account in which David fell in love with Bathsheba (transliterated as Bathshaba^{c} or translated as Bint al-Qasam, "Daughter of the Oath") and then sent her husband, Uriah the Hittite, to the front lines of the battlefield, where he would be killed, so that David would be free to marry her (Q, Ṭ; see 2 Samuel 11). But the idea that David had adulterous relations with Bathsheba before Uriah's death, found in 2 Samuel 11:4–5, is considered by Muslims to be an abomination that could not have been committed by a prophet. Hence this detail is not found in most Islamic accounts.

The basis for relating these verses to the Biblical account of Bathsheba is interpreting the case of the one ewe being taken into the flock of ninety-nine ewes as a metaphor for David's actions—David, who had many wives, took Bathsheba, Uriah's only wife (IJ, Q, Ṭ)—and their similarity to the challenge that Nathan puts to David in 2 Samuel 12. This interpretation is supported by David's passing judgment after hearing the words of the plaintiff, representing Uriah's position, without having heard the argument of the defendant, representing David's position. Thus David realized that this was a metaphor for his own misdeeds, and his words in v. 24 are a condemnation of his own actions. He then sought forgiveness, fell prostrate, and repented. According to this interpretation, the two visitors were angels sent by God in the form of human beings (Āl, IJ, Q, Ṭ). God's trial of David (that We had tried him) would then refer to the entire story, from David's desiring Bathsheba to his moment of self-reckoning. It is said that God sent this trial because David had asked to be raised to the station of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; God responded by sending him a trial similar to those he had sent upon them (Ṭ).

Other commentators maintain that such details do not in and of themselves merit a connection with the story of Bathsheba, especially as such an interpretation must extrapolate beyond the plain sense of the text. Furthermore, there is little in the Quranic text to substantiate this connection, and, as Ibn Kathīr observes, the basis for relating these verses to the story of Bathsheba is not grounded in sound accounts. Al-Rāzī also maintains that even the sanitized version of the story, in which there is no adultery, runs counter to the qualities attributed to David here and in other sūrahs. It also appears to be as a result of the effort to connect this verse to the story of Bathsheba that the disputants are said to be angels in the form of human beings, since it would then constitute a message coming directly from God.

David was most likely frightened when the disputants entered upon him, because his sanctuary was difficult to access and he had ordered that no one be allowed to enter (IK); he initially thought they sought to harm him (Āl, R). This, my brother means that they are either brothers in religion (Āl, Ṭ) or brothers by blood (Āl). That the one brother overpowered the other in speech means that he overcame him with his arguments (Āl), because his speech was clearer and more eloquent (Ṭ).

24 Yet how few are they is one of many places where the Quran laments the paucity of true believers, similar to 2:243 and 40:61: But most in asking that your ewe be added to his ewes. Truly many associates transgress against one another, save those who believe and perform righteous deeds. Yet how few are they!" And David understood that We had tried him; so he sought forgiveness from his Lord, fell down kneeling, and repented. (25) Thus did We forgive him that. Truly nearness unto Us shall be his, and a beautiful return. (26) O David! Truly We have appointed thee as a vicegerent upon the earth; so judge among the people with truth and follow not caprice, lest it lead thee astray from the way of God. Truly those who stray from the way of God, theirs shall be a severe punishment for having forgotten the Day of Reckoning.

of mankind does not give thanks (cf. 10:60; 12:38; 27:73) and 11:17: But most of mankind believe not (cf. 12:103–6; 13:1; 17:89; 26:8, 67, 103, 121, 139, 158, 174, 190; 40:59). Those who interpret the disputants to be angels say that David knew he was being tested when one of the angels looked to the other and smiled and they then ascended into the sky (Āl, IJ, Q, Ṭ). But it can also be understood to mean that David simply understood that the dispute was put before him by God to test his wisdom and justice. That David sought forgiveness from his Lord appears to be the main message of the text that leads many to link this pericope to the story of Bathsheba. But al-Rāzī argues that David more likely asked forgiveness because he initially suspected the disputants of entering upon him with ill intent and was thus frightened of them, when in fact they only sought his counsel (R). It may also be on account of his having passed judgment in favor of the plaintiff before hearing the testimony of the accused (R), an interpretation supported by the command to judge among the people with truth and follow not caprice (v. 26). It could also be understood to mean that David sought forgiveness for the disputants (R), in which case repented would be rendered "turned," and the first sentence of v. 25 would be rendered, "And we forgave that [sin] for him."

This is one of fifteen passages after which one should prostrate when reciting the Quran; see 19:58c. Whereas most other prostrations are considered obligatory, this prostration is considered one of gratitude (IK). The Prophet himself is said to have usually prostrated after the recitation of this verse, but to have told the people that it was not obligatory (IK).

25 Cf. v. 40. That one shall have nearness unto Us implies being among those brought nigh to God (56:11, 88; 83:21, 28), a term taken by some as a reference to the highest spiritual rank among human beings. It is said to result from obedient and virtuous acts (9:99; 34:37), while elsewhere those who seek to achieve nearness by other means, such as through the intercession of false deities, are rebuked (39:3; 46:28).

26 Regarding the meaning of vicegerent upon the earth, see 6:165c. Here caprice is understood by Ibn ʿArabī to mean everything that a person loves; thus he interprets this verse to mean, "Follow not that which you love, but follow that which I love" (Futūḥāt II 336.7). Lest it lead thee astray from the way of God then means, "Lest caprice confound you, ruin you, and make you blind to the way that I have laid down as Law for you and upon which I have asked you to walk" (Futūḥāt II 336.8). Those who have forgotten the Day of Reckoning refers to those who deny it, those who have forgotten the reality of the human condition (see 7:172c; 3:30c), and those who are heedless and have thus neglected to do what they must to prepare for the Day of Judgment (IK). The phrase can also be rendered, "for that which they have forgotten on the Day of Reckoning," in which case it can refer to their having forgotten the acts of obedience that were enjoined upon them (Ṭs), a part of that whereof they were reminded (5:13–14), the remembrance of God (58:19), or even their own creation (36:78). It can also be understood to mean that they have forgotten their very selves, as alluded to in 59:19: And be not like those who forget God, such that He makes them forget their souls (cf. 20:126; 45:34).

(27) And We did not create Heaven and earth and whatsoever is between them in vain; that is the conjecture of those who disbelieve. So woe before the Fire unto those who disbelieve! (28) Or shall We make those who believe and perform righteous deeds like those who work corruption upon the earth? Or shall We make the reverent like the profligate? (29) A blessed Book that We have sent down upon thee, that they may contemplate His signs and that those possessed of intellect may reflect. (30) And We bestowed Solomon upon David; how excellent a servant! Truly he turned oft [unto God]. (31) When at eventide noble steeds swift of foot were displayed before him, (32) he said, "I have preferred the love of good things over the remembrance of my Lord, until [the sun] was taken behind the veil. (33) Bring them back unto me!" Then he began to stroke their 27 A similar verse is 44:38: And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in play (cf. 21:16); see 44:38–39c. In this same vein, other verses state, We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth (15:85; 46:3). That is the conjecture of those who disbelieve refers to their refusal to believe in a resurrection and a final abode to which human beings return (IK), as when they say, There is naught but our life in this world: we die and we live, and we will not be resurrected (23:37; cf. 45:24).

28 Here, those who work corruption are placed in direct opposition to those who believe and perform righteous deeds, though in the Quran the opposite of working corruption (ifsād) is usually iṣlāḥ, "setting things aright" or "making amends." For the Quranic understanding of corruption (fasād), see 30:41c. For more on the prohibition against working corruption upon the earth, see 7:56c. This verse is similar to 68:35: Are We then to treat the submitters like the guilty? The rhetorical questions posed in both verses are similar to the one posed and answered in 32:18: Is one who believes like one who is iniquitous? They are not equal. From this perspective, this verse can be read as a continuation of the counsel given in v. 17 (R), meaning bear patiently, since the disbelievers will surely receive their due.

29 This verse can be read with an implied "This is" at the beginning (IJ, Q). From an Islamic perspective, all scriptures are revealed so that people will contemplate and act in accord with them (Aj). That the Quran is a blessed Book is understood to mean that it contains good things and blessings pertaining to both religious and worldly affairs (Aj), for both ordinary believers and the spiritual elite (Ṭb). According to some commentators, when the people contemplate it, they are guided by it, while when those possessed of intellect (2:179, 197, 269; 3:7, 190; 5:100; 12:111; 13:19; 14:52; 38:43; 39:9, 18, 21; 40:54; 65:10) reflect upon it, they are guided to the truth by its proofs and by its capacity to make things clear (Ṭb), as they are literally "those who possess the kernel," meaning those who possess true knowledge of the inner essence of things; see 5:100c; 39:9c. From one perspective, it is only through the presence of the heart (ḥuḍūr al-qalb), understood to be the seat of the intellect, that one can contemplate and reflect, because the Quran is a reminder for whosoever has a heart (50:37). Thus 47:24 asks, Do they not contemplate the Quran? Or do hearts have their locks upon them?

30 Solomon was one of David's many sons, but among them Solomon inherited from David (27:16), meaning that he inherited the gift of prophethood and earthly sovereignty. Both David and Solomon were given judgment and knowledge (21:79; cf. 27:15). Regarding he turned oft [unto God] (cf. vv. 17, 44), see 38:17c.

31–33 It is reported that Solomon's horses, which he had inherited from David or which he was assembling for a campaign, were displayed before him and that he was so engrossed with legs and necks. (34) And We did indeed try Solomon, and We cast a corpse upon his throne. He then repented, (35) saying, "My Lord, forgive me and bestow a kingdom upon me such as shall not befit anyone after me. Truly Thou art the them that the sun had set and the time for performing the prescribed prayers had passed (IK, JJ, Ṭ, Ṭs). Until [the sun] was taken behind the veil could also be read, "until they were taken behind the veil," meaning that Solomon was engrossed with the horses until they left his sight (Ṭs). Bring them back unto me takes the pronoun as a reference to the horses, but some understand the pronoun them (which can also mean "it") as a reference to the sun, meaning that Solomon asked that the sun be brought back so that he could say his prayers during the proper time (Ṭs). Stroke translates masḥan, which can also mean "rub." In the interpretation preferred by most commentators, masḥan stands for the idiomatic expression "he stroked them with his sword," meaning that, to atone for having been distracted from the remembrance of God, Solomon sacrificed the horses (IJ, IK, JJ, Ṭ, Ṭs) and then offered the meat to the poor as alms (IJ, JJ). Others understand it to mean that he stroked them with his hand out of love for them (IJ, Ṭ), as it would seem unjust for Solomon to slay the horses for his own slip (Ṭ). The most reasonable interpretation, though rarely cited, is that he branded their legs and necks and committed them to God (IJ).

The interpretations given above reflect those found in almost all commentaries, with slight variations. But al-Rāzī gives this story a different interpretation. He begins by understanding I have preferred the love of good things over the remembrance of my Lord to mean, "I have loved the love of good things on account of the remembrance of my Lord"; that is, his love of anything in this world is by the Command of God. He then understands the horses to be what were taken behind the veil, meaning that they passed by him until they were out of his sight. Then he ordered that they be returned and rubbed them to honor them and to be sure that they were fit for battle. Although such an interpretation may arise from al-Rāzī's zealous defense of the infallibility of prophets, it also leads to a more internally consistent interpretation that is not based on accounts whose reliability is questionable.

34 The trial faced by Solomon is difficult to discern. It most likely refers to some manner in which his sovereignty was stolen by the jinn when a satan—referring to an evil jinn—was placed upon his throne (IJ). Most commentaries propose various ways in which the jinn took the ring to which the power of Solomon's rule was attached and explain that the corpse was that of a jinn who was punished for his rebelliousness. Many even go so far as to propose different names for the jinn (IJ, Q). Others propose that the corpse was that of Solomon's son, whom he had tried to conceal from the jinn (IJ, Ṭs). According to another interpretation, a corpse refers to Solomon's own body, which was like a corpse due to the severity of an illness with which God had tried him (Ṭs). But these various accounts are mutually contradictory, and as al-Rāzī observes, they are fanciful interpretations that rely upon unsubstantiated sources. He then repented can also be read as "then he returned," meaning that Solomon returned to health after the trial from God (Ṭs) or that he returned to his throne (IJ, Ṭ). Some of the accounts of how he returned to his throne indicate that he repented and as a result returned to his throne (Ṭ). Seen in this light, the story could be understood as an allegory foretelling what would beset the kingdom, were the king to succumb to his desires.

35 After passing the trial sent upon him by God, Solomon prayed for a kingdom that would never be surpassed. Here kingdom renders mulk, which can also be understood to mean "rule" or "sovereignty." After me renders min baʿdī, which in this context some interpret to mean "besides me" or "other than me" (Ṭs, Z). Viewed in the context of Solomon's trial (v. 34), in which his rule was threatened or even taken away, his supplication is understood to mean that he desired a kingdom that no one would be able to steal from him as the jinn had done (IJ, Ṭ). Solomon is reported to have presided over a kingdom (the united Northern and Southern Kingdoms) that no one after him was capable of ruling successfully. In contrast, al-Maybudī states that

Bestower." (36) So We made the wind subservient unto him, coursing gently by his command whither he wished, (37) as well as the satans, every builder and diver, (38) and others, bound together in fetters: (39) "This is Our Gift; so bestow graciously or withhold without reckoning." (40) Truly nearness unto Us shall be his, and a beautiful return. (41) And remember Our servant Job, when he called upon his Lord, "Truly Satan has afflicted me with weariness and punishment." (42) "Strike with thy foot; this is cool water wherewith to wash and to drink." (43) And We bestowed upon him his family and their like along with them as a mercy from Us and a reminder for possessors of intellect. (44) And, "Take with

Solomon did not seek an outward kingdom, but instead sought dominion over the inner kingdom, his own soul, so that it would not obey anything other than God.

36 Those who interpret vv. 31–33 as describing Solomon's distraction from the remembrance of God by the love of the world say that, when Solomon gave up his love for the things of this world and atoned for his sins, God compensated him with command over the wind (cf. 21:81), something better and swifter than the horses that some say he had sacrificed (IK, JJ), though this interpretation does not depend on his actually having slaughtered the horses.

37–38 Solomon was also granted power over the satans, that is, the evil jinn, as in 27:17: And gathered for Solomon were his hosts of jinn and men and birds, and they were marshaled [in ordered ranks]. Here, every builder and diver means that the jinn would do whatever Solomon willed by way of building on the earth and extracting riches from the sea (Ṭ). When combined with his control over the wind, Solomon had sovereignty over air, land, and sea. Other jinn were bound together in fetters due to their recalcitrance (Ṭ, Ṭs).

39 This is understood as a reference to the kingdom or sovereignty that God gave Solomon (Ṭ, Ṭs), the power over the jinn (Ṭ), or all of the powers given to him (Ṭ). Solomon is then given permission to bestow or withhold these gifts as he deems best (Ṭ).

41 Vv. 41–44 provide the longest account of Job in the Quran; see also 4:163; 6:84; 21:83–84. In 6:84 he is listed with other Old Testament prophets among those whom God guided aforetime, and in 4:163 he is included among those to whom God gave revelation. As in the Bible and 21:83–84, Job provides an example of patience and forbearance. But unlike the Bible, the Quranic accounts do not comprise a didactic meditation on the problem of evil. The weariness and punishment with which Satan afflicts Job are understood to be the loss of property and family and incurring a painful disease (Ṭ); he is said to have been afflicted for seven years and seven months (Ṭ).

42 Cf. 21:84. Job is commanded to strike the ground in order to bring forth a spring whose water would heal the disease that afflicted him (Ṭ). Most commentators understand this verse as a reference to two separate springs; he washed with water from one and it healed his exterior ailments, and he drank water from the other and it healed his internal ailments (IJ, IK, R, Ṭ, Z). Sayings attributed to the Prophet report that God sent rain upon Job's fields until they were full (IK, Ṭ), and that "when the Prophet Job was taking a bath naked, golden locusts began to fall upon him. Job started collecting them in his clothes. Then his Lord addressed him, 'O Job! Have I not made thee rich enough that thou art not in need of what you see?' Job replied, 'Yes, O Lord! But I am not without need of Thy blessings" (IK).

43 That God bestowed upon him his family is understood to mean that he brought them back to life (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs), that they too were healed, or that they were returned to him after having been absent for some time (R). Their like along with them means that he also received an increase in family members (Ṭ); see 21:83–84c. This presents thy hand a bundle of rushes and strike therewith, and break not thine oath." Truly We found him to be steadfast. What an excellent servant! Truly he turned oft [unto God]. (45) And remember Our servants Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, possessed of strength and sight. (46) Truly We purified them with that which is pure—remembrance of the Abode. (47) And truly in Our Sight they are among the chosen, the elect. (48) And remember Ishmael, Elisha, and Dhu'l-an interesting contrast to the Biblical account, in which Job's livestock is doubled, but the number of his sons and daughters remains the same (see Job 42:12–16). Possessors of intellect (2:179, 197, 269; 3:7, 190; 5:100; 12:111; 13:19; 14:52; 38:29; 39:9, 18, 21; 40:54; 65:10) indicates those who possess true knowledge of the inner essence and meaning of things; see 38:29c; 5:100c; 39:9c.

44 To explain this verse, commentators report that Job's wife listened to Satan's promptings to urge Job to "say a single word" (which remains unmentioned) or perform some other act by which he would be healed and his property and family would be returned to him (IJ, R, Ṭ, Z), though there is no support for this story in the Quran or the Ḥadīth. Knowing that she had listened to "the enemy of God," Job rebuked her and vowed to punish her. God then told him to strike her with a sprig of leaves, so that he could fulfill his vow without harming her unjustly (IK, R, Ṭ, Z). As there is no support for this widespread interpretation in the Quranic text itself, it seems more consistent to read the bundle of rushes as a reference to herbs or leaves that were part of Job's treatment, and break not thine oath as a general injunction or an assurance that in using the herbs he was not breaking the oaths he had made to God. Regarding he turned oft [unto God] (cf. vv. 17, 30), see 38:17c.

45–47 Possessed of strength and sight refers to the three prophets' having strength in performing acts of worship and insight into religious matters (IK, Ṭ), and thus into truth, as their vision was that of the heart (Ṭ). That God purified them, or "chose them," through remembrance of the Abode means that God removed the love of this world from their hearts and made them always mindful of the Hereafter (IK). Al-Tustarī is reported to have said of this phrase, "God purified them for remembrance of God for God alone, not for attaining recompense.... They remembered Him through Him and for Him" (ST).

48 Cf. 21:85, which, like this verse, immediately follows the only other account of Job's story in the Quran and says that Ishmael, Idrīs, and Dhu'l-Kifl were among the patient. For the Quranic story of Ishmael, see 2:125–28. Elisha (al-Yasaʿ) is only mentioned here and in 6:86, where he is listed with Ishmael, Jonah, and Lot among those whom God favored above the worlds. Most understand him to be the same Elisha whose account is given in 2 Kings, a disciple of Elijah who took his place as a prophet in Israel (2 Kings 2:13–15) after Elijah ascended to Heaven (2:11).

Dhu'l-Kifl, here transcribed as a proper name, literally means "the possessor of kifl," that is, of the "portion" or "share," as in 57:28: He will give you a twofold portion (kiflayn) of His Mercy. Thus he is said to be a prophet who had a twofold share of the work and reward of prophets (Q, R, Z on 21:85). As kifl derives from the same root, k-f-l, as the verb takaffala, meaning "to assume responsibility" or "to pledge," it is interpreted by some to indicate a prophet, or a righteous king or man, who "pledged himself to a prophet" (takaffala li nabī; R, Ṭ on 21:85) or who pledged to fast every day, stand in prayer every night, and judge between the people without succumbing to anger (JJ, Q, R, Ṭ on 21:85). As he is mentioned among other prophets here and in 21:85, commentators have endeavored to identify Dhu'l-Kifl with various prophets, such as Elias (Elijah), Joshua, or Zachariah (R, Z on 21:85). The basis for this last may be 3:37, where God is said to place Mary under the care of Zachariah; the Arabic for "place under the care" is kaffala, from the same root as kifl. Nonetheless, the majority maintain that he is not a prophet (Q on 21:85). Some translators link Dhu'l-Kifl to Ezekiel, which may derive from attempts to relate the idea of kifl and takaffala, "assuming responsibility," to Kifl; each is among the excellent. (49) This is a reminder. And for the reverent there will surely be a beautiful return, (50) Gardens of Eden, the gates whereof are open unto them, (51) reclining therein, they call therein for abundant fruit and drink. (52) And theirs shall be maidens of modest gaze, of like age. (53) This is that which you are promised for the Day of Reckoning. (54) This indeed is Our provision which shall never be spent. (55) This it shall be! Yet for the rebellious there will surely be a most evil return, (56) Hell, wherein they will burn. What an evil resting place! (57) This it shall be! So let them taste it, a boiling liquid and a cold, murky fluid, (58) coupled with other [punishments] similar in kind. (59) This troop rushing in with you—no greeting for them! They will surely Ezekiel 4:4, where God lays "the punishment of the house of Israel" upon Ezekiel. But such a link does not seem justified.

49 The Quran is a reminder (IK), or these stories recounted above are a beautiful reminder (Q, R). Here the reverent are promised the same reward that is promised to David in v. 25.

50 Paradise is said to have Gardens of many varieties. Gardens of Eden (cf. 9:72; 13:23; 16:31; 18:31; 19:61; 20:76; 35:33; 40:8) are understood to refer to an especially exalted or blessed place within Paradise; see 9:72c. According to a ḥadīth, "Heaven has eight gates. [Four are:] Whosoever was among the people of prayer shall be called from the gate of prayer. Whosoever was among the people of fasting shall be called from the gate of fasting. Whosoever was among the people of charity (ṣadaqah) shall be called from the gate of charity. Whosoever was among the people of striving (jihād) shall be called from the gate of striving." See also 39:73: Those who reverence their Lord will be driven to the Garden in throngs, till when they reach it, its gates will be opened and its keepers will say unto them, "Peace be upon you; you have done well; so enter it, to abide [therein]." Elsewhere it is said, Angels shall enter upon them from every gate. "Peace be upon you because you were patient." How excellent is the Ultimate Abode! (13:23–24).

51 Those in Paradise recline upon couches arrayed (52:20), facing one another (37:44; 56:16), in the shade with their spouses (36:56), and are given fruits and meat as they desire (52:22) and partake of every fruit (47:15), while they pass a cup to one another wherein is no idle talk, nor incitement to sin (52:23).

52 Of modest gaze indicates that the maidens look upon none but their own spouses (Aj, Q). For other references to the maidens who await the righteous in Paradise, see 44:54c; 52:20; 55:56, 72; 56:22; 78:33; and the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran."

53–54 The food and drink that God promises the reverent is a provision that, unlike the provisions of this world, will never run out, as in 16:96: That which is with you comes to an end, but that which is with God subsists; also see 13:35.

55–58 After mentioning some provisions of the beautiful return in vv. 49–54, the Quran turns in these verses to the torturous provisions of the evil return. The rebellious are those who disobey God and oppose God's messengers (IK). The boiling liquid that they are here made to drink (cf. 6:70; 10:4; 37:67; 40:72; 44:46; 47:15; 56:42, 54; 78:24–25; 88:5) indicates something that has reached its maximum temperature and causes extreme pain. In 22:19 the boiling liquid is poured over their heads (cf. 44:48). Cold, murky fluid translates ghassāq (cf. 78:25), which means something so frigid that one cannot bear it. The two drinks show that Hell is a place of extremes; every time one escapes from one type of torture, one is cast into another that is its opposite. This is the meaning of punishments being coupled with other [punishments] similar in kind (IK).

59–60 Whereas the believers enter the gates of Heaven, the disbelievers burn in the Fire. And burn in the Fire. (60) They will say, "Nay, but no greeting for you! You have sent it forth for us. What an evil dwelling place!" (61) They will say, "O Lord! Whosoever has sent this forth for us, increase him twofold in punishment in the Fire." (62) And they will say, "How is it that we do not see men here whom we had counted among the evil? (63) Did we take them in mockery? Or have our eyes swerved away from them?" (64) Surely that is true: the disputing of the people of the Fire. (65) Say, "I am only a warner, and there is no god but God, the One, the Paramount, (66) Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, the Mighty, the Forgiving." (67) Say, "It is a great tiding (68) from which you turn away. (69) I have no knowledge of the Highest Assembly, when they whereas the believers are greeted with the greeting of "Peace" by the angels (see 10:10; 16:32; 19:62; 33:44; 36:58; 39:73; 56:25–26c), in Hell every time a community enters, it curses its sister (7:38).

61 Those in Hell are asking for a twofold punishment upon those who led them into disbelief, as in 7:38, where the disbelievers who followed those before them say, "Our Lord, it was they who led us astray; so give them a double punishment in the Fire." He will say, "For each of you it shall be doubled, but you know not" (cf. 33:67–68), meaning let them receive one punishment for having been astray and another punishment for leading others astray. In this vein 29:13 says of those who sought to lead others astray, Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others' burdens along with their own. Nonetheless, the punishment of those whom they led astray will not be lessened; see 7:38–39c.

62–63 The denizens of Hell will be surprised to see that those whom they thought to be misguided are not in Hell. Thus in 7:49, as they see the believers being told to enter the Garden, they are asked, Are these the ones concerning whom you swore that God would not extend any mercy? That they continue to ask such questions implies that, despite having received the punishment, they still do not fully understand. Alternatively, the first sentence of v. 63 can be read, "We took them in mockery" (Q, R).

64 The people of the Fire dispute with one another regarding what has led them to their final outcome, and with God. Though they do not dispute with the people of the Garden, in other passages they do speak with them (see commentary on 7:44–51; 57:13–15), asking for their light (57:13), some water, or some of what God has provided for them (7:50), though the inhabitants of the Garden cannot share these blessings, as such blessings are forbidden to the denizens of Hell.

65–66 That the Prophet is only a warner or, as expressed elsewhere, naught but a warner (11:12; 13:7; 27:92; 34:46; 35:23; 46:9; 79:45) means that his function is only to deliver the message; he does not have knowledge of the Unseen, save as is given to him by God, as indicated in vv. 69–70. The Divine Name the Paramount (al-Qahhār) derives from the same root as the Dominant (al-Qāhir) and always occurs in the phrase the One, the Paramount (12:39; 13:16; 14:48; 39:4; 40:16). The combination of the Divine Names the Mighty and the Forgiving (cf. 39:5; 40:42; 67:2) refers to God's threat to the disbelievers and God's promise to the believers (Aj), similar to the more frequent combination of the Names the Mighty and the Merciful (26:9, 68, 104, 122, 140, 159, 175, 191, 217; 30:5; 32:6; 36:5; 44:42).

67–68 A great tiding refers to the Quran (Aj, Q, Ṭ) or, as in 78:1, to the Day of Resurrection (Aj, Q). It could also mean that the message the Prophet brings, that of God's Oneness, is a great tiding issuing directly from God, and only the heedless would turn from it (Aj).

69–70 The Highest Assembly refers to the assembly of angels (IK, Q, Ṭ). The dispute mentioned here is understood by most to be that re-dispute. (70) Naught is revealed unto me but that I am only a clear warner." (71) [Remember] when thy Lord said unto the angels, "Behold! I am creating a human being from clay. (72) When I have proportioned him and breathed into garding the creation of Adam (Q, Ṭ), as in 2:30, when they say to God, Wilt Thou place therein one who will work corruption therein, and shed blood, while we hymn Thy praise and call Thee Holy? (IJ). In this sense, these verses instruct the Prophet to say that he could have no knowledge of the discussion that transpired between God, the angels, and Satan, were it not for the revelation from God (IJ, IK, Ṭ). The nature of the angels' disputation may also be the one conveyed in a saying of the Prophet: "My Lord came to me at night in the most beautiful form. He said, 'O Muhammad!' I replied, 'Here I am, my Lord, at Thy service.' He said, 'What is the Highest Assembly disputing about?' I replied, 'I know not, my Lord.' He said that two or three times. Then He placed His palm between my shoulders. I felt its coolness between my breasts, and everything in the heavens and on the earth was disclosed to me.... Then He said, 'O Muhammad! What is the Highest Assembly disputing about?' I replied, 'About expiations.' And He asked, 'What are expiations?' I said, 'Going on foot to gatherings, sitting in the mosque after the prayers, and performing the ablutions completely in difficult circumstances. He who does that lives well and dies well. His offenses are like the day his mother bore him'" (Q). In another version, the Prophet was then told that he could make supplication for anything, and he responded, "O God! I ask Thee that I may perform good deeds and shun bad deeds, and that I may love the poor, and that Thou shouldst forgive me and have mercy upon me, and that, when Thou decidest to put a people to trial, take me away without trial. And I ask Thee for Thy Love, for the love of those who love Thee, and for the love of deeds that bring one near to Thy Love."

70 See 38:65–66c.

71–85 This is the last account of the creation of Adam in the textual order of the Quran, but most likely the first in the chronological order of revelation. The other accounts are found in 2:30–39; 7:11–25; 17:61–65; 20:115–24; see also 15:28–43.

71 I am creating a human being is an abbreviated version of what God says to the angels in 15:28: Behold! I am creating a human being from dried clay, made of molded mud; and in 2:30 God tells the angels, I am placing a vicegerent upon the earth.

72 Cf. 15:29. Also see 32:9, where what is here God's statement to the angels is phrased in the third person. Insisting upon God's complete transcendence and the createdness of anything outside of God, most commentators seek to read I breathed into him of My Spirit figuratively. Some gloss My Spirit as "My Power" (Ṭ) or say that this is not God's Spirit, but that God refers to it as such as a means of honoring Adam (IK, JJ), or that My Spirit means "the Spirit that I possess and no one else possesses" (Q, Sh), while others make little comment on it (Bḍ). Al-Rāzī notes that the breathing of the Spirit into Adam indicates that the creation of the human being is only completed through both the formation of the physical body and the breathing of the Spirit into it, which he understands to mean that human beings have both a body and a soul. He then takes My Spirit to mean that the soul is a noble, heavenly (ʿulwī), and holy (qudsī) substance. He, nonetheless, maintains that it is a created, though subtle and luminous, substance. In this interpretation, he would appear to understand the soul as what arises to form the bridge between the body and the spirit. Some Sufi commentators also maintain that what is "breathed into Adam" is a created substance (Qu). But others understand this to mean that the spirit within the human being is of a supernal nature and this explains how it is that the angels could be commanded to prostrate before Adam (2:34; 7:11; 18:50; 20:116). Rūzbihān al-Baqlī thus glosses this passage: "I am creating a human being out of clay, that is, out of incapacity and weakness, whom I will clothe in the lights of My Greatness and Magnificence. Then when I have perfected him, distinguished him with My Attributes, illuminated him with the Light of My Essence, and breathed into him of My Spirit, that is, given him life through My Life and My Spirit, which came forth from the disclosure of Magnificence and Beauty, prostrate unto him." him of My Spirit, fall down before him prostrating." (73) Then the angels prostrated, all of them together. (74) Not so Iblīs. He waxed arrogant, and was among the disbelievers. (75) [God] said, "O Iblīs! What has prevented thee from prostrating unto that which I created with My two Hands? Dost thou wax arrogant, or art thou among the exalted?" (76) He said, "I am better than him. Thou hast created me from fire, while Thou hast created him from clay." (77) He said, "Go forth from it! Surely thou art outcast! (78) And surely My Curse shall be upon thee till the Day of Judgment." (79) He said, "My Lord! Grant me respite till the Day they are resurrected." (80) He said, "Then verily thou art among those granted respite (81) till the Day of the Moment Known." (82) He said, "Then, by Thy Might, I shall cause them to err all together, (83) save Thy sincere 73–74 Regarding the prostration of the angels before Adam and Iblīs's refusal to follow God's Command to do so, key elements in all accounts of Adam's creation, see 2:34; 15:29–33; 17:61; 18:50; 20:116; commentary on 7:11–12. In the present sūrah, Iblīs waxes arrogant, but in 7:13 he is told by God, It is not for thee to wax arrogant here. So go forth! Thou art surely among those who are humbled.

75 In 7:12, God asks, What prevented thee from prostrating when I commanded thee? That God created the human being with His two Hands is understood in a symbolic manner, since God's Command when He desires a thing is only to say to it, "Be!" and it is (36:82; cf. 2:117; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 40:68). Thus some take the creation of the human being with God's two Hands as an allusion to the greatness of the human being (Q) or as an allusion to two of God's Attributes (Q), God's Majesty and Beauty, God's Dominance and Gentleness (qahr wa lutf), or all of the Divine Names that fall under the two categories of Dominance and Love (K), which would then allude to the human being as the locus in which such attributes become manifest. The rhetorical question posed by God to Iblīs would then mean, "Are you truly a creation more exalted than this creation?"

76 In 7:12, Iblīs makes this same explicit argument. In 15:33, he does so implicitly in his dismissive remarks about Adam's being created from dried clay, made of molded mud; and in 17:61, he asks, Shall I prostrate before one whom Thou hast created of clay? See 7:12c; 15:32–33c; 17:61c.

77–78 See commentary on the identical verses, 15:34–35. Elsewhere God says to Satan, Go forth from it, disgraced and banished! (7:18).

79–83 Despite Iblīs's banishment, here he requests and is granted respite from God, so that he will neither die nor be punished (Bḍ), till the Day they are resurrected (7:14), referring to the Day of universal Resurrection and Judgment (cf. 7:14–15; 15:36–38; 17:62), which is the Moment Known to God. Vv. 80–81 are repeated verbatim in 15:37–38. While the accounts of the creation of Adam and Satan's refusal to prostrate in 2:30–34 and 7:14–18 are followed by accounts of the manner in which Satan causes Adam and Eve to fall from the Garden, the accounts here and in 15:25–33 are followed by more general discussions of the manner in which Satan vows to make things seem fair unto them on earth and to cause them to err all together (15:39). Making things seem fair to human beings is the way in which his misleading them is most often described (see 6:43; 8:48; 16:63; 27:24; 29:38). He is also referred to as the stealthy whisperer (114:4) and the Deluder (31:33; 35:5; 57:14), who enjoins indecency (2:268; 24:21) and makes false promises (4:120; 14:22; 17:64). From one perspective, while Satan is misleading people, he is in fact doing the work of God by bringing those whom God has already destined for Hell toward the end that God has decreed for them. Perhaps servants among them." (84) He said, "This is the truth, and the truth I speak, (85) 'I shall surely fill Hell with thee and with such of them as follow thee, all together.' " (86) Say, "I ask not of you any reward for it, nor am I among the pretenders. (87) It is naught but a reminder for the worlds, (88) and you will certainly know its tiding after a time."

it is in this vein that God says to him, So incite whomsoever thou canst among them with thy voice, and bear down upon them with thy cavalry and thy infantry, and be their partner in wealth and children, and make them promises (17:64).

Although God has permitted Satan to tempt people and lead those who disbelieve astray, he has no authority over God's servants (cf. 17:65). Thus when those who followed Satan receive their punishment and turn to him on the Day of Judgment, he will say, Verily God made you the promise of truth; and I made you a promise, but I failed you. And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves. I cannot respond to your cries for help; nor can you respond to my cries for help (14:22).

84 This enigmatic verse, which literally reads, "The truth, and I speak the truth," can be understood as a continuation of God's Words to Satan (Ṭ), in which case it is interpreted to mean, "I am the Truth, and I speak the truth" (IK, Ṭ) or "The truth is from Me, and I speak the truth" (IK, Ṭ). It may also mean, "I establish the truth, and the truth that is spoken" (JJ), referring to what is said in v. 85, thus giving the meaning, "It is true that I shall surely fill Hell with thee and with such of them as follow thee, all together, and I speak the truth" (Ṭ). It could also be understood to mean, "God is the Truth, and I speak the truth" (Ṭ) or "To God belongs the truth, and I speak the truth" (Ṭ).

85 Similar threats to fill Hell with (wrongdoing) men, women, and jinn (which here includes Satan) are made in 11:119 and 32:13. Here and in 7:18 the promise is made directly to Satan; see 7:18c; 32:13c.

86 I ask not of you any reward for it (cf. 6:90; 25:57; 42:23) is also said by the prophets Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Lot, and Shuʿayb in 26:109, 127, 145, 164, 180, respectively. It is understood as a reference to delivering the revelation (IJ, IK, JJ). A mark of true prophethood is that those claiming it ask for no reward from the people. They only ask that the people follow the message with which they have been sent. As Noah says, in 10:72, And if you turn your backs, I have not asked of you any reward. My reward lies only with God, and I am commanded to be among those who submit (see also 36:21c).

The Prophet's statement that he is not from among the pretenders, or mutakallifīn, which can also mean "imposters," is addressed to the Quraysh, reminding them that he had never feigned or sought a position that was not his right or sought to claim something that was not his (Z). According to a saying attributed to the Prophet, but not in canonical collections, "The pretender has three characteristics: he contends with those above him; he claims [for himself] what has not been conferred [upon him]; and he speaks about that of which he knows not" (Q, Sy, Z). The phrase could also mean, "nor am I among those who impose [themselves]."

87 Cf. 6:90; 12:104; 68:52; 81:27. The Quran is only sent to remind people of God and the Hereafter and is naught but a revelation revealed (53:4).

88 People will come to see that what the Quran says is true after they die, after the Resurrection (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z), or after the victory and spread of Islam (Z).

The Throngs

al-Zumar

Most of al-Zumar is believed to have been revealed in the middle of the Makkan period, directly after Sūrah 34, Saba' (JJ). Many commentators maintain that vv. 53–55 are from the Madinan period (Aj, Āl, IJ), as they are said to have been revealed regarding Waḥshī, an Abyssinian slave who gained his freedom by killing the Prophet's cousin Ḥamzah at the Battle of Uḥud in 3/625. Some say that only v. 53 pertains to this incident (IJ, Q, Ṭs), while others say that vv. 53–59 were all revealed in regard to it (Āl, Q). Others suggest that vv. 10 and 23 were also revealed during the Madinan period (Āl, IJ). The sūrah takes its title from the mention of the disbelievers being driven to Hell in throngs in v. 71 and the believers being driven to the Garden in throngs in v. 73. It is also known as al-Ghuraf, or "The Abodes," after the mention in v. 20 of the lofty abodes that await the reverent in Paradise (Āl, Bq, Q, Ṭs). The opening verse of the sūrah can be read as a continuation of the last two verses of the previous sūrah (Aj, Āl).

From one perspective, the central theme of al-Zumar is devout or pure religious practice, as it emphasizes devoting religion entirely to God (vv. 2, 11, 14) more than any other sūrah and maintains that the pure religion belongs only to God and is devoid of worship of anything other than Him (v. 3). To highlight the importance of the pure religion, the sūrah juxtaposes the believers and the disbelievers throughout. After an opening injunction to be sincere in worship (vv. 1–4), the sūrah turns to the contrast between the two groups, comparing their attitudes toward the signs of God and punctuating the discussion with rhetorical questions such as, Are those who know and those who do not know equal? (v. 9), and statements such as, Whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. And whomsoever God guides, none shall lead him astray (vv. 36–37).

A passage on death emphasizes the desperate circumstances of those who disbelieve when they meet their final end (vv. 42–52). But v. 53, which many have referred to as the most hopeful verse of the Quran, underlines the enduring availability of God's Mercy and Forgiveness even to those who have been prodigal to the detriment of their own souls. This is followed by an exhortation to turn to God in repentance (vv. 54–67), which leads into the extended contrast between the disparate ends of the two groups in the Hereafter (vv. 68–75) with which the sūrah ends.

According to a report from the Prophet's wife ʿĀʾishah, the Prophet would not sleep until he had recited al-Zumar and Banū Isrāʾīl, the latter being another name for Sūrah 17, al-Isrāʾ, "The Night Journey" (IK, Q).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Wise. (2) Indeed, We have sent down unto thee the Book in truth; so worship God, devoting religion entirely to Him. (3) Behold! Unto God belongs the pure religion, and those who take protectors apart from Him [say], "We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God." Truly God will judge between them regarding that wherein they differ. Truly God does not guide one who is a 1 Cf. 40:2; 45:2; 46:2. As this verse has no verb, it could alternately be rendered with an implied demonstrative at the beginning: "This is the revelation of the Book from God" (IJ, R, Z). In discussions of the levels of Quranic recitation, Sufis say that one should first hear the Quran as if it were being recited by the Prophet, then as if it were being recited by the Archangel Gabriel, and then as if it were being recited by God Himself. They sometimes cite this verse and 40:2, which differs only in that the last word is the Knower, in support of this third and last level.

2 Here God's revelation of the Quran in truth or with truth (cf. 2:176, 213; 3:3; 4:105; 5:48; 6:114; 39:41; 42:17) is followed by an injunction to worship God; in 4:105, it is sent down . . . in truth, that thou mightest judge between men according to what God has shown thee. In both verses, the Book refers to the Quran, but in 2:213, the same phrase refers to the revelations sent to all prophets: And with them He sent down the Book in truth, to judge among mankind concerning that wherein they differed; also see 5:48c. Devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 29:65; 31:32; 39:11; 40:14, 65; 98:5) indicates sincerity, purification, and complete devotion; see 7:29c; 31:32c; 98:5c.

3 Pure translates khāliṣ, from the same root, kh-l-ṣ, as the word rendered devoting (mukhliṣ) in v. 2, and carries the same connotations of sincerity and devotion. Together the attributes of devotion and purity could be understood to mean that God requires that religion be devoted entirely to Him, so that obedience to Him is total and purified of any defects (Z), or to mean that ikhlāṣ (sincerity and purity of devotion) is the "leader of all devotional acts" (R). In contrast, the idolaters who, although they recognize that there is some power greater than themselves, nonetheless fall short of pure devotion, or ikhlāṣ, by worshipping many deities. Then they try to have it both ways, saying, We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God. But since this is not the pure religion, God will not guide them and they will be forsaken by their deities, as in 46:28: Why, then, did they—whom they had taken as gods apart from God and as a means of drawing nigh [unto God]—not help them? Nay, they forsook them (cf. 34:40–41). For God's judging between them disbelieving liar. (4) Had God wanted to take a child, He would have chosen whatsoever He willed from that which He created. Glory be to Him; He is the One, the Paramount. (5) He created the heavens and the earth in truth. He rolls the night up into the day and rolls the day up into the night, and He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed. Is He not the Mighty, the Forgiving? (6) He created you from a single soul, then made from it its mate, and sent down for you of cattle eight pairs. He creates you in your mothers' wombs, creation after creation, in threefold darkness. That is God, your Lord; to Him belongs sovereignty. There is no god but He. How, then, are regarding that wherein they differ, see 2:113c; 10:93; 16:124; 32:25; 45:17.

4 This verse is read by some as a rejection of the idolaters' attribution of offspring to God as well as the assertion by Christians that Jesus is the son of God and the claim attributed by Muslims to some Jews (see 9:30) that Ezra is the son of God (IK). But given the criticism of the Makkan idolaters in the previous verse and the widespread view that this sūrah is from the Makkan period, the rejection, as al-Zamakhsharī maintains, is most likely directed toward the idolaters' attribution of sons and daughters to God, a notion criticized in many verses (see, e.g., 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149, 153; 43:16, 81–82; 52:39; 72:3). Regarding the Divine Name the Paramount (al-Qahhār), see 38:65–66c.

5 That God created the heavens and the earth in truth (cf. 6:73; 16:3; 29:44; 45:22; 64:3) is reiterated in various ways in several verses (see 10:5; 14:19; 15:85; 30:8; 44:39; 46:3); see 29:44c; 44:38–39c. In this context, creation is related to God's sending revelation in truth (v. 2), alluding to the subtle way in which revelation and creation are bound together by the same underlying reality; creation itself is in a sense God's first revelation. God's rolling the day into the night and the night into the day is elsewhere expressed as His making the night pass into the day and . . . the day pass into the night (22:61; 31:29; 35:13; 57:6; cf. 3:27); see 31:29c. That the sun and the moon are made subservient (cf. 7:54; 13:2; 29:61; 31:29; 35:13) indicates the manner in which the truth in and through which they are created continues to determine their reality and evokes the dominion and responsibility that God has given human beings in making them His vicegerents (see 6:165c; 10:14; 35:39), which is made more explicit in 14:33: And He has made the sun and the moon subservient unto you, constant, and He made the night and the day subservient unto you (cf. 16:12; 22:36–37, 65; 31:20; 45:12–13).

6 That God created human beings from a single soul (see 4:1; 6:98; 7:189; 31:28) points to the origin of all human beings in Adam (IK); see 4:1c. Elsewhere, God's having created for human beings mates from themselves (or "from their souls") is a gift for which humanity should feel awe and gratitude; see 16:72; 30:21; 35:11; 42:11; 78:8. That God sends down cattle refers to His having provided all manner of grazing livestock for human use, some for burden and some for slaughter (6:142). The eight pairs refers to the male and female of sheep, goats, camel, and oxen; see 6:142c. Creation after creation most likely alludes to the three stages of gestation mentioned in 23:13–14: Then We made him a drop in a secure dwelling place. Then of the drop We created a blood clot, then of the blood clot We created a lump of flesh (cf. 22:5). Threefold darkness is then seen as an allusion to the layers in which the fetus is wrapped: the placenta, the uterus, and the belly (IK, JJ). How, then, are you turned away? (cf. 10:32) is an expression of amazement asking how one could possibly turn away from the worship of the One who is responsible for all the realities mentioned in vv. 5–6, preferring to worship the you turned away? (7) If you do not believe, surely God is beyond need of you. He is not pleased with disbelief for His servants. And if you are grateful, He is pleased therewith for you; and none shall bear the burden of another. Then unto your Lord is your return, and He shall inform you of that which you used to do. Truly He knows what lies within breasts. (8) And when harm befalls man, he calls upon his Lord, turning unto Him. Then when He bestows a blessing from Himself upon him, he forgets the One upon whom he called before and sets up equals unto God to lead astray from His path. Say, "Enjoy your disbelief a little; truly you shall be among the inhabitants of the Fire." (9) What sons and daughters falsely ascribed to Him who it is claimed will bring one nigh in nearness unto God (v. 3).

7 That God is beyond need of you (cf. 3:97; 29:6) is related to the idea that unto God belongs the pure religion (v. 3), for neither God nor His religion are in need of human beings, but human beings are in need of both. That God is not pleased with disbelief or ingratitude for His servants may imply God's Mercy toward the believers and guidance of them by preventing them from falling into a state that would lead to their ruin, which can be seen as following upon His declaration to Satan, As for My servants, truly thou hast no authority over them (15:42; 17:65; Ṭ, Z). Others say that this verse applies to all human beings (Ṭ). In this sense the verse clarifies that it is not because God has any need of people's belief in Him that He punishes them, but because it displeases Him (Ṭ). God is then pleased with gratitude, not for His own sake, but because it leads to His servants' salvation (Z). All of this together indicates that God Himself derives no benefit from human beings' faith in Him (Z), but rewards them for it out of His Mercy. In this vein, a ḥadīth qudsī reports that God says, "O My servants! If the first of you and the last of you, the jinn among you and the human beings among you, were to have hearts like the most profligate of hearts among you, it would not diminish aught from My Sovereignty" (IK). That none shall bear the burden of another (cf. 6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 53:38) is a testament to God's Justice, meaning that no one will be forced to endure the punishments accrued through deeds committed by others; see 35:18c. This is one of several verses where it is said that at the Final Judgment, God will inform people about their actions in this life; see 5:14, 105; 6:60, 108, 159; 9:94, 105; 10:23; 24:64; 29:8; 31:15, 23; 41:50; 58:6–7; 62:8; 64:7; 75:13. That God knows what lies within breasts (3:119; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 31:23; 35:38; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13) means that He knows what is within the hearts of all human beings (JJ) and implies that He will inform them not only of their deeds, but also of the intentions behind their deeds.

8 This is one of several verses to mention people's tendency to call upon the Lord in times of peril or adversity (Ṭ) or times of need (IK; see also 6:40–41c; 10:12; 17:67; 30:33). Then when He bestows a blessing upon them or when He lets them taste of His Mercy (30:33) by relieving them of such afflictions, they revert to heedlessness and the pursuit of their caprices (Ṭ, Ṭb); see also 7:189–90c; 10:12c. Disbelief translates kufr, whose root meaning is "covering over" and here invokes a sense of ingratitude, as one is "covering over" the blessings one has received. The phrase could thus be rendered, "Revel in your ingratitude a little, that is, for the duration of your life (JJ), which is little compared to the duration of the Hereafter. A little could also be understood as a reference to the delights of this world being "little" (Q) in comparison to the delights one would experience in the Hereafter.

9 The final phrase of the rhetorical question is elided, implying "Is he like those mentioned in the previous verse?" (IJ). The need for an elided phrase can be removed by reading what of one who (am man) as "O one who" (a man; IJ, Q, R, Ṭ). In this latter reading, "O one who is devoutly obedient," the verse would refer to those in a state of

of one who is devoutly obedient during the watches of the night, prostrating and standing [in prayer], wary of the Hereafter and hoping for the Mercy of his Lord [...]? Say, "Are those who know and those who do not know equal? Only possessors of intellect reflect." (10) Say, "O My servants who believe, reverence your Lord. For those who do good in this world there is good; and God's earth is vast." Surely those who are patient shall be paid their reward in full without reckoning. (11) Say, "Truly I have been commanded to worship God, devoting religion entirely to Him. (12) And I have been commanded to be the first of spiritual obedience, constancy, and serenity (cf. 2:116, 238; 3:17, 43; 4:34; 16:120; 30:26; 33:31, 35; 66:12). Regarding the state of being wary of the punishment that may befall one in the Hereafter and of hoping for mercy or forgiveness from God, the Prophet is reported to have asked a man who was on his deathbed, "How do you feel?" When the man responded, "I am fearful and hopeful," the Prophet said, "These two are not joined together in a man's heart at a moment like this, but that God grants him that for which he hopes and protects him from that which he fears" (IK).

The difference between believers and disbelievers is also likened to the difference between the blind and the seeing (6:50; 11:24; 13:16; 35:19; 40:58), the deaf and the hearing (11:24), and light and darkness (13:16). Such comparisons can also be used to differentiate between types of believers, as in a ḥadīth: "The virtue of the pious scholar over the devoted worshipper is as the virtue of the full moon over all the other heavenly bodies." Possessors of intellect (2:179, 197, 269; 3:7, 190; 5:100c; 12:111; 13:19; 14:52; 38:29, 43; 39:18, 21; 40:54; 65:10) are those who possess true knowledge of the inner reality of things. Intellect renders lubb (pl. albāb), which literally means "kernel," "pith," or "core"; as an allusion to knowledge and insight, intellect represents the "pith" or "core" of the human being. In commenting upon this verse, Ibn ʿArabī gives the word another interpretation, seeing it as a reference to the "kernel" or "pith" of knowledge, which is sent down from God, while reason is its "shell," which must be used to reach the "pith" if reason is to be employed effectively. Possessors of intellect are thus those who employ reason as it should be employed, knowing that the "kernel" or "pith" is their true sustenance, not reason in and of itself independent of revelation (Futūḥāt III 120.32–35).

10 Those who are devoutly obedient and perform righteous deeds in this life will receive the gift of Paradise (JJ) or good in this life (such as health and peace) and in the next (Ṭs). God's earth is vast implies that one should emigrate away from the company of idolaters (IK, JJ, Ṭ) and is thus viewed as encouragement to the Muslims of the Prophet's time to emigrate from Makkah. It can also be understood as a reference to the "land of God" in the Garden, which one should seek by performing righteous deeds (Ṭs). In this context, those who are patient contrasts with those who waver in v. 8. Without reckoning refers to their not having to endure the weighing of their deeds in the balance on the Day of Judgment (Ṭ, Z).

11 Devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 29:65; 31:32; 39:2; 40:14, 65; 98:5) indicates sincerity, purification, and complete devotion; see 7:29c; 31:32c; 98:5c.

12 That the Prophet was commanded to be the first of those who submit (cf. 6:14, 163) refers specifically to his community or his generation (IJ). Earlier prophets and their followers are also designated as submitters (muslims) in several verses; see the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions." Similarly, Moses declares, I am the first of the believers (7:143; cf. 26:51), not because he is the first to have ever believed, but because he is the first among his community to have believed in the revelation that has been sent to him. In such contexts, the first can also be understood to mean "the foremost"; see 3:96c; 6:14c.

those who submit." (13) Say, "Truly I fear, should I disobey my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day." (14) Say, "God do I worship, devoting my religion entirely to Him. (15) So worship whatsoever you will apart from Him." Say, "Truly the losers are those who lose their souls and their families on the Day of Resurrection. Yea! That is the manifest loss." (16) Above them they shall have canopies of fire and below them canopies; with that does God strike fear into His servants. O My servants! Reverence Me! (17) And as for those who shun false deities and worshipping them, and turn unto God, unto them glad tidings. So give glad tidings to My servants, (18) who listen to the Word, then follow what is most beautiful of it. It is they whom God has guided; it is they who are the possessors of intellect. (19) What of one for whom the Word of punishment

13 This verse is repeated verbatim in 6:15 and 10:15; see 6:15c.

14 See 39:2c.

15 The first sentence of this verse is both a threat to the disbelievers and a means of repudiating them (IK), as in 6:19, where the Prophet is told to say, He is only one God, and truly I am quit of that which you ascribe as partners unto Him (cf. 6:78; 10:41). In this sense, this verse is similar to the declaration of a complete separation between Islam and the religion of the idolaters found in Sūrah 109, which concludes unto you your religion and unto me my religion (109:6). The losers, who have lost this world and the Hereafter (22:11), have lost themselves insofar as they have wasted the opportunity to perform righteous deeds and repent in this world, and they have lost their families insofar as they will have no family in the Hereafter (Ṭ). They are thus left with no one to whom they can turn and in whom they might find comfort, or even with whom they can commiserate. In contrast, when the righteous approach Paradise, they shall enter along with those who were righteous from among their fathers, their spouses, and their progeny (13:23; cf. 40:8; 43:70).

16 Canopies here refers to layers of fire (JJ); cf. 29:55. With this threat does God strike fear into His believing servants, as indicated by the final address (JJ). Others take servants here as a reference to all human beings (Ṭ).

17 False deities translates al-ṭāghūt, which denotes a variety of false sources of authority, false objects of worship, and false causes (cf. 2:256–57; 4:51–52, 60, 76; 5:60; 16:36). To shun them thus implies shunning the worship of all that is other than God (Ṭ). Some take al-ṭāghūt to be singular and thus understand it to mean Satan (Ṭ); see also 4:51–52c.

18 Those who listen to the Word, then follow are those who understand it and act in accord with it (IK), similar to what is said to Moses regarding the commandments of the Torah in 7:145: Take hold of them with strength, and command thy people to hold to the best of them (IK). They are possessors of intellect because they follow and act in accord with revelation; see 39:9c; 5:100c. Following what is most beautiful of the revelation can also be understood to mean that one distinguishes between what is good and what is best, what is virtuous and what is most virtuous, and chooses the best or most virtuous course of action, desiring what is closer to God and what merits greater reward (Z).

19 The opening rhetorical question of this verse is answered by an elided or implied phrase something to the effect of "Is he to be delivered from the Fire." The question, posed to the Prophet, Wilt thou save one who is in the Fire? means that the function of the Prophet is simply to deliver the message and then help guide those whom God has chosen, since God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will (14:4; 16:93; 35:8). This verse resembles other verses that emphasize that human beings find guidance when God has comes due? Wilt thou save one who is in the Fire? (20) But as for those who reverence their Lord, they will have lofty abodes above which are lofty abodes, and rivers running below. That is God's Promise; God will not fail the tryst. (21) Hast thou not considered that God sends down water from the sky, conducts it as springs in the earth, then brings forth crops of diverse colors? Then they wither and thou seest them yellowing. Then He turns them to chaff. Truly in that is a reminder for possessors of intellect. (22) What of one whose breast God has expanded for submission, such that he follows a light from his Lord? Woe unto those whose hearts are hardened to the remembrance of God! They are in man-chosen to guide them, as in 16:9: And it is for God to show the way, for some of them lead astray. Had He willed, He would have guided you all together (cf. 13:31). According to another reading, this verse can also be read, "As for one for whom the Word of punishment comes due, wilt thou save one who is in the Fire?" (R, Z).

20 The lofty abodes of Paradise are described in several sayings of the Prophet: "In the Garden there are abodes whose inside can be seen from the outside and whose outside from the inside." When asked whom these rooms were for, he replied, "For those who speak kindly, feed the hungry, and stand in prayer at night while people are sleeping" (IK). In a ḥadīth that appears to allude to these lofty abodes, he said, "The people of the Garden will look upon one another in the abodes, just as you look upon the stars of the east and the stars of the west rising on the horizon according to their excellence in rank." When asked, "Are they the prophets?" he replied, "Yea! By Him in Whose Hand is my soul, and the people who believed in God and His Messenger and who affirmed the messengers" (IK). God will not fail the tryst (cf. 3:9, 195; 13:31) means that the Day of Reckoning is guaranteed and, in this context, that God will grant them what He has promised.

21 Regarding God's sending down water from the sky, see 6:99c. Here the various stages of plant life are posed as a metaphor for the stages of human life, as in 18:45: Set forth for them a parable of the life of this world: [It is] like water We send down from the sky. Then it mixes with the vegetation of the earth. Then it becomes chaff, scattered by the winds (cf. 57:20). Both verses indicate God's Power over all things and that all things perish, save His Face (28:88).

22 This first phrase is followed by an elided phrase that is understood to be something to the effect of "[is he] like he who is not" or "[is he] like one whose heart He has sealed" (JJ). The breast is understood to be the locus of the heart and the fountainhead of the spirit (Bḍ) and is thus identified with the seat of inspirations, thoughts, and intentions. The Quran mentions frequently that God knows what lies within breasts (e.g., 3:119, 154; 5:7c; 8:43; 11:5) and in 100:10 alludes to the Day of Judgment as a day on which what lies within breasts is made known. While the breast's expansion is associated with belief (see 94:1c), its contraction is associated with disbelief (see 6:125c). When one follows a light from his Lord it means that God has opened one's heart to spiritual knowledge (maʿrifah) and guidance (Bḍ). The manner in which light expands the breast is described by the Prophet: "When light enters the heart, it expands and it becomes spacious." When asked what the mark of that was, he responded, "Constant turning to the Abode of Eternity, shunning the abode of delusion, and preparing for death before it arrives" (Bḍ, N, Q). By contrast, those whose hearts are hardened to the remembrance of God stew in the dark recesses of desire and seek the things of this world, far from the lights of knowledge and guidance; see 8:29c. People's hearts may be described as "hardened," "sealed," or "covered" as a result of their own wrongdoing and the consequent loss of Divine Favor, so that they are no longer receptive to Divine messages or to the remembrance of God;

ifest error. (23) God has sent down the most beautiful discourse, a Book consimilar, paired, whereat quivers the skin of those who fear their Lord. Then their skin and their hearts soften unto the remembrance of God. That is God's Guidance, wherewith He guides whomsoever He will; and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. (24) What of one who guards with his face against the evil punishment on the Day of Resurrection? And it shall be said unto the

cf. 2:7, 74; 5:13; 6:25, 43; 7:101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 17:46; 18:57; 30:59; 47:16; 57:16; 63:3. Also see 10:88, where Moses asks God to harden the hearts of Pharaoh and his people.

23 The most beautiful discourse refers to the Quran (Bd, IK, Q), which is considered most beautiful in both meaning and expression, its verses being consimilar and paired, signifying aspects of this beauty (R). That it is consimilar can be understood to mean that each part is as eloquent as the next (R); to allude to the manner in which many parts resemble others, with various recurring phrases (IK, Ṭ); to refer to the manner in which particular qualities such as beauty and wisdom (Q) or truth and inimitability (Bd) are found throughout; or to mean that each part confirms the other parts (Q). Consimilar renders mutashābih, a word that is also used to describe some verses of the Quran in 3:7, but with a very different, more technical meaning of the word (IK); see 3:7c. Paired refers to the way that many opposites are juxtaposed in the Quran, such as Heaven and Hell, believers and disbelievers, the pious and the profligate, and reward and punishment (IK). An example of such juxtaposition is then provided through reference to the skin that quivers out of fear of God's Might and Punishment and the skins and hearts that soften out of hope for His Mercy and Forgiveness.

That the Quran makes skins quiver and then soften along with hearts is another attribute that makes it most beautiful (Aj). While other verses mention those whose hearts respond to the recitation of the Quran (see 8:2; 5:83), or when God is mentioned (22:35), this is the only verse to mention those whose skins quiver and soften unto the remembrance of God. According to some commentators, this is a description of the Companions of the Prophet, whose eyes would water and skins would quiver when the Quran was recited (Q). In this interpretation, remembrance is often understood to mean "Reminder," as a reference to the Quran, one of whose names is "the Reminder" (al-Dhikr). But as translated here, it is understood as a reference to the remembrance of God referred to in such verses as 13:28: Those who believe and whose hearts are at peace in the remembrance of God. Are not hearts at peace in the remembrance of God? It could also be understood to mean that when God remembers a person, that person's heart cannot but soften; see commentary on 29:45: But the remembrance of God is surely greater.

That is God's Guidance refers to the Quran as described in this verse (Q) or to what God has granted by way of fear of His Punishment and hope for His Reward (Q). As for those whom God leads astray, the Quran says that there is no way (4:88, 143; 42:46), no guide (7:186; 13:33; 39:36; 40:33), and no protector (18:17; 42:44). In this context no guide has he can be understood to mean that for one whose skin does not quiver and then soften along with the heart, there is no guidance.

24 There is an elided phrase here something to the effect of "Is he as one who does right." In this sense this verse is similar in meaning to 41:40: Is one who is cast in the Fire better, or one who comes in security on the Day of Resurrection? (IK, Ṭ) and 67:22: Is one who walks with his face stooped down more guided, or one who walks upright upon a straight path? (IK). Guards with his face indicates either that the first thing to touch the Fire is his face or that he is dragged upon his face into the Fire (Q, Ṭ). Taste that which you used to earn evokes a similar statement in 7:39: So taste of the punishment for that which you have earned.

wrongdoers, "Taste that which you used to earn." (25) Those before them denied, and the punishment came upon them whence they were not aware. (26) Thus did God make them taste disgrace in the life of this world; yet the punishment of the Hereafter is surely greater, if they but knew. (27) And indeed We have set forth for mankind in this Quran every kind of parable, that haply they may remember, (28) an Arabic Quran, bearing no crookedness, that haply they may be reverent. (29) God sets forth a parable: a man in whom quarreling partners share, and a man belonging to one man: are the two equal in likeness?

25 The punishment came upon them whence they were not aware (cf. 16:26, 45) refers to the punishments that came upon peoples of the past, such as the flood upon the people of Noah, the plagues upon the Egyptians, and the storms upon the people of Lot as well as the destruction of the Arabian tribes of ʿĀd and Thamūd, among others.

26 This verse is a warning to the disbelievers that, as bad as any disgrace they can imagine in this life may be, that of the Hereafter will be infinitely greater.

27 Every kind of parable can also be understood to mean "every parable," in which case it is read either as a reference to the accounts of the people alluded to in vv. 25–26 (Ṭ) or to mean all the parables that people would need for understanding religious matters (Bḍ, Q); see 30:58–59c. That haply they may remember can also be understood to mean "that they may take heed" (Bḍ). While the parables of the Quran are sent down for all of humanity, none understand them, save those who know (29:43).

28 An Arabic Quran is literally "an Arabic recitation" (cf. 12:2; 20:113; 41:3; 42:7; 43:3) and is understood as an allusion to the supreme eloquence of the Quran, which cannot be matched, as in 17:88, where the Prophet is enjoined, Say, "Surely if mankind and jinn banded together to bring the like of this Quran, they would not bring the like thereof, even if they supported one another" (R). Bearing no crookedness (cf. 18:1) is understood to mean that there is no contradiction in the Quran (IK, JJ, R), as in 4:82: Had it been from other than God, they would surely have found much discrepancy therein. That a verse ending with that haply they may remember is followed by this one ending with that haply they may be reverent can be understood to mean that remembrance, knowledge, and understanding precede and are thus necessary for true reverence (R).

29 In this analogy, a man in whom quarreling partners share represents the idolater, who serves many masters, while a man belonging to one man represents the believer, who serves only God (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). The two parts of this analogy can also be understood as representing a heart that is divided among many interests and one that is devoted entirely to God (Aj). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "Whosoever makes his aspirations one aspiration—that is, God—God suffices him for aspiration in this world. Yet whosoever is dispersed by his aspirations, in whichever valley of the world he may be destroyed, God has no concern for him" (Aj). And in another ḥadīth, "One for whom the world is his aspiration, God divides his affairs for him, places his poverty (faqr) before his eyes, and nothing of the world comes to him but what has been apportioned for him. Yet one for whom the Hereafter is his aspiration, God gathers his affairs together for him, places his wealth (ghināhu) in his heart, and the world comes to him, though it be slight" (Aj). Read in this way, this verse echoes the underlying theme of this sūrah, devoting religion entirely to Him (vv. 2, 11, 14) and following the pure religion (v. 3), since only the heart that has God as its single aspiration can be completely devoted to Him.

Most of them, meaning humanity in general or the disbelievers in particular, know not (cf. 7:187; 16:75, 101; 21:24; 27:61; 30:30; 31:25; 34:36; 40:57; 45:26) or understand not (5:103; 29:63; 49:4), thus most of mankind do not give thanks (2:243; 40:61;

Praise be to God! Nay, but most of them know not. (30) Surely thou wilt die, and surely they will die. (31) Then on the Day of Resurrection, before thy Lord will you dispute. (32) So who does greater wrong than one who lies against God and denies the truth when it comes to him? Is there not in Hell an abode for the disbelievers? (33) And whosoever comes with the truth and confirms it, it is they who are reverent. (34) With their Lord they shall have whatsoever they will—that is the recompense of the virtuous— (35) that God may absolve them of the worst of that which they have done and render unto them their reward for the

cf. 10:60; 12:38; 27:73) because they are not believers (11:17; 12:103–6; 13:1; 17:89; 26:8, 67, 103, 121, 139, 158, 174, 190; 40:59).

30–31 After v. 31 was revealed, the Prophet is reported to have been asked by his Companion al-Zubayr, "Shall the worst sins that passed between us in this world return to us?" The Prophet said, "Yes. They will indeed return to you until everyone who has a claim has presented that to which he has a claim." Al-Zubayr replied, "By God, the affair is severe" (IK). This verse can thus be understood as a reference to those who have been wronged disputing with those who wronged them, the truthful disputing with liars, and other such pairings (IK, Ṭs). It is also reported that Ibn ʿAbbās said, "People will dispute on the Day of Resurrection to the point that the soul will dispute with the body. The soul will say to the body, 'You did such and such.' And the body will say to the soul, 'You told me to do it and you tempted me.' . . . Then an angel will say to them, 'You have passed judgment against yourselves'" (IK). In this sense, v. 31 is similar to 41:19–21: And on that Day the enemies of God are gathered unto the Fire and are marshaled in [ordered ranks], till, when they come upon it, their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do. And they will say to their skins, "Why did you bear witness against us?"

Some also read the present verses as a reference to the disputes that arose among the Muslims soon after the death of the Prophet (IK, Ṭs). Some Shiites interpret them as a reference to those they believe usurped ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib's rightful place as the commander of the faithful (amīr al-muʾminīn; Qm).

32 Lies against God can also mean "lies regarding God," in reference to those who claim that God has partners or offspring (IK). It is similar to the frequently repeated question, Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God? (6:21, 93, 144; 7:37; 10:17; 11:18; 18:15; 29:68; cf. 61:7). Similarly, 6:157 asks, Who does greater wrong than one who denies the signs of God and turns away from them? Regarding the rhetorical question, Is there not in Hell an abode for the disbelievers? see 39:60; 29:68c.

33 This verse is best understood as a general statement referring to all who are called to believe in the Oneness of God, affirm the Prophet, and act in accord with the message with which he was sent, or to those who come with the Quran on the Day of Resurrection saying, "This is what you gave to us and we have followed what is in it" (Ṭ). Some, however, interpret whosoever comes with the truth as a reference to the Prophet (R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Ṭū) or to the Archangel Gabriel (Ṭs, Ṭū) and then read an additional but unstated phrase into the verse, so that it would be "and [he who] confirms it," referring to Abū Bakr, or "and [those who] confirm it," referring to Muslims in general (IK, R, Ṭ). But as al-Ṭabarī notes, such an addition is not warranted. Others read whosoever comes with the truth and confirms it as a reference to ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib (Qm).

34 Whatsoever they will (cf. 16:31; 25:16; 42:22; 50:35) refers to the many bounties of Paradise that are said to be granted to the reverent (16:31) as a binding promise upon your Lord (25:16); see also 52:22; 56:21; 77:41–44.

35 This is one of several verses to confirm that the believers are rewarded for the best of that which they used to do (9:121; 16:96–97; 24:38; 29:7; 46:16); see 29:7c.

best of that which they used to do. (36) Does God not suffice His servant? Yet they would frighten thee with those apart from Him; and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. (37) And whomsoever God guides, none shall lead him astray. Is not God Mighty, Possessor of Vengeance? (38) And wert thou to ask them, "Who created the heavens and the earth?" They would surely say, "God." Say, "Then have you considered those upon whom you call, apart from God? If God desires some harm for me, could they remove His Harm, or if He desires some mercy, could they withhold His Mercy?" Say, "God suffices me; in Him trust those who trust." (39) Say, "O my people! Act according to your position; I, too, am acting. Soon will you know (40) upon whom shall come a punishment that disgraces him and upon whom shall fall a punishment enduring." (41) Truly We have sent down unto thee the Book for mankind in truth.

36–37 The initial question asks, "Did not God suffice Muhammad, as He sufficed the prophets before him?" The idolaters think that raising the specter of their idols' displeasure and wrath will somehow influence the Prophet (Ṭ). His servant can also be understood to mean any believer, meaning that God suffices for anyone who worships only Him and relies solely upon Him (IK). In this sense, it follows upon the analogy of v. 29: in addition to not being divided between many masters and having a heart dispersed by many aspirations like the idolater, the believing monotheist has in God all that he or she needs. The one who does not believe and trust in God is allowed to go astray and has no way (4:88, 143; 42:46), no guide (7:186; 13:33; 39:23; 40:33), and no protector (17:97; 18:17; 42:44); and it is they who are the losers (7:178). In contrast, whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided (7:178; 17:97; 18:17) and none can undo His Guidance, since God is Powerful over all things (2:20, 106, 148, 284; 3:29, 165). In this context, that God is Mighty, Possessor of Vengeance (cf. 3:5; 5:95; 14:47) indicates that, unlike the idols of whom the idolaters warn the Prophet, God will have vengeance upon those who deny Him.

38 When questioned about the source of creation, they—that is, the idolaters among the Quraysh—would surely say, "God" (cf. 10:31; 23:84–89; 29:61, 63; 31:25; 43:9, 87), because the agency of a Creator above all others is evident to them (Aj), given that many of them still believed in one supreme deity at the head of a pantheon. Their belief in a supreme deity is then used to argue that there is no way that any of their other deities could avert what God desires or has ordained, as in 10:107: And if God should touch thee with affliction, none can remove it save He; and if He desires some good for thee, none can hold back His Bounty. He causes it to fall upon whomsoever He will among His servants (cf. 3:160; 36:23; 48:11). God suffices me (cf. 3:173; 9:59, 129) means both that God suffices as a Witness (4:79, 167; 10:29; 17:96; 29:52; 48:29) between the Prophet and the disbelievers and that, since none can remove God's harm, only God suffices as a Guardian (4:81, 132, 171; 33:3, 48).

39–40 The injunction to act serves as a threat and a warning to the disbelievers (IK) meaning, "Perform the deeds prescribed by your religion, just as I will perform the deeds prescribed by my religion, and soon will you know whose religion is true" and thus who will be punished with a punishment that disgraces him (cf. 11:39, 93) in this life and who will have a punishment enduring (cf. 5:37; 9:68; 11:39) in the Hereafter.

41 Regarding the Quran having been sent down in truth or with truth (cf. 2:176, 213; 3:3; 4:105; 5:48; 6:114; 39:2; 42:17), see 39:2c. Here for mankind is added to the phrase, indicating that it is out of God's Mercy that such revelation occurs, communicating truth and guidance to human beings. That one is guided for the sake of his own soul (which can also mean "for himself") means that the benefit of guidance is for the human being alone; God has no need of it, but simply offers it as a mercy. In contrast, those who go astray harm only themselves, just as those who do wrong wrong only themselves; see commentary on the almost identical passages in 17:15 and 10:108. That the Prophet is not a guardian over them (cf. 6:107; 42:6; also 6:66; 10:108; 17:54; 25:43) also indicates that the Prophet should not torment himself (see 18:6; 26:3) or let his soul be expended in regrets (35:8) over the state and actions of the disbelievers (R). Elsewhere, the Prophet is told, Thou art only a warner, and God is Guardian over all things (11:12), and that he is not their keeper (4:80; 6:104; 11:86; 42:48), since in the end, only God suffices as a Guardian (4:81, 132, 171; 33:3, 48; see also 17:65).

Whosoever is rightly guided, it is for the sake of his own soul. And whosoever goes astray only goes astray to the detriment thereof. And thou art not a guardian over them. (42) God takes souls at the moment of their death, and those who die not, during their sleep. He withholds those for whom He has decreed death, and sends forth the others till a term appointed. Truly in that are signs for a people who reflect. (43) Or do they take intercessors apart from God? Say, "Even though they have not any power and do not understand?" (44) Say, "Unto God belongs intercession altogether. To Him belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. Then unto Him shall you be returned." (45) And when God is

42 God takes souls by sending the Angel of Death to them, as in 32:11: Say, "The Angel of death, who has been entrusted with you, will take you; then unto your Lord shall you be returned." In death souls are completely detached from the body, and in sleep they are partially detached (R), as in 6:60: He it is Who takes your souls by night. Regarding the relationship between the two, a ḥadīth states, "Sleep is the brother of death, and the people of the Garden do not die" (Q); see also 6:60–61c and the essay, "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife." Regarding the taking of the soul while human beings are sleeping, the Prophet advised his Companions to say when going to bed, "In Thy Name, my Lord, I lay down my body, and in Thee do I raise it. If Thou dost take my soul, have mercy upon it. And if Thou dost send it back, protect it with that with which Thou protectest Thy righteous servants" (IK, Q). A term appointed indicates the moment of death or the Day of Judgment, when all things are returned to God. For all human beings, as for all creation, this term is decreed, as in 6:2: He it is Who created you from clay, then decreed a term. A term is appointed with Him (see also 6:60; 10:49; 13:2; 42:14; 46:3). In this particular context, till a term appointed refers to the return of souls to their bodies when they awaken (R), thus granting them reprieve until they are taken in death and then called to account; see 35:45c.

43–44 Even though it is only God Who takes souls, the idolaters still turn to their idols for intercession or as a means of bringing them nigh in nearness unto God (v. 3), because they do not understand (Q). Those upon whom they call apart from Him have no power of intercession, save such as have borne witness to the truth knowingly (43:86; cf. 19:87). Thus although unto God belongs intercession altogether, others, especially prophets, can be granted powers of intercession by His Leave, as in 20:109: On that Day intercession will be of no benefit, save [that of] those whom the Compassionate has granted leave and with whose word He is content (cf. 34:23; 53:26). Regarding the Quranic presentation of intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c. Then unto Him shall you be returned is a common Quranic refrain, here referring to the Judgment before God (IK), when the disbelievers will be taken to account for their idolatry (T).

45 When God is mentioned without any acknowledgment of the deities and idols the idolaters worship, their hearts shudder and withdraw in mentioned alone, the hearts of those who believe not in the Hereafter recoil. But when those apart from Him are mentioned, behold, they rejoice. (46) Say, "O God! Originator of the heavens and the earth, Knower of the Unseen and the seen, Thou judgest between Thy servants regarding that wherein they differ." (47) Were those who work evil to possess all that is on the earth and the like of it besides, they would seek to ransom themselves with it from the terrible punishment on the Day of Resurrection. And there will appear unto them from God that which they had not reckoned. (48) The evils of that which they have earned will appear unto them, and that which they used to mock will beset disgust and disdain (Ṭ), as they are filled with distress and rancor (Z). But when their deities are acknowledged, they rejoice (Z). That they rejoice in idolatry and recoil from monotheism reveals the depth of their disbelief. According to some commentators, this verse refers to their reaction on the day when, in front of the Kaʿbah, the Prophet recited to them Sūrah 53, al-Najm, "The Star" (Ṭ, Z), which some contend had at one point contained a mistaken reference to their idols as "exalted cranes" (see 22:52c; 53:19–20c). This caused the idolaters to rejoice, thinking their religion had found acceptance in the new revelation, until 53:23 was revealed and said of their deities, They are naught but names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority.

46 Originator translates Fāṭir, a Divine Name related to the verb faṭara, meaning to "split" or "cleave." In the Quran, Fāṭir always occurs in the phrase Originator of the heavens and the earth (cf. 6:14; 12:101; 14:10; 35:1; 42:11). Regarding God as Knower of the Unseen and the seen (cf. 6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 32:6; 59:22; 62:8; 64:18), see 59:22c. When the Prophet's wife ʿĀʾishah was asked how he began his supererogatory prayers at night, she replied that he would say, "O God, Lord of Gabriel, Michael, and Seraphiel, Originator of the heavens and the earth, Knower of the Unseen and the seen, Thou judgest between Thy servants regarding that wherein they differ. By Thy Leave, guide me with regard to that of the truth wherein there is dispute. Truly Thou guidest whomsoever Thou wilt unto a straight path" (IK, Q, R).

47 The certainty of the reckoning after death is a central theme of the Quran, and it is considered futile to seek to ransom oneself with worldly goods from punishment in the Hereafter. Several verses are more emphatic, such as 3:91: An earth full of gold would not be accepted from any one of them, were he to offer it in ransom (see also 2:48, 123; 10:54; 13:18; 57:15). The overwhelming fright of the Day of Resurrection is said to be such that the guilty would wish to ransom himself from the punishment of that Day at the price of his children, his spouse and his brother, his kin who had sheltered him, and all who are on the earth, that it might save him (70:11–14). That which they had not reckoned may refer to the evildoers' denial that they would be taken to account for anything (Ṭ); to bad deeds that they had thought were in fact good deeds (Q), such as their worship of idols; to deeds from which they thought they would be able to repent before they died, though they were never able to do so; or to their failure to realize that they could not be forgiven without repentance (Q). It can thus be understood as a reference to everything of which a human being may be heedless in this life, as in 50:22, when every soul is addressed with the words, You were indeed heedless of this. Now We have removed from you your cover; so today your sight is piercing. In this vein, the present verse can also be seen as a warning. As the prominent Quran reciter Muhammad ibn al-Munkadir (d. 130/747–8) is reported to have said of this verse, "I fear that there will appear unto me from God that which I had not reckoned" (Aj, Q, Z).

them. (49) And when harm befalls man, he calls upon Us. Then, when We confer upon him a blessing from Us, he says, "I was only given it because of knowledge." Nay, it is a trial, but most of them know not. (50) Those before them did say the same; yet that which they used to earn availed them not. (51) So the evils of that which they earned befell them. And as for those who do wrong among these, the evils of that which they have earned will befall them, and they cannot thwart [it]. (52) Do they not know that God outspreads and straitens provision 69:25; 78:29; 84:7–10) in their left hands (Ṭ); or what will appear are the effects of the evil deeds, that is, the types of retribution these deeds have earned them (R). And that which they used to mock will beset them (cf. 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 21:41; 40:83; 45:33; 46:26) indicates that there is now no escape from their punishment (Ṭ), which will come upon them from every direction (R), and that what they will receive is a direct result of their own iniquity, since God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44).

49 Cf. 10:12; 30:33; 39:8; see 39:8c. In this context, that people turn to God in a time of need and then turn away, waxing arrogant in a time of blessing, is another indication of utter corruption, since they have in effect acknowledged that none but God can protect them from what afflicts them, but then they ascribe their gains and achievements to their own striving. And this is a great contradiction (R). I was only given it because of knowledge means, "I was given these blessings because God knew that I deserved them" (IK, R), "because I have a special position" (IK, Q), "because I myself knew that I deserved them" (IK, R), "because my own knowledge earned this benefit for me" (Q, R), or "because of some knowledge that God has taught me" (Q). Such blessings are a trial from God because one must manifest gratitude upon receiving them and patience upon their disappearance (R).

50 The same refers to the statement I was only given it because of knowledge in v. 49 (Q, R, Ṭ, Z), which is similar to what Korah, a wealthy member of Pharaoh's court, says in 28:78, I have only been given it on account of knowledge I possess. But for those earlier people who made this statement, in this life and the Hereafter that which they used to earn availed them not (cf. 15:84; 40:82). That phrase can also be understood as a rhetorical question when the particle mā, here rendered as a negative particle, is understood as an interrogative particle; it would then read, "Then in what way did that which they used to earn avail them?" (Q). Both renderings indicate the frailty and ephemerality of the things that consume people in this life before there will appear unto them from God that which they had not reckoned (v. 47), on the Day when neither wealth nor children avail, save for him who comes to God with a sound heart (26:88–89).

51 The first part of this verse refers to those before them (v. 50), while among these refers to the disbelievers among the Quraysh and the contemporaries of the Prophet, who will be beset by the evil consequences of their disbelief and misdeeds, as were previous generations. They cannot thwart God in this life or the next (R; see 35:44; 72:12) or thwart the punishment they have been promised, as in 6:134: Indeed, that which you are promised shall come to pass, and you cannot thwart it.

52 God outspreads . . . provision for whomsoever He will as a test and straitens provision for whomsoever He will as a trial (JJ); cf. 13:6; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:39; 42:12. In this context, this phrase indicates that one does not receive blessings or suffer misfortune based on one's intelligence or ignorance (R), as the disbelievers are said to think in v. 49, or because of one's natural disposition or other outside forces (R), but rather because God provides and withholds provision as He wills. People who believe, affirming the truth and consenting to it when it is made clear to them, know that the one who does this could only be God (Ṭ), and in that are signs for a people who believe (cf. 6:99; 16:79; 27:86; 29:24; 30:37).

for whomsoever He will? Truly in that are signs for a people who believe. (53) Say, "O My servants who have been prodigal to the detriment of their own souls! Despair not of God's Mercy. Truly God forgives all sins. Truly He is the Forgiving, the Merciful. (54) Turn unto your Lord and submit to Him before the punishment comes upon you, whereupon you will not be helped. (55) And follow the 53 This verse is similar to 4:110: Whosoever does evil or wrongs himself, and then seeks forgiveness of God, he will find God Forgiving, Merciful. Many scholars consider this to be among the most hopeful verses of the Quran (others include 4:48, 116; 24:22; 33:47; 42:19, 22; 93:5) or among "the most joyous verses of the Quran" (Ṭ). Although this verse addresses all of humanity (Ṭ), many understand it to have initially addressed the situation of some Makkans who feared that they could not repent and follow the Prophet because they had worshipped idols, called upon other deities, killed people whose lives God had declared inviolable (IK, Ṭ), or fornicated (IK). Their being prodigal to the detriment of their own souls would then refer to all manner of sin, even their having killed innocent people in the pre-Islamic Age of Ignorance (jāhiliyyah; see 3:154; 5:50; 33:33; 48:26c; Ṭ); for the Quranic usage of "prodigal," see 10:12c.

Others understand this verse to have been revealed in reference to a small group of Muslims whom the Makkans had prevented from migrating to Madinah with the Prophet and then forced, under the pain of persecution, to renounce Islam; for this they feared they could not repent (Ṭ). According to Thawbān, a freed slave of the Prophet, the Prophet said, "I would not wish to have the entire world and all that is in it [in exchange] for this verse: O My servants who have been prodigal to the detriment of their own souls! Despair not of God's Mercy." A man asked, "O Messenger of God, what about someone who associates partners with God?" The Prophet was silent and then said three times, "And why not one who associates partners with God?" (Ṭ). Such forgiveness would, however, be contingent upon the renouncement of idolatry and repentance for it, since 4:48 states, Truly God forgives not that any partner be ascribed unto Him, but He forgives what is less than that for whomsoever He will (cf. 4:116).

According to a third opinion, this verse was revealed to correct a group of Muslims who held that anyone who committed a major sin was among the people of the Fire (Ṭ). Regarding the manner in which God's Forgiveness is intrinsic to the human experience, the Prophet said, "If you did not sin [and seek forgiveness], God would remove you and come with a people who would sin and seek forgiveness from God, and He would forgive them."

54 Here turn unto your Lord indicates turning in repentance (Ṭ), responding to God, returning to obedience to God, and withdrawing from the acts of disobedience before one is punished for being a disbeliever (Ṭ). This verse thus provides the reason why one should despair not of God's Mercy, as in 9:104: Know they not that God accepts repentance from His servants, and receives the charitable offerings, and that God is the Relenting, the Merciful? The combination of turning to God in repentance and submitting to Him can then evoke the opening injunction of this sūrah to worship God, devoting religion entirely to Him (vv. 2, 11, 14), which can be seen as embracing the original or primordial human state of pure faith (Ṭ), as expressed in a prayer of Abraham, Truly I have turned my face toward Him Who created the heavens and the earth, as a ḥanīf, and I am not of the idolaters (6:79; Ṭ).

55 As in v. 18, what is most beautiful of what God has revealed is not understood to mean that one part is more beautiful than another (Q, Ṭ), but that one should act in accord with the revelation, thus maintaining obedience and avoiding disobedience (Q, R) or practicing what God has enjoined and avoiding what He has forbidden (Ṭ), since it is only when the injunctions contained in revelation have been put into practice that their purpose is achieved; see also 39:18c. Some understand this verse to mean that the Quran is the best or most beautiful of the books that God has sent down (IK, Q), as in v. 23, where it is referred to as the most beautiful discourse (R).

most beautiful of that which has been sent down unto you from your Lord, before the punishment comes suddenly upon you while you are unaware," (56) lest any soul should say, "Alas for me, for what I neglected of my duty to God! Indeed, I was among the scoffers." (57) Or lest it say, "If only God had guided me, I would have been among the reverent." (58) Or lest it say, when it sees the punishment, "If only I had another chance, I would be among the virtuous." (59) Nay, My signs did indeed come unto you; yet you denied them, waxed arrogant, and were among the disbelievers. (60) And on the Day of Resurrection thou wilt see those who lied against God having blackened faces. Is there not in Hell an abode for the arrogant? (61) And God saves those who are reverent by their 56 Lest any soul should say, that is, lest anyone should seek to repent only when it is too late. Alas for me is understood as an expression of utmost regret and grief (R) for having failed to perform the deeds enjoined by God (Q, R, Ṭ). Of my duty to God renders fī janbi'Llāh, which literally means "regarding the side of God" and is interpreted to mean, "of God's Right" (Bḍ), "of obedience to God" (Q, Ṭs, Z), or "of the reward of God" (Q, Ṭs). In Arabic, "side" (janb) can allude to physical, emotional, and spiritual closeness, as when one speaks of being by another's side in English. "Of the side of God" could then refer to being near to God and thus in Paradise, to being in the proximity of what leads to God (Q), or to seeking nearness to God (Ṭs). The scoffers are those who scoffed at the Quran and the Messenger (Q, Ṭ).

57 On the one hand, this lament is understood as correct (Q, R), since God guides whomsoever He will unto a straight path (2:213; 24:46; cf. 2:142; 10:25). But, on the other hand, people are responsible for not having followed God's guidance, for God offered signs, but some chose not to look at or reflect upon them, turning away from the Quran and being preoccupied with the world and its vanities. Thus God responds, Nay, My signs did indeed come unto you (v. 59; Ṭs).

58 While those represented in the previous verse blame God for their having not been guided, those represented in this verse acknowledge some culpability and ask to be given a second chance, as in 32:12, when the guilty say, Send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain. But as they have been given revelation in this world as well as a reprieve until the moment of death, such lamentations are not considered sincere and are of no avail, for even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden. Truly they are liars (6:28).

59 This is God's response to the laments expressed in vv. 56–58, meaning that those voicing them had been informed of what would befall them through God's signs, meaning revelation as well as the Divine signs in the created order, that is, God's signs upon the horizons and within themselves (41:53), and thus have no excuse.

60 For the phenomenon of faces being blackened or covered, see 3:106–7c, where those with whitened faces are contrasted to those with blackened faces; commentary on 80:38–42, which contrasts shining, radiant faces with those that are covered with dust, overspread with darkness; as well as 10:27, which speaks of the faces being covered with dark patches of night.

61 Their triumph may refer to the virtues or deeds of the reverent (Ṭ), to their being delivered from the Fire (Ṭs), or to the triumph of spiritual concerns over worldly ones. Attaining to the Garden is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of the Garden, see 5:119; 44:51–57. The torments of Hell will not befall them; nor will they grieve regarding the things of this world, which have now passed (Ṭ). Alternately, that they are not touched by evil or grief refers to their being spared any punishment on the Day of Resurrection (IK).

triumph; evil will not befall them; nor will they grieve. (62) God is the Creator of all things, and He is Guardian over all things. (63) Unto Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth. And those who disbelieve in the signs of God, it is they who are the losers. (64) Say, "Do you bid me worship other than God, O ignorant ones?" (65) Surely it has been revealed unto thee and unto those before thee that if thou dost ascribe partners [unto God], thy work will surely come to naught and thou shalt be among the losers. (66) Rather, worship God and be among the thankful! (67) They did not measure God with His true measure. The whole earth shall be but a handful to Him on the Day of Resurrection, and the 62 Elsewhere the Prophet is told, Thou art only a warner, and God is Guardian over all things (11:12); see 39:41c.

63 That God holds the keys of the heavens and the earth (cf. 42:12) indicates that He has sovereignty over them and protects them (Z). It is understood to mean "the keys to the treasuries" (Ṭ) and thus to be an indirect reference to the treasuries themselves (R, Z), an allusion to 15:21, Naught is there, but that its treasuries lie with Us, and We do not send it down, save in a known measure (cf. 63:7), meaning that God opens the treasuries of provision and mercy unto whomsoever He wills and closes them as He alone desires (Z), dispersing provisions and mercy (Ṭs). It may also refer to God's Knowledge, as in 6:59: And with Him are the keys of the Unseen. None knows them but He. On a spiritual level, it can be understood to mean that God possesses the keys to all hearts (ST); see 6:59c. Having denied God's signs, the disbelievers lose any share of the good that God measures out from His treasuries, in this life and the next (Ṭ).

64 This rhetorical question serves as an expression of amazement that the disbelievers could ask the Prophet to worship those who have none of the keys to the treasuries alongside the One Who has them all, as in 38:9, which asks about their deities, or have they the treasuries of thy Lord's Mercy, the Mighty, the Bestower? (cf. 52:32).

65 This verse repeats the Quranic assertion that, in the absence of correct and proper belief, good deeds come to naught, providing no reward in the next life, because, as the Prophet is reported to have said, "Deeds are only in accord with their intentions, and every person has only what he intended." See also 2:217; 3:22; 5:5, 53; 6:88; 7:147; 9:17; 11:16; 18:105; 33:19; 47:9, 28, 32.

66 One should be thankful to God for His Guidance in worshipping Him alone and repudiating the worship of idols (Ṭ) and, in the context of the preceding verses, for what He has measured out for human beings from His treasuries.

67 The idolaters did not honor God as He should be honored (Q, Ṭ) when they assigned partners to Him, described Him by attributes that do not pertain to Him (Bḍ), and did not believe that God has complete power over all things (IK, Ṭ). Almost all commentators relate this verse to the idolaters of Makkah, but those who provide multiple opinions also relate it to an instance when a Jew, some say a rabbi, said to the Prophet, "O Muhammad! God will put the heavens on a finger, the earths on another finger, the mountains on a finger, and the rest of creation on another finger. Then He will say, 'I am the King.'" At this the Prophet smiled broadly until his molars could be seen and recited this verse (IK, Q, Ṭ), some say in confirmation of what had been said (IK, Ṭ), indicating that the Prophet recognized that the Muslims and the Jews were both monotheists, the opposite of the idolaters. Less reliable accounts say that this verse was actually revealed as a rebuke to the position expressed by the Jew (Ṭ); for they did not measure God with His true measure, see also 6:91c; 22:74c. That the whole earth shall be but a handful to Him indicates the ease with which God can bring creation to an end (Bḍ). Glory be to Him, exalted is He above the partners they as- heavens will be enfolded in His right Hand. Glory be to Him, exalted is He above the partners they ascribe. (68) And the trumpet will be blown, whereupon whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth will swoon, save those whom God wills. Then it will be blown again, and, behold, they will be standing, beholding. (69) The earth will shine with the Light of its Lord, the Book will be set down, and the prophets and the witnesses will be brought forth. Judgment will be made between them in truth, and they shall not be wronged. (70) Every soul will be paid in full for that which it has done, and He knows best what they cribe (cf. 10:18; 16:1; 30:40) is an affirmation of God's utter transcendence.

68 This verse stands apart from others that mention the blowing of the trumpet heralding the apocalypse and the onset of the Final Judgment (see 6:73; 18:99; 20:102; 23:101; 27:87; 36:51; 50:20; 69:13; 74:8; 78:18) in that it speaks of the trumpet being blown twice by the Archangel Seraphiel. The first blow, blast, or call (as it is named in other contexts) results in the destruction of all creation, and the second heralds the Resurrection. Those who are exempted from swooning at the first trumpet blast are said to be the archangels Gabriel, Michael, and Seraphiel and the Angel of Death, ʿIzrāʾīl (or Azrael; Ṭ, Ṭs). Others say that eventually everything swoons; then God resurrects Seraphiel to blow the trumpet another time, summoning the Resurrection (IK); this second blast is what is referred to in 79:13–14: Yet it shall be but a single cry, then, behold, they will be upon a wide expanse (cf. 30:25). The Prophet is reported to have said that the period between the two blasts will be forty, though he did not specify if he meant hours, days, months, or years. The Prophet continued, "Then God will send down a rain from the sky, and the dead body will sprout just as a green plant sprouts. Every part of the person will deteriorate except for one bone, and it is the coccyx bone. From it creation will be assembled on the Day of Judgment" (IK).

69–70 The earth will shine on the barren plain upon which all human beings will be gathered for the Resurrection, but it will not be as the earth we know, since on that Day the earth shall be changed into other than the earth (14:48). Rather, God will leave it a barren plain. You will see no crookedness or curvature therein (20:106–7). Human beings, and some say all creatures, will come from their graves to this plain in throngs (78:18). They will gather, according to a ḥadīth, "barefoot, naked, and uncircumcised, engulfed by their sweat, which will reach to their very nostrils." They will not, however, look upon one another, since for every man that Day his affair shall suffice him (80:37). Each person will then be presented the book of his or her deeds, which leaves out nothing, small or great (18:49); see 17:71c; 69:19–29c.

The prophets and the witnesses from among the angels who recorded their deeds in their books (IK, Ṭs; see 43:80c; 50:17–18c; 82:10–11) will then be brought forth to bear witness for or against human beings. Others understand the witnesses as a reference to those who bear witness that the prophets delivered the revelations and that the people denied them (Ṭs) or as a reference to those who were martyred in the path of God (Ṭs). It could also be understood as a reference to everything that will bear witness for them or against them (Ṭs), from the angels to their own limbs, regarding the latter of which 41:20 states, Their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do. When all of their deeds are laid bare, the deeds will be weighed against one another, as in 21:47: We shall set the just scales for the Day of Resurrection, and no soul shall be wronged in aught. Even if it be the weight of a mustard seed, We shall bring it. Thus they shall not be wronged (cf. 2:281; 6:160; 10:47, 54; 16:111; 21:47; 36:54c; 45:22; 46:19). Then every soul will be paid in full for what good or evil it has done (cf. 16:111) or what it has earned (2:281; 3:25).

do. (71) And those who disbelieve will be driven unto Hell in throngs, till when they reach it, its gates will be opened and its keepers will say unto them, "Did not messengers from among you come to you, reciting unto you the signs of your Lord and warning you of the meeting with this your Day?" They will say, "Yea, indeed!" But the Word of punishment has come due for the disbelievers. (72) It will be said, "Enter the gates of Hell, to abide therein." How evil is the abode of the arrogant! (73) And those who reverence their Lord will be driven to the Garden in throngs, till when they reach it, its gates will be opened and its keepers will say unto them, "Peace be upon you; you have done well; so enter it, to abide [therein]." (74) They will say, "Praise be to God, Who was faithful to us in His Promise, and has caused us to inherit the land, that we may settle in the Garden wheresoever we will." How excellent is the reward of the workers!

71–72 Those whose scales are heavy with good deeds will then be separated from those whose scales are light (see 23:102–3; 101:6–9c), and the latter are driven and thrust into the Fire of Hell with [violent] thrusting (52:13). After the gates of Hell are opened (cf. 16:29), its keepers, who are said to be nineteen angels (see 74:30c), will ask the disbelievers this rhetorical question by way of rebuke (cf. 40:50; 67:8–9). The disbelievers will answer in the affirmative, saying, Indeed, a warner came unto us, but we denied him and said, "God did not send anything down; you are in naught but great error." . . . Had we listened or had we understood, we would not be among the inhabitants of the Blaze (67:9–10). But their now belated affirmation can do nothing to forestall their impending punishment, because they were indeed "warned" and given ample opportunity to repent, thus the Word of punishment has come due (cf. 10:33; 22:18; 36:7; 40:6). Having been made to realize and admit their error, the disbelievers are then cast into Hell.

73 In contrast to the disbelievers, the reverent believers, whose scales are heavy, will enter the gates of the Garden, of which, according to several aḥādīth, there are eight (IK, Q, Ṭs). The throngs are understood as a reference to one throng coming after another, starting with the best, then the next best, and then the next (IK). In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, "I will be the first to enter Paradise" (IK). Among the throngs, the first to enter is said to be a group "appearing like the moon on the night when it is full, and they will be followed by a group that looks like the brightest star shining in the sky" (IK). In other aḥādīth, this group is reported to number seventy thousand or seven hundred thousand (IK). Elsewhere it is said that angels shall enter upon them from every gate. "Peace be upon you because you were patient." How excellent is the Ultimate Abode! (13:23–24). Regarding the gates of the Garden, see 13:23–24c; 38:50c. This is one of several verses that speak of the greeting of Peace or Peace be upon you that awaits believers in the Hereafter (see also 7:46; 10:10; 13:23–24; 14:23; 16:32; 19:62; 25:75; 33:44; 36:58c; 56:25–26).

74 These are the words of the inhabitants of the Garden in response to the greetings from the angels. His Promise refers to that given to all human beings in 10:4, whether they are destined for Heaven or for Hell: Unto Him is your return all together; God's Promise is true, a promise at which the disbelievers scoff in several verses, saying, When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25). In this case, His Promise also refers more specifically to the various promises given to the believers, as in v. 20 as well as 31:8–9: Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be Gardens of bliss, therein to abide—God's Promise in truth (cf. 4:122). The righteous are also said to "inherit" Paradise in 7:43 and 23:10–11 and to inherit the earth in 21:105, which can be understood to mean that they may do with it as they please and, in their own words, settle wheresoever we will.

(75) And thou shalt see the angels encircling all around the Throne, hymning the praise of their Lord. Judgment shall be made between them in truth, and it will be said, "Praise be to God, Lord of the worlds."

For more on the events pertaining to the end of time described in vv. 68–74, see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran."

75 While the angels encircling all around the Throne of God hymn His praise, those who bear the Throne and those who dwell nigh unto it (40:7), the latter of whom may be the same as those mentioned here, supplicate God saying, Our Lord, Thou dost encompass all things in Mercy and Knowledge. Forgive those who repent and follow Thy way, and shield them from the punishment of Hellfire. Our Lord, make them enter Gardens of Eden that Thou hast promised them and those among their fathers, their spouses, and their progeny who were righteous. Truly Thou art the Mighty, the Wise (40:7–8).

This final Praise be to God is uttered by the angels or by God Himself (IK). Some commentators note the significance of the fact that this account of the end of creation finishes with Praise be to God and another account of the beginning of creation starts in the same way (Praise be to God, Who created the heavens and the earth, and made darkness and light, 6:1; IK, Q, Ṭs); they take this to imply that creation begins and ends with God's praise.

The Forgiver

Ghāfir

Some maintain that Ghāfir, a Makkan sūrah, was revealed directly after Sūrah 39, al-Zumar (JJ). According to some, vv. 56–57 are Madinan (IJ, JJ, Q, Ṭs), and others add v. 55 to those as well (Q, Ṭs). Still others say that only v. 55 is Madinan (Āl), since the injunction to hymn the praise of thy Lord at eventide and at dawn is interpreted as a reference to the morning and sunset prayers, which did not become obligatory until the last few years of the Makkan period. The sūrah takes its name from the reference to God as the Forgiver of sins in v. 3, but it is also known as "The Believer" (al-Muʾmin), because of the discussion of a believing man from the House of Pharaoh (v. 28). It is also known by the title "The Bounty" (al-Faḍl), because of the reference to God as Possessed of Bounty in v. 3 (IJ, Q).

Ghāfir is the first in a series of seven *sūrah*s whose opening verses begin with the separated Arabic letters ḥāʾ and mīm and are followed by a reference to the Quran. Revealed during the same period, these *sūrah*s are known collectively as the Ḥawāmīm and as "The Brides" (IK, Q). Addressing several recurring themes, they provide solace to the Muslim community at a time of persecution, foretelling the triumph of the revelation and the demise of those who oppose it.

The sūrah opens with an affirmation of the revelation and of God's Mercy and Forgiveness (vv. 2–3), followed by a repudiation of those who dispute the signs of God (vv. 4–6), which becomes a recurring theme of the sūrah, and an extended prayer uttered by the angels for human beings (vv. 7–9). Vv. 10–20 then tell of the place of the disbelievers in the Hereafter, warning of their ultimate demise. This section serves as the thematic backdrop for an extended account of the story of Moses and Pharaoh (vv. 21–50), the main feature of which is the story of a believing man from the House of Pharaoh who challenges Pharaoh's opposition to Moses (vv. 28–45).

An affirmation of the Divine Aid that God sends upon His messengers (vv. 51–60) concludes with a condemnation of those who are too arrogant to worship God (v. 60), which segues into a discussion of God's Power over all of creation (vv. 61–68). The sūrah then discusses the punishment that awaits the disbelievers (vv. 69–76) and counsels the Prophet to have patience, citing the examples of prophets who prevailed before him (vv. 77–78). After a reflection on some signs of God's Generosity and Power (vv. 79–82), the sūrah concludes with an assurance that those who oppose God's messengers will be defeated in the end (vv. 83–85).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Ḥā. Mīm. (2) The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Knower, (3) Forgiver of sins, Accepter of repentance, severe in retribution,

1 Ghāfir is the first in a series of seven sūrahs that open with the Arabic letters ḥāʾ and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm. The Arabic letters ḥāʾ and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose meaning is considered to be known only to God; see 2:1c. Some commentators connect all of the sūrahs that begin with Ḥā Mīm to 39:63—to Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth—and suggest that Ḥā Mīm is a name for the keys of God's treasuries (Q). Connecting ḥāʾ mīm to the separated letters at the beginning of other sūrahs, other commentators suggest that the letters alif lām rāʾ (a-l-r; 10:1; 11:1; 12:1; 13:1, 14:1; 15:1), ḥāʾ mīm (ḥ-m), and nūn (n; 68:1) combine to make the Divine Name al-Raḥmān, "the Compassionate" (Q). In this same vein, some suggest that each letter stands for a Divine Name that begins with that letter, such as, for the letter ḥāʾ, al-Ḥamīd, "the Praised," al-Ḥalīm, "the Clement," and al-Ḥakīm, "The Wise," and for the letter mīm, al-Mālik, "the Sovereign," al-Majīd, "the Illustrious," and al-Mutakabbir, "the Proud" (Q). Others say that Ḥā Mīm is a name of the Quran (Q) or of this sūrah (R).

2 Here and in similar verses (cf. 39:1; 45:2; 46:2) this statement could also be read, "This is the revelation of the Book from God" (Q, Ṭs), while here and in 45:2 and 46:2 it could be read, "Ḥā Mīm is the revelation of the Book" (Q). For the meaning of the verse, see commentary on 39:1, which differs from this verse only in that the last Divine Name is the Wise.

3 This is one of many verses that join the mention of God's Forgiveness and Mercy with that of God's Retribution and Rigor, as in 15:49–50: Tell My servants that I am indeed the Forgiving, the Merciful, and that My Punishment is the painful punishment (IK). According to some, the first of the Divine Attributes listed here indicates that God forgives small sins if one performs acts of obedience that outweigh these sins, but only forgives grave sins through acts of repentance. But al-Rāzī maintains that it is greater praise to say that God can and sometimes does forgive great sins even without repentance. The placement of severe in retribution between three descriptions of God's Mercy, the first two of which indicate the disappearance of Divine Retribution, shows the precedence and preponderance of God's Mercy over His Wrath (R), as in 7:156, My Mercy encompasses all things, and the famous ḥadīth qudsī, "My Mercy outstrips My Wrath." This relation is present in the structure of the text as well; in Accepter of repentance, severe in retribution, the absence of "and" (wa) between these two Attributes indicates that God's severity is not detached from His accepting repentance, hence not detached from His Mercy (R).

Possessed of Bounty indicates that God bestows blessings (Q), conferring largesse upon human beings (R). Attached as it is to severe in retribution, Possessed of Bounty can be understood to Possessed of Bounty. There is no god but He; unto Him is the journey's end. (4) None but those who disbelieve dispute concerning the signs of God. So let it not delude thee that they are free to come and go in the land. (5) The people of Noah denied before them, as did the parties after them. And every community contrived against its messenger, to take him. They disputed by means of falsehood in order to refute the truth thereby; so I seized them. How, then, was My Retribution! (6) Likewise did the Word of thy Lord come due for those who disbelieve, that they are the inhabitants of the Fire. (7) Those who bear the Throne and those who dwell nigh unto it hymn the praise of their Lord and believe in Him and seek forgiveness for those who believe: "Our Lord, Thou dost encompass all things in Mercy and Knowledge. Forgive those who repent mean that God is magnanimous in bestowing absolution for sins and thus relinquishing His Retribution (R). Given the Divine Attributes that precede it, there is no god but He indicates that there is no other reality that possesses these seemingly contradictory attributes in perfect balance. One should thus worship God in full, with hope for His Mercy and fear of His Retribution (R), as God is the only One from Whom and to Whom one flees at the same time. That the journey's end is unto God then completes this verse, because there would be no purpose in fearing Him and hoping for the meeting with Him if this were not the case.

4 Those who dispute concerning the signs of God are a central concern of this sūrah; they are rebuked again in vv. 35, 56, and 69, and only once outside of this sūrah, in 42:35. This first instance clarifies that the freedom and affluence of the disbelievers in no way reflects any favor that God has bestowed upon them, as in 3:196–97: Let it not delude thee that those who disbelieve are free to come and go in the land. It is a little enjoyment. Then their refuge is Hell, an evil resting place! Thus the Prophet should not concern himself with their affairs or be grieved by their disbelief (see 3:176; 5:41; 10:65; 31:23; 36:76). Instead, he is enjoined to dispute with them in the most virtuous manner (16:125) and to respond to their disputes by saying, God knows best what you do. God will judge between you on the Day of Resurrection concerning that wherein you used to differ (22:68–69).

5 As in many other passages, the Prophet is here comforted by an example of a previous prophet who endured the same opposition. For the Quranic account of Noah and the manner in which his people denied him, see 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 11:25–48; 21:76–77; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; 37:75–82; 54:9–15; and Sūrah 71. In addition, other communities are said to have rejected their prophets, as in 51:52: Likewise, there came no messenger unto those before them, but that they said, "A sorcerer or one possessed"; and 34:34: We sent no warner unto a town, but that those living in luxury therein said, "Truly we disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent" (cf. 43:23). When the people disputed with their prophets, they are said to have used weak and specious arguments (IK), as they dispute . . . without any authority having come to them (40:35, 56). Therefore, God destroyed them because of the sins they had committed (IK). How, then, was My Retribution! (cf. 13:32) means, "How severe and painful was My Retribution!"

6 Just as punishment came upon those who rejected their prophets in the past, so too has the Word of thy Lord has come due (cf. 10:33; 22:18; 36:7; 39:71) for those who oppose the Prophet Muhammad (IK).

7 Those who bear the Throne are eight angels, as in 69:17: And the angels shall be at its sides; that Day eight shall carry the Throne of thy Lord above them. These may be the same as the angels encircling all around the Throne (39:75) or a and follow Thy way, and shield them from the punishment of Hellfire. (8) Our Lord, make them enter Gardens of Eden that Thou hast promised them and those among their fathers, their spouses, and their progeny who were righteous. Truly Thou art the Mighty, the Wise. (9) And protect them from evil deeds. Whomsoever Thou shieldest from evil deeds on that Day, upon him hast Thou had mercy. And that indeed is the great triumph." (10) Truly those who disbelieve shall be addressed: "God's odium is greater than your odium for yourselves when you were called to belief, but then disbelieved." (11) They will say, "Our Lord, Thou hast caused us to die twice over, and given us life twice over; so we admit our sins. Is there any way out?" (12) That is because when God was distinct group among them. For the meaning of the Throne, from which God's Commands and Decrees issue and from which He directs the cosmos (Ṭb), see 7:54c. In this context the prayers of the highest angels, those brought nigh unto God (4:172), show the great difference between the believers and the disbelievers, whose fate is mentioned in the previous verse (R), thus giving the Prophet and his followers further evidence that they need not concern themselves with the disputations of the disbelievers.

That God encompasses all things in Mercy is attested in 7:156; that He encompasses all things in knowledge is also attested in 6:80; 20:98; 65:12. Some understand the structure of this sentence to indicate that God's Mercy precedes or outstrips His Knowledge (R, Ṭb); for the priority and principiality of God's Mercy in Islamic metaphysics and cosmology, see 1:3c. Here the angels seek forgiveness for those who believe; elsewhere they seek forgiveness for those on earth (42:5). For further discussion of seeking forgiveness for others (istighfār) and intercession (shafāʿah), see 2:48c; 2:255c. Regarding God's shielding from the punishment of Hellfire, see 44:56c.

8 Gardens of Eden (cf. 9:72; 13:23; 16:31; 18:31; 19:61; 20:76; 35:33; 38:50) is understood to refer to an especially exalted or blessed place in the Garden, a place entered only by prophets, the righteous, the witnesses, and just leaders (Q); see 9:72c. The righteous family members of those who believe will benefit from their rank in this station, as in 52:21: And those who believe and whose progeny followed them in faith, We shall cause their progeny to join them and will not stint aught of their deeds (cf. 13:23). Some understand these two verses to mean that all of one's family members who are righteous believers will be raised to the exalted Gardens of Eden, where, in addition to the beauties of that exalted domain of Paradise, they may delight in one another's company (IK, R). In this way, the pious deeds one performs may benefit both oneself and one's loved ones (IK, Ṭ).

9 Protect them from evil deeds is a plea to God to protect believers from performing evil deeds (IK), from the ill effects of the sins they committed before they repented (Ṭ), or from punishment (Ṭ, Ṭs). Those whom God has turned away from the evil of disobedience have had God's Mercy and Blessings bestowed upon them (Ṭ, Ṭs). Attaining Paradise is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of Paradise, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57.

10 God's odium for the disbelievers when they were called to belief in God and turned away from it in this world is greater than their odium for themselves when they see their deeds (see 2:167) and realize the punishment that is to befall them from God's Anger (IK, Ṭ).

11–12 Now that they have experienced the Resurrection, the disbelievers admit their sins; see 67:10–11c. Realizing their fate, they plead with God to be offered a second opportunity. But it will not be granted, since even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28). That God caused them to die and invoked as One, you disbelieved, and when partners were ascribed unto Him, you believed. Judgment lies with God, the Exalted, the Great. (13) He it is Who shows you His signs and sends down provision for you from Heaven. And none reflect, save those who turn in repentance. (14) So call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him, though the disbelievers be averse. (15) The Raiser of degrees, the Possessor of the Throne, He casts the Spirit from His Command upon whomsoever He will among His servants to warn of the Day of the live twice refers to their death at the end of their worldly existence, then their resurrection for the questioning of the grave, then their dying again and being resurrected for the Hereafter (Q, Ṭs); or it refers to their being dead (as yet nonexistent) in the loins of their ancestors, after which they were given life, followed by their natural death, after which they were resurrected (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs).

Abū Ḥāmid al-Ghazzālī interprets these verses as part of an extended discourse between God and the disbelievers. The denizens of Hell first say, Our Lord, Thou hast caused us to die twice over, and given us life twice over; so we admit our sins. Is there any way out? To which God responds, That is because when God was invoked as One, you disbelieved, and when partners were ascribed unto Him, you believed. Judgment lies with God, the Exalted, the Great. Then they say, Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain (32:12). But God replies, Did you not earlier swear that there would be no end for you? (14:44). Then they cry out, Our Lord! Remove us, that we may work righteousness other than that which we used to do (35:37). To this God replies, Did We not give you long life, enough for whosoever would reflect to reflect therein? And the warner came unto you; so taste [the punishment]! And the wrongdoers shall have no helpers (35:37). Then they say, Our Lord! Our wretchedness overwhelmed us, and we were a people astray. Our Lord! Remove us from it! Then if we revert, we shall be wrongdoers (23:106–7). Then God replies, Be gone therein, and speak not to Me (23:108).

13 God surrounds human beings with signs upon the horizons and within themselves till it becomes clear to them that it is the truth (41:53) or signs that He is the Truth and that He is One and Powerful over all things. So if one repents, the veiling over the intellect vanishes (R) and one is given insight (IK). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "Be mindful of the insight of the believer, for verily he sees by the light of Truth."

14 The injunction to call upon God means to supplicate to God for one's needs, although some consider it to be a reference to canonical prayer or worship (R, Z); see 7:55c. As in several other verses, this injunction is followed by the mention of devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 29:65; 31:32; 39:2, 11, 14; 40:65; 98:5), a phrase that indicates worship of God exclusively and invoking His Name (73:8) and connotes sincere worship for the sake of God alone (see 7:29c; 31:32c; 98:5c). According to several accounts, the Prophet used to recite this verse at the end of each prayer, saying, "There is no god but God, alone, with no partner. His is the Sovereignty and His is the Praise, and He is Powerful over all things [5:120; 11:4; 30:50; 57:2; 64:1; 67:1]. There is no strength and no power, save with God. There is no god but God, and we worship none but Him. His is the Blessing, His is the Bounty, and His is the Beautiful Praise. There is no god but God, devoting religion entirely to Him" (IK).

15 The Raiser of degrees, or in another rendering "Exalter of ranks," means the One who raises the seven heavens (Q) or the One who exalts the ranks of His saints and friends in the Garden (Q). For Possessor of the Throne, see 17:42; 81:20; 85:15. God is also described as Lord of the Throne (9:129; 21:22; 23:86, 116; 27:26; 43:82), which is borne by angels (40:7; 69:17). Casts the Spirit is understood to mean the Spirit of revelation or of prophethood (Q, Ṭs). It is also understood as a reference to the Quran itself, to all revealed books, or to the Meeting, (16) the Day when they come forth with naught concerning them hidden from God. Whose is the sovereignty this Day? It is God's, the One, the Paramount. (17) On that Day every soul shall be recompensed for that which it has earned. No wrong will be done that Day. Truly God is swift in reckoning. (18) So warn them of the Day of the Imminent Event, when hearts will be in throats, choking in agony. The wrongdoers shall have no loyal friend, nor any intercessor to be obeyed. (19) He knows the treachery of eyes and that which Archangel Gabriel (Ṭs). The Day of the Meeting most likely refers to the day of the meeting between God and His creation, but it can also be understood to mean the day on which many types of meetings will take place: the people of Heaven will meet the people of the earth (Ṭs); the first generations of human beings will meet the later generations of human beings (Q, Ṭs); the oppressed will meet their oppressors (Q, Ṭs), as it is also a day of retribution; and every person will meet his or her deeds (Q, Ṭs), since that is part of the Judgment.

16 When all human beings come forth from their graves and are gathered on a single plain, God will say, Whose is the sovereignty this Day? and then all who are gathered will respond, It is God's, the One, the Paramount (Q, Ṭs), or it is God Himself who answers the question (IK, Q, Ṭs).

17 Every soul is then recompensed in accord with the good or evil it has done (Q, Ṭs; cf. 3:161; 45:22; 74:38). No wrong or injustice will be done that Day, in that no good deed will remain unaccounted for, and no one will be punished for something he or she did not do. That no wrong will be done also indicates that all of the punishments that afflict the disbelievers on the Day of Judgment come from themselves, since God wrongs them not, but themselves do they wrong (3:117; cf. 3:165; 4:179). In this vein, a sacred saying, or ḥadīth qudsī, states, "O My servants! I have forbidden injustice for Myself and have made it unlawful among you; so be not unjust to one another. O My servants! Verily, these are your deeds. I record them for you; then I pay you back for them in full. Whosoever finds something good, let him praise God. And whosoever finds something other than that, let him blame none but himself" (IK). God's being swift in reckoning (2:202; 3:19, 199; 5:4; 13:41; 14:51; 24:39; cf. 6:62) or in retribution (6:165; 7:167) indicates that the Judgment is not something over which He will need to ponder and deliberate (Q), since the Command of God is naught but one, like the blinking of an eye (54:50; IK).

18 On the Day of Judgment, hearts will be in throats due to fear (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs), choking in agony, so that they will be unable to speak (R). The second part of this verse is similar to both 2:254 and 14:31, which add bargaining (bayʿ) as another of those things that will no longer avail one on the Day of Judgment. No loyal friend indicates that on that Day everyone will be too consumed with his or her own state to ask about that of another, as in 70:10: And no loyal friend shall ask about a loyal friend; and 80:37: For every man that Day his affair shall suffice him (see also 43:67; 44:41). This condition will, however, be even more severe for the disbelievers, who are said to have no one upon whom they can rely, since the folly of everything upon which they had depended is now exposed and all recourse will be cut off from them (2:166); so today they have no loyal friend here (69:35); see commentary on 70:10–14. That no intercessor will be obeyed indicates that none of those idols or powers that human beings, the disbelievers in particular, thought would intercede for them will be able to do so, save by God's Leave. Regarding intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c.

19 The treachery of eyes refers either to eyes that have looked upon something forbidden (R, Ṭ, Ṭs) or to a person's false claims about what he or she saw (IK, Q, Ṭs). That which breasts conceal refers to the secrets of the heart (R), thus to the intentions behind actions and to one's true nature, since the Day of Judgment only benefits one who comes to God with a sound heart (26:89). Viewed in breasts conceal. (20) God decrees with truth, and those upon whom they call apart from Him do not decree by means of aught. Truly God is the Hearer, the Seer. (21) Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were greater than they in strength and left firmer traces upon the earth; yet God seized them for their sins, and they had none to shield them from God. (22) That is because their messengers brought them clear proofs, yet they disbelieved; so God seized them. Truly He is Strong, severe in retribution. (23) And indeed We sent Moses with Our signs and a manifest authority (24) unto Pharaoh, Hāmān, and Korah. And they said, "A lying light of the previous verse, this verse indicates that the disbelievers cannot plead their own case, as they will be choking in agony, and that no friends or intercessors will plead on their behalf (R); rather, they will be judged in accord with their true nature, which their breasts conceal.

20 In the context of the previous verse, that God decrees with truth (al-ḥaqq), or "in accord with the truth," means that He differentiates between people in accord with their true natures, which their breasts conceal, not according to their outward appearances, and gives each his or her due (ḥaqq). That those whom the disbelievers call upon do not decree by means of aught means both that their idols do not decree because they are simply inanimate objects (Ṭs) and that nothing they call upon possesses any authority or knowledge in accord with which it can decree (IK).

21–22 For journeying upon the earth and the spiritual and moral edification that derives from it, see 12:109; 22:46; 30:9, 42; 35:44; 40:82; 47:10; 30:9c. The Quran frequently mentions the fate of the guilty, the corrupt, the wrongdoers, and those who denied God's messengers in days gone by as an admonition to the disbelievers (see 3:137; 6:11; 7:84, 86, 103; 10:39, 73; 16:36; 27:14, 69; 37:73; 43:25). Those before them is thus understood as a reference to the ruins of previous people who were destroyed despite being mightier than those who opposed the Prophet (see 35:44; 40:82). Here, as in other instances, the destruction of previous generations despite their superior might is cited as evidence that the disbelievers among the Quraysh will not be able to withstand Divine Punishment when it comes upon them.

23–45 Moses is featured more prominently than any other prophet in the Quran. Here his account is given more as a spiritual example than as history and serves as an allegory for some of the Prophet Muhammad's own challenges (see also 43:46–56; 44:17–31; 51:38–40; 79:15–25). For more detailed accounts of Moses' mission, see 2:49–61; 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 17:101–4; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46.

23 This verse is found verbatim in 11:96, and We sent Moses with Our signs, meaning with proofs and evidence (Ṭ, Ṭs), is also found in 14:5 and 43:46 (cf. 51:38); also see 23:45, where Moses and Aaron are sent with Our signs. More specifically, Our signs can be read as a reference to the nine clear signs mentioned in 17:101 (cf. 27:12; Q). A manifest authority means a clear proof and is understood as a reference to the Torah (Q) or to the miracles that Moses performed (Ṭs, Z).

24 Hāmān was a member of Pharaoh's court, most likely the head of his quarries, who was ordered to light a fire and make me a tower (28:38) to proclaim Pharaoh a deity; see 28:6, 8, 38; 40:36–37; 28:6c. Korah, another member of Pharaoh's court and a grandson of Levi (Numbers 16:21), had vast wealth, but was swallowed by the ground for opposing Moses (Numbers 16:41); see commentary on 28:76–82. The reaction of Pharaoh, Hāmān, and Korah to the signs and the manifest authority was to accuse Moses of being a sorcerer (see also 7:109; 26:34; 51:39), an accusation also sorcerer." (25) So when he came unto them with the truth from Us, they said, "Slay the sons of those who believe with him and spare their women." The scheming of the disbelievers is naught but astray. (26) And Pharaoh said, "Leave me to kill Moses, and let him call upon his Lord. Truly I fear that he will alter your religion or that he will cause corruption to appear in the land." (27) And Moses said, "Truly I have sought refuge in my Lord and your Lord from everyone who is arrogant and believes not in the Day of Reckoning." (28) And a believing man from the House of Pharaoh who was concealing his belief said, "Will you kill a man for saying, 'My Lord is God,' though he has brought you leveled against the Prophet Muhammad by the Quraysh (see 10:2; 38:4; 51:52).

25 This is the second time that Pharaoh commanded that the sons of the Israelites be slain: the first was to eliminate the possibility of a prophet such as Moses arising among them; the second was to humiliate them, to reduce their numbers, or both (IK). In 7:127 it appears to be a form of collective punishment for following Moses: The notables among Pharaoh's people said, "Will you leave Moses and his people to work corruption in the land and to leave you and your gods?" He said, "We shall slay their sons and spare their women. Truly we are above them, dominant"; see also 2:49c; 7:141; 14:6; 28:4. The women were not spared out of mercy, but so that they could continue to live as servants (Ṭ), which was a further humiliation (Ṭ, Ṭs). According to some, God distracted Pharaoh and his people from carrying out this punishment by sending the plague upon them (Q), in which case the scheming of the disbelievers is naught but astray can be understood as a reference to the failure of Pharaoh's plan (Ṭ). Most commentators do not say whether the plan was carried out. Al-Rāzī, who says elsewhere that it was (see 7:127c), interprets the scheming of the disbelievers is naught but astray as a more general reference to the schemes of all disbelievers eventually coming to naught. In this context, it could also be understood as a reference to the fact that the first time Pharaoh ordered that the sons of the Israelites be slain, the plan failed, since Moses was spared; so this time it would fail again.

26–27 Pharaoh's command, Leave me to kill Moses, implies that among Pharaoh's retinue were some who feared Moses and warned against killing him, sensing that Moses would bring destruction upon them (IJ, Ṭs). Pharaoh's fear that Moses would alter their religion is in fact the fear that he would turn them away from their worship of Pharaoh himself (IJ) and their belief in his divinity (Ṭs). The accusation that Moses will cause corruption to appear in the land reflects the question posed to Pharaoh by his notables in 7:127: Will you leave Moses and his people to work corruption in the land and to leave you and your gods? Moses' response is then to seek refuge in God. In general, those who work corruption cast themselves as the righteous and their opponents as the corrupt, as in 2:11: And when it is said unto them, "Do not work corruption upon the earth," they say, "We are only working righteousness." For the greater Quranic significance of working corruption, see 30:41c.

28 The precise identity of the believing man from the House of Pharaoh is unknown. Many propose that he was a cousin of Pharaoh (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭ). Others say that he was an Israelite, in which case the meaning of this opening phrase is understood to be "a believing man who was concealing his belief from the family of Pharaoh" (IJ, Ṭ). Al-Ṭabarī argues that he was a man from Pharaoh's family, since if he had been an Israelite or another person outside of Pharaoh's court, no one in the court would have listened to him. In either interpretation, the believing man is the same person to whom reference is made in 28:20: Then from the outskirts of the city a man came running. He said, "O Moses! Truly the notables are conspiring against you, that they might slay you. So leave! Truly I am clear proofs from your Lord? If he is a liar, then his lying is to his own detriment. But if he is truthful, some of that which he promises you will befall you. Truly God guides not one who is a prodigal liar. (29) O my people! Sovereignty is yours this day, while you prevail over the land. But who will help us against God's Might should it come upon us?" Pharaoh said, "I show you naught but what I see, and I guide you unto naught but the way of rectitude." (30) And he who believed said, "O my people! Truly I fear for you [a day] like the day of the parties [of old], (31) like the plight of the people of Noah, ᶜĀd, and Thamūd, and those after them. Yet God does not desire wrong for His servants. (32) O my among your sincere advisers" (IJ, IK). The question, Will you kill a man for saying, "My Lord is God"? is similar to the sorcerers' complaint to Pharaoh after he sentences them to death for believing in Moses, You take vengeance upon us only because we believed in the signs of our Lord when they came unto us (7:126); see also 5:59 and 85:9, which chastise those who would "be vengeful" toward others simply on account of their belief in God and His signs.

The argument posed by the believing man is twofold. On the one hand, if Moses is truthful, he cannot be punished for speaking the truth, especially since he has brought clear proofs in the form of evidentiary miracles. On the other hand, if he is a liar, he will suffer the consequences of his lies; so there is no need to punish him. Furthermore, if he is punished for telling the truth, then even greater afflictions will befall those who punish him. In this context, some understand prodigal (musrif) to mean "idolater" (mushrik; Ṭ) or one who transgresses the limits set by God by lying about God (Ṭs); for the Quranic usage of prodigal, see 10:12c.

29 The land refers to Egypt. That the Egyptians have sovereignty over it and prevail over it indicates their power over the Israelites (Ṭ). Some understand the believing man to be enjoining them to have gratitude for their position of power (IK, Ṭs). In this context, he is also using their unsurpassed power to argue that they must recognize the God of Moses, since there is no one other than themselves to protect them against punishment from Him. In his response, Pharaoh avoids engaging the argument of the believing man, instead relying upon his authority. I show you naught but what I see means, "I do not indicate to you anything other than what I believe to be right," or "I do not teach you anything other than what I know" (Ṭs). Ibn Kathīr argues that in the context of other verses pertaining to the story of Moses, this statement is a lie, since 27:14 says of Pharaoh and his people: They rejected them—though their souls were convinced of them—wrongfully and exultantly. In Pharaoh's view the way of rectitude means denying and killing Moses and taking Pharaoh as a god (Ṭs). Thus Pharaoh led his people astray, and guided them not (20:79). Nonetheless, they followed the command of Pharaoh, and the command of Pharaoh was not sound (11:97).

30–31 Parties [of old] refers to those who joined forces to make common cause against a prophet (Ṭs). The day of the parties [of old] refers to the day that each of them eventually faced when God's Punishment came upon them and they had no one to protect them (IK). The ᶜĀd and the Thamūd are pre-Islamic Arabian tribes that rejected the prophets sent to them. For the account of the ᶜĀd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; for that of the Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68. This warning is akin to similar warnings issued to the disbelievers throughout the Quran, though it differs in that a prophet does not issue it. Yet God does not desire wrong for His servants indicates that God's destruction of them was just and equitable (Z) and that God does not desire the wrong or injustice that occurs in the world (Ṭs), a position that is central to both the Shiite and the Muᶜtazilite understanding of Divine Justice.

32 Here the Day of Resurrection is referred to as the Day of Mutual Calling, because the inhabitants of the Garden will call out to the inhab- people! Truly I fear for you the Day of Mutual Calling, (33) the Day you will turn away to flee, having none to protect you from God. And whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. (34) And Joseph brought you clear proofs before; yet still you were in doubt regarding that which he brought unto you, so much so that when he perished, you said, 'God will not send a messenger after him.' Thus does God lead astray whosoever is a prodigal doubter, (35) those who dispute concerning God's signs without any authority having come to them, grievously odious is it in the sight of God and in the sight of those who believe. Thus does God put a seal upon the heart of every arrogant tyrant." (36) And Pharaoh said, "O Hāmān! Build for me a tower, that perhaps I may attain the means— (37) the means to reach the heavens—that I may look upon the God of Moses.

itants of the Fire, "We have found that which our Lord promised us to be true. Have you found that which your Lord promised to be true?" They will respond, "Yes" (7:44); and the inhabitants of the Fire will call out to the inhabitants of the Garden, "Pour some water down upon us, or some of that which God has provided you." They will respond, "Truly God has forbidden them both to the disbelievers" (7:50; JJ, Q, R; Ṭ). In addition, the hypocrites will call out to the believers (see 57:13–14) and the angels will call out to the inhabitants of the Garden, This is the Garden. You have inherited it for that which you used to do (7:43).

33 The disbelievers will turn away to flee from the Fire, but they will also flee from one another; thus 80:34–36 describes the Day of Resurrection as that Day when a man will flee from his brother, his mother and his father, his spouse and his children. For those whom God leads astray the Quran says there is no way (4:88, 143; 42:46), no guide (7:186; 13:33; 39:23, 36), and no protector (18:17; 42:44); cf. 10:27.

34 The story of Joseph is found in Sūrah 12. According to some commentators, clear proofs refers to Joseph's rhetorical argument in 12:39–40: Are diverse lords better, or God, the One, the Paramount? You worship apart from Him naught but names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority (Q, R). Others say that clear proofs refers to Joseph's evidentiary miracles (R, Z) or his visions and his corresponding ability to interpret dreams (Q). Here the contention appears to be that the people were willing to follow Joseph's judgment in worldly matters related to his high position in the Egyptian government, but not with regard to religious matters (IK). Their saying, God will not send a messenger after him, would then express their wish and demonstrate their disbelief in and rejection of prophethood (IK, R). According to al-Ṭabarī, this is among the ways in which God turns disbelievers away from attaining the truth and following the way.

35 This is the second of four verses in this sūrah to rebuke those who dispute concerning God's signs; also see vv. 4, 56, and 69; 40:4c. To dispute without authority (cf. v. 56) means to argue without proof or from a position grounded in unquestioning imitation (taqlīd) and base sophisms (shubuhāt; R). God's sealing hearts indicates that He has closed their ability to understand (see also 2:7c; 6:46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 30:59; 63:3c). The heart of every arrogant tyrant can also be read, "every arrogant tyrannical heart" (Q, R, Ṭ). In one way, this reading is more apt because, as al-Qurṭubī observes, it is the heart that first becomes arrogant and then the rest of one's faculties follow, as in the famous saying of the Prophet, "In the body there is a lump of flesh. When it is sound, the entire body is sound, and when it is corrupt, the entire body is corrupt. Verily it is the heart."

36–37 Pharaoh's response provides an illustration of the manner in which the heart of an

Truly I deem him a liar." Thus was the evil of his conduct made to seem fair unto Pharaoh, and he was turned from the way. Pharaoh's scheming led to naught but ruin. (38) And he who believed said, "O my people! Follow me; I shall guide you unto the way of rectitude. (39) O my people! The life of this world is but fleeting enjoyment, whereas the Hereafter is truly the Abode of Permanence. (40) Whosoever commits an evil deed will not be requited, save with the like thereof; but whosoever, whether male or female, performs a righteous deed and is a believer shall enter the Garden wherein they will be arrogant tyrant is sealed, as he seeks to dispute not only God's signs, but also God's very Being. Some interpret Pharaoh's response to mean that he feared that the words of the believing man would enter into the hearts of his people (Q). See commentary on 28:38, where Pharaoh says, O notables! I know of no god for you other than myself. So kindle for me a fire, O Hāmān, for clay, and make me a tower, that haply I may behold the God of Moses, though truly I think he is among the liars. Here the means to reach the heavens renders asbāb al-samāwāt (cf. 22:15), which is usually understood to mean "paths to the heavens" (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), "doors to the heavens" (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), or those things by means of which one can attain what one seeks (Ṭ, Ṭs). Pharaoh's desire to look upon the God of Moses demonstrates his complete misunderstanding, in that he takes God to be a physical being occupying a particular space (Q). It also provides a notable contrast to Moses' request to God on Mt. Sinai, My Lord, show me, that I might look upon Thee (7:143). Moses, however, repents to God when he is unable to endure this vision; see 7:143c.

Those who are corrupt are often portrayed as deluded, sometimes by Satan (see 8:48; 16:63; 27:24; 29:38), but ultimately by God (see 27:4), into thinking that their conduct is good. Here it may also have been Pharaoh's council of notables that made the evil of his conduct seem fair unto him (Ṭs). Pharaoh was thus turned from the way by God, a phrase that could also be read, "and he turned from the way," meaning that he turned himself away and that he prevented others from following the right way (Q, Ṭs).

38 The way of rectitude is what Pharaoh promised to guide the people to in v. 29. The term renders sabīl al-rashād, which is similar to the way of sound judgment (sabīl al-rushd), in relation to which it is said of those who wax arrogant, If they were to see the way of sound judgment, they would not take it as a way (7:146). The latter phrase aptly describes the case of Pharaoh and his notables, who were presented not only with the arguments posed here and elsewhere, but also with evidentiary miracles whose Divine Origin they continued to deny (see 7:132c; 7:136c).

39 This is one of several verses to affirm that the ephemeral delights of this world are naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20) and stand in stark contrast to the rewards of the Hereafter, which is life indeed (29:64); see also 3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 42:36; 57:20c. In this vein, a famous ḥadīth transmitted by ʿAbd Allāh ibn Masʿūd states, "The Messenger of God was lying down on a straw mat, and it left marks on his side. Then when he woke up he began to rub his side. So I said, 'O Messenger of God! Will you allow us to spread something soft over this straw mat?' He replied, 'What have I and the world to do with one another? The likeness of me and this world is as that of a rider who rests in the shade of a tree, then passes on and leaves it.'"

40 This is one of several verses indicating that God shows mercy and bounty in judging human actions, but requites evil deeds with nothing but their like (cf. 6:160; 28:84), because God commits not so much as a mote's weight of wrong (4:40). Al-Rāzī notes that this is also a fundamental principle in Islamic Law, according to which the punishment must never exceed the crime. In contrast to God's treatment of evil deeds, He multiplies good deeds ten times the like thereof (6:160) or even seven hundred fold (see 2:261); also see provided for without reckoning. (41) O my people! How is it that I call you unto salvation while you call me unto the Fire? (42) You call upon me to disbelieve in God and to ascribe as a partner unto Him that whereof I have no knowledge, whereas I call you unto the Mighty, the Forgiving. (43) There is no doubt that that unto which you call me has no call in this world or in the Hereafter, and that our return will be unto God, and that the prodigal are the inhabitants of the Fire. (44) You will soon remember what I have said to you. I entrust my affair to God.

27:89 and 28:84, where it is said that whoever brings a good deed, he will have what is better than it. Such rewards relate to the human condition irrespective of gender; for statements about the irrelevance of gender for moral and spiritual potential and reward, see 3:195; 4:124; 16:97; as well as 33:35, which goes to great lengths to affirm that men and women are rewarded equally for all their various acts of religious observance; see 33:35c.

Without reckoning could be understood as a reference to the rewards of Paradise being without end (R) or to the fact that the recompense for bad deeds requires a reckoning, while the recompense for good deeds does not (R, Z). Alternately, it could be understood to mean that were people to be recompensed in accord with their deeds alone, there would be a reckoning (Ṭs), implying that it is their faith and belief that allow them to enter the Garden without reckoning.

41–42 This verse means, "How is it that when I call you to belief, which leads to salvation, you call me to disbelief, which leads to the Fire?" (R). That whereof I have no knowledge indicates that there is nothing in revelation or reason that would verify the disbelievers' claims (Ṭs). The combination of the Divine Names the Mighty and the Forgiving (cf. 39:5; 38:66; 67:2) expresses the manner in which God brings together all of the seemingly disparate Divine Attributes (Aj), as in v. 3. This is similar to the more frequent combination of the Names the Mighty and the Merciful (26:9, 68, 104, 122, 140, 159, 175, 191, 217; 30:5; 32:6; 36:5; 44:42).

43 No call in this world or in the Hereafter refers to the idols' inability to intercede on behalf of those who worship them, in this life or the next (Q), harm or benefit them (Ṭ), or respond to their pleas (R). It could also be understood to mean that although the idolaters call people to worship the idols, the idols themselves do not call them (Aj, R, Z). Both meanings can be present at the same time, as in 46:5–6: Who is more astray than one who calls, apart from God, upon such as do not answer him, [even] unto the Day of Resurrection, and who are heedless of their calling. When mankind is gathered, such will be enemies unto them and deniers of their worship. For the Quranic usage of prodigal, see 10:12c.

44 The man who believed (v. 38) closes his discourse with a final warning that the punishment of which he speaks will come upon the disbelievers and they will know the truth of what he enjoined, but then it will be too late for this knowledge to help them (IK). In this sense, the verse may foretell Pharaoh's belated testimony, uttered when the sea closes in upon him: I believe that there is no god but the One in whom the Children of Israel believe (10:90); see 10:90–92c. I entrust my affair to God could indicate that the man feared Pharaoh and that his followers intended to kill him (Q, R). In this way, it reflects the response of Moses to Pharaoh's threat to kill him, Truly I have sought refuge in my Lord and your Lord from everyone who is arrogant and believes not in the Day of Reckoning (40:27; R). According to some, "entrusting" (tafwīḍ) oneself to God precedes the execution of God's Decree, while "submitting" (taslīm) oneself to God follows it (Aj, Bq, Su). The famous Egyptian Sufi Dhu'l-Nūn al-Miṣrī was reportedly asked, "When does the servant entrust [his affair to God]?" to which he responded, "When he despairs of his own actions and his own soul, takes refuge in God in all his states, and has no attachment to anything except his Lord" (Aj, Bq, Su). According to the Persian Sufi Rūzbihān al-Baqlī, "The perfection of entrusting is to not see oneself or anything else Truly God sees His servants." (45) So God shielded him from the evils of that which they had plotted, while a terrible punishment beset the House of Pharaoh— (46) the Fire, to which they are exposed morning and evening. And on the Day when the Hour is come, [it will be said], "Cause the House of Pharaoh to enter the punishment most severe!" (47) And when they are arguing with one another in the Fire, the weak will say to those who waxed arrogant, "Truly we were your followers; so can you avail us against any portion of the Fire?" (48) Those who waxed arrogant will say, "Truly we are all in it. God has indeed judged between His servants." (49) And those who are in the Fire will say to the keepers of Hell, "Call upon your Lord to relieve us from the punishment for a day." (50) They as having any power to benefit or harm, and to see God through the existentiation of existence in every breath." God sees His servants in all of their affairs, knowing their states and their needs at all times (R).

45 For his faith and his affirming Moses, God protected the believing man from Pharaoh's people (Ṭ). That which they had plotted may refer to the severe punishments Pharaoh was known to inflict upon those who opposed him, as in 20:71, where Pharaoh tells the sorcerers who believed in Moses without Pharaoh's permission, Now I shall surely cut off your hands and your feet on alternate sides, and I shall surely crucify you on the trunks of palm trees. And you will surely know which of us [inflicts] a more severe and lasting punishment! (cf. 7:124). His being spared such punishment can be seen as a result of his entrusting his affair to God (Aj). While the punishment that encompassed Pharaoh and his people most likely refers to their drowning in the sea as they pursued Moses and the Israelites (see 2:50c; 10:90–92c), the use of beset (ḥāqa bi) or, more literally, "enclosed," alludes to the punishment resulting from their own plotting, as in 35:43, Evil plotting besets none but its authors, and to their mockery of Moses, as in 16:34, That which they used to mock beset them (also 40:83; 46:26; cf. 11:8; 39:48; 45:33).

46 This is one of several Quranic verses cited to support the Islamic understanding of a period in the grave that comes after death and before the final Resurrection (IK, R), a phase of existence spoken of in 80:21–22: He caused him to die and buried him. Then, when He willed, He resurrected him. This period in the grave is known as the barzakh, or "isthmus," between the two worlds, in which people experience their first rewards or punishments before experiencing greater reward or punishment after the Resurrection and Judgment; see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran." These two punishments are reflected in 9:101: We shall punish them twice. Then shall they be relegated to a great punishment. Interpreted in light of such verses, in the present verse the Fire, to which they are exposed morning and evening refers to the punishment that Pharaoh and his people experience in the grave, while the punishment most severe, which they will enter on the Day when the Hour is come, refers to the punishment of Hell.

47–48 This is one of several passages in which in the Hereafter those who were led astray by others challenge the leaders who led them astray. In this passage they still seek some form of intercession and remain deluded, but elsewhere they realize that they have been led astray and call upon God to increase the punishment of their leaders: Our Lord! Truly we obeyed our leaders and elders, and they caused us to stray from the way. Our Lord! Give them a twofold punishment, and curse them with a great curse (33:67–68). In 29:13, they are then promised that their leaders will bear their own burdens, and others' burdens along with their own (see also 7:38–39c), that is to say, punishment for being astray themselves and punishment for leading others astray.

49–50 Realizing that those whom they had followed and had taken as protectors in the will reply, "Did not your messengers bring you clear proofs?" They will say, "Yea, indeed." They will say, "Then make supplications!" But the supplication of the disbelievers is naught but astray. (51) Truly We shall help Our messengers and those who believe during the life of this world and on the Day when the witnesses arise, (52) the Day when the excuses of the wrongdoers will not benefit them, and theirs will be the curse, and theirs will be the evil abode. (53) And indeed We gave Moses guidance, and We bequeathed the Book unto the Children of Israel, (54) as a guidance, and as a reminder for possessors of intellect. (55) So be patient. Surely God's Promise is true. And ask forgiveness for thy world cannot avail them in the Hereafter, those who were astray now seek intercession from those angels who function as the keepers of Hell; see also 6:27–28c; 14:44. Rather than interceding, the angels remind the denizens of Hell that they had in fact been granted guidance before, but had rejected God's messengers (cf. 6:130; 39:71; 67:8–9). As in other passages, the denizens of Hell recognize their situation, but their now belated affirmation can do nothing to forestall or alleviate their punishment; nor can their supplications; see, for example, 14:44: Our Lord! Grant us reprieve for a term nigh, that we might respond to Thy Call and follow the messengers; and 32:12: Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain (cf. 6:27). Yet, as 6:28 contends, even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden.

51–52 This is one of several passages interpreted to mean that all prophetic missions are ultimately victorious (cf. 6:34; 37:171–73; 58:21). Such victory can be like that of the prophets David, Solomon, and Muhammad, who vanquished the armies of those who denied and opposed them, or like that of Noah and Moses, whose enemies God destroyed by means of natural disasters, or like that of Jesus, whose religion prevailed by means of those who carried out his message (Ṭ). Here the witnesses refers to those among the prophets, angels, and believers who will bear witness for the believers and against the disbelievers on the Day of Resurrection and Judgment (Ṭ, Ṭs). Some say that it refers only to the angels (Ṭ, Ṭs) or only to the prophets (Ṭs). This reference to the Resurrection and Judgment then indicates that God will also make His messengers and the believers victorious in the Hereafter by taking vengeance upon those who opposed them. The wrongdoers' excuses will not benefit them, because the book of their deeds will be open and because their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do (41:20), and they will even say, We bear witness against ourselves (6:130). The curse is their being made distant from God's Mercy, while the evil abode refers to Hell (Q).

53–54 Guidance is here read by some as "the Guidance," a title for or reference to the Torah (Q), in which there were clear indications of the Knowledge of God and God's Oneness (Ṭs). The Torah was then entrusted to the Israelites, and it contained instructions that made their religious affairs clear for them (Ṭ, Ṭs), and they were guided in accord with it so long as they remained patient (see 32:23c). Possessors of intellect (2:179, 197, 269; 3:7, 190; 5:100; 12:111; 13:19; 14:52; 38:29, 43; 39:9, 18, 21; 40:54; 65:10) refers to those who possess true knowledge of the inner meaning and essence of things; see 5:100c; 39:9c.

55 This verse is addressed to the Prophet Muhammad, counseling him to patience in a manner that implies that he will emerge victorious over his adversaries, just as Moses and other prophets did. That God's Promise is true (cf. 4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:21; 28:13; 31:33; 35:5; 40:55, 77; 45:32; 46:17) refers in general to the promise of Divine Aid in this world and reward in the Hereafter (Ṭs) or to the specific promise given in vv. 51–52. For those who maintain that prophets do commit minor sins, the command to ask forgiveness sin, and hymn the praise of thy Lord at eventide and at dawn. (56) Truly those who dispute concerning the signs of God without any authority having come to them, there is naught in their breasts but a conceit of greatness that they will never attain. So seek refuge in God. Truly He is the Hearer, the Seer. (57) Surely the creation of the heavens and the earth is greater than the creation of mankind. But most of mankind know not. (58) And the blind and the seer are not equal; nor are those who believe and perform righteous deeds and the evildoer. Little do you reflect! (59) Surely the Hour is coming; in it there is no doubt. But most of mankind believe not. (60) And your Lord has said, "Call upon Me, and for thy sin (dhanb) means to repent for such sins. For the majority of Muslims, who maintain that prophets are protected by God from committing sins (maʿṣūm), it is understood as a command to the Prophet to devote himself to worship through supplications and asking forgiveness, so that God might raise him in degrees and his practice would become the model for those who would come after him (Q, Ṭs). At eventide and at dawn (cf. 3:41) refers to the time from the declining of the sun until its setting and the time from daybreak until sunrise, respectively, since in Makkah what was required before the full institution of the five daily prayers was two cycles of prayer in the morning and two in the evening (Bḍ). Others understand this phrase as a command to perform the night prayer (ʿishāʾ) and the morning prayer (fajr; Q).

56 This is the third of four verses in this sūrah to rebuke those who dispute concerning the signs of God; also see vv. 4, 35, and 69; 40:4c; 40:35c. Such individuals have a conceit of greatness or pride that prevents them from following the Prophet and accepting the truth when it comes to them (Ṭ). The greatness that they will never attain refers to the favors that God has bestowed upon the Prophet, which they envy, or to the fact that God will debase them (Ṭs), or to both. So the Prophet should seek refuge from the scheming of those who dispute him (R) and from being like the disputants (IK).

57 This verse presents one of the Quranic arguments for God's ability to resurrect human beings (IK, Q), an argument made more explicit in 46:33: Have they not considered that God, Who created the heavens and the earth and did not weary in their creation, is able to give life to the dead? Yea! He is Powerful over all things (cf. 50:15). Nonetheless, most of mankind, or more specifically most of the disbelievers, know not (cf. 7:187; 16:75, 101; 21:24; 27:61; 30:30; 31:25; 34:36; 45:26) or understand not (5:103; 29:63; 49:4), because they turn away from God's signs (Ṭs), such as those pertaining to the cycles of life mentioned in vv. 61–68.

58 This same metaphor is employed in 35:19–20: Not equal are the blind and the seeing, nor the darkness and the light (cf. 6:50; 11:24; 13:16). This juxtaposition can also be seen as a symbol for the contrast between knowledge and ignorance, as in 39:9, Are those who know and those who do not know equal, or between faith and disbelief.

59 Although those who disbelieve maintain that the Hour, meaning the Final Judgment, will never come upon us (34:3), the Quran is adamant in maintaining that it is coming (cf. 15:85; 20:15; 22:7) and, moreover, that it has drawn nigh (54:1; cf. 33:63) as well as that it is an event in which there is no doubt (17:99; 22:7). Nonetheless, most of mankind believe not (11:17; 13:1; cf. 12:103–6; 17:89; 26:8, 67, 103, 121, 139, 158, 174, 190).

60 Call upon Me, or "Supplicate unto Me," is understood by many to mean, "Worship Me," as when the Prophet said, "Supplication is worship," and then recited this verse (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), and because it is followed by a reference to those whose pride prevents them from worshipping God (R). The verse can also be understood as an injunction to call upon God, which would itself imply worship, as the custom of many Muslims who follow the example of the Prophet is to supplicate God

I shall respond to you. Truly those who are too arrogant to worship Me shall enter Hell debased." (61) God it is Who made the night for you, that you might rest therein, and the day by which to see. Truly God is Possessed of Bounty for mankind, but most of mankind do not give thanks. (62) That is God, your Lord, Creator of all things; there is no god but He. How, then, are you perverted? (63) In this way were those who used to reject the signs of God perverted. (64) God it is Who made the earth a dwelling place for you and the sky a canopy. And He formed you and made beautiful your forms, and provided you with good things. That is God, your Lord; so blessed is God, Lord of the worlds. (65) He is the Living; immediately after the completion the obligatory canonical prayers. I shall respond to you is a promise from God, but it is not understood to mean that all supplications will be answered in this life. In this vein, Ibn ʿAjībah writes, "There is no believer who calls upon God and asks Him for something but that God gives it to him, in either this life or the Hereafter, where God says to him, 'This is what you requested in the world. I have stored it for you until this day.'" Supplication is considered among the most meritorious of acts, because in humbly imploring God one admits to one's servitude and abasement before Him (R) as well as complete poverty before God and utter need of Him (ST). Thus most who fail to call upon God do so out of pride and arrogance (R). There can, however, be those whose immersion in the remembrance of God keeps them from making a separate supplication, as stated in a famous ḥadīth qudsī: "For one whose remembrance of Me has distracted him from imploring Me, I shall give him that which is more bountiful than that which I give to those who implore Me" (R); for more on the importance of "calling upon God," see 2:186c.

61 That God created the night for rest and repose is invoked in several verses as a mercy God has bestowed upon human beings (cf. 25:47; 78:9; 10:67; 27:86; 28:73). That He made the day by which to see, or "made the day giving sight" (cf. 10:67; 28:73), indicates that it was made so that people could pursue their livelihood (IK, Ṭ); cf. 78:11. It could also be rendered "made the day seeing," indicating the manner in which the day bears witness to the good and bad actions that human beings perform; see also 10:67c. Truly God is Possessed of Bounty for mankind (cf. 2:243; 10:60; 27:73), or for the worlds (2:251). Nonetheless, most of mankind do not give thanks (cf. 2:243; 10:60; 12:38), because they are unaware (7:187; 12:21, 40, 68; 16:38, 75; 27:61; 30:6, 30; 34:28, 36; 39:29, 49; 40:57; 44:39; 45:26) and are not believers (11:17; 12:103–6; 13:1; 17:89; 26:8, 67, 103, 121, 139, 158, 174, 190; 40:59).

62–63 In this context, How, then, are you perverted (or "How, then, are you turned away"; cf. 6:95; 10:34; 35:3) means, "How, given that there is only one God and that He has provided the day and the night and infinite bounty for you, could you turn away from Him, deny Him, and attribute partners to Him?" Just as the Quraysh went astray, worshipping gods apart from God, so too those before them were perverted, or turned away, from God, worshipping other gods with no evidence or proof, solely on the basis of ignorance and caprice, and rejecting God's proofs and signs (IK).

64 Dwelling place renders qarār, which indicates that God made the earth firm and stable so that people could dwell in it and travel upon it; see 21:30–31c . He made the sky a roof protecting the world (IK), holding it aloft without pillars that you see (31:10; Ṭ). That God formed you and made beautiful your forms (see also 64:3) can mean the form of the human body; the inner reality of the human being, as in 95:4, Truly We created man in the most beautiful stature; or the forms of all things, as it is God Who made beautiful all that He created (32:7); see 32:7c; 95:4c.

65 Regarding God as the Living, see 2:255c. Regarding the injunction to call upon God, see 40:14c; 40:60c. Devoting religion entirely to Him there is no god but He. So call upon Him, devoting religion entirely to Him. Praise be to God, Lord of the worlds. (66) Say, "I have been forbidden to worship those upon whom you call apart from God, since clear proofs have come unto me from my Lord, and I am commanded to submit to the Lord of the worlds." (67) He it is Who created you from dust, then from a drop, then from a blood clot. Then He brings you forth as infants, that you may then reach maturity, then that you may grow old—though some of you are taken earlier—that you may reach a term appointed, and that haply you may understand. (68) He it is Who gives life and causes death. So when He decrees a thing, He only says to it, "Be!" and it is. (69) Hast thou not considered those who dispute concerning the signs of God, how they are turned away, (70) those who deny the Book, and that wherewith We have sent Our messengers? But soon they will know, (71) since they will be dragged, with shackles and chains around their necks, (72) into 67 This is one of several verses to cite the stages of gestation and life as evidence of God's Mercy and Power as well as His ability to resurrect the dead; see 22:5–6c. As human beings are created from dust, then from a drop (cf. 16:4; 18:37; 22:5; 36:77; 53:46; 75:37; 76:2; 80:19), referring to a drop of sperm or to a recently fertilized egg (Ṭs)—that is a draught of a base fluid (32:8; cf. 77:20)—this verse also serves to remind human beings of the lowly origin of their material nature. To reach maturity indicates the completion of one's bodily strength and intellectual and mental capabilities (Q, Ṭs); see 46:15c. Yet some are taken earlier—that is, before they grow old (Aj, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), before they reach maturity (Aj, Ṭs), or even before they are brought forth as infants (Aj, Q). Here a term appointed refers to the term decreed for one's life span, short of which none die and beyond which none live (Ṭ), or to the Day of Resurrection (Ṭs).

(cf. 7:29; 10:22; 29:65; 31:32; 39:2, 11, 14; 40:14; 98:5) indicates practicing with total sincerity, in purity, and with complete devotion; see 7:29c; 31:32c; 98:5c.

66 Having put forward a series of arguments in the preceding verses, the Quran here enjoins the Prophet to declare his implacable rejection of the Quraysh's idolatry (cf. 6:56; 10:104; 109:1–6). In 6:56 he is enjoined to follow the same opening phrase with the declaration, I will not follow your caprices, for then I would have gone astray, and I would not be among the rightly guided; and in 6:71, the believers are instructed to join him in saying, We are commanded to submit to the Lord of the worlds.

68 That He gives life and causes death (cf. 2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 9:116; 10:56; 22:6; 23:80; 44:8; 53:44; 57:2) indicates God's Power over all phases of existence at all times. He only says to it, "Be!" and it is (cf. 2:117; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 36:82) points to the fact that God's creative act is dependent upon nothing else and instantaneous, like the blinking of an eye (54:50); see 2:117c.

69 This is the last of four verses in this sūrah to rebuke those who dispute concerning the signs of God; see also vv. 4, 35, and 56. Signs can refer to verses of the Quran, but their mention here follows directly upon the mention of the signs of God within the created order and the cycles of human life in vv. 61–68, so that the term would appear to refer in this instance first and foremost to the signs upon the horizons and within themselves (i.e., within human beings; 41:53). Those who dispute concerning these signs are turned away from the truth and sound judgment (Ṭ) or from the straight path to the path that leads astray (Ṭs).

70–72 Here the Book refers to the Quran, and that wherewith We have sent Our messengers refers to all revealed books (Ṭs); or the Book could boiling liquid; then they will be set aflame in the Fire. (73) Then it will be said unto them, "Where are those whom you used to ascribe as partners (74) apart from God?" They will reply, "They have forsaken us. Nay, but we were not calling upon aught before." Thus does God lead astray the disbelievers. (75) "That is because you used to exult upon the earth without right and because you were insolent. (76) Enter the gates of Hell, therein to abide." How evil is the abode of the arrogant! (77) So be patient. Surely God's Promise is true. And whether We refer to all revealed books, the Quran included (Aj), and that wherewith We have sent Our messengers could refer to the Divine laws (Aj) or to the teachings with which God sent His prophets (Ṭ). On the Day of Judgment, the disbelievers will know the truth of what they disputed and denied (cf. 15:3, 96; 29:66; 37:170; 43:89), when they are dragged in shackles (see 36:8c) and chains into boiling liquid and set aflame in the Fire of Hell, which is understood to mean that they will be dragged back and forth between the two, as in 55:43–44: This is Hell that the guilty deny; to and fro shall they pass, between it and boiling waters (also see 37:68c).

73–74 This is one of several passages stating that the partners the disbelievers ascribe to God, or in other instances "that which they fabricated," in this life will forsake them in the next life (cf. 6:22–24; 7:37, 53; 10:30; 11:21; 16:86–87; 28:62–65; 41:47–48). In some instances the disbelievers deny that they were in fact idolaters (see 6:23) or continue to call upon their false deities to no avail (see 28:64), but here and in 7:37 they admit their error, though it is too late for this realization to help them. In this same vein, Satan says to the disbelievers after God's Decree has been passed, Verily, God made you the Promise of truth; and I made you a promise, but I failed you. And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves. I cannot respond to your cries for help; nor can you respond to my cries for help. Truly I disbelieved in your ascribing me as partner aforetime (14:22). Thus the disbelievers say about him, Satan is a forsaker of man (25:29).

75–76 These are the words of the angels to the denizens of Hell (IK), telling them that the punishments they are now receiving are the result of acts of disobedience and exulting in vanities not permitted to them (Ṭ). Though one can exult or rejoice rightfully (Ṭs), as in 13:36, Those to whom We have given the Book rejoice in that which has been sent down unto thee, in the Quran "exult" is almost always used with a negative connotation, implying that one is heedless of God while enjoying the life of this world. In contrast, "insolence" (marah) can only indicate enjoying something in complete vanity (Ṭs). Thus you used to exult indicates being heedless of the gifts God has given and not being grateful for them, while being insolent or haughty indicates direct acts of disobedience. Regarding the gates of Hell, which are said to number seven (Ṭs), see 39:71–72c and the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran." The abode in which those who were too proud and haughty to worship God will dwell forever is too evil to be described (cf. 3:151; 16:29; 39:72).

77 Be patient is an injunction addressed directly to the Prophet, as it is in the second-person singular, but by extension it applies to all his followers, as God's Promise will always be fulfilled, whether in this life or the next; see 40:55c on the identical phrase. Patience is said to be an attribute of the resolute among God's messengers (see 46:35c). Whether We show thee a part of that which We promise them refers to their receiving punishment while the Prophet is alive (Ṭ) and thus alludes to the possibility of the Prophet's triumph over his enemies during the life of this world in the manner of David and Solomon or Noah and Moses (see 40:55c). Or We take thee thus refers to the possibility of the Prophet's death before the punishment comes upon the disbelievers, meaning God's Promise coming upon them either in this world after the Prophet's death or on the Day of Judgment.

show thee a part of that which We promise them, or We take thee, unto Us will they be returned. (78) Indeed We have sent messengers before thee. Among them are those whom We have recounted unto thee, and among them are those whom We have not recounted unto thee. And it is not for a messenger to bring a sign, save by God's Leave. So when God's Command comes, judgment is passed in truth; and those who make false claims will then be losers. (79) God it is Who made cattle for you, that some of them you may ride and some of them you may eat— (80) and there are benefits for you therein—and that through them you may attain any need that is in your breasts. And upon them and upon ships are you carried. (81) And He shows you His signs. So which of God's signs do you reject? (82) Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were more numerous than they, greater than they in strength, and left firmer traces upon the earth. But that 78 Here, as in 4:164, which speaks of messengers We have recounted unto thee before, and messengers We have not recounted unto thee, the Quran explicitly indicates that there are prophets whose stories God has not recounted to Muhammad and his followers. The Quran mentions twenty-six prophets by name, but Islamic tradition holds that there were many more, 315 messengers (rasūl) and 124,000 prophets (nabī) according to a ḥadīth; see 4:164c and the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions." That it is not for a messenger to bring a sign, save by God's Leave (cf. 13:38) functions to let the Prophet know that he does not need to bring to his people everything that they demand of him in order to prove his claim to prophethood, just as it was not given to prophets before him to bring a sign, save by God's Leave (Ṭ). Were he in fact to do so, they still would not believe, as was demonstrated by the miracle of the splitting of the moon (see the introduction to Sūrah 54). For other instances of disingenuous requests made by the disbelievers, see, e.g., 6:8, 36; 17:90–93; commentary on 6:7–9.

79–80 This is one of many passages to invoke the benefits of cattle (referring not only to cows, but also other four-legged domesticated animals): their usefulness for riding and transporting goods, for providing warmth and clothing, for providing food and drink, and even their beauty, as signs of God's Beneficence toward humanity; see 6:142c; 16:5, 66, 79; 23:21–22; 36:72–73; 39:6; 43:12–13. As in 23:21–22 and 43:12–13, the mention of cattle is here combined with that of ships, alluding to God's providing for human beings on both land and sea; for seafaring as a blessing from God, see 2:164; 14:32; 17:66; 22:65; 30:46; 31:31; 35:12; 42:32–34c; 45:12.

81 Regarding God's showing people His signs, see 40:13c. Which of God's signs do you reject? could be understood to mean, "If you admit that the realities mentioned above are from God, how could you deny God's ability to resurrect?" (Q). Others take it as an expression of amazement and admonition, as if to say that one cannot deny God's signs and proofs unless one is stubborn and arrogant (IK). Another possible meaning is, "When you reflect upon these signs, how could you call upon or worship anything apart from God?" (Ṭ). See also the refrain Which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? throughout Sūrah 55 (beginning with v. 13).

82 Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? is repeated several times in the Quran (12:109; 30:9, 42; 35:44; 40:21; 47:10); see 40:21–22c; 30:9c.

which they used to earn availed them not. (83) And when their messengers brought them clear proofs, they exulted in the knowledge they possessed, and that which they used to mock beset them. (84) Then, when they saw Our Might, they said, "We believe in God alone, and we disavow that which we used to ascribe as partners unto Him." (85) But their believing benefited them not when they saw Our Might. [That is] the wont of God which has passed among His servants; and the disbelievers were then lost.

That which they used to earn availed them not (cf. 15:84; 39:50) means that when God's Promise of punishment was fulfilled for the disbelievers from generations of old, their great power and wealth could not defend them against it (Q, Ṭ). The phrase could also be rendered, "So what will that which they used to earn avail them?" (Q, Ṭ), in which case it refers to those among the Quraysh who disputed with the Prophet regarding God's signs, given that only traces remain of those who disputed God's messengers in the past (Ṭ).

83 That the disbelievers exulted in the knowledge they possessed implies that they declared that they knew more than the Prophet, saying that they would not be punished, resurrected (Q), or taken to account; or else that they exulted in what they knew of worldly affairs (IJ), as in 30:7: They know some outward aspect of the life of this world, but of the Hereafter they are heedless (Q). And that which they used to mock beset them (cf. 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 21:41; 39:48; 45:33; 46:26) indicates that the punishment they receive is a direct result of their own iniquity, as in 10:44: Truly God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves. Alternately, it could be read as a reference to the prophets exulting or rejoicing in the knowledge given to them by God (Ṭs).

84–85 When the disbelievers saw God's Punishment descending upon them, they declared belief in God and disavowed their idolatry, but their newly found belief was of no benefit to them, because they had already had ample time to repent yet had not done so. Thus their admission of wrongdoing comes too late for repentance. In this sense, it is similar to 4:18: And repentance is not accepted from those who do evil deeds till, when death confronts one of them, he says, "Truly now I repent," nor from those who die as disbelievers (cf. 23:106–8; 30:57; 74:43–48).

[That is] represents an elided word or phrase that some interpret as "Beware the wont of God" or "Like the wont of God" (Q). Here the wont of God (cf. 3:137; 33:38, 62; 35:43; 48:23) refers to God's establishment of the principle with all previous generations that He does not accept a declaration of belief at the moment when people are confronted with the punishment they had denied (IJ, Ṭs), since they had been warned and granted respite yet denied it up until that moment. The disbelievers were lost before that moment, but now the complete nature of their loss has become clear to them (IJ, Q), as they are cast into the Fire, suffer God's Vengeance, and lose the reward of the Garden (Ṭs).

Expounded

Fuṣṣilat

Fuṣṣilat is a Makkan sūrah believed to have been revealed directly after the preceding sūrah, Ghāfir (JJ). It takes its name from the reference to the Quran in v. 3 as a Book whose signs have been expounded. This sūrah is also known as Sajdah, "Prostration," and as Ḥā Mīm Sajdah (Āl). Other less common names for this sūrah are "The Lamps" (al-Maṣābīḥ), for the phrase We adorned the lowest heaven with lamps and a guard in v. 12 (Āl, IJ), and "Means of Sustenance" (al-Aqwāt), from the reference to God having apportioned means of sustenance for all things on the earth in v. 10 (Āl).

According to some, Fuṣṣilat follows the previous sūrah, because the discussion of the punishments that befell the pre-Islamic Arabian tribes of ᶜĀd and Thamūd and the similar punishments that are foretold for the Quraysh echo the warnings of 40:82: Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were more numerous than them, and greater than them in strength, and left firmer traces upon the earth. But that which they used to earn availed them not (Āl). In this same vein, v. 2 can be seen as a warning to the Quraysh that echoes 40:83, And when their messengers brought them clear proofs, they exulted in the knowledge they possessed, and that which they used to mock beset them, since the Quraysh were said to mock the Quran, as in v. 26: And those who disbelieve will say, "Listen not to this Quran, but speak dismissively of it, that haply you might prevail" (Aj).

The sūrah begins with a brief discussion of the nature of the Quran (vv. 1–4), which is followed by advice to the Prophet regarding those who refuse to pay it heed (vv. 5–6), juxtaposing the disbelievers and the believers (vv. 7–8). After calling for reflection upon the manner in which God created the heavens and the earth (vv. 9–12), the sūrah invokes the calamities that befell the pre-Islamic Arabian tribes of ᶜĀd and Thamūd as examples of the fate that awaits disbelievers in this world (vv. 13–18), followed by a warning of the fate that awaits them in the Hereafter (vv. 19–25). A discussion of the fate that awaits those who reject the Quran (vv. 26–28) then transitions into another juxtaposition of the believers and the disbelievers (vv. 29–32) and an exhortation to the believers to maintain respectful speech and conduct even with the disbelievers (vv. 33–39). This is followed by a return to a discussion of the nature of the Quran and the fate that awaits those who reject it (vv. 40–46). The final section (vv. 47–54), which reflects upon the vagaries of the human condition, includes one of the most important verses for the discussion of the manner in which God reveals the truth to human beings (v. 53).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Ḥā. Mīm. ② A revelation from the Compassionate, the Merciful, ③ a Book whose signs have been expounded as an Arabic Quran for a people who know, ④ as a bringer of glad tidings, and as a warner. But most of them have turned away, such that they hear not. ⑤ They say, "Our hearts are under coverings from that to which you call us, and in our ears there is deafness, and

1 Sūrah 41 is the second in a series of seven sūrahs that open with the Arabic letters ḥāʾ and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm. The letters ḥāʾ and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. For some possible meanings of these letters, see 40:1c. Some propose that the ḥāʾ and the mīm here could allude to the "wisdom of Muhammad" (ḥikmat Muḥammad; Bq).

2 As with the other seven sūrahs that begin with the letters ḥāʾ and mīm, this sūrah opens with a description of the Quran. For those who take Ḥā Mīm as a name of the Quran, vv. 1–2 can be read to mean, "Ḥā Mīm is a revelation from the Compassionate, the Merciful" (Q). The connection of revelation to the Divine Names of Mercy bespeaks its being sent to benefit the world and particularly religion, as when the Quran says of the Prophet, And We sent thee not, save as a mercy unto the worlds (21:107; Aj).

3 That the signs, or verses, of the Quran have been expounded means that they have been explained and made clear (Q, Ṭ) through the variety of arguments and proofs for the Oneness of God and the truth of prophethood given throughout (cf. 6:55, 97–98, 126; 7:32, 174; 9:11; 10:5, 24; 13:2; 30:28). The Quran is thus described as a Book whose signs have been determined, then expounded, from the Presence of One Wise, Aware (11:1; IK). In this context, Quran is best understood in accord with its linguistic meaning, "recitation," indicating that God expounded the signs in the form of an Arabic recitation; see also 12:2; 16:103; 20:113; 26:195; 39:28c; 42:7; 43:3. In other verses this expounding is said to have been done for a people who know (cf. 7:32; 9:11; 10:5), for a people who take heed (6:126), for a people who reflect (10:24), and for a people who understand (30:28), so that people may be certain of the meeting with their Lord (13:2), and so that haply they may return (7:174).

4 The Quran is a bringer of glad tidings for the believers and a warner for the disbelievers (Q, Ṭs). But most of the people of Makkah at the time of the revelation of this sūrah (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs) had turned away from the Quran (Ṭ), or from belief in God (Ṭs), and refused to listen to it. This verse could thus be understood to refer to their failure to both hear with their ears and reflect, consider, and understand (Aj), meaning that they did not "hear" with their hearts, as alluded to in the next verse.

5 The objection posed here by the disbelievers is similar to that stated by the Jews of Madinah in 2:88: And they say, "Our hearts are uncircumcised" (see also 4:155c). The present verse is one of several where the hearts of the disbelievers are said to be "veiled," "covered," or "sealed" to prevent spiritual between us and you there is a veil. So do [as you will]; we shall do [as we will]." (6) Say, "I am only a human being like you. It is revealed unto me that your God is only one God. So go straight unto Him and seek forgiveness from Him." Woe unto the idolaters, (7) those who do not give alms and who disbelieve in the Hereafter. (8) Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be a reward unceasing. (9) Say, "Do you indeed disbelieve in the One Who created the earth in two days, and do you set up equals unto Him? That is the Lord of the worlds." (10) He placed firm mountains therein rising above it, blessed it, and apportioned its means of sustenance therein in four days, alike for all who comprehension (see 2:7c; 6:25c, 46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 17:46; 18:57c, 101; 30:59; 45:23; 47:16c; 63:3c; 83:14c; 83:15c). From one perspective, when the disbelievers say this of themselves, they in fact speak the truth about their spiritual condition, but it is God Who has placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand it not, and in their ears a deafness (6:25; 17:46; 18:57). Thus their hearts are veiled with the coverings of spiritual neglect, inclining toward worldliness, lust, caprice, and other sins, so that they cannot comprehend the call, and their ears are deaf to the good, so that they cannot hear the call of God (ST); see 6:25c. Their declaration that there is a veil between them and the Prophet indicates that they see no possibility of rapprochement with him. Thus they say, "Act and pray according to the dictates of your religion, and we will act and pray according to the dictates of our religion" (Ṭ, Ṭs). This is reported to have been a declaration by Abū Jahl and other leaders of the Quraysh (Ṭs).

6–7 Cf. 18:110. That the Prophet is only a human being is seen by the Quraysh as evidence that he has not come with a true revelation (see 6:8–9; 11:12; 14:10; 17:94; 21:3c; 23:33; 25:7; 36:15; 41:14; 54:24; 64:6c). But here it illustrates that there is not in reality a veil between them. Rather, the Prophet brings them a revelation in their language, an Arabic Quran, whose signs have been expounded, but they choose to ignore it and not act in accord with it. Go straight unto Him derives from the same word as the central Quranic concept of the straight path. It thus indicates not deviating from the worship of the One God and remaining steadfast; see 1:6c. In this context, give alms may refer to required alms (Ṭs), but as this is a Makkan sūrah and alms were not formally instituted until the second year of the Madinan period (see 2:43c; 2:215c), it most likely refers to charity in general, as in 19:31 and 19:55, where Jesus and Ishmael refer to alms (zakāh) and more broadly to the purification of the soul (IK); as in 91:9, which employs the same root, z-k-w, in saying of the soul, Indeed, he prospers who purifies it (zakkāhā); and as in 87:14: He indeed prospers who is purified (tazakkā).

8 Cf. 84:25; 95:6. A reward unceasing (cf. 68:3) indicates a reward that comes directly from God and is never cut off, as opposed to the rewards of this world; see 95:6c. Also see 11:108, which refers to the Garden as a gift unfailing.

9 This verse is an expression of rebuke in the form of a question (IK, R). As in other instances, this line of questioning is meant to challenge the logic of the pre-Islamic system of polytheism, since many idolaters believed in a supreme deity, but ascribed to that deity partners who had a share in the creative process; see 23:85–89; 29:61c; 31:25.

10 Placed firm mountains therein (cf. 13:3; 21:31; 27:61; 77:27) or cast therein firm mountains (15:19; 50:7; cf. 16:15; 31:10) refers to God's making the earth firm. That God apportioned its means of sustenance refers to God's placing the mountains, rivers, and trees in various lands (IJ, Ṭ); providing sustenance for human beings and animals (IJ, Ṭ, Ṭs); apportioning the rains (IJ, Ṭ); apportioning different things to each land, so that they would remain interdependent (IJ, Ṭ, Ṭs); or all of these functions. The days mentioned here and in the surrounding verses do not denote the same measure of time as the days ordinarily experienced by human

ask. (11) Then He turned to heaven while it was smoke and said unto it and unto the earth, "Come willingly or unwillingly!" They said, "We come willingly." (12) Then He decreed that they be seven heavens in two days and revealed to each heaven its command. And We adorned the lowest heaven with lamps and a guard. That is the Decree of the Mighty, the Knowing. (13) So if they turn away, then say, "I warned you of a thunderbolt, like the thunderbolt of ᶜĀd and Thamūd: (14) when messengers came unto them from before them and behind them, [saying], 'Worship none but God,' they said, 'Had our Lord willed, He beings; see 22:47: Truly a day with your Lord is as a thousand years of that which you reckon (cf. 32:5). The reference to creating the earth in two days in v. 9, apportioning its means of sustenance therein in four days in this verse, then to creating the seven heavens in two days in v. 12 can be understood as further elaboration of other verses that state that God created the heavens and the earth in six days (7:54; 10:3; 11:7; 57:4; cf. 25:59; 32:4; 50:38; IK). The two days in v. 9 would then be a part of the four days in which the apportioning took place (IK, R, Ṭs). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "God created the earth on Sunday and Monday; He created the mountains on Tuesday; and He created the trees, the water, and the populated and the unpopulated [lands] on Wednesday; so these are the four days. Then He created the sky on Thursday, and the sun, the moon, the stars, the angels, and Adam on Friday" (Ṭs).

11 Turned to renders the verb istawā, which is also translated "mounted" when employed in relation to God's Throne (see 7:54c; 10:3; 20:5; 25:59; 32:4; 57:4). In this context, as in 2:29, it means that after creating the earth God turned His attention to the creation of the heavens (Ṭs). That the heavens and the earth agreed to come willingly indicates that all things are obedient and subservient to God, as in 2:116: Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth. All are devoutly obedient to Him (cf. 16:52); and 19:93: There is none in the heavens and on the earth, save that it comes unto the Compassionate as a servant.

12 Most commentators understand the two days to be Thursday and Friday (IJ, Ṭ), though others who say that the heavens were created before the earth say that the two days are Sunday and Monday (IJ); for the seven heavens, see 23:17c; 65:12; 67:3; 71:15. That God revealed to each heaven its command, or its affair, is understood to mean that He created for each all that would pertain to it, such as angels, stars, the sun, and the moon (IJ, Ṭ). This is one of several instances where the Quran employs the verb "to reveal" (awḥā), which can also mean "to inspire," when speaking outside the context of sending prophetic revelations, as in 16:68: And thy Lord revealed unto the bee; and 99:5, which says of the earth at the end of time: thy Lord inspired her (awḥāhā). Such passages can be understood as references to making all aspects of creation fulfill the purpose for which they were created. Regarding the adornment of the lowest heaven with lamps, which are said to protect against intrusions from those who wish to listen to the heavenly discourse (cf. 15:16–18; 37:6–10; 67:5; 72:8–9), see the introduction to Sūrah 72.

13 Here the Prophet is told to warn the Quraysh that if they turn away, as did other Arabian tribes before them, namely, the ᶜĀd and the Thamūd, who rejected the prophets sent to them, they might suffer a similar fate. For the account of the ᶜĀd, also see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; and for that of the Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31. The tribe of Thamūd is also said to have been destroyed by a thunderbolt in 51:44, by the Cry in 11:67 (cf. 54:31), and by an earthquake in 7:78. These are not contradictory, but rather different aspects of the overwhelming (ṭāghiyah) that befalls them, as described in 69:5.

14 The ᶜĀd's and the Thamūd's rejection of their prophets, saying, Had our Lord willed, He would have sent down angels, reflects the manner in which other communities are said to have rejected their prophets. As 17:94 states, And naught hindered men from believing when guidance came would have sent down angels; so truly we disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent.'" (15) As for ᶜĀd, they waxed arrogant upon the earth without right and said, "Who is greater than we in strength?" Have they not considered that God, Who created them, is greater than they in strength? Yet they rejected Our signs. (16) So We sent a howling wind against them in days of ill fortune, that they might taste the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world; yet the punishment of the Hereafter is more disgraceful, and they will not be helped. (17) As for Thamūd, We guided them, but they preferred blindness to guidance; so the thunderbolt of humiliating punishment overtook them for that which they used to earn. (18) And We saved those who believed and were reverent. (19) And on that Day the enemies of God are gathered unto the Fire and are marshaled in [ordered ranks], (20) till, when they come upon it, their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do. (21) They will say to their skins, "Why did you bear witness against us?" They unto them, save that they said, "Has God sent a human being as a messenger?" (see also 6:8–9; 6:50; 11:12; 14:10–11; 23:24, 33–34, 47; 26:154, 186; 36:15; 54:24; 64:6c; 74:25). In other verses, this same objection is attributed to those who rejected the prophethood of Muhammad: And they say, "What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him?" (25:7). In 6:8 it is said that had an angel been sent, it would have come not with a revelation, but to carry out God's Judgment: Had We sent down an angel, then the matter would be decreed, and they would be granted no respite; see also 17:94–95c.

15–16 Here the tribe of ᶜĀd displays the same attitude as the tribe of Quraysh, believing that their worldly power will somehow protect them from God's Power. While this wind is also described as howling in 54:19 and as the barren wind in 51:41, 69:6 is more emphatic: And as for ᶜĀd, they were destroyed by a howling, raging wind. When employed in the singular, "wind" conveys God's Wrath and Punishment (also see 3:117; 10:22; 17:69; 22:31; 30:51; 33:9; 46:24). But the plural, "winds," conveys the coming of God's Mercy, as in 7:57: He it is Who sends forth the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy (see also 25:48; 35:9). Regarding the wind that came upon the tribe of ᶜĀd, the Prophet is reported to have said, "I have been helped by the east wind and ᶜĀd was destroyed by the west wind."

17–18 God guided the tribe of Thamūd by showing them the truth and making it clear when He sent them the prophet Ṣāliḥ. But they opposed and rejected him and slaughtered the she-camel that had been sent to them as a sign from God (IK); regarding the she-camel, see commentary on 7:73, 77–78; 11:64–65. In this way they willfully chose to ignore the sign God had sent them and thus preferred blindness. After three days (see 11:65) they were overcome by God's Punishment. After the punishment, morning found them lying lifeless in their abode (7:78; 11:67). But as in the case of other prophets, God saved Ṣāliḥ and those who believed in his message from the punishment He had sent upon those who opposed him (see 11:66).

19 On the Day when the enemies of God from all generations are gathered together before the Fire, they will be driven unto Hell (39:71) by those angels who are the keepers of Hell; see 39:71–72c. In a variant reading of the text, several commentators prefer "We gather" (naḥshuru; Aj, Q, R) in place of are gathered (yuḥsharu).

will reply, "God, Who makes all things speak, made us speak. He created you the first time, and unto Him shall you be returned. (22) You did not seek to conceal, lest your ears, your eyes, and your skins bear witness against you. But you thought that God knew not much of that which you did. (23) That thought which you thought about your Lord has destroyed you, such that you have come to be among the losers." (24) Then if they are patient, the Fire shall be an abode for them. And if they seek favor, they will not be granted favor. (25) We 20–21 This is one of a few passages asserting that human beings' faculties or body parts will bear witness against them on the Day of Judgment (cf. 24:24; 36:65); that is, they will testify to the deeds that issued from them (R). Human beings are thus forced to bear witness against themselves that they were disbelievers (6:130; 7:37), and to each of them it is said, On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you (17:14). Some commentators understand v. 20 to mean that God will bestow upon each limb or organ a voice with which it will speak, or that each will exhibit states that indicate the actions committed with it (R). The reference to skins can be understood as an allusion to the sensation of touch (R), the hands and feet (IJ), or the private parts (Aj, IJ, Q, R, Ṭs); or it can simply mean the skins themselves (IJ).

According to several aḥādīth, the limbs and organs will speak after a man has denied some of the actions recorded for him: "Then he will say, 'My Lord, didst Thou not promise me that Thou wouldst not wrong me.' God will say, 'Yea.' The man will say, 'I will not accept anyone other than myself as a witness.' Then God will say, 'Does it suffice to have Me and My angels, the noble scribes [see 80:15–16c], as witness?' Then these words will be repeated several times, and a seal will be placed over [the man's] mouth [see 36:65c], and his limbs (arkān) will speak about what he used to do. Then [the man] will say, 'Away with you! For your sake did I argue' " (Aj, IK, Q, Ṭ).

The response of the limbs and organs indicates that they will not speak of their own volition, but only by God's Command (Aj). Their reference to God's creating human beings and returning them can be understood to mean that people should not be amazed that God made them speak, since His ability to create and resurrect human beings is even more amazing (Aj). According to some commentators, the response of the limbs and organs ends after made us speak (IJ, Ṭs), though most do not specify where the discourse ends.

22–23 Their limbs and organs continue speaking to the disbelievers, chastising them for having had no shame regarding the sins they committed in this world. Some say that these verses mean that they were not being reverent (Ṭ). To conceal can thus be understood to mean refraining from bad deeds and in this sense concealing them from oneself (Q, Ṭ). Those who do not conceal or leave off bad deeds act as if they are oblivious to the fact that not a mote's weight evades Him in the heavens or on earth, nor smaller than that, nor larger, but that it is in a clear Book (34:3; cf. 6:59; 10:61; 27:75). Their underestimation of God's Omnipotence has thus led to their being cast in the Fire. Expanding upon this issue, al-Ṭabarī observes that it leaves hope for those who are disobedient but nonetheless know that they will be taken to account for their actions, since such persons do not underestimate God or think poorly of Him, but instead hope for His Forgiveness, as in a saying attributed to the Prophet, "God is in accord with the thought that His servant has of Him; if it is good, then good; but if it is bad, then bad" (Aj, Ṭ, Ṭs).

24 Most commentators understand this verse to mean that evildoers will not be rewarded for patience in the Hereafter if they had not already turned to God (IJ, Ṭs), since God had provided them ample opportunity to repent and conduct themselves with virtue before the punishment came upon them (see 23:63–67; 40:84–85c; as well as the story of Pharaoh in 10:90–91). Alternately, this verse can be understood to mean that if they were patient with evil deeds during the life of this assigned to them companions, and they made that which is before them and that which is behind them seem fair to them. So the Word among the communities of jinn and men that have passed away before them came due for them. Truly they were lost. ﴿26﴾ And those who disbelieve will say, "Listen not to this Quran, but speak dismissively of it, that haply you might prevail." ﴿27﴾ We shall surely make those who disbelieve taste a severe punishment, and We shall surely requite them for the worst of that which they used to do. ﴿28﴾ That is the recompense of the enemies of God—the Fire. The Abode of Perpetuity shall be theirs therein, a recompense for their having rejected Our signs. ﴿29﴾ And those who disbelieve will say, "Our Lord, show us those who led us astray among jinn world, not seeking to avoid them or (at least) to conceal their own evil deeds, then the Fire will be their abode in the Hereafter (Q). Likewise, if they seek favor by asking that what they love be returned to them, it will not be returned to them, since they do not deserve that response (IJ), or by asking that God be pleased with them, God will not be pleased with them (Q, Ṭs), since their excuses will not be accepted (Ṭs).

25 The companions that God decrees for the disbelievers could be the human beings and jinn who lead them astray, both of whom are referred to as "satans" when they suggest evil to others, as in 6:112: Thus have We made for every prophet an enemy—satans from among mankind and jinn, who inspire each other with flowery discourse in order to deceive. God condemns these "satans" to one another, as in 43:36: And whosoever turns blindly away from the remembrance of the Compassionate, We assign to him a satan who is then a companion unto him (cf. 17:27). These companions then delude such human beings into preferring that which is before them of the adornments of this world, into working to attain such delusions, and into thinking that there will be no resurrection and no recompense in the Hereafter (Ṭ, Ṭs). Such people have thus become like communities before them for whom the Word—that is, God's threat of an impending punishment—came due; regarding the concept of "the Word coming due," see 10:33c; 36:7c.

26 The leaders among the Quraysh would tell people not to listen to the Quran. But speak dismissively renders the command wa'lghaw, which conveys the sense of "nullify" or "render ineffectual." The injunction is therefore understood to mean that the Quraysh should make a ruckus, whistle, or speak loudly when the Prophet is reciting the Quran, so that the noise would prevail over his recitation and prevent others from hearing it (Ṭs). Such conduct with regard to the revelation is precisely the opposite of what is enjoined in 7:204: And when the Quran is recited, hearken unto it, and listen, that haply you may receive mercy. In 49:3 it is stated that those who lower their voices before the Messenger of God, they are the ones whose hearts God has tested for reverence. Theirs shall be forgiveness and a great reward.

27–28 The enemies of God who seek to turn others away from the Quran will taste a severe punishment in this world and will also be requited in the Hereafter for the worst of that which they used to do (Ṭs). None of their good deeds, such as honoring guests and maintaining family ties, will avail them, because their actions have been rendered invalid by their disbelief (Aj), as in 47:28: They followed that which angers God and were averse to His good pleasure; so He made their deeds come to naught. In contrast, God is said to absolve the evil deeds of those who believe and perform righteous deeds and to recompense them according to the best of that which they used to do (29:7; cf. 9:121; 16:96–97; 39:35; 46:16). The Abode of Perpetuity refers here to the Fire itself (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z).

29 Those who were misguided by the companions that God decreed for them in v. 25 will and men. Let us put them under our feet, that they might be among the lowliest." (30) Truly those who say, "Our Lord is God," then stand firm, the angels will descend upon them, [saying], "Fear not, nor grieve, and rejoice in the Garden that you have been promised. (31) We are your protectors in the life of this world and in the Hereafter; therein you shall have whatsoever your souls desire, and therein you shall have whatsoever you call for: (32) a welcome from One Forgivseek vengeance against the satans among human beings and jinn whose deceptions led them to the Fire. Elsewhere the disbelievers say of those who led them astray, Our Lord! Give them a twofold punishment, and curse them with a great curse (33:68; cf. 7:38), and God responds by promising, For each of you it shall be doubled (7:38). Some say that in this verse those who led us astray among jinn and men refers specifically to Satan and Cain, as they began the practices of disbelief and murder, respectively (IJ, Z).

30 Cf. 46:13. Stand firm translates istaqāmū, a word closely related to the common phrase "perform the prayer" (aqīmu 'l-ṣalāh) and to the central Quranic idea of the "straight path" (al-ṣirāṭ al-mustaqīm; see 1:7c). In this context, it is understood to mean those who continue to say that God is One and do not turn to other gods (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭs), those who remain obedient to God and maintain their religious obligations (IJ, Q, Ṭs), or those who remain sincere and continue to perform good deeds until death (IJ). These and other interpretations all indicate maintaining obedience toward God in belief, speech, and action (Q). It is reported that the Prophet recited this verse and then said, "Some people have said it ["Our Lord is God"], and then most of them disbelieved. So whosoever says it until he dies is among those who stand firm" (Ṭs). The angels descend upon such believers either at the moment of death, at the moment they are drawn from their graves (Aj, IJ, Ṭs), or at the Resurrection, when all human beings are gathered (Aj, Ṭs). It can also be understood as a reference to angels descending upon people in this world, inspiring them to do good, expanding their breasts, and helping them in religious matters (Aj). Fear not refers to what is to come, while nor grieve refers to what has passed (IJ, Ṭs). And rejoice in the Garden, for Blessed indeed is the reward of the workers [of righteousness]! (3:136; My).

31 Protectors translates awliyā' (sing. walī), which can also mean "friends" or "allies." In this context it means both that the angels take responsibility for the believers by guarding them and that they love them (IJ). That they continue to do so in the Hereafter means that they will watch over the believers until the believers enter Paradise (IJ, Ṭs), providing them comfort while they are in their graves and when the trumpet is blown (see 39:68c) and escorting them across the traverse that leads from the plain of Judgment to the Garden (IK). Drawing upon the multiple meanings of awliyā' and the various functions of angels in relation to human beings, al-Qushayrī and al-Maybudī provide several interpretations for this verse: In the life of this world through the realization of gnosis and in the Hereafter by obtaining forgiveness; in the life of this world through contentment with the Decree and in the Hereafter through the meeting in the Abode of Subsistence; in the life of this world through faith and in the Hereafter through forgiveness; in the life of this world through love and in the Hereafter through nearness.

For the idea that the believers will have whatsoever they desire in the Hereafter, see commentary on 56:20–24. That such protection is afforded those who say, "Our Lord is God," then stand firm could also be an allusion to the salvific nature of all revealed religions, as in 2:62: Truly those who believe, and those who are Jews, and the Christians, and the Sabeans—whosoever believes in God and the Last Day and works righteousness shall have their reward with their Lord. No fear shall come upon them, nor shall they grieve (cf. 5:59).

32 A welcome renders nuzul, which derives from the root nazala, meaning, "to descend," and ing, Merciful." (33) And who is more beautiful in speech than one who calls unto God, works righteousness, and says, "Truly I am among those who submit"? (34) The good deed and the evil deed are not equal. Repel by that which is better; then behold, the one between whom and thee there is enmity shall be as if he were a loyal, protecting friend. (35) Yet none shall receive it, save those who are patient; and none shall receive it, save those who possess great fortune. (36) And should a temptation from Satan provoke thee, seek refuge in God. Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing. (37) Among His signs are the night and the day, the sun and the moon. Prostrate not unto the sun, nor unto the moon.

refers to what has been prepared for and offered to a guest. Here it could also be rendered "as a welcome," meaning, "Therein you will have whatsoever your souls desire, as a welcome from God." That it is from One Forgiving, Merciful means that it is not from the angels, but only from God (Ṭs) and alludes to the idea that were it not for God's Mercy, none would attain His Forgiveness (Qu).

33 The one who calls unto God is understood to be a reference to the Prophet (Qu, Ṭs, Z), to all the prophets (Qu), to those who call to prayer (IJ, IK, Ṭs, Ṭū, Z), to the leaders who call people to God (Qu), or to everyone who calls people to the good, works righteousness, and is among the submitters (IK, Z). For many Shiites, it is considered to refer to the Prophet and the Imams (Ṭs) or to the Prophet and his family (Ṭū). The combination of qualifications listed in this verse indicates that people cannot call to God unless they also act in accord with what they truly know, so that people will accept it (Ṭs). From a Sufi perspective, those who call unto God and work righteousness are those who seek no share for themselves in calling to God (Su) and "Those who know the path of God, then traverse upon the path of God, then call the people to God" (Qu).

34 Cf. 23:96: Repel evil by that which is better (see also 29:46). Better can also mean "more beautiful" or "more virtuous." In the present verse, the absence of a direct object after repel opens the meaning to other possibilities: people should repel anger with patience (IJ), error with truth (Ṭs), ignorance with clemency (Ṭs), and the commission of evil with pardon (IJ, Ṭs); if others disobey God in how they treat an individual, then that person should obey God in how he or she treats them (IK). Such conduct can lead to reconciliation, love, and empathy (IK). To repel evil with good (cf. 13:27; 23:96; 28:54) does not mean to surrender before one's enemy or to accept falsehood over truth, but instead to avoid reciprocating harm whenever such avoidance will not lead to greater evil. In this vein, a ḥadīth taken by many as a foundational principle of Islam states, "Let there be no harming and no reciprocating harm." Another states, "Keep relations with those who cut them off with you, give to those who deny you, and ignore those who oppress you." Repel with that which is better can also be understood to apply to oneself, meaning that one should repel one's own base tendencies toward vice by practicing virtue.

35 The ability to repel evil with good is attained only by those who conceal their anger and bear what harm is done to them with patience (Ṭs). A great share refers to one of good fortune (IJ), an abundance of intellect and vision (Ṭs), or a high degree of virtue, spiritual strength, and inner purity (R). Great fortune may also be understood as a reference to Paradise (IJ, Ṭ, Ṭs).

36 Cf. 7:200; 23:97–98. This verse repeats a general injunction stated in various ways in the Quran. In this context it also implies that if one is enticed to anger and thus to requite evil in a manner that is not better or "more virtuous" than the action of which one has been the object, one should seek refuge in God (Ṭ); see 7:200c.

37 This is one of many verses to mention the signs that can be found in the night and the day,

Prostrate unto God, Who created them, if it is He Whom you worship. (38) And if they wax arrogant, then those who are with thy Lord glorify Him night and day, and they never weary. (39) Among His signs is that thou seest the earth diminished; then, when We send down water upon it, it quivers and swells. He Who gives it life is surely the One Who gives life to the dead. Truly He is Powerful over all things. (40) Truly those who deviate with regard to Our signs are not hidden from Us. Is one who is cast in the Fire better, or one who comes in security on the Day of Resurrection? Do what you will; truly He sees and the movement of the sun and the moon, as in 31:29: Hast thou not considered that God makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and that He made the sun and the moon subservient (cf. 16:12; 35:13; 39:5); see commentary on 36:37–40. Outwardly, the command to prostrate only to God is clear, but it can also be understood as an injunction to overcome the baser self, which turns toward all kinds of worldly distractions at the expense of remembering God (Aj, Q).

38 Whether the disbelievers prostrate to God or not makes no difference to God or to those who worship God; it is only to the detriment of those who fail to do so (see 41:46c). Those who are with thy Lord is understood by most commentators as a reference to the angels (Aj, IJ, IK, Ṭ, Ṭs), but it can also mean all human beings who are near to God and honored by Him (Z) and could thus be understood as a reference to the foremost among them (K), who are said to be the ones brought nigh (56:11). The angels never weary of worshipping, since they never disobey God in what He commands of them (66:6); see also 21:19–20c. The foremost among human beings never weary, because they worship God devoid of veils, remembering Him at all times (K).

Together with the previous verse, this is one of fifteen passages after which one should prostrate when reciting the Quran; see 19:58c. In this instance, there is debate as to whether one should prostrate at the end of v. 37 or at the end of v. 38 (IJ, Ṭs).

39 This is one of several verses to invoke God's ability to revive barren land as an argument for His ability to resurrect human beings (cf. 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 25:48–89; 29:63; 30:19, 24, 50; 35:9; 36:33; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11). The use of this metaphor can also been seen as a reference to the state of the soul that has become desiccated through heedlessness and hardened by ignorance. Yet when the water of life or the wine of Divine Love is poured upon it, it stirs and rises and is revived by the remembrance of God and knowledge of Him (Aj). Similarly, al-Qushayrī sees this verse as a metaphor for the condition of a heart to which God draws near when it is humbled by the awareness of the sins that afflict it and then exhibits the blessings of regret and repentance.

40 Deviate translates yulḥidūn, which literally means "to incline toward" or "to refrain from" (Q) and is here understood to mean altering the words of the Quran and putting them in an improper order (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭs, Z); making clamor and whistling when the Quran is recited (IJ, Ṭs), as in v. 26 (Q); being obstinate (IJ, IK, Q); denying God's signs (IJ, Q); inclining away from belief in them (IJ, Ṭs); or inclining away from the truth and what points to it (Q). Though many attempt to identify one who is cast in the Fire with certain of the Prophet's enemies, especially Abū Jahl, and one who comes in security with the Prophet or one of his Companions (IJ, Q, Ṭs), the meaning of the sentence is also considered more general (IJ, Ṭs). In its immediate context, one who is cast in the Fire is best understood as referring back to those who deviate with regard to Our signs and more broadly to the contrast between the believer and the disbeliever (Ṭs). Do what you will is a threat, meaning that since He sees whatsoever you do (cf. 2:110, 233, 237, 265; 3:156; 8:72; 11:112; 33:9; 48:24; 49:18; 57:4; 60:3; 64:2), all people will be requited for their evil deeds (IK, Q).

whatsoever you do. (41) Truly those who disbelieve in the Reminder when it comes unto them [. . .]. And truly it is a mighty Book. (42) Falsehood comes not upon it from before it or from behind it; a revelation from One Wise, Praised. (43) Naught has been said unto thee save that which has been said unto the messengers before thee. Truly thy Lord is Possessed of Forgiveness and Possessed of a Painful Retribution. (44) Had We made it a Quran in a foreign tongue, they would say, "If only its signs were expounded. What! A foreign tongue and an Arab [messenger]?" Say, "It is a guidance and a healing 41–42 Those who disbelieve in the Reminder are those who disbelieve in the Quran (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭs, Z). The elided phrase indicated by the ellipsis in this verse is understood to be "are punished" (Q, Ṭs), "are destroyed" (Bḍ, Q), "are obstinate" (Bḍ), or "are recompensed for their disbelief" (IJ). It could also be understood as a form of emphasis, in which case the elided phrase would be "disbelieve" (IJ). Others say that the phrase is completed by the last part of v. 44: Such are called from a place far off (IJ, Q, Ṭs).

Mighty renders ʿAzīz, which is also one of the Names of God, meaning Powerful, Overwhelming, and without peer (R). In relation to the Quran, it is understood to indicate that the Quran is protected by God from corruption by Satan or any other being (IJ, IK), that it is honored by God (IJ), and that no one can produce its like (IJ, IK, Ṭs). V. 42 can then be understood as a confirmation that nothing can corrupt the Quran (IJ, IK, Ṭs), as in 15:9: Truly it is We Who have sent down the Reminder, and surely We are its Preserver (R). Alternately, that falsehood comes not upon it from before it indicates that none of the scriptures before it contradicts it, while from behind it, which can also mean "after it," indicates that no revelation will come after it that would contradict or abrogate it (Q, R, Ṭs).

V. 42 also represents one of several responses to the challenges posed by the Quran's detractors in order to convince them of its Divine Origin, as in 18:1: Praise be to God, Who sent down the Book unto His servant, and placed no crookedness therein; and 4:82: Had it been from other than God, they would surely have found much discrepancy therein. Elsewhere the Quran challenges those who disbelieve to produce a single sūrah like it (see 2:23; 10:38) or ten sūrahs like it (11:13), suggesting that they will be unable to do so.

43 In the context of the previous verses, this verse is understood to mean that the message sent to the Prophet is in principle the same as that sent to the prophets before him (IJ, Ṭs), as in 87:18–19, which says of the Quranic teachings, Truly this is in the scriptures of old, the scriptures of Abraham and Moses. Nonetheless, the particular laws with which each prophet is sent are different, as in 5:48: For each among you We have appointed a law and a way. And had God willed, He would have made you one community, but [He willed otherwise], that He might try you in that which He has given you; see the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions."

The most widespread reading of this verse is that the insults and denials that have been hurled at the Prophet are no different from those employed against prophets before him (IJ, IK, Q, R, Ṭs). This reading would fit better with the second half of the verse, meaning that God is then Possessed of Forgiveness for those who repent for what they have said to the messengers, but Possessed of a Painful Retribution for those who do not.

44 In this context, Quran should be understood in accord with its lexical definition, "recitation," meaning, "If We had recited this revelation in a language other than Arabic, people would reject it saying 'What! Not in Arabic and from an Arab!' or 'A foreign book and an Arab prophet!' " (IK, Ṭs), as in 26:198–99: And had We sent it down upon some non-Arab, and he recited it unto them, they would not have believed in it. But they have a revelation in their own language for those who believe; yet those who believe not have a deafness in their ears, and it is a blindness for them. Such are called from a place far off." (45) Indeed, We gave Moses the Book; then difference arose concerning it. And were it not for a Word that had already gone forth from thy Lord, judgment would have been made between them. Yet truly they are confounded by doubt regarding it. (46) Whosoever works righteousness, it is for his own soul. And whosoever commits evil, it is to the detriment thereof. It is not for thy Lord to wrong His servants. (47) Unto Him is knowledge of the Hour referred. No fruits come forth from their sheaths, nor does any female bear or bring forth, save by His Knowledge. And on the Day when He will call unto them, from a person of their own kind and thus have no excuse for rejecting it (see also 14:4). Yet it is still not clear to them, for although they hear the Quran, they are spiritually deaf and thus do not understand (cf. 2:171; 5:71; 6:25, 39; 8:22; 10:42; 17:46; 18:57; 21:45; 31:7; 41:5; 47:23). Thus they are not able to benefit from the "healing" that the revelation is said to contain, as in 17:82: And We send down of the Quran that which is a cure and a mercy for the believers. And it increases the wrongdoers in naught but loss (see also 10:57). That they are called from a place far off means a place far away from their hearts (IK, Ṭ), so that when one addresses them directly, it is as if one is calling them from afar (IK, Ṭs). In this sense they are like cattle (R), as in 25:44: Or do you suppose that most of them hear or understand? Truly they are but as cattle. Nay, they are further astray from the way (see also 7:179c).

45 Cf. 11:110. The example of Moses and the manner in which his people became divided is cited by way of consolation for the Prophet (IJ, Ṭs), as if God is saying to the Prophet, Be patient, as the resolute among the messengers were patient (46:35; IK); see 11:110–11c. If not for a Word that had preceded from thy Lord means that, had God not promised to grant the disbelievers respite until an appointed term, judgment would have been made at the moment that difference arose, and they would have had no opportunity to repent (see 3:19c; 10:19; 42:14). Truly they are confounded by doubt means that their rejection of the Prophet and the Quran does not derive from any form of wisdom or insight; rather, they speak without examining God's Word (IK, Ṭ).

46 Whosoever works righteousness in obedience to God during the life of this world will receive the reward for it in the Hereafter, while whosoever commits evil and is thus disobedient will receive a painful punishment (Ṭ); cf. 45:15. That it is not for thy Lord to wrong His servants (cf. 3:182; 8:51; 22:10; 50:29) reiterates a major theme of the Quran. On the one hand, it means that God will not punish individuals for things they have not done. On the other hand, it means that God will not punish a people unless He has sent them a messenger to remind them (IK). According to the Quran, every human community has been sent a warner (see 16:36), and thus its members will be held accountable for heeding or rejecting the warning; see 67:9c.

47 That knowledge of the Hour, or the end of time, lies only with God is mentioned in several verses (see 7:187; 31:34; 33:63; 43:85; 67:25–26; 79:42–46); thus none save He shall manifest it at its proper time (7:187). This exclusion applies to the Prophet as well, who said to the Archangel Gabriel when asked of the Hour, "The one questioned about it knows no more than the questioner" (IK). The allusion to the exclusivity of such knowledge in this verse can be seen as an answer to one who asks when the rewards and punishments alluded to in v. 46 will come to pass (R). Just as only God knows the ends of all things, so too God alone

"Where are My partners?" they will say, "We admit unto Thee that none among us bears witness." (48) That which they used to call upon before will forsake them, and they will know for certain that they have no refuge. (49) Man wearies not of supplicating for good, and if evil befalls him, he is despondent, despairing. (50) And if We make him taste some mercy from Us after hardship has befallen him, surely he will say, "This is mine; I think not that the Hour will come. If I am returned unto my Lord, surely with Him shall I have that which is most beautiful." So We shall inform those who disbelieved of that which they have done, and We shall cause them to taste of a grave punishment. (51) And when We bless man, he turns away and withdraws. Yet when knows the beginnings of all things, and only He has certain knowledge of future events in this world (cf. 6:59; 13:8; 35:11). Those who admit are either the idolaters, who now profess that none of them bear witness to the partners they had once ascribed to God (IJ, IK, R, Ṭ; cf. 6:23), or the idols and false deities, who now declare that none of them attests to the partnership that the idolaters had attributed to them (IJ, R; cf. 16:86).

48 The partners the disbelievers ascribe to God in this life will forsake them or fail them in the Hereafter (see also 6:22–24, 94; 7:37, 53; 10:30; 11:21; 14:22; 16:86–87; 28:75; 40:73–74c). Upon this realization, the idolaters will say, They have forsaken us. Nay, but we were not calling upon aught before (40:74). Thus they know for certain that those whom they thought they could turn to for help and protection have no power and realize that they themselves have no refuge (cf. 18:53).

49–50 The attitudes of human beings toward God are often conditioned by their relative circumstances rather than by true belief, as in 70:19–21: Truly man was created anxious; when evil befalls him, fretful; and when good befalls him, begrudging (cf. 11:9–10; 17:83; 22:11). Man wearies not of asking God for wealth, health, and other blessings (IJ, IK, Ṭ), meaning there is no amount that will sate them so that they cease asking for more (R). Conversely, there is no end to the despair they feel when afflicted with trials and privations. Although some view v. 49 as a reference to disbelievers (IJ, Ṭ), it can also be understood as a more general reflection upon the frailty of the human condition, in which people vacillate between hope and despair, from one state to the other (R). When individuals of this disposition receive a blessing or mercy from God, they say, This is mine, meaning that it is something they feel they deserve (IJ, IK, R) because God is pleased with them (Ṭ), as when one says, I was only given it because of knowledge (39:49); or else they think that there will be no end to what they will be given (R). Such an attitude reveals that they do not ultimately believe in the Hour, the Judgment, and the Reckoning before God. Believing that they deserve what they have received from God, such individuals also believe that if there is in fact a return to God, they will be among those who are rewarded, just as they were rewarded in this life (IJ, R). But when the Hour does come, God will "inform" them of the true nature of their actions in this life; see also 5:14, 105; 6:60, 108, 159; 9:94, 105; 10:23; 24:64; 29:8; 31:15, 23; 39:7; 58:6–7; 62:8; 64:7; 75:13.

51 Human beings turn away and withdraw because they consider themselves self-sufficient, beyond the need for God, as in 96:6–7: Nay, truly man is rebellious in that he considers himself beyond need. But when misfortune befalls them, they nonetheless take recourse to God. Some understand prolonged supplication to indicate supplication that is long on words but short on meaning (IK), while others understand it to mean that the disbelievers genuinely beseech God (Q, Ṭs), but evil befalls him, he is full of prolonged supplication. (52) Say, "What think you, if it is from God, yet you disbelieve in it? Who is more astray than one in extreme schism?" (53) We shall show them Our signs upon the horizons and within themselves till it becomes clear to them that it is the truth. Does it not suffice that thy Lord is Witness over all things? (54) Behold! They are in doubt regarding the meeting with their Lord. Behold! Truly He encompasses all things.

that they only acknowledge God when afflicted by trial and not when blessed with ease (Q).

52 Cf. 46:10. This command to the Prophet to challenge the people of Makkah regarding their refusal to accept the Quran can be seen as a response to their claims in v. 5: Our hearts are under coverings from that to which you call us, and in our ears there is deafness, and between us and you there is a veil. So do [as you will]; we shall do [as we will] (R). Schism renders shiqāq (also in 2:137, 176; 22:53; 38:2), which conveys a sense of fracture or separation together with a sense of defiance and indicates that they are far from God in both conduct and character (R).

53 This verse is among the most famous of the Quran as it provides a succinct summation of the broad Quranic theme of God's displaying His signs in various ways to reveal the truth and to guide human beings. In the immediate context, many understand Our signs upon the horizons as a reference to the conquering of the lands surrounding Makkah (R) or the various regions to which Islam eventually spread (IJ, Q, Ṭ), and those within themselves, or "among themselves," as a reference to the conquest of Makkah itself (Q, R, Ṭ) or to the Prophet's victory at the Battle of Badr (IJ). Others understand upon the horizons as a reference to God's victories over other peoples, and within themselves as a reference to the defeat of the Makkans at the Battle of Badr (IJ, Q). Alternately, upon the horizons could mean the destruction of other civilizations (Q) or God's withholding rain from the earth (IJ), and within themselves could mean the afflictions and illnesses people experience in their own bodies (IJ, Q). Others say that signs upon the horizons refers to celestial bodies as well as the night and the day and the signs of the created order referred to throughout the Quran, and those within themselves refers to the many phases of human life (Q, R), from conception, through gestation, to birth, maturation, and death, as in 22:5 and 23:13–14, or to the wisdom behind the composition of human beings (Q) and the various natures and inclinations they exhibit (IK). Still others propose that signs upon the horizons refers only to the celestial bodies that are signs in the sky, while the signs within or among themselves refer to the signs upon the earth (IJ, Q).

The antecedent of the pronoun it (hu) in it is the truth is ambiguous and is variously understood as a reference to the Quran (IJ, Q), the religion of Islam (Q), everything to which the Prophet calls the people (IJ), or the true prophethood of Muhammad (Q). Alternately, it could be seen as a reference to an unstated "everything," meaning all of creation, both macrocosmic and microcosmic, or to God, in which case it would be rendered "that He is the Truth." In this regard, Sufis understand this verse as a reference to the Self-Manifestation (ẓuhūr) or Self-Disclosure (tajallī) of God in all things. As the early Sufi Abū Bakr al-Wāsiṭī (d. 320/932) is reported to have said, "He is manifest in everything through that of it which He makes manifest, and His making things manifest is His Own manifestation through them. So if one scrutinizes them, one does not find [anything] other than God" (Su). This cosmological understanding is developed extensively in the school of Ibn ʿArabī, who often cites this verse. In establishing the correspondence between the microcosm, the macrocosm, and the verses of the Quran, he understands Our signs upon the horizons as a reference to everything outside of the human being, thus the entire cosmos, and those within themselves as a reference to all that is within the human being, a microcosm in which are brought together all of the realities of the cosmos. Concerning this reality, Ibn ʿArabī writes, "When we come to understand these two affairs together, we come to know Him and it becomes clear to us that 'He is the Truth'" (Futūḥāt, II 298). From this perspective, does it not suffice that thy Lord is Witness over all things (cf. 4:33; 5:117; 22:17; 33:55; 34:47; 58:6; 85:9) refers to God's bearing witness to His own Self-Disclosure and Self-Manifestation within each existent thing (Futūḥāt, II 151.5). In this sense, the present verse echoes 51:20–21: And upon the earth are signs for those possessing certainty, and within your souls. Do you not then behold?

54 That people doubt the meeting with God refers in general to their denial of Resurrection and Judgment and in other verses is associated with disbelieving or rejecting God's signs; see 10:7; 18:105; 29:23; 30:16. In this vein, the present verse can be seen as a reference to those who are veiled from recognizing the signs on the horizons and within themselves due to the fact that they are veiled from the Creator by that which is created (K). Most understand God's encompassing all things as a reference to God's Power and Knowledge (IK, Q, R), but, seen in light of the other verses, it may refer to God's Knowledge and Mercy, the only two Attributes said to encompass all things, as when the angels say, Our Lord, Thou dost encompass all things in Mercy and Knowledge (40:7; cf. 6:80; 7:89, 156; 20:98; 65:12). Viewed in relation to the interpretation of v. 53 offered by Ibn ʿArabī, God's encompassing all things would refer to the idea that nothing would exist, were it not for His Reality, by which every existent thing is made manifest and then returns unto Him, as in 28:88: All things perish, save His Face; and 55:26–27: All upon it passes away. And there remains the Face of thy Lord, Possessed of Majesty and Bounty (K). As al-Kāshānī writes, "Nothing escapes His Encompassing; otherwise it would not exist, since the true nature of everything is the reality of His Knowledge and His Being through it, and His Knowledge is the reality of His Self (Ḍhāt) and His Self is the reality of His Being. So nothing escapes His Encompassing, since nothing has being, or reality, or self other than Him" (K).

Counsel

al-Shūrā

Al-Shūrā is considered to be a Makkan sūrah revealed directly after the previous sūrah, Fuṣṣilat (JJ), although some maintain that vv. 23–26 are from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ, Ṭs), since they are understood as a reference to the Helpers (Anṣār) of Madinah. Some add v. 27 to the list of Madinan verses when v. 27 is understood as a reference to the poorest members of the nascent Muslim community in Madinah, known as the People of the Veranda (Āl; see 2:273c). Others maintain that vv. 23–24 and vv. 39–41 are from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ) or that only vv. 38–40 are Madinan (Ṭs). Al-Shūrā takes its name from v. 38, which describes their affair being counsel among them as a characteristic of the believers; it is also known by its first two verses, Ḥā Mīm ʿAyn Sīn Qāf (Āl, Ṭs).

The sūrah is framed by references to the continuity of Divine revelations (v. 3 and vv. 51–52), each of which is followed by an assertion of God's Omnipotence (v. 4 and v. 53). The continuity between the teachings of Islam and previous religions is also addressed in v. 7 and vv. 13–15. This discourse culminates in vv. 51–52, which are understood as a reference to the various modes by which God delivers revelation as well as an affirmation that the Prophet has received revelation in the same manner as did previous prophets. In relation to the discussion of revelation, this sūrah emphasizes God's function as the Provider and Sustainer unto Whom belong the keys of the heavens and the earth (v. 12) and Who provides as He wills in accord with His Wisdom (vv. 11–12, 19–20, 26–29, 32–34, 49–50), a characteristic that applies to the bestowal of wealth, offspring, and revelation. Nonetheless, most human beings seek sustenance elsewhere, taking protectors apart from Him (vv. 6, 9), arguing about God (vv. 16–19), disputing the Hour (v. 18), and disputing His signs (v. 35). In this vein, the sūrah outlines the contrast between those who seek the harvest of this world and those who seek the harvest of the Hereafter (v. 20; cf. vv. 22, 36–39) and emphasizes that no one has any protector beyond or apart from God (vv. 8–9, 29, 44, 46).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Ḥā. Mīm. (2) ʿAyn. Sīn. Qāf. (3) Thus does He reveal unto thee and unto those before thee—God, the Mighty, the Wise. (4) Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth, and He is the Exalted, the Magnificent. (5) The heavens are well-nigh rent asunder from above, while the angels hymn the praise of their Lord and seek forgiveness for those on earth. Yea! Truly God is the Forgiving, the Merciful. (6) As for those who take protectors apart from Him, God is Keeper over them, and thou art not a

1 Al-Shūrā is the third in a series of seven sūrahs that open with the Arabic letters ḥāʾ and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm. The letters ḥāʾ and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. For some possible meanings of the letters ḥāʾ and mīm, see 40:1c.

2 This is the only one of the ḥā mīm sūrahs to have additional separated letters. Some say they were added to make this sūrah distinct, since it is the only ḥā mīm sūrah that does not begin with a declaration regarding the Quran; it begins instead with an allusion to what has been revealed to all prophets (Ṭs). Others say that the letters here represent an oath that God takes upon His Names; that they are simply a reference to certain of His Attributes (IJ), with the ʿayn referring to God's Knowledge (ʿilm), the sīn to His Resplendence (sanāʾ), and the qāf to His Power (qudrah; IJ); or that they refer, respectively, to the Divine Names the Mighty (al-ʿAzīz), the Peace (al-Salām), and the Powerful (al-Qādir; IJ). Others propose that ʿAyn Sīn Qāf is a name for the Quran (IJ, Ṭs).

3 Just as God revealed His Words to Muhammad, so too did He reveal them to the prophets before him (IJ, IK, Ṭs). This verse could also refer to the contents of this sūrah as something all prophets have received (IJ, Ṭs) or more generally to God's delivering reports from the realm of the Unseen to all prophets (IJ, Ṭs). The word thus could be understood as a reference to the manner in which God reveals, meaning, "In this way do We reveal unto thee" (IJ), an interpretation that harmonizes well with the final verses of the sūrah (vv. 51–53) which speak of the ways in which God communicates with human beings. When combined with the Name the Mighty, the Divine Name the Wise (al-Ḥakīm) can also be understood to mean "the Determiner" (al-Muḥkim; Ṭs).

4 The first phrase of this verse is repeated throughout the Quran in various iterations (see, e.g., 2:255, 284; 3:109, 129; 4:126, 131–32; 171; 10:68; 22:64; 53:31).

5 That the heavens are well-nigh rent asunder may mean that they are separated from the greatness of what is above them (Ṭs), meaning the angels and the higher heavens, or from the Might and Greatness of God Himself (IJ, IK, Ṭ, Z). Viewed in light of a similar passage—The heavens are well-nigh rent thereby, and the earth split asunder, and the mountains made to come crashing down, that they should claim for the Compassionate a child (19:90–91)—this verse is also interpreted by some to mean that the heavens are nearly rent asunder because of the claim by the idolaters that God has offspring (IJ, Ṭs, Z). The rending asunder of the skies or heavens is referred to in several verses as one of the signs of the end of time: see 25:25; 55:37; 69:16c; 73:18; 82:1; 84:1. Regarding the angels hymning the praises of God and seeking forgiveness for those on the earth, see 40:7c.

6 Regarding those who take protectors apart from God, see also 7:3, 30; 29:41c; 39:3; 45:10. That God is Keeper over the idolaters means that He witnesses them, keeps a full account of their guardian over them. (7) Thus have We revealed unto thee an Arabic Quran, that thou mayest warn the Mother of Cities and those around it, and that thou mayest warn of the Day of Gathering in which there is no doubt. A group shall be in the Garden and a group shall be in the Blaze. (8) Had God willed, He would have made them all one community. But He causes whomsoever He will to enter into His Mercy. And the wrongdoers have no protector and no helper. (9) Or have they taken protectors apart from Him? Yet God, He is the Protector; He gives life to the dead; and He is Powerful over all things. (10) As for deeds, and will requite them in full (IK). That the Prophet is not a guardian over them (cf. 6:66, 107; 10:108; 17:54; 39:41) nor a keeper over them (cf. 4:80; 6:104; 11:86; 42:48) means that he has not been granted the authority to make them believers and that it is not his place to record their deeds (Ṭs), as he has only been sent as a warner (IK, Ṭs). In this respect, there is an aspect of consolation for the Prophet in this verse (Ṭs). That prophets are only responsible for proclaiming the message is emphasized in many passages (see, e.g., 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 29:18; 36:17; 64:12).

7 Similar to v. 3, just as previous prophets were given revelations in the language of their respective peoples, so too was the Prophet Muhammad given revelation in the form of an Arabic Quran (cf. 12:2; 16:103; 20:113; 26:195; 39:28; 41:3; 43:3; Q, Ṭs), which should here be understood in its literal sense as an "Arabic recitation"; see 39:28c. Makkah is the Mother of Cities, a name understood to mean that it is nobler than all other cities (IK). In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have addressed Makkah saying, "By God! Thou art the best land of God, the most beloved land of God. Were it not for the fact that I was driven from thee, I would never have left thee" (IK). Regarding the nobility of Makkah, see commentary on 6:92; 27:91; 90:1–2. The Day of Gathering (cf. 64:9) refers to the Day of Resurrection, when all human beings of all generations and all jinn will be gathered, each community behind its prophet (see 17:71c), on a single open, barren plain for judgment (see, e.g., 3:25; 4:87; 6:128; 18:47; 20:106; 79:14); see also 64:9c.

8 Rather than sending these multiple revelations in various languages, God could have made all human beings one community following one religion and could have gathered them all to guidance (6:35; IJ, Ṭ); see also 2:213c. But God made people into different communities, that He might try them in that which He has given them (5:48); see 5:48c; 11:118–19c; 16:93c. From one perspective, this verse alludes to God's providing various revelations so that people might vie with one another in good deeds (5:48). From another perspective, it could be said that God did not join all people in a single religion and save all from the punishment, since this would have removed the charge of moral and legal responsibility (taklif) that can only be confirmed by also giving human beings choice (Ṭs).

9 This question is posed by way of rebuke (R). That God is the only Protector for human beings is a common Quranic theme (cf. 2:107, 120; 4:123, 173; 9:74, 116; 29:22; 33:18, 65; 42:31; 48:22).

10 Although from a Quranic perspective the true and final judgment in all matters lies with God alone (see 6:57, 62; 12:40, 67), the means by which human beings come to know God's Will and act accordingly are believed to be found in all revelations. The Torah (see 5:43; 45:16) and the Quran (see 13:37) are mentioned specifically, but the fact that messages about God's Judgment of human beings on the basis of whether they have followed His Will are found in the revelations given to all prophets is alluded to in 6:84–89 (see also 21:78–79, which refer to David and Solomon in particular). Thus 4:59 enjoins believers, If you differ among yourselves concerning any matter, refer it to God and the Messenger, if you believe in God and the Last Day; and 5:44 warns, Whosoever judges not by that which God has sent down—it is they who are disbelievers. The present anything wherein you differ, judgment thereof lies with God. That is God, my Lord. In Him do I trust and unto Him do I turn. (11) The Originator of the heavens and the earth, He has appointed for you mates from among yourselves, and has appointed mates also among the cattle. He multiplies you thereby; verse can also be understood as a reference to the Final Judgment, meaning that all people will be recompensed according to what each merits (Ṭs). Seen in this light, it provides assurance that the division between the two groups mentioned at the end of v. 7 will be just and that one should not be disheartened by the apparent injustices of this world, but rather trust in God and turn to Him, since unto God are all matters returned (2:110; 3:109; 8:44; 11:123; 22:76; 35:4; 57:5). Unto Him do I turn renders ilayhi unīb (cf. 11:88; 13:30), which in this context can also be understood to mean, "Unto Him do I return" (IJ) or "Unto Him do I turn in all my affairs" (IK, Ṭs).

11 Originator translates Fāṭir, a Divine Name related to the verb faṭara, meaning to "split" or "cleave." In the Quran, Fāṭir always occurs as part of the phrase Originator of the heavens and the earth (cf. 6:14; 12:101; 14:10; 35:1; 39:46). When the end of the previous verse is understood as an allusion to returning to God, and thus to one's final end, this phrase complements it by alluding to one's beginning. That God appointed or created mates for all human beings is attested in several verses (see 4:1c; 16:72; 35:11; 78:8). Here, as in 16:72 and 35:11, the connection is made between mates and procreation. Elsewhere the emotional, psychological, and spiritual benefits of having mates are emphasized: And among His signs is that He created mates for you from among yourselves, that you might find rest in them, and that He established affection and mercy between you (30:21).

He multiplies you is also understood to mean, "He creates you" or "He sustains you" (IJ, Ṭ), which could be interpreted to mean that God creates human beings by means of human procreation, which occurs through the "pairing" of spouses. He then sustains human beings by providing them with cattle, whose numbers are maintained through analogous means of procreation between animal mates (Ṭ). Thereby renders fīhi, which literally means "in it" or "therein," but is here interpreted to mean bihi, or "through it," meaning He multiplies you through the mates that He appoints (IJ). If understood to mean "He multiplies you in it," "it" is seen as a reference to the wombs in which creatures are generated (IJ), or the pairs from which human beings are generated and sustained (IJ), or the earth, meaning, "He multiplies you in that which He creates from the heavens and the earth" (IJ).

Naught is like unto Him (cf. 112:4) is among the most famous phrases of the Quran, as it provides a succinct and unequivocal assertion of God's complete and utter transcendence (tanzīh). Like unto Him renders ka mithlihi, which literally reads "like His likeness." But the ka is understood by the vast majority of exegetes to be added for emphasis (IJ, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs). Some Sufis maintain that the phrase alludes to both God's Transcendence and His Immanence, or "likeness" (tashbīh). Thus, while they maintain that reading the ka as a particle added for emphasis is valid, they also maintain that the more literal reading—"like unto His likeness"—is valid, in which case the phrase alludes to the manner in which God's creation must be subtly linked to God as His own Self-Manifestation or Self-Disclosure in order for creation to exist, lest there be any form of existence independent of God's Being. In this vein, Ibn ʿArabī observes that God says naught is like unto Him in many different ways. The highest of these ways is that there is nothing in existence that resembles God or is a likeness of God, since existence is nothing but God's own Self-Disclosure. So there is nothing in existence other than Him that might be His "likeness" or opposite (Futūḥāt, II 516.31–32). This reading provides an emphatic statement of God's absolute transcendence in that it affirms not only that there is nothing like unto God, but that there cannot possibly be anything other than Him that is like unto Him or unto His likeness, since there is no existence other than emanations or theophanies of His Being. From this perspective, God's absolute immanence becomes the greatest testimony to His absolute transcendence. Only in this naught is like unto Him, yet He is the Hearer, the Seer. (12) Unto Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth. He outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will. Truly He is Knower of all things. (13) He has prescribed for you as religion that which He enjoined upon Noah, and that which We revealed unto thee, and that which We enjoined upon Abraham, Moses, and Jesus, that you uphold religion and not become divided therein. Grievous for the idolaters is that to which thou callest them. God chooses for Himself whomsoever He will and guides unto Himself whosoever turns in repentance. (14) They did not become divided till after knowledge had come unto them, out of envy among themselves. And were it not for a Word that had preceded from thy Lord unto a term appointed, judgment would have been made between them.

way can one fully explain how it is that God is with you wheresoever you are (57:4) and nearer to human beings than their jugular vein (50:16) and at the same time completely transcendent.

12 For the first phrase, see 39:63c; also see 6:50c. God outspreads provision for whomsoever He will as a test and straitens provision for whomsoever He will as a trial (JJ); cf. 13:6; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:39; 39:52. In the context of this sūrah and especially the next verse, this verse can be seen as an allusion to the "keys to the treasuries" of provision, mercy, and knowledge, which belong only to God and which He provides or withholds as He wills; see 6:59c; 39:63c.

13 The first part of this verse is similar to 4:163–64: Verily We have revealed unto thee, as We revealed unto Noah and the prophets after him, and as We revealed unto Abraham and Ishmael and Isaac and Jacob and the Tribes, and Jesus and Job and Jonah and Aaron and Solomon, and unto David We gave the Psalms, and messengers We have recounted unto thee before, and messengers We have not recounted unto thee; and unto Moses God spoke directly. Regarding the universality of revelation in the Quran, see the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions."

To uphold religion means that to act in accord with it (Ṭ) or to hold fast to it, perform its obligations, remain faithful to it, and call others to it (Ṭs), and to not become divided means to not be like earlier religious communities that divided into sects (Ṭ), but rather to remain united in religion as brothers (Ṭs). In this vein, al-Ṭabarī says that division is destruction and being unified is something upon which one can rely; regarding the importance of brotherhood within the Muslim community, see 49:6–12. The Prophet's call to belief in Divine Unity and sincere devotion to God is grievous for the idolaters both because it undermines their religion and because it arouses jealousy that Muhammad and not someone else was given the revelation (see commentary on 38:5–8; Ṭs), as when they ask, Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns? (43:31).

The antecedent of the pronoun here rendered Himself is not completely clear. The sentence could also be read, "God chooses for it whomsoever He will and guides unto it whomsoever He will," in which case "it" is understood as a reference to religion (Z) or to bearing witness to Divine Unity (tawḥīd; Q). That God guides whosoever turns in repentance (cf. 13:27) evokes the famous ḥadīth qudsī, "If my servant draws nearer to Me by a span, I draw nearer to him by a cubit; and if he draws nearer to Me by a cubit, I draw nearer to him by the span of an outstretched arm; and if he comes to Me walking, I go to him running" (R).

14 In this context, they did not become divided till after knowledge had come unto them is understood as a reference to the disbelievers who had not differed in their opinions regarding the Prophet until after the declaration of his prophethood (Ṭs). They then turned away out of

Yet truly those who were bequeathed the Book after them are indeed confounded by doubt regarding it. (15) Therefore, summon, and stand firm as thou hast been commanded. Follow not their caprices, and say, "I believe in that which God has sent down as a Book, and I have been commanded to establish justice among you. God is our Lord and your Lord. Unto us our deeds, and unto you your deeds; there is no argument between us and you. God will gather us jealousy and greed, as they did not want him to become their leader (Ṭs). In connection with v. 13, al-Ṭabarī understands this verse to be a reference to the people of Noah, who became divided after they became aware of the revelation sent to him (Ṭ). Others understand this verse to be similar to 3:19 and 98:4, which speak of the People of the Book differing among themselves after knowledge or the clear proof had come to them, out of envy of the revelation that had been given to the Prophet Muhammad (IJ); see also 2:213; 3:19c, 105; 10:93; 23:53; 43:63–65; 45:17; 98:4c. In this later context, dividing religion into factions is an error said to have been committed by previous religious communities, an error that Muslims are enjoined to avoid (cf. 6:65, 159; 3:103–5); regarding the nature of envy, see 113:5c.

If not for a word that had preceded from thy Lord means that if God had not promised to grant them respite until an appointed term, judgment would have been made at the moment that difference arose, and they would have had no opportunity to repent (cf. 10:19; 11:110; 41:45; 42:20). When viewed as a reference to the people of Noah, those who were bequeathed the Book is understood to mean those given subsequent revelations who are in doubt regarding the religion that God enjoined upon Noah and revealed to Muhammad and that they have been ordered to uphold (Ṭ). Others understand it to mean those who are in doubt regarding the Quran (Ṭs) and the prophethood of Muhammad (IJ).

15 As rendered, this opening phrase means that, because people are confounded by doubt, the Prophet must call them to the Truth (Ṭs). The phrase can also be read "and unto that, summon," meaning "unto the Quran" (IJ, Ṭ), but it can be understood more broadly as an injunction to summon people to the religion that has been prescribed for them (v. 13) and that was enjoined upon the prophets before them (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs). Then the Prophet is to stand firm by adhering to what God has enjoined and holding fast to it (Ṭs), worshipping as God has commanded (IK), or "holding firm" to the Quran (Q). The antecedent of their in their caprices could be the idolaters (IK), the People of the Book (IJ), or all who doubt what has been revealed to the Prophet (Ṭ). To follow their caprices would then be the opposite of following what God enjoined upon the messengers (see also 2:120, 145; 5:48–49; 6:56, 150; 13:37; 45:18; 2:145c; 45:18c). It is thus the opposite of affirming the underlying unity of revelations, as the Prophet is here commanded to do; see the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions." To establish justice among you means either "to be equitable among you" in spreading the message, calling everyone to the Truth and not being partial to anyone (IJ, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), or "to judge according to the decrees of revelation" (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭs), as when the Prophet is told, Verily We have sent down unto thee the Book in truth, that thou mightest judge between men according to what God has shown thee (4:105).

That each group has its own deeds means that each will receive the reward or recompense commensurate with those deeds (IJ, Ṭ, Ṭs) and bears no responsibility for those of others, as in 10:41: And if they deny thee, say, "Unto me, my deeds, and unto you, your deeds. You are quit of that which I do, and I am quit of that which you do" (cf. 2:139; 28:55). That there is no argument or dispute between the believers and the disbelievers means that, since the truth has appeared, the dispute is settled (Ṭs) or, as implied by the final sentence of the verse, that as God will gather all people together and judge between them, there is no need to dispute the matter, since unto God are all matters returned (2:210; 3:109; 8:44; 11:123; 22:76; 35:4; 57:5).

together and unto Him is the journey's end." (16) As for those who argue about God after having responded to Him, their argument is baseless in the eyes of their Lord. Upon them shall be wrath, and theirs shall be a severe punishment. (17) God it is Who sent down the Book in truth, and the Balance. And what will apprise thee? Perhaps the Hour is nigh? (18) Those who believe not in it seek to hasten it, and those who believe are wary of it and know that it is the truth. Are not those who dispute the Hour far astray? (19) God is kind unto His servants; He provides for whomsoever He will, and He is the Strong, the Mighty.

16 Those who argue about God after having responded to Him are those who argue about religion after people have responded to the revelation sent to Muhammad. Although this verse most likely refers to the Makkan idolaters and their efforts to prevent those who responded to the Prophet's call from following him, some interpret it as a reference to Jews and Christians who argue that their religion is superior because their prophets and scriptures were sent prior to those of Islam (IJ, IK, Ṭs). It may also be seen as a criticism of those who argue, in contrast to the affirmation of the underlying unity of revelations advocated in v. 15, that there is no unity between the message of the Quran and that of the Torah and the Gospel and refuse to accept the validity of Muhammad's prophethood (R).

17 Regarding the sending down of the Quran in truth or "with truth" (cf. 2:176, 213; 3:3; 4:105; 5:48; 6:114; 39:2, 41), see 39:2c. God establishes justice in the world at large by setting the Balance (mīzān) within creation itself (15:19; 55:7; 57:25); He does so among human beings by commanding justice through revelation (4:135; 6:152; 7:29, 85; 11:85; 16:90; 42:17; 57:25) and by weighing deeds on scales (mawāzīn) on the Day of Judgment (see 7:8–9; 21:47; 23:102–3; 101:6–9); see commentary on 57:25, where the Book is also coupled with the Balance. That the Hour may be nigh (cf. 33:63) is understood as an injunction to prepare for it and the judgment that will ensue, as when a man asked the Prophet, "When will the Hour come?" The Prophet responded, "Woe unto you! What have you done to prepare for it?" To which the man replied, "Love for God and His Messenger." The Prophet then said, "You will be with those whom you love" (IK).

18 The disbelievers seek to hasten the Hour and hence the punishment when they mock it, saying, When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25), and, O God, if this be the truth from Thee, rain down stones upon us from the sky, or bring us a painful punishment (8:32); see also 6:57; 10:50–51; 22:47; 26:204–7; 29:53–54c; 37:176–77. In contrast, those who believe seek to prepare for it out of fear of what may befall them.

19 Some scholars consider this verse to be among the most hopeful verses of the Quran (others are 24:22; 33:47; 39:53, 42:22; 93:5). Kind translates laṭīf, which when used in relation to God means that He is Kind, receiving His servants with honor (Ṭs), as well as Righteous and Merciful (R), and that He is Subtle in that He is aware of the most intimate and minute details (Ṭs); hence the repeated reference to God as the Subtle, the Aware (6:103; 22:63; 31:16; 33:34; 67:14). Laṭīf thus conveys both gentleness in action and acuteness in perception. In relation to other Divine Attributes, al-Ghazzālī writes, "He is Wise insofar as He directs things, Generous insofar as He brings them into existence, Fashioner insofar as He gives them order, Just insofar as He puts each thing in its proper place, and Subtle insofar as He does not overlook the intricacies of gentleness regarding them" (Asmā' Allāh al-ḥusnā, 111). Thus it is through the Attribute of kindness and subtlety that God provides for whomsoever He will, since it is by virtue of this Attribute that God knows the precise needs of every created thing and provides for them, as in 11:6: There is no creature that crawls upon the earth, but that its provision lies with God. And He knows its dwelling place and its repository.

(20) Whosoever desires the harvest of the Hereafter, We shall increase for him his harvest. And whosoever desires the harvest of this world, We shall give him some thereof, but he will have no share in the Hereafter. (21) Or have they partners who have prescribed for them as religion that which God did not permit? Were it not for the Word of Division, judgment would have been made between them. And truly the wrongdoers shall have a painful punishment. (22) Thou seest the wrongdoers wary of that which they have earned; for it will fall upon them. And those who believe and perform righteous deeds shall be in flowering meadows of the Gardens. With their Lord they shall have whatsoever they will.

20 This verse is similar to several passages contrasting those who desire the fruits of the Hereafter with those who desire the fruits of this world; see 3:145, 152; 4:134; 17:18–19; 18:28; 28:79–80. In 2:86 there is also a warning for those who have purchased the world at the price of the Hereafter. To desire the harvest of the Hereafter means to work for its sake (IK, Ṭs). God will increase their reward tenfold or even seven hundred fold (IK), as in 2:261: The parable of those who spend their wealth in the way of God is that of a grain that grows seven ears, in every ear a hundred grains. In contrast, whoever strives only for worldly gains may or may not receive benefits in this world, but will receive none in the Hereafter; see 102:1c. In this vein, the Prophet said of the Muslim community, "Whosoever among them performs the deeds of the Hereafter for the sake of this world will have no portion in the Hereafter" (IK).

Several Sufi commentaries add that for those who work for God out of love for him, not desiring recompense, all things other than God will be diminished in their eyes and they will not seek the harvest of this world or of the Hereafter; rather, they will seek God alone (Aj, Bq, Su).

21 This question asks, "Do they have gods who have created another religion for them that God did not prescribe for them?" (IJ); see also 10:34–35, and "Do they follow what the satans among human beings and jinn have prescribed, such as the contrived rulings and superstitious customs practiced in pre-Islamic Arabia?" In this regard, see 5:103–4, which criticizes the custom of making certain kinds of camels sacred; see also 6:136–39, 143–45; 10:59. Division translates faṣl, which denotes making one of two things clear from the other (Iṣ). The Word of Division refers to the Divine Judgment, which divides the believers and the disbelievers and makes truth distinct from falsehood. In this same vein, the Day of Judgment is referred to as the Day of Division (37:21; 44:40; 77:13, 38; 78:17). In this context Word of Division indicates that, had God not already decreed that the division between the believers and disbelievers would take place on the Day of the Resurrection, those who make the innovations alluded to in the first part of the verse would already have been judged (cf. 10:19; 11:110; 41:45; 42:14). Faṣl can also be understood to mean "decisive," as in 86:13, where the decree of the Day of Judgment is referred to as a decisive Word (qawl faṣl).

22 When everyone is gathered on the plain of Resurrection (see 17:71c; 18:47; 79:14c), the wrongdoers will be wary of the recompense they will receive for the deeds they committed in this world (IK, Ṭ). In contrast, the believers were wary in this world (see v. 18) and therefore performed righteous deeds for which they will be rewarded with meadows in the Hereafter. Meadows renders rawḍāt, the plural of rawḍah, a word meaning a place in which vegetation is plentiful (Ṭ), and is used to designate the most pleasing part of a garden (R). Some read this verse to mean that even the iniquitous among those who performed their prayers will be in the Garden, while those who performed righteous deeds will be in a specially designated part of Paradise (R). Some also understand being in meadows of the

That is the great bounty. (23) This is that whereof God gives glad tidings to His servants, those who believe and perform righteous deeds. Say, "I ask not of you any reward for it, save affection among kinsfolk." And whosoever accomplishes a good deed, We shall increase him in goodness thereby. Truly God is Forgiving, Thankful. (24) Or do they say, "He has fabricated a lie against God?" If God willed, He would put a seal upon thy heart. God wipes out falsehood and Gardens as a figurative reference to the happiness and blessings they enjoy (Ṭ). That they shall have whatsoever they will (cf. 16:31; 25:16; 39:34; 50:35) refers to the many bounties of Paradise being already prepared for them (R); see also 52:22; 56:21; 77:41–44.

23 This refers to what was said regarding the Gardens in the previous verse (IJ) or to the great bounty (Ṭs). No prophet seeks personal gain from the transmission of revelation. Thus the Prophet is enjoined, Say, "I ask not of you any reward for it. It is naught but a reminder for the worlds" (6:90; cf. 25:57; 38:86) and the prophets Noah (26:109), Hūd (11:51; 26:127), Ṣāliḥ (26:145), Lot (26:164), and Shuʿayb (26:180) all say to their respective communities, I ask not of you any reward for it. Elsewhere the Prophet states that he only delivers the message so that whosoever will may take a way unto his Lord (25:57), but here he enjoins affection among kinsfolk; that is, he is asking the Makkans to honor and uphold the ties of kinship that he had with them (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭū), as nearly all of the Makkans were related by virtue of being members of the same tribe, the Quraysh. In this vein, Ibn ʿAbbās said, "There was not a single house [i.e., subtribe] of the Quraysh, but that it had kinship with the Prophet, and so [42:23] was revealed in this regard, and its interpretation is, 'O Quraysh! You should keep good relations between me and you'" (IK, Ṭ). Others say that the call to affection among kinsfolk is an appeal to follow the Prophet's kin (Aj, IJ, Qm, Ṭ, Ṭs), specifically his cousin and son-in-law ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib and his daughter Fāṭimah and their descendants (Aj, IJ, Q), though al-Ṭabarī argues that it would need to be phrased "affection for kinsfolk" (mawaddat al-qurbā) for this meaning to obtain. Ibn ʿAjībah, however, maintains that the manner in which it is phrased provides a more emphatic injunction to love the Prophet's kinsfolk. Still others understand the phrase to mean that one should love the Prophet as one loves one's own kinsfolk (IJ) or that one should love one's kinsfolk and maintain relations with them (IJ, Ṭ). Kinsfolk renders qurbā, which derives from a root (q-r-b) that indicates nearness and approach. Thus some suggest this verse means "love through nearness" and that it enjoins love for God and drawing near to Him through pious deeds (Aj, IJ, Q, Ṭ, Ṭū).

For increase in goodness, cf. 10:26: Unto those who are virtuous shall be that which is most beautiful and more besides (see also 2:245, 261; 4:40; 6:160; 64:17; 10:26–27c; 55:60c). That God is Forgiving, Thankful (cf. 35:30, 34) indicates that He forgives bad deeds and accepts good ones.

24 Regarding the charge that the Prophet fabricated the revelation, see 10:38: Or do they say, "He has fabricated it"? Say, "Then bring a sūrah like it, and call upon whomsoever you can apart from God, if you are truthful" (cf. 11:13, 35; 32:3; 46:8; 52:33). That God would put a seal upon thy heart indicates either that God would fortify the Prophet's heart with patience to endure the insults hurled against him (JJ) or that He would not allow the Prophet's heart to continue to understand the revelation, had the Prophet added anything to it, since God would then cause him to forget what He had already revealed (IJ, IK, Ṭ). This latter interpretation is more in line with the use of "sealing," "veiling," and "covering" hearts that is employed throughout the Quran to indicate the condition in which people are closed to spiritual comprehension (see 2:7c; 6:25, 46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 17:46; 18:57, 101; 30:59; 41:5; 45:23; 47:16; 63:3; 83:14–15). In this sense, this verse is similar to 69:44–47: Had he ascribed any statements to Us, We would have taken him by the right hand. And then We would verifies the truth through His Words. Truly He knows what lies within breasts. (25) He it is Who accepts repentance from His servants and pardons evil deeds. And He knows whatsoever you do. (26) He responds to those who believe and perform righteous deeds, and will increase them from His Bounty. Yet as for the disbelievers, theirs shall be a severe punishment. (27) Had God outspread His provision for His servants, they would have behaved tyrannically upon the have severed his life vein. And none among you could have shielded him from it.

God wipes out falsehood by means of the truth, as in 17:81: Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Truly falsehood is ever vanishing; and 21:18: Nay, but We cast truth against falsehood, and it crushes it, and, behold, it vanishes. Then God verifies the truth (cf. 10:82) through revelation. The idea that God knows what lies within breasts (3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13) is usually a general statement regarding all human beings, but in this context it also implies that, were the Prophet's own soul to suggest that he fabricate a lie against God, God would seal his heart, since He eradicates falsehood and verifies the truth (Ṭ). In this sense, this verse provides an unequivocal rejection of the charge that the Prophet could have fabricated the Quran or any part of it.

25 Although repentance is enjoined throughout the Quran, this is one of two verses to state that God accepts repentance (see also 9:104; cf. 20:82). In 40:3 God is referred to as Accepter of Repentance. In this vein, the Prophet said, "God rejoices more emphatically over the repentance of His servant than one of you who finds his stray camel in a place where he had feared that thirst would slay him" (IK). The extent of God's Forgiveness toward those who repent was expressed by ʿAbd Allāh ibn Masʿūd, who recited this verse when asked about a man who fornicates with a woman and then marries her (IK). God then pardons past sins for those who repent (Ṭ). Nonetheless, such repentance must be sincere, for truly those who disbelieve after having believed, then increase in disbelief, their repentance shall not be accepted, and they are the ones astray (3:90); And repentance is not accepted from those who do evil deeds till, when death confronts one of them, he says, "Truly, now I repent," nor from those who die as disbelievers (4:18).

26 God answers the supplications of those who believe and perform righteous deeds (Bg, IK, Ṭ) and rewards them (Bg), and He will increase them by granting them even more than what they requested (Ṭ). Some understand this verse to mean that God allows them to intercede for their companions; the increase then means that they can intercede for the companions of their companions (Bg, IK, Q, Ṭ). Alternately, those who could be understood as the subject of this sentence, meaning that those who believe and perform righteous deeds respond to their Lord when He calls them to faith and obedience (Ṭ), and in return He grants them increase.

27 In relation to v. 26, this verse emphasizes that one's focus should be upon increase in the Hereafter rather than in this world. It can thus be seen as clarifying what is meant by We shall increase him in goodness in v. 23. This verse is reported to have been revealed regarding some of the poor and destitute among the early believers who desired the wealth and ease of this world (Ṭ). Some say that it pertained specifically to the homeless emigrants known as the "People of the Veranda" (Ṭ), who may have looked with desire upon the wealth of other tribes in Madinah (Bg, Q). The verse suggests that, were God to have increased the provision He had destined for some people, they would transgress the limits set by God (Ṭ) by being tyrannical and acting disobediently toward Him (Q). They would seek one abode, then another, one mount and then another, one outfit and then another (Q), meaning that, were God to give them much wealth, they would only seek more, as stated in a famous ḥadīth, "If the son of Adam had a valley of gold, he would wish that he had two valleys" (Q). Rather, God gives provision earth. But He sends down whatsoever He will according to a measure. Verily of His servants He is Aware, Seeing. (28) He it is Who sends down the rain after they have despaired and spreads forth His Mercy. And He is the Protector, the Praised. (29) And among His signs is the creation of the heavens and the earth and all moving creatures that He has scattered therein, and He is able to gather them together whensoever He will. (30) Whatsoever misfortune befalls you is because of that which your hands have earned; and He pardons much. (31) You thwart not on earth, and you have no protector or helper apart from God. (32) Among His signs are the ships upon the sea like mountains; (33) if He so wills, He stills the wind, and they lie motionless upon its surface. Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful. (34) Or He causes them to perish for according to what He knows to be in the best interest of His servants (IK) and what suffices them (Q). In this regard, Islamic scholars note that God knows best the state of His servants and when increasing their provision will lead to corruption. Thus reduction of provision is not abasement and increase in provision is not necessarily a sign of Divine Favor (Q), as in a ḥadīth qudsī, "Among My believing servants are those for whom nothing but wealth will make them righteous; were I to make them poor, poverty would corrupt them. And among My believing servants are those for whom nothing but poverty will make them righteous; were I to make them wealthy, wealth would corrupt them. Verily, I arrange for My servants according to My Knowledge of their hearts; for truly I am Knowing, Aware" (Q).

28 When people have given up hope that rain will fall, God sends it upon them at their time of need (cf. 30:49; 41:39) and bestows it upon all who are in that region (IK). From a spiritual perspective, "God sends the rain of Divine inspirations down upon dead hearts such that they are revived through remembrance [of God] and knowledge, after they have despaired" (Aj).

29 This is one of many verses to cite, as a sign of Divine Omnipotence, God's creation of all that exists (IK) and His ability to resurrect the dead (Ṭ); see 2:165; 3:190–91; 30:20–26; 56:57–73. Moving creatures refers to human beings and angels (Q, Ṭ); or to human beings, angels, jinn, and all the various kinds of animals that God has distributed throughout the earth (IK); or just to all animals (Ṭs). Just as He created them the first time, He is able to gather them all together on the Day of Resurrection (IK, Ṭ).

30–31 Here misfortune is understood as a general reference to all afflictions that may befall human beings (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs), similar to 4:79: Whatever good befalls thee, it is from God, and whatever evil befalls thee, it is from thyself. It may also be a specific reference to the punishments for violations of Islamic Law (Q, Ṭs). In this sense, the small afflictions one bears are seen as alleviating the burden of sins for which one would have to pay a greater price in the Hereafter, as stated in a ḥadīth, "No believer is afflicted with fatigue, exhaustion, anxiety, or sorrow but that God absolves him of some of his sins thereby—even the prick of a thorn" (IK, Ṭ). But should God desire to punish someone, there is nothing anyone can do to thwart it (IJ); this is a recurring Quranic theme: see 8:59; 9:2–3; 11:20; 24:57; 29:22; 35:44; 46:32; 72:12. That no one has any protector or helper apart from God and that God is the only Protector for human beings is also reiterated in several verses throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 2:107, 120; 4:123, 173; 9:74, 116; 11:20, 113; 29:22; 33:17–18, 65; 42:8–9; 48:22).

32–34 That God subjugates the sea and allows ships to travel upon it without hindering their travel by withholding the wind or causing that which they have earned—and He pardons much—(35) and so that those who dispute concerning Our signs will know that they have no refuge. (36) Whatsoever you have been given, it is the enjoyment of the life of this world, and that which lies with God is better and more lasting for those who believe and trust in their Lord, (37) who shun grave sins and indecencies and who, when they are angry, they forgive, (38) who respond to their Lord and perform the travelers to perish by sending too much wind is here invoked as a sign of His Mercy toward human beings (see also 2:164c; 14:32; 17:66; 23:21–22; 30:46; 31:31; 35:12; 40:80; 43:12; 45:12; 55:24). In these verses, the ships also indicate the frailty of the human condition, and the metaphor relates to the manner in which God bestows and withholds provision in accord with what He knows is best for each individual (IK), as in vv. 27–28. Those who are patient when affliction befalls them, which could be seen as the times of too much or too little wind, and who are thankful when able to travel with ease, benefit from reflecting upon these signs. As in v. 30, people only perish and are punished because of their own iniquities, since God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44; see also 27:90; 36:54; 37:39; 52:16; 66:7). For more on the symbolism of seafaring as it pertains to the spiritual life, see 30:46c.

35 The disbelievers know that they have no refuge when the water overcomes them and they drown (IJ), or after the Resurrection they know that there is no escape from the punishment (Aj, IJ, Ṭ).

36 Cf. 28:60. Enjoyment of the life of this world indicates the ephemeral delights of this world, which are naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20). They stand in stark contrast to the rewards of the next life (see 3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 40:39; 43:35), which are more lasting; see 29:64c.

37 Grave sins refers to transgressions such as idolatry, murder, and usury, though there is no agreement on a single definition; see 4:31c, where they are compared with minor evil deeds (sayyi'āt). Indecencies translates fawāḥish (sing. fāḥishah), which may refer specifically to sexual transgressions (IJ, Ṭ; see 4:15c; 4:22c) or more broadly to transgressing the limits set by God (IJ). Other verses specify that one must avoid sin or indecency, both outward and inward (see 6:120c; 6:151–52c); for more on the various categories of sins, see 4:31c; 7:33c. To forgive when angry implies also controlling one's rage, as in 3:134, which extols those who curb their rage, and pardon others. Regarding the virtue of restraining one's anger, the Prophet said, "A strong person is not one who throws his adversaries to the ground. A strong person is one who contains himself when he is angry." He also advised, "Anger comes from the Devil; the Devil was created of fire, and fire is extinguished only with water; so when one of you becomes angry, he should perform ablution." In this regard, ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, "Anger is a ball of fire, but when you swallow it, it is sweeter than honey."

38 Those who respond to their Lord are those who testify to God's Oneness (Ṭ), fulfill the dictates of religion (Ṭs), and establish the prayer in the manner prescribed at the designated times (Ṭ, Ṭs) or those in whose hearts there is no dispute with any of God's Commands (R). In this sense, they stand in direct contrast to those who dispute concerning Our signs (v. 35). The reference to counsel is understood as an allusion to the Helpers (Anṣār) of Madinah who responded with faith to the call from the Prophet and sought counsel with one another before embracing Islam (Q, Ṭs). It also invokes a general principle, as it is said that if people seek counsel with one another, they will be guided to sound judgment (Q, R, Ṭs). From another perspective, those whose affair is counsel among them refers to those who refer all matters back to the religion, as in 4:83: And whenever tidings come unto them, whether of security or fear, they spread it about, whereas had they referred it to the Messenger and to those in authority among them, those of them whose task it is to investigate would have known it (Qm).

prayer, their affair being counsel among them, who spend from that which We have provided them, (39) and who, when tyranny befalls them, they defend themselves. (40) The recompense of an evil is an evil like unto it. Yet whosoever pardons and sets matters aright, his reward is with God. Truly He loves not the wrongdoers. (41) And whosoever defends himself after having been wronged, for such there is no way against them. (42) There is only a way against those who wrong people and behave tyrannically upon the earth without right. For them,

In 3:159, the Prophet is also instructed to consult them in affairs, that is, to seek the opinion of his Companions, especially in governance and military questions, but not in questions pertaining to Divine Decrees, since the Prophet has direct guidance from God for such matters (Q). But after the death of the Prophet, the Companions would seek counsel from one another in seeking to understand the Divine Decrees and finding the means of extracting them from the Quran and the teachings of the Prophet (Q). Regarding the importance of counsel in governing the affairs of the community, the Prophet is reported to have said, "If your leaders are the best of you and your wealthy are the magnanimous among you and your affair is counsel among you, the outside of the earth will be better for you than its inside" (Q).

Regarding those who spend from that which We have provided them, see 2:3c; 8:3; 13:22; 28:54; 32:16.

39 When tyranny befalls them (Q, Ṭ) refers to the idolaters' expulsion of the Muslims from Makkah (Q), after which they were granted permission to defend themselves, as in 22:39–40: Permission is granted to those who are fought, because they have been wronged—and truly God is able to help them—who were expelled from their homes without right, only for saying, "Our Lord is God" (Q). The present verse establishes a general principle that no one should submit to the tyranny of an oppressor and thus reaffirms the Quranic injunction to enjoin right and forbid wrong (see 3:104c; Q).

40 If understood as a general statement, this verse alludes to the Quranic dictum that people are only punished for their bad deeds in a measure that is equal to the sins they have committed, but that they are rewarded tenfold or greater for good deeds; see 6:160c; 28:84; 40:40c. In the present context, it refers to the bounds within which justice can be pursued when defending against those who are tyrannical or when seeking retribution after an offense; see the essay "Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran." According to some, evil here refers to physical harm, cursing another, or insulting another (Bg). With regard to seeking retribution for the sins or misdeeds of individuals, if the offender is an inveterate wrongdoer who engages in immoral acts publicly and shamelessly while bringing harm to society, then seeking retribution is preferable, as in v. 39. If, however, the insult or crime is a minor slip and the wrongdoer acknowledges the error and seeks forgiveness, then pardoning is preferable, as in 24:22: And let them pardon and forbear. Do you not desire that God forgive you? (IA, Q). In this sense, this passage gives permission for self-defense or seeking retribution when wronged, but does not enjoin them, as alluded to by the praise given to those who are patient and forgive in v. 43 after permission to seek retribution is granted in v. 41 (Q). From another perspective, v. 39 is general, enjoining Muslims to defend one another in the face of oppression, while v. 40 applies to particular instances when a person is allowed to seek retribution for an offense, which is then limited in scope and degree to the like of the offense (see 2:190–94c; 5:45c; 16:126), or when a person chooses to pardon and forgive (Ṭs).

41–42 In this context, a way against means "blame upon" (IK) or a means of recourse against someone. Although pardoning and forgiveness may be preferred, there is still no blame upon one who seeks retribution (IK); see 5:45c. There is only blame upon one who transgresses the rights of an-there shall be a painful punishment. (43) And whosoever is patient and forgives, that is indeed a course worthy of resolve. (44) And whomsoever God leads astray has no protector beyond Him. Thou shalt see the wrongdoers, when they see the punishment, saying, "Is there any way of return?" (45) And thou shalt see them exposed to it, diminished through abasement, looking furtively. And those who believe will say, "Truly the losers are those who have lost themselves and their families on the Day of Resurrection." Behold! Truly, the wrongdoers are in lasting punishment. (46) They have no protectors to help them apart from God. And whomsoever God leads astray, no way has he. (47) Respond to your Lord before there comes a day from God that none can repel. You will have no other or seeks retribution greater than the initial offense, as stated in a ḥadīth: "When two people insult one another, the one who began it is at fault, so long as the one who is wronged does not transgress" (IK). One is also prevented from seeking retribution after having already made amends; see 2:178c.

43 Whoever bears an injury or insult with patience and conceals the evil deeds of others (IK) has chosen a course worthy of resolve (cf. 3:186; 31:17), a course for which there is much reward and great praise (IK). Regarding the virtue of patience, see 11:11c.

44 For those whom God leads astray the Quran says, there is no way (4:88, 143; 42:46), no guide (7:186; 13:33; 39:23, 36; 40:33), and no protector (18:17). Hence on the Day of Judgment, their fate is sealed, and there is no one upon whom they can call in seeking to return to this world and make amends (Bg). They are denied such requests because even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28); see 32:12c; 35:37c.

45 What the wrongdoers will be exposed to is the Fire; they will lower their eyes because of their abasement and steal glances at the Fire because of their fear of it (Bg, IK). Looking furtively could also be understood to mean "looking with veiled eyes," implying that they look with their hearts since they have been resurrected blind (Ṭ, Z), as in 17:72: And whosoever was blind in this [life] will be blind in the Hereafter, and further astray from the way. Such people have lost themselves by virtue of coming to dwell in the Fire and lost their families because, if they themselves are in the Fire, they can be of no benefit to their family members; yet if their family members are in the Garden, they are given others in the place of those family members who are in the Fire (Q). That the wrongdoers are in lasting punishment is understood to mean that the punishment is perpetual and there is no possibility of escaping it (IK). But interpreting this verse in light of 2:254, The disbelievers, they are the wrongdoers, al-Rāzī argues that this reference applies only to those who are "absolute wrongdoers," that is, the disbelievers. This interpretation, he maintains, is supported by v. 46 when it is understood to mean that the idols they had worshipped will not be able to intercede for them.

46 Regarding protectors . . . apart from God, see 29:41c. That those who are led astray by God have no way means that they have no path to the truth or path toward God (Ṭ). It also indicates that God is the only guide (R) and that guiding and leading astray lie in His Hands alone (Ṭ). For those whom God leads astray, see 42:44c.

47 Respond to your Lord is understood to mean, "Respond to the one who calls you to your Lord, believe in him, and follow him" (Bg, Ṭ), that is, the Prophet Muhammad (Bg), or "Respond to that which calls you to Him, such as faith and obedience" (Q). Responding to God is also understood to mean maintaining the covenant with God (see 7:172c) and observing His due (Qu). The Day of Judgment is referred to as a day that none can repel (cf. 13:11; 30:43) or avert, because once refuge that Day; nor shall you have any denial. (48) And if they turn away, We sent thee not as a keeper over them. Naught is incumbent upon thee, save the proclamation. Truly when We cause man to taste mercy from Us, he rejoices in it. Yet if an evil befalls them because of that which their hands have sent forth, truly man is ungrateful. (49) Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth; He creates whatsoever He will, bestowing females upon whomsoever He will, and bestowing males upon whomsoever He will, (50) or He couples males and females and causes whomsoever He will to be barren. Truly He is Knowing, Powerful. (51) It is not for any human being that God should speak unto him, save by revelation, or from behind a veil, or that He should send a the Divine Command has been decreed, God will no longer grant reprieve (Q). Therefore, after the Decree has been made, there is no opportunity for repentance and atonement, as expressed in 75:10–12: That Day man will say, "Where is the escape?" Nay! But there shall be no refuge. Unto your Lord that Day is the dwelling place. Unable to deny the reality of their condition, those who had been profligate or who had disbelieved will no longer be able to deny their iniquity and will admit their sins, as in 67:10–11: They say, "Had we listened or had we understood, we would not be among the inhabitants of the Blaze." Thus do they admit their sin; so away with the inhabitants of the Blaze! (cf. 40:11; 41:47). A day from God that none can repel can also be understood as a reference to the moment of death, in which case this verse also implies that the door of response and thus repentance is open until that time.

48 The Prophet is not the keeper over those to whom he delivers the message (cf. 4:80; 11:86); nor is he their guardian (6:66, 107; 10:108; 17:54; 39:41; 42:6; also see 25:43), since prophets are only responsible for proclaiming the message with which they have been sent; see also 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 29:18; 36:17; 64:12. Regarding the last two sentences of this verse, see 30:36c. The judgment wrongdoers receive in the next life is the result of that which their hands have sent forth (2:95; 4:62; 28:47–48; 62:7; see also 5:80; 18:57; 36:12; 78:40), meaning the deeds they have committed. Likewise, much of the evil that befalls them in this life results from their own actions. In this context, ungrateful renders kafūr, which derives from the root k-f-r, indicating "covering over," a root from which the Quranic words for "disbelief" (kufr) and "disbeliever" (kāfir) also derive.

49–50 In the context of the various kinds of offspring mentioned here, that unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth (2:107; 3:189; 5:17, 18, 40, 120; 9:116; 24:42; 45:27; 48:14) and that He creates whatsoever He will (cf. 5:17; 24:45; 30:54) indicate that offspring come as a blessing willed by God and are not due to the particular merits of the parents to whom children are born (R). The mention of the different ways in which God grants offspring to people—only daughters, only sons, a mixture of the two, or no children at all—is in part a response to the pre-Islamic belief that daughters were a burden or trial, as expressed in 16:58–59: And when one of them receives tidings of a female [child], his face darkens, and he is choked with anguish. He hides from the people on account of the evil of the tidings he has been given. Shall he keep it in humiliation, or bury it in the dust? Behold! Evil indeed is the judgment they make!

51 This verse is understood to refer to the various modes in which God delivers revelation to prophets (IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Z). Save by revelation is interpreted as a reference to a revelation that is cast into the breast or heart of a prophet, a means by which some say the Psalms were revealed to messenger in order to reveal what He will by His Leave. Truly He is Exalted, Wise. (52) Thus have We revealed unto thee a Spirit from Our Command. Thou knewest not what scripture was, nor faith. But We made it a light whereby We guide whomsoever We will among Our servants. Truly thou dost guide unto a straight path, (53) the path of God, unto Whom belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. Behold! All affairs are journeying unto God.

David (R, Z), or to revelation that comes in a dream, as when Abraham saw that he was to sacrifice his son (see 37:102c; Q, R, Z). From behind a veil is then interpreted as a reference to the moments when prophets hear the Speech of God directly with no intermediary, but do not see God, as when God spoke to Moses on Mt. Sinai but did not grant him the vision of Himself (IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Z), and when God spoke to the Prophet Muhammad during the Night Journey, as in 53:10: Then He revealed to His servant what He revealed (see also 17:1c). That God should send a messenger in order to reveal then refers to the moments when prophets receive revelation through the intermediary of an angel (IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Z), as when the Prophet Muhammad received the first revelation through the agency of the Archangel Gabriel; see the introduction to Sūrah 96. That God should send a messenger can also be understood as a general reference to God sending various prophets to human beings (Z).

Mullā Ṣadrā sees these three modes of Divine Speech as allusions to the manner in which God pours knowledge upon the human heart through revelation or inspiration or by means of messengers and teachers (al-Mabdaʾ waʾl-maʿād, 609). A message that comes by means of revelation and inspiration is whole, without fragmentation, whereas one that comes through other means can be disjointed. The only receptacle for sheer unfragmented knowledge is the pure human heart. In this vein, Mullā Ṣadrā writes, "When God becomes the master of the heart, Mercy pours forth and light shines upon it, the breast is expanded, the secrets of Divine Sovereignty (malakūt) are unveiled to it, and the greatest veil is removed from the face of the heart through the benevolence of Mercy, and the realities of Divine Affairs illumine it" (al-Mabdaʾ waʾl-maʿād, 609).

52–53 Thus have We revealed unto thee indicates that the Prophet Muhammad received revelation as did the prophets before him (Q, Ṭū) or that he received revelation in all three modes mentioned in the previous verse (Ṭb). In the context of the previous verse, a Spirit from Our Command can here be understood as a reference to the Quran (IK, Q, R, Ṭb, Ṭū), which is referred to as a Spirit because it brings life forth from the death of ignorance and disbelief (Q, R) and revives hearts with guidance (Ṭb). Others see a Spirit as a reference to prophethood (Q); the Archangel Gabriel (Q, Ṭb), who is also known as the Holy Spirit, by which revelation is said to have been brought down (see 16:102c); or the capacity for understanding that God grants to those to whom He grants knowledge (Ka). Scripture renders kitāb, which is usually translated "book," but is rendered here as scripture, since in this context it could refer to revelation in general or to the Quran in particular (R).

A light refers to the Quran (IK, Ṭb) or to the Quran and faith (R). Light is frequently associated with the guidance that comes through the prophets and revelation (see 6:91; 7:157; 21:48; 57:9, 28; 64:8), and in 9:32–33 and 61:8–9 the Quran mentions those who would try to extinguish the Light of God, which, in its context, could be read to mean those who attempt to conceal Divine Revelation. That God guides whomsoever He will with it is similar to 41:44, which enjoins the Prophet to say of the Quran, It is a guidance and a healing for those who believe. In the present verse, the antecedent of it in We made it a light is understood by some commentators to be a Spirit from Our Command (Ṭb). From a Shiite perspective, it is seen as a reference to the Holy Spirit, which is said to have been with the Prophet and the Imams, supporting them and protecting them from sin and error (Qm). A light is then interpreted as a reference to the first Imam, ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib (Ka, Qm). In this sense, some commentators connect this verse to 21:73: And We made them leaders, guiding according to Our Command. And We revealed unto them the doing of good deeds, the performance of prayer, and the giving of alms. And they were worshippers of Us.

Regarding a straight path, see 1:6c. Although God is said to be the only guide, the Prophet is a guide insofar as he is the messenger appointed to call a particular people to God and therefore to function as a means of Divine Guidance, as in 13:7: For every people there is a guide (Ṭ). In this sense, he guides people insofar as he assists them in following the message that God has revealed through him; see 28:56: Surely thou dost not guide whomsoever thou lovest, but God guides whomsoever He will. And He knows best those who are rightly guided. According to some Shiite commentators, this phrase means that the Prophet guides people to believe in the walāyah/wilāyah, or sanctified authority, that God has bestowed upon the Prophet and upon ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib and the subsequent Imams (Ka, Qm).

That all affairs are journeying unto God (cf. 2:210; 3:109; 8:44; 22:76; 35:4; 57:5) alludes to the Resurrection, when all human affairs will be brought before God in the Hereafter and He will judge between the people with justice (Ṭ), and to the fact that there is no judge other than God (R).

Gold Ornaments

al-Zukhruf

Al-Zukhruf is a Makkan sūrah, believed to have been revealed directly after Sūrah 42, al-Shūrā, although some maintain that v. 45 is from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ). It takes its name from the mention of gold ornaments in v. 35. Some propose that in discussing the nature of the Quran and the Mother of the Book in the first verses, this sūrah follows directly upon a statement from the end of the previous sūrah: Thou knewest not what scripture was, nor faith. But We made it a light whereby We guide whomsoever We will among Our servants (42:52; Aj).

After opening with a brief discussion of revelation (vv. 2–5), the sūrah cites the fate of previous communities who rejected the prophets sent to them (vv. 6–8) and challenges the worldview of the Makkan idolaters (vv. 9–35). The first half of the sūrah responds to different objections that the Makkan idolaters are reported to have posed to the message of the Quran and in doing so addresses several forms of disbelief, such as assigning partners to God (vv. 15), claiming that the angels are God's female offspring (v. 19), saying that God willed for them to worship the angels (v. 20), claiming that the Quran should have been revealed to someone who was already of high social standing (v. 31), and likening the place of deities in their religion to the place of Jesus in Christianity (vv. 57–58).

A major theme of al-Zukhruf is the incorrect ways in which human beings seek to measure truth, such as claiming to follow the tradition of one's forefathers (vv. 22–25) and seeing the wealth of this world as an indicator of one's true station (vv. 31–36). Regarding the former claim, Abraham is cited as an example of someone who opposed his people's attachment to their forefathers (vv. 26–28); for the latter claim, the opposition of the idolaters to the Prophet is likened to the opposition of Pharaoh and his "notables" toward Moses (vv. 46–56). The idolaters' attempt to liken their worship of idols to the Christian worship of Jesus is also firmly rebuked (vv. 57–65). After these examples are provided, there is an extended contrast of the fate of believers and disbelievers in the Hereafter (vv. 66–78), followed by another challenge to the belief system of the idolaters (vv. 79–87). Having cited and rebuked many different modes of disbelief, the sūrah ends with an injunction to the Prophet to remain calm in the face of the disbelievers' opposition to his message (vv. 88–89).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Ḥā. Mīm. (2) By the clear Book, (3) truly We have made it an Arabic Quran, that haply you may understand, (4) and truly it is with Us in the Mother of the Book, sublime indeed, wise. (5) Shall We withdraw the reminder from you altogether for your having been a prodigal people? (6) How many a prophet did We send among those of old? (7) Yet never did a prophet come unto them, but

1 This sūrah is the fourth in a series of seven *sūrah*s that open with the Arabic letters ḥāʾ and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm; see 40:1c.

2 Cf. 44:2. The Quran is described as a clear Book (cf. 5:15; 12:1; 26:2; 27:1; 28:2; 44:2), clear in both wording and meaning (IK). This appellation is understood to allude to its being sent down by God rather than composed by human beings (Ṭ). It is also said that all things in Heaven and on earth are recorded in a clear Book (10:61; 27:75; 34:3). Clear renders mubīn, which is in the form of an active participle and could thus be understood to mean that it makes clear or clarifies, implying that the Quran makes the path of guidance clear from the path of misguidance (R, Z) and truth from error and that it clarifies what is needed in order to follow religion properly (JJ, Z).

3 That God has revealed an Arabic Quran (cf. 12:2; 20:113; 39:28; 41:3; 42:7) in a clear, Arabic tongue (26:195; cf. 16:103; 46:12) indicates that it should be clear to the Arabs (Ṭ), who then have no excuse for rejecting it; see 39:28c.

4 Mother of the Book (cf. 3:7; 13:39) is interpreted by most as a reference to the Preserved Tablet (85:22; IK, JJ, R, Z), which is said to be the source of all revealed scripture, and interpreted by some as a reference to the Quran itself (see 3:7c). Sublime indeed, wise refers to the Quran or to the Mother of the Book (R). Sublime renders ʿalī, which indicates that it is transcendent and thus beyond the possibility of any corruption or falsification (R). Some say that when read as modifying Quran, ʿalī means that the Quran transcends all other revealed books, because it is a miracle that will remain for all time (R). Regarding the inviolability and permanence of the Quran, see commentary on 15:9; 56:77–80. The Quran is also described as wise in 10:1; 31:2; and 36:2. Wise (ḥakīm) can also be taken to mean "determined" or "made firm" (muḥkam, from the same root), as in 3:7, where the Quran is described as having signs determined (R; cf. 11:1). Ḥakīm could also mean something that makes firm (muḥkim), indicating that the Quran or the Mother of the Book teaches the truth.

5 The first part of this verse may mean, "Shall We withhold the reminder of the punishment from you?" (Ṭ), or, "Shall we withhold the Quran from you?" (JJ), as "the Reminder" is often used as a name for the Quran itself. According to the second interpretation, the verse refers to God's continuing to reveal the Quran out of His Mercy, even though it had initially been rejected by many (IK). For the meaning of a prodigal people, see 10:12c; 25:67c.

6–7 These verses are understood as consolation for the Prophet (IK, JJ), informing him that they mocked him. (8) So We destroyed those of greater prowess than they, and the example of those of old has passed. (9) Wert thou to ask them, "Who created the heavens and the earth?" they would surely say, "The Mighty, the Knowing created them." (10) He it is Who made the earth a cradle for you and made paths for you therein, that haply you may be guided; (11) Who sent down water from the sky in due measure, whereby We revived a dead land—thus shall you be brought forth; (12) and Who created the pairs, all of them, and appointed for you ships and cattle that you ride, (13) that you may mount their backs and that the derision he faces is no greater than that confronted by previous prophets (Ṭ). For v. 7, cf. 15:11; 36:30.

8 The disbelievers whom God destroyed before this generation of disbelievers were more numerous than they, greater than they in strength, and left firmer traces upon the earth (40:82; cf. 50:36). Nonetheless, their achievements could not avail them against God. This implies that the opponents of the Prophet, who are weaker than previous generations, are misguided in thinking that they can successfully oppose the message he brings; see 40:82c. The example of those of old refers to their way of life (IK) or to the fact that the punishment they received serves as an example for future disbelievers, as in v. 56: And We made them a bygone people and an example for those of later times (IK); see also 14:45; 40:84–85c.

9 When questioned about the source of creation, they—that is, the idolaters among the Quraysh—would surely say, "The Mighty, the Knowing created them" (cf. 10:31; 23:84–85; 29:61, 63; 31:25; 39:38; 43:87), because they acknowledged that one God was responsible for creation, but they nonetheless worshipped other deities alongside Him (IK) and denied His ability to resurrect (R). Alternately, them and they can be understood as references to the prophets (R), meaning that all prophets affirm this statement. With this latter reading, vv. 10–13 could be read as a continuation of the quotation with which this verse ends.

10 Cf. 20:53. That God made the earth a cradle means He made the earth smooth, easy to travel upon (IK), tractable for agriculture (R), and a home for human life. Paths (cf. 21:31; 67:15; 71:19–20) refers to navigable routes He has made upon it (IK, JJ). In the context of this passage (vv. 10–14), that haply you may be guided (cf. 2:53, 150; 7:158; 16:15; 21:31; 23:49; 32:3) is thought to refer to the manner in which God both facilitates travel upon the earth in this life and provides signs and revelation to guide human beings to truth and to Paradise in the Hereafter.

11 That water is sent in due measure (cf. 23:18) indicates that God sends water sufficient to sustain people, livestock, and crops (IK) and does not usually send down a deluge (JJ) as He did in the case of Noah (R). Elsewhere it is said that God created everything, then measured it out with due measure (25:2). Regarding the theological significance of "measure," see 54:49c. The last line of the present verse is one of several places where the Quran employs the revivification of dead land as a metaphor for the resurrection of human beings (R); see 7:57; 16:65; 29:63; 30:19, 24, 50; 35:9; 36:33; 41:39; 45:5; 50:9–11; 57:17. Such imagery is also understood as a spiritual allegory and symbol for the death and life of the soul, as discussed in 7:58c; 22:63c; 30:50c.

12–13 The pairs, all of them (cf. 36:36) refers to all species of animals (IK, Q), to all opposites (R), or to the fact that all animals have both males and females (Q). According to al-Rāzī, that they are pairs indicates that they are all relative and multiple, whereas their Creator is an Absolute Being Who transcends all duality.

This is one of several passages that mention seafaring as a blessing bestowed by God (cf. 14:32; 17:66; 22:65; 30:46) and invoke the benefits of cattle—their usefulness for riding and transporting goods, for providing warmth and clothing, for providing food and drink, and even their then remember the blessing of your Lord when you are mounted thereon and say, "Glory be to God, Who made this subservient unto us, though we were not equal to it. (14) Truly unto our Lord do we turn." (15) Yet they assign to Him a portion from some of His servants. Truly man is a manifest ingrate. (16) Or has He taken daughters from that which He creates and favored you with sons? (17) And when one of them receives glad tidings of that which he has set forth as a description of the Compassionate, his face blackens and he chokes with anguish. (18) "What! One who is reared amid ornaments and is incoherent in beauty—as signs of God's Beneficence toward human beings; see also 6:142c; 16:5, 66, 79; 23:21–22; 36:72; 40:79. The supplication given at the end of this verse is often employed by Muslims when traveling by land; see also 28:85c. When traveling by sea, one is advised to use the supplication in 11:41: In the Name of God be its coursing and its mooring. Truly my Lord is Forgiving, Merciful (Q, R). Recognizing that God has made certain aspects of creation subservient unto human beings, though they are not equal to it, is to acknowledge that human beings do not have the capacity to make use of these resources without Divine Aid (IK, Q, R, Z); see also 31:20c.

14 Unto our Lord do we turn (cf. 7:125), that is, in prayer. Alternately, the phrase could be rendered, "Unto our Lord do we return" in the Hereafter (Aj, IK, R, Ṭ). In the latter interpretation, mention of earthly journeys in the previous verse draws one's attention to the journey toward the Hereafter, just as elsewhere mention of preparing provisions for an earthly journey is employed to remind human beings to prepare provisions for the Hereafter: And make provision, for indeed the best provision is reverence (2:197; IK). The mention of the return to God after the mention of the means by which human beings journey is understood as a recognition of the dangers inherent in setting out upon a journey, especially without the necessary preparation, and that the successful return from a journey lies entirely in God's Hands (R). That the Arabic is phrased as an active participle (munqalibūn, lit. "are we returners") speaks to the definitive nature of this verse, since from a Quranic perspective human beings cannot but turn to God and all are traveling toward Him at every moment whether they want to or not.

15 The idolaters maintain that some of God's servants are His offspring (JJ, Q, R), who share in His Divinity and in His creative power. Some see this verse as a reference to the practice among the Makkan idolaters of devoting a portion of their cattle to their idols, as in 6:136: And they dedicate to God a share of the crops and cattle He created, saying, "This belongs to God"—or so they claim—"And this belongs to our partners" (IK). The present verse could also be understood to mean that the idolaters maintain that God has partners and that they only assign "a portion" of His servants to Him and then assign another portion of His servants to the partners they attribute to Him (R).

16–17 Cf. 16:57–58. These verses are similar to 37:149–53; 52:39; and 53:21–22. The Quran criticizes frequently the idea that God has offspring (2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149, 153; 39:4; 43:81–82; 52:39; 72:3). In this instance, the Quranic argument is not meant to suggest that males are better than females. Rather, it shows that the idolaters' attributing female offspring to God, which they themselves despise (see commentary on 16:57–59), while favoring male offspring for themselves, is illogical and demonstrates the utter inconsistency and vacuity of their position as well as the degree to which they belittle God's rights and dues.

18 The idolaters regard women as lacking something for which they must compensate with jewelry and ornaments and do not allow women to be heard in a dispute; so how could they attribute being female to those beings they call divine?

dispute?" (19) And they have made the angels, who are servants of the Compassionate, females. Did they witness their creation? Their witnessing shall be recorded, and they will be questioned. (20) They say, "Had the Compassionate willed, we would not have worshipped them." They have no knowledge thereof. They do naught but guess. (21) Or did We give them a book beforehand to which they hold fast? (22) Nay! They say, "We found our fathers upon a creed, and surely we are rightly guided in their footsteps." (23) Likewise, We sent no warner unto a town before thee, but that those living in luxury therein said, "We found (IK). Alternately, this verse could be read as a description of the idols that they decorate with gold and silver and then worship, though the idols cannot speak (Ṭ).

19 Cf. 37:150. The disbelievers make claims regarding aspects of the Unseen of which they have no knowledge. On the one hand, they could not have witnessed the creation of the angels; nor do they have intellectual proofs for their position. On the other hand, they deny revelation, by means of which one could receive such information. Thus they have no means by which to substantiate what they claim (R); see 17:40c; 37:150c. Servants renders ʿibād, a reading supported by 21:26. According to another canonical reading ʿibād would be read ʿinda, meaning "with," in which case who are servants of the Compassionate would be read "who are with the Compassionate" (Q, R). This reading is supported by 7:206, which speaks of the angels as those who are with thy Lord, and by 21:19: Those who are with Him are not too arrogant to worship Him; nor do they weary (Q, R). This alternate reading would mean that, as the angels are with God and not with the disbelievers, the disbelievers have no basis for their assertion that the angels are female (R).

20 This verse describes the idolaters' response to the question posed in v. 19. They maintain that since their worshipping of idols happens only by God's Will, He must approve of it (IK, JJ); see 6:148c; 16:35c. In other words, they consider the absence of Divine Punishment to indicate tacit approval. Just as the idolaters are here accused of conjecture when maintaining that God will be pleased with their worship, so too are they accused of conjecture when giving names to their idols (Truly those who believe not in the Hereafter name the angels with female names. Yet they have no knowledge thereof. They follow naught but conjecture; and surely conjecture avails naught against the Truth; 53:27–28) and when maintaining that God has a child (see 18:4–5).

21 In context this question asks, "Did God give them a revealed scripture that they are able to study and use as a source for their claims to knowledge of the angels?" This challenge is similar to that posed in 37:156–57, where the disbelievers are challenged regarding their belief in deities as the offspring of God: Or have you a manifest authority? Bring your Book, then, if you are truthful (see also 34:44; 35:40c; 46:4; 68:37–38).

22 This verse begins one of several passages in which disbelievers state their unwillingness to abandon the false gods and deities worshipped by their fathers (cf. 2:170; 5:104; 7:28, 70; 10:78; 11:62, 87; 14:10; 31:21; 34:43). In the context of the previous verses, this verse argues for the vacuity of following the beliefs of one's forefathers in the absence of intellectual or revealed truths to support one's position (R). Creed renders ummah, a word employed in many different ways in the Quran, but usually meaning "community," as in 23:52: And truly this community of yours is one community. In the present context, the term indicates both a set of beliefs and a corresponding way of life, thus a religion (Q).

23 Cf. 34:34; 51:52–53. This is one of several verses indicating that it is the leaders or notables of a community who are usually most adamant in opposing God's messengers, implying that they benefit from a corrupt social order and therefore stand the most to lose from the advent of a just our fathers upon a creed, and we are surely following in their footsteps." (24) He replied, "What! Though I bring you better guidance than that which you found your fathers following?" They said, "Truly we disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent." (25) So We took vengeance upon them. And behold how the deniers fared in the end. (26) And [remember] when Abraham said to his father and his people, "Truly I am quit of that which you worship, (27) save Him who originated me, for surely He will guide me." (28) And He made it a word endursocial order. In other verses, they are thus referred to as the guilty (6:123). It is the leaders and notables who are said to have opposed Moses (see 7:103–27; 10:75–88; 11:97–98; 23:46–47; 28:20; 43:46–47), Noah (see 7:60; 11:27, 38; 23:24–25) and other prophets (see 7:66, 75, 88–90; 23:33–36), among them Muhammad (see 38:6). The disbelievers' statement we are surely following in their footsteps implies that they see following the ways of their forefathers as sufficient justification for their beliefs and actions.

24–25 He replied renders qāl, but several canonical readings allow this to be read qul, or "say," in which case it is an injunction to the Prophet. This reading is preferred by several commentators (IK, Q, Ṭs). The depth of the idolaters' devotion to their "forefathers' creed" is such that they will not listen to arguments from reason or revelation. Al-Rāzī observes that the root of their devotion to this ancestral creed is love of the world and its delights, since the creed functions to secure their wealth and position. As they were presented with both rational arguments and revelation, they no longer had any excuse for rejecting the truth; yet they continued to do so; thus God took vengeance upon them (R). This is in keeping with the Quranic principle that God will not punish or destroy any people until they have been sent a warner (see 15:4; 26:208–9).

26–27 In contrast to the notables, whose love of the world and its accoutrements led them to adhere to the creed of their forefathers and reject both rational arguments and revelation, Abraham's love for God led him to risk his own life in rejecting the creed of his father and his people. Citing Abraham in this context provides a poignant argument for the Arabs, as their claims to honor and nobility were closely connected to their claim of descent from Abraham. On the one hand, these verses cite his example as one to be followed. But on the other hand, they present an argument against the claim made by the Makkans that they are following the creed of their forefathers (v. 22–23). Since Abraham was regarded as their greatest forefather, following his example would in fact be nobler than following the example of the generations immediately preceding them (R). These verses thus seek to undermine the argument of the Makkan idolaters by claiming that, even if they are following their forefathers, they are not doing so as perfectly as Muhammad and his followers, who are following the noblest of their forefathers.

Abraham makes a declaration similar to the one stated in v. 26 in 6:78, saying: O my people! Truly I am quit of the partners you ascribe. Likewise, the Arabian prophet Hūd says to his people, I call God as witness—and you be witness—that I am quit of that which you ascribe as partners apart from Him (11:54–55), and the Prophet Muhammad is instructed to say to his detractors, Truly I am quit of that which you ascribe as partners unto Him (6:19; cf. 10:41; 26:216).

28 It refers to the statement of the affirmation of God's Oneness (JJ, R), which is understood to be what Abraham stated in vv. 26–27 (R, Ṭ), or to the Islamic testimony of faith, "There is no god but God" (IK, Ṭ). Others say that it refers to Abraham's statement in 37:99, Truly, I am going unto my Lord. He will guide me (JJ), or to 2:131, And when his Lord said unto him, "Submit!" he said, "I submit to the Lord of the worlds." In this context, that haply they may return is understood to mean that later generations might return to this "word" or declaration (IK), return to obedience to God (Ṭ), repent or remember (Ṭ), or re-ing among his posterity, that haply they may return. (29) Nay, I provided for these and their fathers until the Truth came unto them and a clear messenger. (30) And when the Truth came unto them, they said, "This is sorcery, and we do not believe in it." (31) And they said, "Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns?" (32) Is it they who apportion the Mercy of thy Lord? We have apportioned for them their livelihood in the life of this world and have raised some of them above others in rank, that some of them may take others into service. And the Mercy of thy Lord is better than that cant what they follow and return to the religion of Abraham (JJ).

29 Nay renders the particle bal, which when employed in this manner indicates a stark contrast. Here it can be understood to mean that, although God made it a word enduring among his posterity, they nonetheless became deluded and were distracted from the message by their preoccupation with their passions and enjoyments (R). Nonetheless, God provided for the people of Makkah and their ancestors and did not destroy them or punish them (JJ, Ṭ). But now that the Truth, meaning the Quran (JJ, R, Ṭ) has come to them, they will be held accountable for not adhering to the teachings found in it and in the word enduring that Abraham had bequeathed to them. As in v. 2, clear renders mubīn, which is in the form of an active participle and could thus be understood to mean that the Prophet clarifies by bringing clear proofs (Ṭ) or that he brings with clarity the stipulations of the revealed Law (JJ); see 43:2c.

30 As in v. 20, the idolaters are said to have no argument against what the Prophet brings. In v. 22 they cite the beliefs of their forefathers to justify their position, while here they reject the Prophet and the Quran out of hand by deriding them as connected to sorcery. This is one of many verses in which the Prophet is accused of being a sorcerer (cf. 10:2; 11:7; 34:43; 37:15; 38:4; 46:7; 51:52; 54:2; 74:24), as were Moses (7:109; 10:76; 20:57, 63; 26:34; 27:13; 28:36; 40:24; 51:39) and Jesus (5:110; 61:6).

31 The two towns are Makkah and Ṭā'if. Most maintain that the great man of Makkah is thought to be al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah and the great man of Ṭā'if, ʿUrwah ibn Masʿūd al-Thaqafī (IK, JJ, Ṭ). Others say ʿUtbah ibn Rabīʿah of Makkah and Ibn ʿAbd Yālīl al-Thaqafī of Ṭā'if (Ṭ). The idolaters were incredulous that God would choose as a prophet one who did not possess high social standing among them and used this fact as another excuse for not following the Prophet, as in 38:7–8, where the notables among them say, We did not hear of this in the creed of latter days. This is naught but an invention. Has the Reminder been sent down upon him among all of us? In general, the leaders of the Quraysh could not bear the thought that the new revelation would alter their position in society, as in 46:11: And those who disbelieve say of those who believe, "Had it been good, they would not have outstripped us in [attaining] it." In response to this attitude, 6:124 states, God knows best where to place His message. In other passages, they express amazement at God's choice of a human being as His Messenger, as in 25:7: What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him? (see also 6:8–9; 11:12; 14:10; 17:94; 23:33; 36:15; 41:14; 54:24; 64:6c). For other verses that speak of their marveling at this phenomenon, see 7:69; 10:2; 38:4; 50:2.

32 Is it they who apportion the Mercy of thy Lord? That is, "Do they apportion prophethood?" (JJ), or "Do they apportion the sustenance that God provides such that they can give it to those they love and withhold it from others?" (Ṭ), or "Should God's choice of a prophet be in accord with their caprice?" (Qu). For similar rhetorical questions, see 35:40; 46:4; 52:36–37, 41; 68:37–39, 47; see also 35:40c; 46:4c. When the question is seen as a reference to prophethood, the which they amass. (33) And were it not that mankind would be one community, We would have made for those who disbelieve in the Compassionate silver roofs for their houses, stairways whereon to ascend, (34) doors to their houses, couches whereon to recline, (35) and gold ornaments. Yet all of that would be but enjoyment of the life of this world. And the Hereafter, in the presence of thy Lord, is for the reverent. (36) Whosoever turns blindly away from the remembrance of the Compassionate, We assign to him a satan who is then a companion unto him. (37) And they turn them from the way; yet they suppose that they implication is that God knows best who is fit for this station (IK). That God apportions livelihood can then be understood as an allusion to God's choice of whomever He wills as a messenger (Ṭ). Wealth and social station are incorrectly interconnected with prophethood in the minds of the "leaders," so here it is as if God is asking how being favored with wealth could be connected to being favored with prophethood (R). Regarding the manner in which God raises some above others in rank, see 6:165c; 17:21. The last sentence is understood to mean that Paradise is better than all the material goods and pleasures the disbelievers may amass and experience in this world (JJ, Ṭ). More generally, it can be understood to mean that the Mercy granted by God in religion is greater than any wealth that could be amassed, because God's Mercy lasts forever, while the things of this world fade away (R).

33–34 These verses are understood to mean that, were it not for the fact that people would have all disbelieved due to their inclination toward the world and neglect of the Hereafter, God would have provided great wealth for them (Q), or that ignorant people would think that God's giving wealth was a sign of His Love and would thus be joined together in disbelief for the sake of wealth (IK). For other verses that allude to God's not wanting to make human beings a single community in disbelief, see 16:93c; 42:8c.

35 Enjoyment of the life of this world indicates the ephemeral delights of this world, which are naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20) and stand in stark contrast to the rewards of the next life; see 3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 29:64c; 40:39; 42:36.

36–37 Remembrance of the Compassionate refers to either remembering and following God (IK) or the Quran (JJ); in the latter case it could be translated "the Reminder of the Compassionate." In either interpretation, this verse can be understood as a response to all of the excuses for not following the Prophet posed by the disbelievers in the preceding verses. When the disbelievers choose to ignore the proofs of God, both rational and revealed, by turning away from them, save with a weak glance, their glance is like that of one whose vision has dimmed (Ṭ). Yet they have willed this for themselves. Therefore, God punishes them by "assigning satans" to them who will lead them further into the blindness they have chosen. Ibn Kathīr likens this verse to 61:5, which says of those among the Israelites who mistreated Moses, When they swerved, God caused their hearts to swerve; and God guides not iniquitous people; and 4:115: But whosoever opposes the Messenger, after guidance has been made clear to him, and follows a way other than that of the believers, We shall leave him on [the path] he has taken, and We shall cause him to burn in Hell—what an evil journey's end!

That those who turn away from God and His Messenger fall victim to Satan and his minions is asserted in several verses of the Quran, such as 4:38: Whosoever has Satan for a companion has an evil companion indeed! And 4:119: Whosoever takes Satan as a protector apart from God has surely suffered a manifest loss. For such people Satan has overwhelmed them, and thus made them forget the remembrance of God. They are the party of Satan. Lo! The party of Satan are losers (58:19). Their companion satans keep them from the things that are are rightly guided, (38) till, when he comes unto Us, he will say, "Would that there were between me and thee the distance of the two easts! What an evil companion!" (39) Yet on that Day it will not benefit you, since you did wrong, to share in the punishment. (40) Dost thou, then, make the deaf to hear or guide the blind and those in manifest error? (41) Either We shall take thee away, and then take vengeance upon them, (42) or We shall show thee that which We have permissible and make them incline toward what is forbidden, prevent them from being obedient, and encourage them to disobey (Q). They thus make going astray seem like going aright, as in 41:25: We assigned to them companions, and they made that which is before them and that which is behind them seem fair to them. Regarding the influence that satans have upon human beings, the Prophet said, "There is none among you but that he has been assigned a jinn as his companion." The Prophet was then asked, "And you, O Messenger of God?" He replied, "And I, except that God helped me against him and he submitted; so he only commands me to good."

38 He comes unto Us renders jāʾanā, which in other canonical readings is considered to be in the dual form jāʾānā, meaning "when the two of them come," that is, the one who turned away and his companion satan (IK, Q). On the Day of Judgment, those who had turned away blindly from the remembrance of God will seek to distance themselves from the satan they had taken as a companion in this world. Some understand the distance of the two easts to mean the distance between the east and the west (JJ, Q). The two easts, translating mashriqayn, could also be rendered "the two places from which the sun rises," as the rising of the sun, shurūq, derives from the same root, sh-r-q, as the word for "east," mashriq. The distance between the two easts could thus be understood as a reference to the distance between the point from which the sun rises at the winter solstice and the point from which it rises at the summer solstice (Q).

39 This verse can be read as an address to one who has turned away blindly and to his companion satan; it means that their being together in the Fire will not be of any help to them and that they will both partake of the punishment (IK). It can also be read as an address to human beings who were spiritually blind, meaning that their expression of remorse in disowning their companion satans will be of no benefit (JJ, Q). That they express regrets and admit their sin (67:11; cf. 40:11) is of no avail to them, since they had been offered ample opportunity to repent and make amends during the life of this world; see 6:25c; 32:12c; 35:37c. It could also be understood as a reference to the remembrance of the Compassionate (v. 36), meaning that because they choose to turn away from it in this world, they will not have the opportunity to turn toward it in the Hereafter.

40 This verse is an address to the Prophet. From a Quranic perspective, the Prophet cannot cause those who are spiritually deaf and blind to hear or be guided by the revelation, because his only duty is to convey the revelation (see 3:20; 13:40), and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he (7:186; 13:33; 39:23, 36; 40:33); see 10:42–44; 27:80–81; 30:52–53c.

41–42 The second part of v. 41 is understood by some to mean, "for We were vengeful with them," meaning that God took vengeance upon past communities who rejected the prophets sent to them (Ṭ). In either rendering, these verses indicate that God will either take vengeance upon the disbelievers after the Prophet has passed away or bring the promised punishment upon them while the Prophet is still among them. These verses can also be read to mean that God will punish those who oppose the Prophet in the Hereafter or that He will punish them in this life by bringing the promised punishment upon them (JJ) and making the Prophet victorious over them (Ṭ). The two possibilities express the inevitability of Divine Punishment for rejecting the Prophet and the Quran. God spared them before (see 43:29c), but now that a messenger has come to them, they will have no reprieve.

promised them. For surely We have power over them. (43) So hold fast to that which We have revealed unto thee. Truly thou art upon a straight path. (44) Truly it is a reminder unto thee and thy people, and you will be questioned. (45) Ask those of Our messengers whom We sent before thee, "Have We appointed gods to be worshipped apart from the Compassionate?" (46) We did indeed send Moses with Our signs unto Pharaoh and his notables. And he said, "I am a messenger of the Lord of the worlds." (47) But when he brought them Our signs, behold, they laughed at them. (48) Not a sign did We show them, but that it was greater than its sister. And We seized them with the punishment, that haply they may return. (49) They said, "O sorcerer, call upon your Lord for us in accord 43 The injunction is to hold fast to the Quran (IK, JJ, Ṭ), which ensures that one remains upon a straight path (see 1:6c), in contrast to the idolaters, who were not given a book beforehand to which they hold fast (v. 21).

44 The Reminder (al-dhikr) is one of the names of the Quran (see 15:9c; 36:10–11c) and is also employed as a reference to scripture in general or to the Torah, as when the People of the Book are referred to as the people of the Reminder (16:43; 21:8); also see 41:41–42c. That it is a reminder unto thee and thy people is understood to mean that the Quran is an honor bestowed upon the Prophet and his people (IK, JJ, Ṭ), especially since it was a revelation sent down in their own language (IK, JJ). It also implies that since they are foremost in their ability to understand its language, they should be the most steadfast in adhering to it (IK), and that they will be questioned in the Hereafter regarding the degree to which they have fulfilled their duty toward it (JJ). The Quran mentions that people will be questioned at the Final Judgment in several verses (see, e.g., 7:6; 16:56, 93; 17:36; 29:13).

45 This verse is understood to mean that when the Prophet met all of the other prophets on the Night Journey (see 17:1c; introduction to Sūrah 53), he was to ask them this question (JJ), or that he was to ask it of the People of the Book (JJ, Ṭ), in which case some say there is an implied "unto whom" (ilayhim) in the verse so that it could be rendered, "Ask those before you [unto whom] We sent from among Our messengers" (Ṭ). The verse can also be understood as a purely rhetorical question, reaffirming that all of the messengers called their people to the same truths to which the Prophet Muhammad calls his people, as in 16:36: We indeed sent a messenger unto every community, "Worship God, and shun false deities!" (IK).

46–56 Here the account of Moses provides a spiritual example, reflecting aspects of the Prophet Muhammad's own challenges. For more detailed accounts of Moses' mission, see 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 28:3–46. Shorter accounts pertaining to particular aspects of Moses' mission can be found in 2:49–61; 5:20–26; 17:101–4; 27:7–14; 40:23–30; 44:17–31; 51:38–40; 79:15–25.

46–47 When Moses brought God's signs to Pharaoh and his notables, they laughed at them in the same way that the Makkan idolaters mocked the signs with which the Prophet was sent (Ṭ), as when Pharaoh, Hāmān, and Korah said that Moses was a lying sorcerer (40:24; cf. 51:39).

48 Each of the signs that Moses brought was greater than the sign immediately before it (JJ, Ṭ); see 7:133–35, where these signs are mentioned. For their rejection of the signs, God punished them in the hope that they would repent (Ṭ) and recant their disbelief (JJ).

49 A similar verse is 7:134, in which Pharaoh and the notables continue the address to Moses, saying, If you lift this torment from us, we shall surely believe in you, and we shall surely send forth the Children of Israel with you; see 7:134–35c. Their addressing Moses as sorcerer is not a slight, since they did not regard sorcery as with that which He has covenanted with you; surely we shall then be guided." (50) Yet when We removed the punishment from them, behold, they reneged. (51) And Pharaoh called out among his people, saying, "O my people! Is not the sovereignty of Egypt mine, and do these streams not flow beneath me? Do you not, then, see? (52) Am I not better than this one who is vile and can scarcely speak plain? (53) Why, then, have armlets of gold not been cast upon him, and reprehensible (cf. 7:109; 26:34–35). According to their worldview, this might in fact have been a way of honoring him (IK). In this way they recognized the "evidentiary miracles" with which Moses was sent, but the miracles themselves had no ultimate effect on them, because they were hardened disbelievers (see 7:132c; 27:13–14c). The primary function of prophetic miracles seems to be to elicit and encourage belief among those who are already somehow disposed to it, like the sorcerers who professed belief in the religion of Moses once they witnessed the power of his miracles (see 7:119–20c; 20:70; 26:47–48). In this way, evidentiary miracles, like the prophetic messages themselves, serve to distinguish the inherently good, but merely misguided, members of a disbelieving community from those, like Pharaoh, whose hearts were so thoroughly hardened that they rejected every sign or message the prophet brought. Regarding the inability of signs to convince those unwilling to believe in a prophet's message, see 2:145; 6:25c; 7:146; 10:96–97. See also 10:81–82, where Moses responds to the sorcerers' feats by indicating that it is God's Words (rather than apparent supernatural feats) that ultimately separate truth from falsehood and illusion.

50 Cf. 7:135. Despite the miracles and God's suspension of the punishment in response to Moses' supplications, Pharaoh and his notables return to their inveterate disbelief as soon as they feel safe. Their doing so reflects the Quranic theme that human beings will often invoke God when they are in need and then neglect God when they are safe or at ease, as in 39:8: And when harm befalls man, he calls upon his Lord, turning unto Him. Then when He bestows a blessing from Himself upon him, he forgets the One upon whom he called before and sets up equals unto God to lead astray from His path (see, e.g., 6:40–41c; 10:12; 17:67; 30:33).

51 Pharaoh's invocation of the streams running beneath his feet as a sign of his sovereignty demonstrates both his haughtiness, since from a Quranic perspective God alone makes water flow, and his ignorance, since the Quran warns that God grants respite for a while, but can remove such blessings at any moment, as in 6:6: We sent the sky upon them with abundant rains, and made streams flow beneath them. Then We destroyed them for their sins, and brought into being after them another generation (see also 2:266; 15:3–4; 16:54–55; 22:48; 23:54–56; 44:25–28; 68:17–20).

52 The charge that Moses can scarcely speak plain refers, according to some commentators, to a lisp said to have resulted from a hot coal that was accidentally placed in his mouth when he was a child (IK, JJ); see 20:25–28c; 26:12–13c. According to some accounts, Pharaoh is lying, since this impediment had been removed when Moses asked of God, And untie a knot from my tongue, that they may understand my speech (20:27–28). To which God responded, Thou hast been granted thy request, O Moses! (20:36; IK). Alternately, it could be understood as Pharaoh's assessment of the message that Moses brought.

53 Here Pharaoh exhibits the same misunderstandings expressed by the Makkan idolaters in the first half of the sūrah. Just as the Makkan idolaters asked why God did not send the Quran down to a great man from one of the two towns (v. 31) rather than Muhammad, Pharaoh asks why Moses is not endowed with wealth similar to his own. And just as the idolaters asked of Muhammad, What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him? (25:7), so too why do angels not accompany him?" (54) Then he incited his people to make light, and they obeyed him. Truly they were an iniquitous people. (55) So when they roused Our Anger, We took vengeance upon them and drowned them all together. (56) We made them a bygone people and an example for those of later times. (57) And when the son of Mary is set forth as an example, behold, thy people turn away from it. (58) They say, "Are our gods better, or is he?" They do not cite him to thee, save to dispute. Nay, they are a contentious people. (59) He was naught but a servant whom We blessed and whom We Pharaoh wonders why do angels not accompany Moses. The answer to these queries is given in 6:8: Had We sent down an angel, then the matter would be decreed, and they would be granted no respite; and 17:95: Were there angels walking about upon the earth in peace, then We would have sent down upon them an angel from Heaven as a messenger. For the disbelievers' various expressions of this objection to the prophets, see 6:8–9, 50; 11:12; 14:10–11; 17:94–95; 23:24, 33–34, 38, 47; 26:154, 186; 36:15; 41:14; 54:24; 64:6c; 74:25.

54 Then he incited his people to make light could also mean that he moved them to submit or to be foolish.

55 This is one of several references in the Quran to the drowning of Pharaoh and his army; see also 2:50; 7:136c; 8:54; 10:90; 17:102–3; 28:40; 44:23–24; 51:40. The Prophet is reported to have recited this verse after saying, "When you see that God gives a person what he wants even though he persists in sin, that means that God is enticing him into destruction" (IK).

56 A bygone people renders salaf, which in this context could also be understood as "a precedent," meaning that the manner in which God dealt with them served as a precedent and an example for other people who chose to follow their corrupt leaders rather than messengers from God (IK, Q), as did the Makkan leaders in rejecting the prophethood of Muhammad.

57–58 Turn away from it renders minhu yaṣiddūn, which can also be understood to mean, "cry aloud at it." Are our gods better, or is he? expresses the idolaters' objection that the Christian worship of Jesus is no different from their own worship of idols (Ṭ) or even their claim that their deities are better than Jesus (R). These verses are understood as a response to the objection posed by the idolaters when the Prophet recited 21:98: Surely you and that which you worship apart from God shall be fuel for Hell. Unto it you shall come. The idolaters sought to liken the Christian worship of Jesus to their worship of their own idols and then conclude from 21:98 that Jesus would suffer the same fate as their idols (IK, R). But since they know that 21:98 is addressed to them specifically, they should know that Jesus would not be included among the objects of worship referred to in this verse; thus they do not cite him . . . save to dispute (IK). Rather, they only bring up Christian worship for the sake of argument; not because it pertains to their beliefs (IK) or because they are concerned that the Prophet would say that Jesus was destined for Hell. In this sense, they are like the people of Noah, who disputed by means of falsehood in order to refute the truth (40:5).

59 That Jesus is naught but a servant (cf. 19:30; 61:6) is understood as a response to the Christian view of Jesus as fully Divine and fully human, but may also be understood as a response to Christian sects that understood Jesus to be entirely Divine. Regarding the question of the divinization of Jesus, see commentary on 4:171–73. The Quran speaks of Jesus as a servant of God who was blessed with prophethood (IK, JJ) and was an example for the Children of Israel in being born miraculously of a virgin (see 3:42–47; also see commentary on 19:16–17), speaking as a baby in the cradle (see 3:46; 19:29–33), and performing evidentiary miracles (see commentary on 5:110–15). Alternately, this verse could be rendered, "He was naught but a servant. We made an example for the Children of Israel. (60) Had We willed, We would have appointed angels among you, succeeding one another upon the earth. (61) And he is indeed a portent of the Hour; so doubt not concerning it and follow Me. This is a straight path. (62) And let not Satan turn you away; truly he is a manifest enemy unto you. (63) When Jesus brought clear proofs, he said, "I have come unto you with wisdom and to make clear to you some of that wherein you differ. So reverence God and obey me. (64) Truly God is my Lord and your Lord; so worship Him. This is a straight path." (65) But, then, the parties differed among themselves. Woe unto those who do wrong for the punishment of a painful day. (66) Do they await aught but that the Hour should come upon them suddenly, blessed him and made him an example for the Children of Israel."

60 God could destroy human beings and cause there to be generations of angels succeeding one another on earth instead of human beings (IK, JJ, Ṭ). This verse serves as a response to the idolaters' understanding that the angels share in God's Power by asserting that they are completely subject to God's Will (R).

61 According to traditional Islamic belief, Jesus did not die a natural death; rather, God raised him up unto Himself (4:158; cf. 3:55). In traditional Islamic eschatology, Jesus' return to earth is among the signs of the end of time. The Prophet is reported to have said, "One of the signs of the Hour will be the appearance of Jesus the son of Mary before the Day of Resurrection" (IK, Q, Ṭ), at which point it is said that he will fight the Antichrist (al-Dajjāl), eventually die, and be resurrected like other mortals.

62 This verse cautions believers not to let Satan turn them away or block them from following the way of God's religion (JJ) or the truth (IK). For references to Satan as a manifest enemy, see also 2:168, 208; 6:142; 7:22; 12:5; 17:53; 28:15; 36:60.

63 For the story of Jesus and the message he brings, see 3:45–59; 4:153–72; 5:110–18; 19:16–40. All messengers are said to bring clear proofs, which are understood by some to be evidentiary miracles and the prescriptions of the Divine Law (JJ, R). In the case of Jesus, some also understand clear proofs to mean the Gospel (Ṭ) and its injunctions (Z). For the evidentiary miracles with which Jesus came, such as speaking in the cradle, healing lepers, raising the dead, and breathing life into a bird, see commentary on 3:49; 5:110; 19:29–34; also see 2:87c; 2:253. Wisdom is understood as a reference to prophethood (IK, JJ, Ṭ) or to the Gospel and its revealed laws (Z). It can also be understood to mean the knowledge of God's Essence, Attributes, and actions (R). To make clear to you some of that wherein you differ refers to Jesus' clarification of the rulings of the Torah regarding which the Jews disputed with one another (JJ, Q, Ṭ). Some understand this verse to be a reference to the accusation that the Jews had altered parts of the Torah (cf. 2:75; Q, Ṭ). So reverence God and obey me is also said by Jesus in 3:50 and by the prophets Noah (26:108, 110), Hūd (26:126, 131), Ṣāliḥ (26:144, 150), Lot (26:163), and Shuʿayb (26:179).

64 Cf. 3:51; 19:36.

65 The followers of Jesus differed regarding whether he was God or the third of three (5:73; JJ), in which case this verse would refer to the views regarding the Trinity of various Christian sects, such as the Melkites, the Jacobites, the Nestorians (Q, R), and others not known to the classical commentary tradition. It could also be read as a reference to the Jews' and Christians' dispute regarding the understanding of Jesus (Q, R).

66 Cf. 47:18. That the Hour of Judgment or the punishment will come upon the disbelievers while they are unaware (cf. 12:107; 26:202; 29:53; 39:55) indicates that one must be prepared for it at all times and alludes to the Quranic position while they are unaware. (67) Friends on that Day will be enemies to one another, save for the reverent. (68) O My servants! No fear shall be upon you this Day; nor shall it be you who grieve, (69) you who believed in Our signs and who were submitters; (70) enter the Garden, you and your spouses, made joyous. (71) For them are brought round trays and goblets of gold. Therein is whatsoever souls desire and eyes find pleasing. And you shall abide therein. (72) This is the Garden that knowledge of the Hour lies only with God; see 43:85c.

67 On the Day of Judgment, those who were friends in disobedience to God will become enemies to one another (JJ), since the folly of everything upon which they had relied will be exposed and all recourse will be cut off from them (2:166); so today they have no loyal friend here (69:35). Thus no loyal friend shall ask about a loyal friend (70:10), and on that Day a man will flee from his brother, and his mother and his father, and his spouse and his children (80:34–36), since for every man that Day his affair shall suffice him (80:37; see also 40:18; 44:41). The rancor they feel toward one another (see 2:166–67; 7:38–39c; 29:25; 34:31–33) is among the reasons the Day of Judgment is also known as the Day of Mutual Dispossession (yawm al-taghābun; 64:9); also see commentary on 70:10–14 and Abraham's words to his people in 29:25: You have taken idols apart from God on account of affection between you in the life of this world. Then on the Day of Resurrection you will disown one another, and you will curse one another; your refuge will be the Fire, and you will have no helpers. The fate of the disbelievers stands in sharp contrast to the experience of the reverent, whose conversation in Paradise is marked by mutual greetings of "Peace" (see 10:10; 14:23; 19:62; 56:25–26), since God has removed all rancor from them (see 7:43c; 15:47).

68–69 The promise that they shall not fear or grieve indicates that they are spared any punishment in the Hereafter. This same promise is made with slight variation to those who follow God's Guidance (2:38), whosoever believes in God and the Last Day and works righteousness (2:62; 5:69; cf. 6:48), whosoever submits his face to God, while being virtuous (2:112), those who spend their wealth in the way of God (2:262; cf. 2:274), those who believe and perform righteous deeds, maintain the prayer and give the alms (2:277), whosoever is reverent and makes amends (7:35), and the friends of God (10:62), all of which are attributes of those who can truly be called God's servants.

Submitted renders muslimīn and is thus understood by many as a confessional designation (Q). But given the Quran's more comprehensive use of the words muslim and islām as well as their verbal forms, it can also be understood as a reference to all human beings who submit themselves to God; see 31:22c.

70 Cf. 36:56–57. Believers are said to be rewarded with spouses made pure (2:25; 3:15; 4:57), which can be understood as an allusion to spiritual beings particular to Paradise or to the spouses of this world who have also attained Paradise; see also 56:16. Made joyous (cf. 30:15) translates yuḥbarūn, which also indicates being blessed and honored (IK, JJ, Q, Ṭ).

71 Trays and goblets of gold allude to the food and drinks that such implements are used to serve (IK). For other delights brought round, see 37:45–47 and 76:15–17; see also 56:18–19. The inhabitants of Paradise will receive whatsoever souls desire (cf. 41:31; 52:22; 56:20–24; 77:41–44), whatsoever they will (16:31; 25:16; 39:34; 42:22; 50:35), and whatsoever they call for (36:57; cf. 41:31; 44:55), whereas for the disbelievers a barrier is set between them and that which they desire (34:54). Some commentators see trays and goblets of gold as a reference to the rewards received by those who are attached to reward, and whatsoever souls desire and eyes find pleasing as an allusion to those whose hearts burn with love for God and yearn for the vision of Him (My).

72 Regarding inheriting the Garden, see 7:43c. In this context, some maintain that no one will enter Paradise by virtue of deeds alone, but that the degrees of Paradise to which its inhabitants may attain will be according to righteous deeds (IK).

that you have inherited for that which you used to do. (73) Abundant fruit from which you will eat shall be yours therein. (74) Truly the guilty shall abide in the punishment of Hell. (75) It will not be lightened for them, and therein will they despair. (76) We did not wrong them; rather, it is they who were the wrongdoers. (77) And they will call, "O Mālik, let thy Lord put an end to us." He will reply, "You will surely remain. (78) We did indeed bring you the truth, but most of you were averse to the truth." (79) Or have they devised anything? Truly it is We Who devise. (80) Or do they suppose that We hear not their secret and their 73 This is one of several verses to promise fruit or fruits in Paradise; see 36:57c; 37:41–42; 38:51; 44:55; 47:15c; 55:22, 52–54, 68; 56:20, 32; 77:41–42.

74–75 The punishment . . . will not be lightened (cf. 2:86, 162; 3:88; 16:85; cf. 35:36) for a single moment (IK), since it is inescapable (25:65), and there is no security from the punishment (70:28). Will despair renders mublisūn (cf. 6:44; 30:49), which also connotes regret and the experience of being dumbstruck, unable to speak in defense of oneself (Is); see 6:42–44c.

76 This is one of many verses indicating that God does not cause injustice, as in 4:40: Truly God commits not so much as a mote's weight of wrong. From a Quranic perspective, although evil befalls people, it results from their own actions, since themselves do they wrong (3:117, 135; see also, e.g., 10:44; 16:118; 35:32; 37:113).

77 The denizens of Hell will call to the angel Mālik, who is said to be the keeper of Hell, to destroy them, so that they will receive some respite from the torments of the Fire (IK). Similarly, on the Day of Judgment, the disbeliever says, "Oh, would that I were dust!" (78:40), and when they are cast bound together into a narrow place thereof, they will, there and then, call to be destroyed (25:13). Regarding their request to die or be destroyed, 35:36 states, They will not be done away with so as to die; nor will aught of its punishment be lightened for them. Thus do We requite every disbeliever (IK). Mālik's response, which is said to take a thousand years (JJ, Q), will be that they are to remain there everlastingly.[1]

78 Cf. 10:82. This verse can be read as a continuation of Mālik's address to the denizens of Hell or as a Quranic address to the disbelievers (Q). The latter reading makes more sense in the present context, but the former reading corresponds more closely to a similar passage in 40:49–50: And those who are in the Fire will say to the keepers of Hell, "Call upon your Lord to relieve us from a day of the punishment." They will reply, "Did not your messengers bring you clear proofs?" They will say, "Yea, indeed." They will say, "Then make supplications!" But the supplication of the disbelievers is naught but astray. When understood as an address to the disbelievers, the truth can also be read as a proper name for the Quran, in which case it would be the Truth.

79 Whatever the disbelievers plot or devise is of no avail to them, since ultimately it is God Who devises all plots, as in 27:50–51: And they devised a plot, and We devised a plot, while they were not aware. So behold how their plot fared in the end; truly We destroyed them and their people all together (cf. 14:46; 52:42).

80 Their secret refers to the sins that people attempt to hide or to their intentions, while secret converse refers to what the disbelievers say when plotting against the Prophet or when deriding him. God is present in and knows the details of every gathering, as in 58:7: There is no secret converse among three, but that He is their fourth, nor among five, but that He is their sixth, nor less than that, nor more, but that He is with them wheresoever they are. Then on the Day of Resurrection He will inform them of that which they did. The plots people devise during their secret converse are, like all deeds, recorded by attendant angels who are elsewhere described as guardians, noble, writing, knowing what you do (82:10–12); see 50:17–18c.

secret converse? Yea, and Our envoys are present with them, recording. (81) Say, "If the Compassionate had a child, then I would be the first of the worshippers." (82) Glory be to the Lord of the heavens and the earth, the Lord of the Throne, above that which they ascribe. (83) And leave them to indulge in idle talk and play until they meet the Day that they are promised. (84) He it is Who is God in Heaven and God on earth. And He is the Wise, the Knowing. (85) Blessed is He unto Whom belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, and with Whom lies knowledge of the Hour, and unto Whom you will be returned. (86) Those upon whom they call apart from Him have no power of intercession, save such as have borne witness to the truth

On the Day of Judgment, each person is then presented with a record of his or her deeds, which is unfolded as a book he will meet wide open (17:13), and to each person it is said, Read your book! On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you (17:14; Ṭ), and they find present [therein] whatsoever they did (18:49); see 17:13–14c; 18:49c.

81 This verse returns to the discussion at the beginning of the sūrah regarding the idolaters' assertion that God has offspring, an idea frequently criticized in the Quran (see 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149–53c; 39:4; 43:16; 52:39; 72:3). Most understand this verse to mean that the Prophet would be the first to worship God's offspring if He did indeed have any (IK, JJ, R, Ṭ). Others understand the verse to mean, "If by your account God has a child, I am the first to worship God alone and to deny you" (R, Ṭ). In this sense it could be understood as a categorical rejection of the central tenet upon which the religion of the idolaters is founded. If renders the Arabic particle in, which can function as a conditional particle, as rendered here, or as a particle of negation, such that the verse could be read, "The Compassionate does not have a child; and I am the first of the worshippers" (R, Ṭ), meaning, "I am the first among you to worship Him with faith and sincerity" (Ṭ).

82 Glory be also indicates God's complete transcendence and is thus a way of negating the assertion of the idolaters addressed in the previous verse by saying that God is too great to be associated with anything they ascribe to Him; see 37:180c. God is Lord of the Throne (see also 9:129; 21:22; 23:86, 116; 27:26), which is borne by angels (40:7; 69:17), and is also described as Possessor of the Throne (17:42; 81:20; 85:15).

83 This verse is similar to 70:42, and both are reflected in the injunction of 6:91: Say, "Allāh," then leave them to play at their vain discourse. This is not to say that one cannot have any contact with the idolaters, but that when you hear the signs of God being rejected and mocked, do not sit with them till they engage in some other discourse, or else you will surely be like them (4:140; cf. 6:68, 112–13). Elsewhere, those who indulge in idle talk are said to be in the Fire (52:11–15; 74:45–46).

84–85 God is not confined to the heavens, and His relationship with earth is the same as His relationship with Heaven (R). In this sense, God has no need for offspring or other deities to govern the affairs of any realm, since He is the God not only of all realms but also in all realms, with complete sovereignty over all realms. Knowledge of their end lies with Him alone (see 7:187; 31:34; 33:63; 41:47; 67:25–26; 79:42–46; cf. Matthew 24:36; Mark 13:32), and at that time all souls will return to Him.

86 The idols upon whom the idolaters call can do nothing for them, but this does not mean a categorical rejection of intercession. Although Unto God belongs intercession altogether (39:44), others can be granted powers of intercession by His Leave, as in 20:109: On that Day intercession will be of no benefit, save [that of] those whom the Compassionate has granted leave and with whose knowingly. (87) Wert thou to ask them, "Who created you?" they would surely say, "God." How, then, are they perverted? (88) And as for his saying, "O my Lord, truly these are a people who believe not," (89) bear with them and say, "Peace." For soon they will know.

word He is content (cf. 19:87; 34:23; 53:26). Regarding the question of intercession, see also 2:48c; 2:255c; 10:3; 39:44; 74:48. Save such as have borne witness to the truth knowingly means that only those who bear witness to the truth will receive intercession (Q, R, Ṭ), in which case, that they must do so knowingly indicates that testimony with the tongue is not efficacious unless it is combined with faith, knowledge, and certainty (Q, R). Alternately, this last phrase is understood as a reference to the angels, Jesus, and Ezra, all of whom are said to have been worshipped mistakenly (that is, people called upon them apart from God), though they themselves never ceased to bear witness to the Truth (Ṭ).

87 Cf. 29:61. Although some of the idolaters recognize a supreme Creator over all of the other deities they associate with Him (cf. 10:31; 23:84–85; 29:61, 63; 31:25; 39:38; 43:9; see 43:9c), they still maintain a polytheistic view in which other deities partake of His Power. The Quran thus asks rhetorically how it is that they can be perverted, or turned away from worshipping God alone (IK, JJ, Ṭ); see 29:61c.

88 This verse records the words of the Prophet lamenting the state of his people, similar to 25:30: And the Messenger will say, "O my Lord! Truly my people have taken this Quran for foolishness" (IK). Here it is read as a new thought, but it can also be understood as following upon v. 85, meaning with Whom lies the knowledge of the Hour and of his saying, "O my Lord, truly these are a people who believe not" (Ṭ). Others read this verse in the nominative and understand it to follow upon v. 80, meaning "Or do they suppose that We hear not . . . his saying, "O my Lord, truly these are a people who believe not" (Ṭ).

89 In response to his lament, the Prophet is enjoined to avoid responding to the disbelievers in the same manner in which they address him and to seek, rather, to soften their hearts and forgive them (IK). That soon they will know the truth of that which they rejected (cf. 15:3, 96; 29:66; 37:170; 40:70) may refer to their realizing the truth in the Hereafter, but it can also be understood as an allusion to the Prophet's eventual defeat of the Makkan idolaters (IK, JJ). In accord with this latter interpretation, some say that this verse was abrogated after the command to fight was given (Q, Ṭ), implying that it no longer applies (IK, JJ). But such an interpretation is not in keeping with the general Quranic principle found in 25:63–64: The servants of the Compassionate are those who walk humbly upon the earth, and when the ignorant address them, they say, "Peace," and who pass the night before their Lord, prostrating and standing [in prayer]; see 25:63c; 7:199c. Others maintain that the present verse is "definitive" (muḥkam) and therefore cannot be abrogated (Q).

Smoke

al-Dukhān

Al-Dukhān is from the Makkan period, although v. 15 is considered by some to be from the Madinan period (Āl, JJ). It takes its name from the mention of the manifest smoke, which is said to cover people (vv. 10–11). Some see this sūrah as following upon the final verse of the previous sūrah, so that what soon they will know (43:89) is the reality of the clear Book (v. 2; Aj). The lament attributed to the Prophet Muhammad at the end of the previous sūrah, O my Lord, truly these are a people who believe not (43:88), is echoed in Moses' condemnation of Pharaoh and his followers in v. 22: These are a guilty people.

Al-Dukhān opens with an oath upon the Quran and an allusion to the manner in which it was revealed and the nature of revelation (vv. 2–6). After a brief affirmation of God's Omnipotence (vv. 7–8), the sūrah rebukes those who doubt and tells of the punishment that they will receive for having denied God's messengers (vv. 9–16). This section is followed by an account of Moses, the manner in which Pharaoh and his followers rejected him, and a description of how the Israelites were delivered from oppression (vv. 17–33). After rebuking the disbelievers for denying the Resurrection and, like Pharaoh, exalting themselves (vv. 34–39), the sūrah tells of the Day of Resurrection (vv. 40–42) and contrasts the punishments of the denizens of Hell (vv. 43–50) with the rewards bestowed upon the reverent in Paradise (vv. 51–57). This is a well-known and oft-recited sūrah regarding which the Prophet is reported to have said, "Whosoever recites al-Dukhān during the night will greet the morning with seventy thousand angels asking forgiveness for him" (Aj, Āl, Ṭs, Z).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Ḥā. Mīm. (2) By the clear Book, (3) truly We sent it down on a blessed night—truly We are ever warning. (4) Therein every wise command is made distinct, (5) as a command from Us—truly We are ever sending, (6) as a mercy from thy Lord. Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing, (7) Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them; would that you were certain. (8) There is no god but He; He gives life and causes death, your Lord and the Lord

1 This sūrah is the fifth in a series of seven sūrahs that open with the Arabic letters ḥāʾ and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm. The Arabic letters ḥāʾ and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs (see 2:1c) and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God. For some possible meanings of these particular letters, see 40:1c.

3–5 A blessed night refers to the Night of Power (see commentary on 97:1–3), which is understood to occur during the latter part of the month of Ramadan, or it refers to the middlemost night of the month of Shaʿbān, that is, the eve of the fifteenth of the month that precedes Ramadan (Aj, JJ). According to many commentators, the Quran was sent down from the Mother of the Book (see 3:7c; 13:39), thus from the seventh Heaven to the lowest Heaven, on the eve of the fifteenth of Shaʿbān (JJ) and was then sent from the lowest Heaven into this world on the Night of Power. Therein would thus refer to either of the two nights (JJ). Every wise command renders kullu amrin ḥakīm, which can also mean, "every definitive command" or "every definitive matter." That each is made distinct refers to God's sending the provision of the year and organizing the affairs for each entire year on the eve of the fifteenth of Shaʿbān, during which God effaces what He will and establishes (13:39; Aj). Regarding the connection between the eve of the fifteenth of Shaʿbān and the Night of Power, Ibn ʿAbbās is reported to have said, "God makes all of the decrees on the eve of the middle of Shaʿbān; then He delivers them to their masters [the angels who carry each Command or Decree down to this earth; see 97:4c] on the Night of Power" (Aj). Thus the process by which every wise command is made distinct begins on the eve of the fifteenth of Shaʿbān and is completed on the Night of Power (Aj), when they are transferred from the Preserved Tablet (see 85:22c) by the angels (IK), and all that occurs does so as a command that originates directly from God's Presence, as does all revelation (IK). That God is ever sending could be seen as a reference to the Quran being sent as a mercy to everyone who believes in it (IJ) or to God sending messengers to humanity throughout history (IJ, IK, JJ).

6 As translated, as a mercy explains the reason for which God sends revelation and messengers, that is, "for the purpose of mercy," similar to 21:107, which says of God sending the Prophet Muhammad, And We sent thee not, save as a mercy unto the worlds. In the present verse, a mercy could also be read as a continuation of the previous verse, meaning, "We are sending a mercy from thy Lord," in which case a mercy is also understood to be a reference to the Prophet Muhammad (Q).

7 The idolaters among the Makkans acknowledged that there was a Lord and Creator of the heavens and the earth, but then attributed partners to Him. If, however, their acknowledgment were based upon knowledge and certainty, they would know that He is also the One who sends revelation and messengers as a mercy from Him (Aj).

8 That He gives life and causes death (cf. 2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 9:116; 10:56; 22:6; 23:80; 40:68; 53:44; 57:2) indicates God's Power over all phases of existence and nonexistence at all times; see 7:158c.

of your fathers of old. (9) Nay, but they are playing in doubt. (10) So keep watch for a day when the sky brings forth manifest smoke, (11) covering the people. This is a painful punishment. (12) "Our Lord! Remove from us the punishment; truly we are believers." (13) How can there be a reminder for them, when a clear messenger had come to them? (14) Then they turned away from him and said, "He is taught, possessed." (15) We shall indeed remove the punishment a little.

9 The disbelievers are in doubt even when they acknowledge that God is their Creator, as they are only doing so in blind imitation of their forefathers and not on the basis of their own discernment (Q). This verse could also be read as a reference to the manner in which they reject the truth when it comes to them (IK), or to what they attribute to the Prophet, mocking him and saying that he fabricated the revelation (Q); see 10:38; 11:13; 16:101; 21:5; 32:3; 46:8.

10–11 Manifest smoke is understood as one of the signs that the Hour—that is, the end of the world—is at hand (Q). The smoke is said to afflict believers like a harsh cold wind (zukkām), but to penetrate into disbelievers and cause great affliction (Mw, Q). Others understand this verse as a reference to a time when the Prophet prayed for a famine to come upon the disbelievers, and the famine besieged them to such a degree that their eyes were clouded over from the severity of hunger and they saw what appeared to be smoke rising between heaven and earth (IK, JJ, Q, Ṭ), in which case covering the people would refer to the manner in which the smoke overwhelmed them (IK); see also 16:112–13c. A few commentators propose that the day when the sky brings forth manifest smoke refers to the conquest of Makkah (Q), in which case it would refer to the dust stirred up by the Muslim armies as they entered Makkah. This is a painful punishment describes the affliction to which the disbelievers will be subject or reports their own words upon receiving the punishment (Q) or what is said to them by way of rebuke (IK), similar to 52:14.

12 In this verse the disbelievers are saying, "Were you, Our Lord, to remove the punishment, we would be believers" (Q); cf. 6:27; 14:44; 23:99–100; 32:12; 35:37. When vv. 10–11 are understood as a reference to the famine that afflicted the disbelievers, this verse is understood as their plea to the Prophet (Q), similar to the passages in which Pharaoh and his followers ask Moses to remove the punishment of the plagues from them (see commentary on 7:134–35; 43:49–50). The punishment thus refers specifically to the manifest smoke or to the hunger that afflicts them (Mw, Q), which would be one and the same, since the manifest smoke arises as a result of the severe hunger resulting from famine (Q).

13–14 These are among several verses indicating that once the punishment has come upon the disbelievers there will be no opportunity for them to repent or hear another reminder, since they had already denied the messenger or messengers that God had sent to them in this world (JJ); see also 34:52–53c; 35:37; 89:23. Some denied the Prophet by saying that he was taught, he was merely uttering words that he learned from someone else, as in 16:103: Indeed, We know that they say, "He has merely been taught by a human being." Others said that he was possessed by a jinn; see 15:6; 26:27; 37:36; 51:39; 52:29; 54:9; 68:2, 51; 81:22. Similarly, when the disbelievers are called to prostrate in the Hereafter, they will not be able to do so, since they had not heeded the call to prostrate while they were yet sound (68:43).

15 When vv. 10–11 are understood as a reference to the drought and famine that afflicted the Makkan idolaters, this verse can be understood as a reference to the manner in which God dealt with disbelieving communities in the past, relieving them of the punishment for a brief period, after which they reverted to disbelief. Revert renders ʿāʾidūn, which could also be understood to mean "return," in which case this verse would refer to the punishment of the Hereafter, meaning that the disbelievers will return to the Fire over and again (Mw, Q), as in 22:22: Whensoever

Surely you will revert. (16) On the Day when We strike with a terrible striking, surely We are vengeful. (17) And indeed We tried the people of Pharaoh before them, and a noble messenger came unto them: (18) "Deliver God's servants unto me! Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you. (19) And rise not against God; surely I have come to you with a manifest authority. (20) Truly I seek refuge in my Lord and your Lord, lest you stone me. (21) But if you believe me not, then keep away from me." (22) Then he called unto his Lord, "These are a guilty they desire, in their grief, to leave it, they shall be returned unto it, while [being told], "Taste the punishment of the burning!" (cf. 32:20). This verse could also be read as a more general reminder that they will return to God (Q) or to mean that if the disbelievers are granted respite, they will return to their immoral behavior.

16 This verse is understood as referring to either an event in the future or an event that has passed. If the latter, the last sentence would be rendered, "surely We were vengeful." Given the tense of the sentence and the overall Quranic context, this verse would appear to refer to the Day of Resurrection (IK, Mw, Q) or to the Hour (Mw, Q). Nonetheless, as with other Makkan verses that refer to an impending punishment, many commentators understand this verse as an allusion to the Battle of Badr, in which the Muslims defeated the Makkan army (IK, Mw, Q, Ṭ).

17–31 As with other sūrahs that feature the story of Moses (see also 40:23–45; 43:46–56; 51:38–40; 79:15–25), the account given here provides a spiritual example reflecting aspects of the Prophet Muhammad's challenge rather than an in-depth historical account. The more detailed accounts of Moses' mission are found in 2:49–61; 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 17:101–4; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46.

17 That the people were tried alludes to the manner in which all people are tested by the nature of their reaction to the prophets God sends them (R).

18 Here Moses' words echo those spoken by Moses in 7:105, So send forth with me the Children of Israel, and those spoken by Moses and Aaron in 20:47, So send forth with us the Children of Israel and punish them not. The declaration I am a trustworthy messenger unto you indicates that he does not conjecture and has been entrusted by God with revelation (Aj). Such a declaration is also made by the prophets Noah (26:107), Hūd (26:125), Ṣāliḥ (26:143), Lot (26:162), and Shuʿayb (26:178) to their respective communities. "The Trustworthy One" (al-Amīn) is also a name by which the Prophet Muhammad was known.

19 Rise not against God could also be rendered, "Exalt not yourselves against God," meaning, "Do not be too arrogant to follow Him, accept His proofs, and believe in His signs" (IK). A manifest authority (cf. 4:153; 11:96; 23:45; 40:23) refers to the clear signs and definitive proof with which Moses was sent (IK).

20 Some understand lest you stone me as a reference to a verbal assault (IK, R, Ṭ); others understand it more literally (IK, Ṭ) to mean, "lest you kill me" (R); see 26:116c.

21 This verse says, "Refrain from harming me, even if you do not believe me," though the Egyptians did in fact seek to harm Moses (JJ). It can also be understood to mean, "I have nothing to do with you, and you have nothing to do with me (R, Z), so let us each live in peace until God judges between us" (IK), similar to many verses that allude to the Prophet Muhammad's relationship with the idolaters among the Quraysh; see the introduction to Sūrah 109.

22 After Pharaoh and his followers would not permit Moses and the Israelites to practice their religion, Moses implored God to take vengeance upon them, as also described in 10:88: Moses said, "Our Lord! Truly Thou hast given Pharaoh and his notables ornament and wealth in the life of this world, our Lord, so that they may lead astray from Thy way. Our Lord! Blot out their wealth and people." (23) "Set forth with My servants by night; you will indeed be pursued. (24) And leave the sea at rest; truly they will be a drowned host." (25) How many gardens and springs did they leave behind, (26) sown fields and a noble dwelling, (27) and prosperity in which they rejoiced? (28) Thus it was. And We bequeathed it unto another people. (29) Neither Heaven nor earth wept for them, nor were they granted respite. (30) And We delivered the Children of Israel from a humiliating punishment— (31) from Pharaoh. Truly he was foremost among the prodigal. (32) We knowingly chose them over the worlds. (33) And harden their hearts, so that they will not believe till they see the painful punishment."

23–24 Cf. 20:77. Moses is commanded to leave the sea as it is (IK), with a dry path through it (20:77) and to not command it to go back, as he may have been inclined to do (Z), until the last of Pharaoh's host had entered it (IK, Ṭ). This is one of several references to the drowning of Pharaoh and his army in the Red Sea; see also 2:50; 7:136c; 8:54; 10:90; 17:102–3; 28:40; 43:55; 51:40.

25–28 Cf. 26:57–59. The abundance that Pharaoh and his people enjoyed in this world was taken from them in a single morning and left behind for others to enjoy. Prosperity translates naʿmah, which refers generally to pleasures and luxuries. But it could also be read niʿmah, meaning "blessing," and thus refer to all that God had provided for Pharaoh and his people (R, Z).

This passage serves as an admonition to the idolaters among the Quraysh that their wealth and property could be taken from them at any moment for their opposition to the Prophet. In this sense it is similar to those passages that speak of the wealth and power of past generations who were nonetheless destroyed for their iniquities; see 6:6c; 7:4; 17:17; 19:74, 98; 21:11; 22:45; 28:58; 38:3; 44:37; 47:13; 50:36. The property of the Egyptians, or something similar to what they had been granted, was then bequeathed to those whom they had oppressed, as in 26:59: So it was, and We made the Children of Israel to inherit them; see also 7:137c; 28:5c.

29 This verse can be understood as an allusion to the inhabitants of Heaven and earth (Mw, Q, R, Ṭ) or a direct reference to Heaven and earth. According to Islamic tradition, every individual has a gate to Heaven through which provision descends and good deeds ascend. When a believer dies, the gate closes and weeps because it misses the believer, as does the place on earth where the person would pray and remember God. But as the people of Pharaoh left no trace of righteousness on earth and had no good deeds that would ascend to Heaven, neither Heaven nor earth wept for them (IK, Mw, Q, Ṭ). That they were not granted respite means that the punishment came upon them suddenly and without warning.

30–31 Regarding the delivery of the Children of Israel from Egypt, see 2:49–50; 7:141; 10:90; 20:80; 26:65.

32 The Children of Israel were chosen above the other people of their own time (IK, Q, Ṭ) in receiving revelation and religion (Mw); see 45:16c. Maybudī maintains that this verse can also be understood as an allusion to God's having chosen human beings above all other animals, as in 17:70: We have indeed honored the Children of Adam; and to human beings being the most beautiful of God's creations, as in 95:4: Truly We created man in the most beautiful stature.

33 The signs in this verse can be understood as a reference to the deliverance of the Children of Israel from their enemies, the splitting of the sea for them, and the manna and quails they received (see 2:57c; 7:160–62c; 20:80; Mw, Q, Ṭ) or as a reference to the miracles that Moses performed for Pharaoh, such as when his hand turned white and his staff became a snake (Mw, Q). The manifest trial refers to a clear test that would demonstrate who was rightly guided and who was not (IK, Mw); a clear blessing (Mw, Q, Ṭ), which would then become a trial to those who were not thankful; or a severe punishment (Mw, Q, Ṭ), which would then be a punishment for

We gave them signs wherein was a manifest trial. (34) Truly these say, (35) "There is naught but our first death, and we shall not be resurrected. (36) Bring us our fathers, if you are truthful." (37) Are they better, or the people of Tubba^{c} and those before them? We destroyed them. Truly they were guilty. (38) And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in play. (39) We did not create them, save in truth. But most of them know not. (40) Truly the Day of Division is their tryst, all together. (41) The Day when no friend will avail a friend in any way, nor will they be helped, (42) save him unto those afflicted with it. When viewed in light of 21:35—We try you with evil and with good, as a test, and unto Us shall you be returned—the manifest trial can be understood as a general reference to the manner in which human beings react to both good and evil with either faith or disbelief (Ṭ). Alternately, it can be understood as a reference to the oppression that the Israelites endured at the hands of Pharaoh, as in 7:141: And when We saved you from the House of Pharaoh, who inflicted terrible punishment upon you, slaying your sons and sparing your women. And in this was a great trial from your Lord.

34–36 These verses present a way of denying the Resurrection also employed by the Makkan idolaters in 45:25 and 56:47–48.

37 Tubba^{c} was the title given to a succession of Himyarite kings who ruled for centuries over southern Arabia and were defeated by the Abyssinians in the fourth century AD. Some understand Tubba^{c} to be the title that the people of Sheba, who were in Yemen (see 34:15–19), gave their kings (IK). In 50:14 the people of Tubba^{c} are mentioned as among those who denied God's messengers and the Resurrection. According to some, Tubba^{c} refers to a righteous king who had called his people to God, but they denied him (JJ on 50:14). Some debate whether this Tubba^{c} to whom reference is made in the Quran was a prophet, since the Prophet is reported to have said, "I know not whether Tubba^{c} was a prophet" (Aj, Bd, IK, Q). Although the people of Tubba^{c} were stronger than the Quraysh, they were destroyed for their disbelief (JJ). In this sense, the reference to them is similar to verses that speak of previous generations or "towns" that were destroyed for their wrongdoing, despite being stronger in their earthly provision and material situation than were the Quraysh of Makkah; see 6:6; 7:4; 17:17; 19:74, 98; 21:11; 22:45; 28:58; 38:3; 47:13; 50:36.

38–39 Cf. 21:16; 38:27. Similar to v. 38, in 23:115, the denizens of Hell are asked, Did you suppose, then, that We created you frivolously, and that you would not be returned unto Us? Similar to v. 39, other verses say, And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth (15:85; 46:3). All such verses indicate that, contrary to the pre-Islamic understanding of creation in Arabia, creation has a definite purpose. With regard to human beings, this means that they are created for faith and obedience (Aj), as in 51:56, I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me, and to be resurrected and requited in accord with the degree to which they fulfilled their purpose.

40 That creation is not made frivolously or in play (v. 38) alludes to the consequences of its being created for a purpose and thus to Resurrection and the Day of Judgment (R), which is here called the Day of Division (37:21; 77:13–14, 38; 78:17; see also 10:28; 30:14, 43), indicating the manner in which people will be divided from relatives and loved ones (Aj) and the manner in which the Judgment will divide believers and disbelievers from one another for eternity.

41–42 Concerning the Day of Judgment, the Quran states, There shall be no kinship between them that Day, nor will they question one another (23:101) and that none can avail another against God's Punishment (2:48, 123; 3:10, 116; 26:88; 31:33; 86:10); see 40:18c; 43:67c. They will in fact be so consumed by terror regarding their own fate that no loyal friend shall ask about a loyal friend, whom God has been merciful. Truly He is the Mighty, the Merciful. (43) Truly the tree of Zaqqūm (44) is the food of the sinner, (45) like molten lead boiling in their bellies, (46) like the boiling of boiling liquid. (47) "Seize him and thrust him into the midst of Hellfire! (48) Then pour the punishment of boiling liquid upon his head." (49) "Taste! Surely you are the mighty, the noble. (50) This is that which you used to doubt." (51) Truly the reverent are in a station secure, (52) amid gardens and springs, (53) wearing fine silk and rich brocade, facing one another. (54) Thus it is. And We shall wed them to wide-eyed maidens. (55) Therein they call for every fruit, secure. (56) They taste not death therein, save the first death. And He will shield them from the punishment of Hellfire— (57) a bounty from thy Lord; that is the great triumph. (58) We have only made this easy upon thy tongue, that haply they may remember. (59) So be on the watch, for they, too, are on the watch.

[though] they will be made to see them. The guilty would wish to ransom himself from the punishment of that Day at the price of his children, his spouse, and his brother, his kin who had sheltered him, and all who are on the earth, that it might save him (70:10–14). Nothing will be of any avail on that Day except God's Mercy (IK).

43–44 Just as the people of Paradise receive fruits that befit their station, so too the people of Hell receive fruits that befit theirs; Zaqqūm (cf. 37:62; 56:52) is foremost among these. Zaqqūm is one of the vilest and most bitter trees of the Tihāmah region of Arabia (JJ). Some understand its use in the Quran to be a metaphor for and an allusion to the ignorance, doubts, and demonic suggestions that people allow to fill their hearts (Aj on 56:52). The Prophet is reported to have said of the Zaqqūm referred to in the Quran, "If but one drop of Zaqqūm were to fall into the oceans of this world, it would pollute them for all its inhabitants. How shall it be, then, for the one whose nourishment it has become?" (IK, Z).

45–46 Some read boiling as taghlī rather than yaghlī, in which case it applies to the tree of Zaqqūm rather than the food of the sinner or the molten lead (IJ, Z). According to this reading, v. 45 could also be rendered, "Like molten lead it boils in their bellies." Regarding molten lead, which is also said to scald faces (18:29), see 18:29c; 70:8c. Boiling liquid (cf. 6:70; 10:4; 37:67; 38:57; 40:72; 47:15; 56:42, 54; 78:24–25) renders ḥamīm, which indicates something that has reached its maximum temperature, but can also indicate severe, painful cold.

47 Seize him—that is, the sinner—is God's command to the angels who serve as the guardians of Hell (al-zabāniyah; see 96:17–18c; IJ, JJ). Elsewhere the Day of Judgment is referred to as a day when the disbelievers are thrust into the Fire of Hell with [violent] thrusting (52:13).

48 V. 46 and other verses say that those in Hell will drink a boiling liquid, but this is one of two verses (cf. 22:19) that say that it will be poured upon their heads. That this is the punishment of boiling liquid implies that it is only one of many other punishments (Aj).

49–50 These verses represent either God's direct address to the disbelievers or the words of the guardians of Hell to the inhabitants of Hell while the guardians are carrying out God's Command (IK, Q). These words are spoken by way of ridicule and rebuke for the exalted image that the disbelievers had of themselves while in this world (IJ, Ṭ, Z). Some say that these verses refer specifically to Abū Jahl, one of the leaders of the Quraysh, who is reported to have held himself in high esteem, claiming to be mighty and noble among his people (Aj, IJ, Q, Ṭ). Taste implies, "Taste the punishment that you have brought upon yourselves through your disbelief and your actions" (JJ; see 3:106, 181; 4:56; 6:30; 7:39; 8:35, 50; 10:52; 22:22; 32:14, 20; 34:42; 46:34). Surely you renders innaka, which is read by some as annaka, meaning, "because you are" (IJ, Q, Ṭ, Z); that is, they used to doubt because of their attitude of haughtiness. This refers specifically to the punishment that they receive (Q, R, Z) or more generally to the whole affair of judgment, reckoning, and punishment (Z), regarding all of which they were playing in doubt (v. 9). While here the disbelievers are mocked for doubting, elsewhere they are chastised for denying the punishment of the Hereafter; see also 32:20; 34:42; 52:13–16; 83:17.

51–52 In contrast to those described in vv. 41–50, the reverent (see 2:2c) are in a station where they are secure from death and from Satan (as well as from the fear of leaving that station) and from all worry, grief, terror, and exhaustion (IK). Station secure translates maqām amīn, which can also be read muqām amīn (Q, R, Ṭ, Z), in which case it would be rendered, "Abiding in security." Whereas in vv. 25–26 Pharaoh and his followers had to leave behind the fleeting gardens and springs of this world, the reverent are secure among gardens and springs that are everlasting.

53 For fine silk and rich brocade, see 18:31c; 76:21. That the inhabitants of Paradise are facing one another (cf. 15:47; 37:44; 56:16) implies that none shall need to sit behind another (JJ), since all will be equally exalted. In other instances, this description is joined with a reference to reclining upon couches (e.g., 15:47; 37:44).

54 Thus it is renders kadhālika, which can mean, "This is how it is" (Q, Ṭ), and which is understood by some as an expression of wonder and incomparability, as if to say that the like of this is beyond description (Aj). Kadhālika can also be understood to mean "similarly" or "likewise" (Q, R, Ṭ, Z). In this context it would then mean, "Just as we made them enter the Garden and did to them what was mentioned previously, likewise We have honored them by wedding them to wide-eyed maidens" (Q).

Wide-eyed maidens translates ḥūr ʿīn (see also 52:20; 56:22), which literally means someone with eyes whose whites are extremely white and whose pupils are extremely black (Āl, Q, R). Others say that it indicates "the appearance of little white in the eye around the black," which was considered the height of beauty for the eye (Iṣ). It also conveys the notion of purity; thus Ḥasan al-Baṣrī is reported to have said that ḥūr ʿīn means the righteous women among human beings (Ṭ). In the commentary on 52:20, al-Rāzī observes that inasmuch as the eye reflects the soul more clearly than any other part of the body, the use of wide-eyed (ʿīn) in this phrase may be understood to mean "rich of soul." A minority say that wide-eyed maidens refers to the state of the women of this world in Paradise (Āl, R). But most commentators agree that the wide-eyed maidens are not the women of this world (Āl, R). According to various aḥādīth they are maidens made from musk, camphor, and saffron (Āl). Another ḥadīth says, "The creation of the wide-eyed maidens is from glorifications made by angels" (Āl). Nonetheless, the pious women of this world are thought to be of a higher station (Aj). For additional references to the maidens who await the righteous in Paradise, see 38:52; 55:56; 78:33.

55 The inhabitants of Paradise will receive whatsoever souls desire (43:71; cf. 41:31; 52:22; 56:20–24; 77:41–44), whatsoever they will (16:31; 25:16; 39:34; 42:22; 50:35), and whatsoever they call for (36:57; cf. 41:31), and they are secure from it ever being cut off (IJ, Q). In contrast, for the disbelievers a barrier is set between them and that which they desire (34:54).

56 The reverent experience only the physical death of this world and experience no death in Paradise (Q, R, Z). They will be spared the punishment of the Hereafter, but the disbelievers will experience it continually, as if they were forced to die again and again (see 14:18c). In this sense, that the reverent taste not death stands in contrast to the claim posed by the disbelievers in v. 35 that they will taste but one death. That God will shield them from the punishment of Hellfire (cf. 52:18) is integral to the Mercy of the Divine Nature, which precedes God's Wrath. Upon seeing a woman clutch her child to her breast, the Prophet asked his Companions, "Do you think this woman would allow her child to be thrown into the fire?" They replied, "By God, insofar as she is able, she would never allow the child to be thrown into a fire." The Prophet then said, "And God is more tender toward His servants than is this woman toward her child."

57 Everything the reverent attain in the preceding verses comes from God's Bounty (R). Many understand this verse to mean that none of the rewards mentioned here are deserved by the reverent as such; rather, they are bestowed out of God's Bounty, because the good deeds that people do and the faith they have attained have themselves arisen from God's Bounty (R).

58 This verse harkens back to the reference to the Quran in vv. 2–3. That it is easy upon thy tongue explains in part how it is a clear Book (R). It is similar to the refrain of Sūrah 54: And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember (54:17, 22, 32, 40). The ease with which the Quran can be recited and remembered is said to be not only for oneself, but also for the purpose of conveying it to others, that they might be admonished and then become believers (JJ), as in 19:97: We have only made this easy upon thy tongue that thou mayest give glad tidings unto the reverent thereby, and that thereby thou mayest warn a contentious people.

59 This verse instructs the Prophet, "Be on the watch for the disbelievers' destruction, just as they are on the watch for yours" (JJ), "Await the aid against them that I have promised you. They await your death" (Q), or "Await the victory from your Lord. They await the destruction they claim will befall you" (Q); see also 6:158; 7:71; 9:52; 10:20, 102; 11:122; 32:30; 52:31.

Upon Their Knees

al-Jāthiyah

A late Makkan sūrah, al-Jāthiyah is believed to have been revealed immediately after Sūrah 44, al-Dukhān (JJ). Although some maintain that the entire sūrah is from the Makkan period, others maintain that v. 14 is from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ, JJ, Q). The sūrah takes its name from v. 28, which states that on the Day of Judgment every community will be upon its knees (cf. 19:68). It is also known to some as al-Sharīᶜah, because it is the only sūrah to employ the term sharīᶜah, which later came to denote Islamic Law. Another name is al-Dahr ("Time"), a reference to al-dahr in v. 24, which can mean "time," "fate," or "the passage of time." The initial reference to the revelation of the Book can be seen as being connected to the second to last verse of the previous sūrah: We have only made this easy upon thy tongue, that haply they may remember (44:58; Aj).

Al-Jāthiyah contains one of the most explicit and extended Quranic discussions of "the signs of God," enjoining people to reflect upon them and describing the fate that will befall those who deny them. It begins with a discussion of the signs of God in revelation and in the created order and the fate of those who fail to believe in them and understand them (vv. 2–15). A brief mention of the Children of Israel (vv. 16–17) segues into an address to the Prophet Muhammad (vv. 18–19), which is followed by a reiteration of the fate that befalls those who deny God's insights, or signs (vv. 20–21). The remainder of the sūrah continues the focus upon those who deny God's signs and the Final Judgment (vv. 22–26) and upon the great peril that awaits them on the Day of Judgment (vv. 27–37).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Ḥā. Mīm. (2) The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Wise. (3) Truly in the heavens and the earth are signs for believers. (4) And in your creation and in what He has scattered of animals are signs for a people who are certain. (5) And in the variation of the night and the day, and in that which God sends down from the sky as provision whereby He revives the earth after its death, and in the shifting of the winds are signs for a people who understand.

1 This sūrah is the sixth in a series of seven *sūrah*s that open with the Arabic letters ḥāʾ and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm. The Arabic letters ḥāʾ and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine *sūrah*s (see 2:1c) and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God. For some possible meanings of the letters ḥāʾ and mīm, see 40:1c.

2 Cf. 39:1; 40:2; 46:2. For the meaning of this verse, see 39:1c; for other possible readings, see 40:2c. That the Quran has come from the Mighty alludes to its being inimitable (muʿjiz), overcoming all and not able to be overcome, while its coming from the Wise alludes to its comprising conclusive wisdom (ḥikmah bāligḥāh; 54:5) as well as to its being definitive (muḥkam; Aj).

3 This is one of many verses that call human beings to reflect upon God's signs in the created order, since they are seen as indications of His Oneness (Aj). Signs translates āyāt, which refers to the verses of the Quran, the natural phenomena in the heavens and on the earth, and the signs within the human soul. The heavens and the earth are filled with signs for believers (cf. 6:99; 15:77; 16:79; 27:86; 29:24, 44; 30:37; 39:52), for a people who reflect (13:3; 30:21; 39:42; 45:13; cf. 10:24), for a people who hear (10:67; 16:65; 30:23), for those who know (30:22), for a people who understand (2:164; 13:4; 16:12, 67; 30:24; 45:5), for a people who are reverent (10:6), for those possessed of intelligence (20:54, 128), for the possessors of intellect (3:190), for those who possess insight (3:13) and for a people who are certain (45:4; cf. 51:20).

Signs (āyāt) occurs twelve times in this short sūrah, especially in the first section (vv. 3–8), where it is used interchangeably as a reference to the wonders of the created order (vv. 3–5) and the verses of the Quran (vv. 6–8), suggesting a subtle connection between revelation and the created order. This connection has led many Islamic philosophers and mystics to view the created order as "the cosmic Quran" (al-Qurʾān al-takwīnī) as distinguished from "the written Quran" (al-Qurʾān al-tadwīnī). When understood by those with certainty in their hearts, the signs of the created order are said to guide, by their very being (kawn), to the One who brought them into being (al-Mukawwin; ST). In this vein, al-Ghazzali writes that for those who are masters of their hearts, God makes "every atom in the heavens and the earth speak to them . . . until they hear their celebration and glorification of God . . . speaking without letters and without voices" (Iḥyāʾ ʿulūm al-dīn, K. al-Tawḥīd wa 'l-tawakkul).

4 Signs in your creation refers to all phases of human life, from gestation to growth to the waning of life (IK); for the Quranic discussion of the phases of life, see 16:70c; 22:5–6c; 23:13–14; 30:54; 40:67. In your creation can also be understood as an allusion to the manner in which God has honored human beings by endowing them with knowledge and understanding, subordinating the rest of creation to them (Aj) and making them vicegerents upon the earth (see 6:165; 35:39; cf. 2:30). For other references to the signs within human beings, see 41:53c; 51:20–21c.

5 The variation of the night and the day (cf. 2:164; 3:190; 10:6; 23:80; 24:44) points to the

(6) These are the signs of God that We recite unto thee in truth. So in what discourse after God and His signs do they believe? (7) Woe unto every sinful liar! (8) He hears the signs of God recited unto him, then persists arrogantly as if he heard it not. So give him glad tidings of a painful punishment. (9) And when he comes to know aught of Our signs, he takes them in mockery. For regularity and rhythm in human life and the impermanent nature of life in this world, which is characterized by finitude. In other verses, the alternation of night and day is presented as a direct reflection of God's Omnipotence, since God makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night (22:61; 31:29; 35:13; 57:6; cf. 3:27; 39:5); see 31:29c. Night and day are also invoked as Divine blessings and mercies for human beings, as in 27:86: Have they not considered that We made the night that they might rest therein, and the day by which to see? Truly in that are signs for a people who believe (cf. 6:96–97c; 10:67; 25:47; 40:61).

The shifting of the winds alludes to the role of the winds in carrying ships across the sea and in pollinating vegetation (Aj). In the Quran, winds (pl.) is employed to convey Divine Mercy, as in 7:57 and 25:48: He it is Who sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy (see also 25:48; 27:63; 30:46; 35:9). In contrast, wind (sing.) is used in the Quran to express God's Wrath and Punishment (see 3:117; 10:22; 17:69; 22:31; 30:51; 33:9; 41:16; 46:24).

6 In the context of this sūrah, the signs that God "recites" refers to the verses of the revealed Book and to the signs of God in the created order (Aj), both of which are said to come in truth, or "through truth"; see 45:22c. In this sense, this verse can be understood to mean, "In what discourse other than the most beautiful discourse [see 39:23c] and the most evident signs will they believe?" (Aj). Or it can be understood to mean, "How could they believe in any other discourse after hearing this discourse?" According to another canonical reading, do they believe (yu'minūn) could be read "do you believe" (tu'minūn; Q, Z). Both readings imply that if people cannot believe in these signs, they will not believe in anything of a religious nature.

7 Regarding woe unto, see 2:79c. Liar translates affāk, which indicates those who turn away from the truth and lie to themselves because they are perverted in intellect and judgment; see 29:61c. Sinner translates athīm, which is an intensive form indicating an inveterate sinner.

8 This verse is reported to have been revealed regarding al-Naḍr ibn al-Ḥārith, who would transmit foreign stories, or "discourses," and use them to distract the people from listening to the Quran (Aj, Q, R). Nonetheless, it is understood as a general reference to all who turn away from God's signs when they hear them (Aj). Although such people hear the Quran, it is as if they do not hear, because they are spiritually deaf and thus do not understand, as in 6:25: Among them are those who listen to thee, but We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they do not understand, and a deafness in their ears (cf. 2:171; 5:71; 6:25, 39; 8:22; 10:42; 17:46; 18:57; 21:46; 31:7; 41:5, 44; 47:23); see 6:25c. Although glad tidings usually indicates the good news of the means to salvation that prophets bring, here as elsewhere (see 3:21; 4:138; 9:3, 34; 31:7; 84:24), it is used with a sense of irony indicating that the hypocrites and disbelievers will receive the painful punishment that they seem to "desire."

9 Given the use of signs in connection with both the created order and the verses of revelation, this verse can be understood as a reference to those who mock the signs in creation by failing to acknowledge their Divine Origin and their disclosure of God's Reality, failing to be grateful for them, and those who mock the revealed signs by denying revelation. That they come to know some of the signs of God refers to memorizing something of the Quran (IK) or to obtaining a surface knowledge of the Quran or the created world without being able to connect the signs in either of them to their Source. Arrogance toward God's signs implies a personal refusal to believe in them, but mocking them can be seen as a more severe manifestation of disbelief, since it implies actively repudiating God's signs in the presence of other people.

them there shall be a humiliating punishment. (10) Beyond them lies Hell. That which they have earned will avail them naught, nor that which they have taken apart from God as protectors; and theirs shall be a great punishment. (11) This is guidance; and those who disbelieve in the signs of their Lord, theirs shall be a painful punishment of torment. (12) God it is Who made the sea subservient unto you, that ships may sail upon it by His Command, and that you may seek His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks. (13) He made subservient unto you whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth—all together. Truly in that are signs for a people who reflect. (14) Tell those who believe to 10 Beyond them translates min warā'ihim, which can refer to something that lies in front of or behind them (Aj, Q, R, Z). In this sense it can mean that Hell lies before the disbelievers because they are headed toward it, or that it lies behind them because they have turned away from it and ignore its reality (Aj). In either interpretation, that which they have earned, meaning wealth and children (Aj, IK, Q, Ṭ), cannot help them avoid God's Punishment, as in 3:10: As for those who disbelieve, neither their wealth nor their children will avail them aught against God. And it is they who shall be fuel for the Fire (cf. 3:116; 58:17). Protectors is understood by most to be a reference to the idols and gods that the idolaters worshipped, but who cannot protect them from the great punishment, since, as they are warned in 21:98: You and that which you worship apart from God shall be fuel for Hell. Unto it you shall come. The term protectors can also be understood as a broader reference to everything upon which they rely that is other than God; see 18:102c.

11 This Quran (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z), or everything with which the Prophet came (Q), represents complete and perfect guidance (Aj, Z). Although most understand signs of their Lord as a direct reference to the verses of the Quran (Ṭ, Z), in the context of this sūrah it can also be understood as a reference to God's signs in the created order. Regarding a painful punishment of torment, see 34:5c.

12 This is one of several verses to refer to seafaring as a blessing from God; see also 2:164; 14:32; 17:66; 22:65; 30:46; 31:31; 35:12; 40:80; 42:32–34c. Seek His Bounty refers to the advantages of travel by sea and to the food and precious jewels that can be obtained from the sea (Z).

13 God has made all things subservient to humanity (cf. 14:33; 22:65; 31:20) insofar as He has made human beings His vicegerents upon the earth (6:165; 35:39; cf. 2:30); see also 43:12–13c. From a spiritual perspective, when one's heart finds tranquility in God, its Master, one becomes a true servant and everything is made subservient to Him (ST). Seen in this light, this verse serves as an admonition to human beings not to become preoccupied or engrossed with the things of this world to the extent that they forget God, since they would then serve what was created to serve them rather than serving their true Master. In this vein, a well-known saying sometimes said to be a ḥadīth qudsī states, "God says, 'O Son of Adam! I created the things [of this world] for you. And I created you for Me. So let not that which I created for you distract you from that for which I created you," meaning do not let serving creation distract you from serving the Creator (Aj). Regarding the reference to aspects of creation as signs for a people who reflect, see 13:3; 30:21; 39:42; elsewhere God is said to expound the signs for a people who reflect (10:24).

14 Those who hope not for the days of God refers to the disbelievers and hypocrites who neither hope for the reward of the Hereafter nor fear God's Punishment (Q, R). According to some commentators, those who hope not for the days of God was revealed on an expedition to the Arab tribe of Banu'l-Muṣṭaliq. The Muslims stopped by forgive those who hope not for the days of God, that He may requite a people for that which they used to earn. (15) Whosoever works righteousness, it is for his own soul. And whosoever commits evil, it is to the detriment thereof. Then unto your Lord shall you be returned. (16) And indeed We gave the Children of Israel the Book, judgment, and prophethood, and We provided them with a well and ᶜAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy, the leader of the hypocrites, sent his slave to get some water. When he came back, he asked him, "What has delayed you?" His slave replied, "The slave of ᶜUmar stood at the opening of the well and did not let anyone draw water until he filled up the water skins of the Prophet, Abū Bakr, and his own master." ᶜAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy exclaimed, "Our example and the example of these people is as the saying goes: fatten your dog, and he will eat you." By this statement, he was implying that the Prophet, who had come to Madinah as a powerless guest, was cared for by the Madinan population, and had now turned against them to bring them harm; see 9:74c. When ᶜUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb heard this, he seized his sword, intending to kill ᶜAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy, but then God revealed this verse (IJ, Q, R, W). This verse may, however, have already been revealed when this incident occurred, and the Prophet simply recited it to ᶜUmar at this time to calm him and maintain the peace.

According to another account, when the verse Who is it that will lend unto God a goodly loan? (57:11; cf. 2:245) was revealed, a Jewish man in Madinah by the name of Finḥās said, "Muhammad's Lord is in need!" When ᶜUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb heard this utterance, he grabbed his sword and went looking for him. So Gabriel went to the Messenger of God and said to him, "Your Lord says to you, 'Tell those who believe to forgive those who hope not for the days of God.' " The Prophet replied, "No doubt. By Him Who has sent thee with the truth, anger will not show upon my face!" (Q, W). Some maintain that this verse was abrogated, but al-Qurṭubī notes that, if the verse is from the Madinan period, such abrogation is unlikely.

The command to forgive and be gentle with disbelievers and hypocrites can be understood as following from the allusion to the signs in your creation (v. 4), since if one reflects upon the signs of God, one will recognize the honor due to all human beings. As al-Rāzī observes, discussions of the nature of the created order in the Quran are often followed by discussions of virtuous conduct. In this sense, the admonition to forgive those who hope not for the days of God can be understood to mean that when one acts in accord with the nature of things, one will forgive others, remembering that one's own faith and understanding are blessings from God, as in 7:43, where the believers are reported to say, Praise be to God, Who guided us unto this. We would not have been rightly guided, had God not guided us. In the context of the previous verses, to forgive others is also part of recognizing that the subservience of creation to human beings and the position of being God's vicegerent is a blessing from God, as when the believers are enjoined to say, Glory be to God, Who made this subservient unto us, though we were not equal to it. Truly unto our Lord do we turn (43:13–14).

15 For the first two sentences, see 41:46c. In relation to v. 14, the reminder that ultimately everyone will bear the consequences of his or her own actions serves to explain why it is best for the believers to forgive the disbelievers.

16 Here the Book refers to the Torah, while judgment refers to the Israelites' understanding of the Torah (Q), thus to knowledge and wisdom (R). Good things refers to the blessings given to the Israelites in this world, such as the wealth of the Egyptians, which they inherited (see 7:137c; 26:59c; 28:5; 44:28), and the manna and quails through which they were sustained in the desert (see 2:57; 7:160; 20:80; R). They are mentioned after the Book, judgment, and prophethood to illustrate the superiority of spiritual benefits over those that pertain only to this world (R). That God favored the Israelites above the worlds (cf. 2:47, 122; 7:140) refers to the blessings mentioned above and is understood as a reference to their good things, and We favored them above the worlds. (17) And We gave them clear proofs from the Command. And they differed not till after knowledge had come unto them, out of envy among themselves. Thy Lord will surely judge between them on the Day of Resurrection regarding that wherein they used to differ. (18) Then We placed thee upon a clear path from the Command; so follow it, and follow not the caprices of those who know not. (19) Truly they will avail you naught against God. And surely the wrongdoers are the protectors of being chosen above the other people of their own time (IK, Q, Ṭ); see also 5:20c.

17 Clear proofs from the Command refers generally to unequivocal proofs (IK) and more specifically to clear delineations between what is forbidden and what is permissible (Q) or to the miracles that God gave to Moses as proof of his prophethood (R). Viewed in light of the preceding verse, this phrase most likely refers to Moses and the Children of Israel. But when viewed in light of the subsequent verse, some understand clear proofs to mean the indications that God gave the Prophet Muhammad that he would migrate to Madinah and that he would receive help from its people (Q, R). According to this interpretation, that they differed not till after knowledge had come unto them (cf. 10:93) refers to the Jews of Madinah who rejected Muhammad's prophethood, and out of envy among themselves refers to their being jealous of the Prophet (Q). Their differing after being given knowledge is also interpreted as a more general reference to the manner in which religious communities fracture out of envy among themselves (Q); see 2:213; 3:19, 105; 10:93; 23:53; 42:14; 43:63–65; 98:4c. In such instances, it is not knowledge itself that leads them to differ, but the manner in which some seek leadership and advancement through such knowledge and thus to the envy that arises from it (R). Regarding the nature of envy, see 113:5c. Regarding the manner in which religious difference leads to envy, see commentary on 23:53, which speaks of different religious factions, each party exulting in what it had. For God judging between them regarding that wherein they used to differ, see 2:113; 10:93; 16:124c; 32:25; 39:3.

18 After giving the Israelites gifts (v. 16), God placed the Prophet Muhammad upon a clear path like those upon which He had placed the messengers before him (Ṭ). In this context, clear path translates sharīʿah, which later became the technical term for Islamic Law, though it occurs only this one time in the Quran. Linguistically, sharīʿah means a straight, smooth path that leads to water, which in the deserts of Arabia would also have meant a path to salvation from death. In this context it thus appears to indicate a clear path by which God leads people to the truth (Q). The manner in which sharīʿah is juxtaposed to caprices (ahwāʾ; sing. hawā) indicates the moral and spiritual implications associated with the term. This is one of several verses to enjoin the Prophet not to acquiesce to the caprices of the People of the Book (see 2:120, 145; 5:48–49; 13:37; 42:15), while elsewhere he is told not to follow the caprices of the disbelievers (cf. 6:56, 150). Regarding the nature of caprice, see 45:23c. According to some commentators, this verse was revealed after some of the leaders of the Quraysh called upon the Prophet to return to the religion of his forefathers, maintaining that the forefathers were preferable to him (R).

19 Following upon v. 18, this verse enjoins the Muslims to make no pacts that would compromise the integrity of the Quranic message, as in 68:8–9: Obey not the deniers. They wish that thou wouldst compromise, so that they would compromise. Abandoning the potential benefits of protection from other tribes constituted a great risk for the small Muslim community. Nonetheless, 5:51 maintains that whosoever takes them as protectors, surely he is of them. The Muslims are thus enjoined to take one another as protectors, as in 9:71: But the believing men and believing women are protectors of one another, enjoining right and forbidding wrong, performing the prayer, giving the alms, and obeying God and His Messenger. They one another, while God is the Protector of the reverent. (20) These are insights for mankind, and guidance and mercy for a people who are certain. (21) Or do those who commit evil deeds suppose that We shall treat them like those who believe and perform righteous deeds equally in their life and in their death? Evil indeed is the judgment they make! (22) God created the heavens and the earth in truth, and so that every soul may be recompensed for that which it has earned; and they shall not be wronged. (23) Hast thou considered one who takes his caprice as his god, God having led him astray knowingly, and sealed are those upon whom God will have mercy. See commentary on 8:72–73.

20 The beginning of this verse is literally, "This is insights," meaning that the Quran is a means by which people gain insight into the truth, are able to distinguish truth from falsehood, and know the path to right guidance (Ṭ), because the Quran provides evidence that suffices for the insight of the heart (R); see commentary on 7:203, where the Prophet is told to say, I only follow that which is revealed unto me from my Lord. These are insights from your Lord, and a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe. According to some, these are insights means "these are signs" (Q, Z). A people who are certain refers to those who are certain that the message of the Quran is true (Ṭ) or more broadly to those who have belief and certitude in the Unseen (Aj).

21 This verse presents a rebuke posed as a question to the disbelievers. As with most such rhetorical questions in the Quran, it is answered elsewhere, since the Quran maintains throughout that the good and the wicked are not equal (5:100); see 32:18–19c. Here equally renders sawāʾan, understood as an adverb modifying the verb "treat." In other canonical readings, the term is read sawāʾun (Q, R, Ṭ), in which case the last phrase would be rendered, "equal their life and their death" or "their life and their death being equal" (Q, Z), meaning, "Are the life and death of those who commit evil deeds equal with, or on the same footing as, the life and death of those who believe and perform righteous deeds?" (Q). In this sense, the verse alludes to the difference between their states in the Hereafter (Z). It could also be understood to mean that the believer and the disbeliever will not be on equal footing in the Hereafter as they appeared to be in this world, since the true difference between them will become manifest in the Hereafter (R).

22 That God created the heavens and the earth in truth (cf. 6:73; 16:3; 29:44; 39:5; 64:3) is reiterated in various ways in the Quran (see 10:5; 14:19; 15:85; 30:8; 46:3); see 29:44c; 44:38–39c. In relation to the previous verse, it indicates why the life and death of the believers and those of the disbelievers are not equal. Since all things are balanced in truth, every soul will be recompensed in accord with the good or evil it has done (Q, Ṭs; cf. 3:161; 40:17; 74:38) and shall not be wronged (cf. 2:181; 3:25, 161; 16:111; 39:69; 46:19); see 36:54c.

23 The caprice that people are said to take as their god is defined as the inclination of the soul to passion and lust (shahwah). The verb from which caprice derives, hawā/yahwī, means both "to blow" and "to fall or tumble," and when combined with the preposition bi means "to overthrow." Caprice can thus be said to be something that blows the soul one way and another and overthrows the soul through the calamities of this world, making it tumble into an abyss (al-hāwiyah, from the same root, h-w-y; 101:9) in the Hereafter (Iṣ). The word hawāʾ, meaning vacant, from the same root, is also used to describe the vacuity of the hearts of disbelievers on the Day of Judgment (see 14:43). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "The intelligent person is one who takes his soul to account and works for that which follows death. The inept person is one who allows his soul to follow his caprice, yet hopes for God" (Aj). References to God's misleading or causing to go astray (cf. 13:27; 14:4, 27; his hearing and his heart and placed a cover upon his sight? Who, then, will guide him after God? Will you not, then, remember? (24) They say, "There is naught but our life in this world. We die and we live, and none destroys us save time." But they have no knowledge thereof. They do naught but conjecture. (25) And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, their argument is naught but to say, "Bring us our fathers, if you are truthful." (26) Say, "God gives you life; then causes you to die; then He gathers you together on the Day 16:93; 22:4; 35:8; 40:34, 74:31) can be understood in light of 2:26, And He misleads none but the iniquitous, to mean that going astray is a result of one's own iniquities and not the outcome of arbitrary predestination. Those who are led astray are thus those whose hearts, according to several verses, are "veiled," "covered," or "sealed" so as to prevent spiritual comprehension (see 2:7c; 6:25, 46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 17:46; 18:57, 101; 30:59; 47:16c; 63:3; 83:14–15).

Regarding the question, Who, then, will guide him after God? see commentary on 7:186: Whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. And He leaves them to wander confused in their rebellion. The rhetorical question Will you not, then, remember? is one of the Quran's many invitations to reflect upon its parables and proofs or God's signs in order to facilitate spiritual understanding (see, e.g., 11:24, 30; 16:17; 30:8; 37:155; 56:62; 3:191c).

24 Cf. 23:37. There is naught but our life in this world refers to the disbelievers' rejection of Resurrection. We die and we live refers to the idea that there is only one life and one death with no afterlife; or it means, "Some of us die and some of us live," or "We die and our children live" (Q, R). In pre-Islamic Arabia when hardship befell someone, it was common to say, "Curse the passage of time (al-dahr)". (IK). The Prophet enjoined his followers not to do so, saying, "God says, 'The son of Adam vexes Me when he curses time, for I am Time (Dahr). In My Hands lies the affair, and it is I Who alternate the day and the night" (IK, Q). This is understood to mean that the alternation of life followed by eventual death, which were attributed to the mere passage of time, are in fact caused by God (Q, R), so when one curses time for one's sufferings, one is in fact cursing God, since He is the Agent behind all that transpires (Q).

The disbelievers' failure to understand the manner in which the passage of time attests to the Omnipotence of God and the meeting with Him is yet another consequence of failing to reflect upon the signs of God. Thus they have no knowledge thereof (cf. 43:20). That they do naught but conjecture then means that what they do say regarding what follows the life of this world has no foundation, as in 53:28: Yet they have no knowledge thereof. They follow naught but conjecture; and surely conjecture avails naught against the Truth; see also 49:12c.

25 Our signs here are signs regarding the Resurrection and the recompense that awaits the disbelievers (Q, Ṭ). Since many verses of the Quran attest to the Resurrection and the signs of the created order are often cited as signs of God's ability to resurrect, this verse can be read as a reference to both revelation and creation. That they can only respond by saying, Bring us our fathers, if you are truthful (cf. 44:36) illustrates their misunderstanding of Resurrection, since they seek to define it in terms of this world, and supports the contention that they do naught but conjecture (v. 24).

26 That God gives life and causes death (cf. 2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 9:116; 10:56; 22:6; 23:80; 40:68; 44:8; 53:44; 57:2; 67:2) serves as an answer to the contention that it is only time that destroys (v. 24; Aj), since such claims serve to deny both God and the Resurrection (R). It also answers the disbelievers' challenge to bring forth their fathers (v. 25) by stating that only God has power over their coming and going (Q). Most of mankind, meaning humanity in general or the disbelievers in particular, know not (cf. 7:187; 16:75, 101; 21:24; 27:61; 30:30; 31:25; 34:36; 39:29; 40:57) about God's ability to resurrect and the wisdom of Resurrection in which there is no doubt. But most of mankind know not." (27) Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. And the Day when the Hour is come—on that Day those who make false claims will have lost, (28) and thou wilt see every community upon its knees. Every community is called to its book: "Today you will be recompensed for that which you used to do. (29) This Our Book speaks against you with truth. Truly We were recording all that you used to do." (30) As for those who believed and performed righteous deeds, their Lord causes them to enter into His Mercy. That is the manifest triumph. (31) And as for those who disbelieve, were not My signs recited unto you? But you waxed arrogant and were a guilty people. (32) When it was said, "Surely in delaying resurrection, due to their opposition to reflection (Aj).

27 Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth (3:189; 5:17, 18; 24:42; 48:14) indicates that He created and rules over all things (Q). Those who make false claims (al-mubṭilūn) comes from the verb abṭala/yubṭilu, "to make a false [or vain] claim," "to try to disprove the truth of something," "to try to reduce something to nothing," or "to prove something to be null and void, unfounded, false, or spurious" (Tāj al-ʿarūs; Lisān al-ʿarab). In this sense it describes the disbelievers, who on the Day of Judgment will have lost their souls (see 6:12, 20; 7:53; 11:21; 23:103) as well as their families (39:15; 42:45).

28–29 On the Day of Judgment, each religious community will be gathered in ranks (see 18:48c) with its members upon their knees for the Reckoning before God (Ṭ) due to the shame of that day (Q, Ṭ). Some say that this fate is particular to the disbelievers (Q); others say it applies to believers and disbelievers alike when they are awaiting the Reckoning before God (Q). According to another canonical reading, this verse could be rendered, "Thou wilt see every community upon its knees, every community called to its book" (Q). In either reading, book is used in the singular to indicate the individual books in which each person's deeds are recorded by the angels upon God's Command (see 86:4; commentary on 43:80; 82:10–12; Aj, Q, R, Z) or the Preserved Tablet (85:22; Q), upon which all of God's Commands and Decrees are said to have been written.

The address is spoken by the angels who were tasked with recording the deeds of human beings (R, Z) or by God (Q). That the book speaks against human beings means that it testifies to their deeds (Q, R). When the book speaks or testifies, thou wilt see the guilty fearful of what is in it. And they will say, "Oh, woe unto us! What a book this is! It leaves out nothing, small or great, save that it has taken account thereof." And they find present [therein] whatsoever they did (18:49). In relation to a famous saying of the Prophet, "The Quran is a proof, either for you or against you," this verse could also be understood as a reference to the Quran.

30 Here God's Mercy is understood as a reference to the Garden (Q, Z), the attainment of which is also referred to as the manifest triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of Paradise, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57.

31 Were not My signs recited unto you is a rebuke that pertains to witnessing the signs both in the created order (see commentary on 45:3–6) and in revelation. With regard to the latter, it recalls 39:71, where the keepers of Hell say to the disbelievers, Did not messengers from among you come to you, reciting unto you the signs of your Lord and warning you of the meeting with this your Day? (cf. 40:50).

32 That God's Promise is true (cf. 4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:21; 28:13; 31:33; 35:5; 40:55, 77; 46:17) pertains to the end of time, here referred to as the Hour, to the return to God, and to the Promise of both Heaven and Hell, all of which the disbelievers

God's Promise is true, and there is no doubt in the Hour," you said, "We do not know what the Hour is. We do naught but conjecture, and we are not certain." (33) The evils of that which they had done will become manifest unto them, and that which they used to mock will beset them. (34) And it will be said, "Today We forget you just as you forgot the meeting with this your Day; your refuge is the Fire and you have no helpers. (35) That is because you took the signs of God in mockery and the life of this world has deluded you." So today they will not be removed from it; nor can they make amends. (36) Unto God be praise, Lord of the heavens and Lord of the earth, Lord of the worlds. (37) His is the Grandeur in the heavens and the earth, and He is the Mighty, the Wise.

deny. The reply of the disbelievers, We do not know what the Hour is, is understood to mean, "We do not know if it is true or not" (Q), or simply, "We do not know if it is coming" (T), implying that they see no need to prepare for it. Regarding the nature of conjecture, see 49:12c; 53:28c.

33 And that which they used to mock will beset them, or "close in upon them" (cf. 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 21:41; 39:48; 40:83; 46:26) indicates that the punishment the disbelievers receive is a direct result of their own iniquity, since God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44).

34 This is one of several verses that speak of the disbelievers being forgotten (see 7:51; 9:67; 20:126; 32:14; 59:19), which is understood to mean that they have been abandoned by God (Q). That they forgot the meeting with God means both that they did not think of it and that they did not prepare for it (Q). For the consequence of forgetting God and the meeting with Him, see commentary on 7:51 and 59:19: And be not like those who forget God, such that He makes them forget their souls.

35 When the signs of revelation and the signs in creation are not understood, the life of this world is naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20; cf. 6:70, 130; 31:33; 35:5), yet the enjoyment of the life of this world, compared with the Hereafter, is but a little (9:38; cf. 4:77; 13:26; 40:39). As the disbelievers had ample opportunity to remember God in this world, once they have been shown the truth of the signs that they used to mock and the reality of their evil deeds in the Hereafter, they will no longer have any opportunity to make amends, since their conduct has demonstrated that even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28); see 6:27–28c; 23:100; 32:12c; 35:37.

36–37 According to another canonical reading, v. 36 could be rendered, "Unto God be praise. He is the Lord of the heavens . . ." (Q). In either reading, unto God be praise is understood as an injunction to praise God (Aj), while His is the Grandeur or "unto Him is the Grandeur" is an injunction to magnify God, since the effects of His Grandeur and Greatness are manifest in all things (Aj). In this sense, the mention of God's Grandeur harkens back to the call to reflect upon God's signs in the heavens and the earth in vv. 3–6.

While the reference to God as the Mighty, the Wise in v. 2 refers to God's Reality in relation to revelation, here it refers to God's Reality in relation to creation, thus alluding to the manner in which both kinds of signs are said to come from Him in truth, or "for the truth" (for verses regarding revelation in truth, see 2:176, 213, 252; 3:3, 108; 4:105; 5:48; 6:114; 17:105; for those regarding creation in truth, see 6:73; 10:5; 14:19; 15:85; 16:3; 29:44c; 30:8; 39:5; 44:38–39c, 45:22; 46:3; 64:3). The bracketing of this sūrah with these two references thus highlights the discussion of God's signs in revelation and creation that runs throughout this sūrah.

The Sand Dunes

al-Aḥqāf

Al-Aḥqāf is a late Makkan sūrah. Some commentators maintain that the entire sūrah is Makkan, although most believe that v. 10 is from the Madinan period, to which some add v. 15 and others v. 35 (Aj, Āl). The majority of the sūrah was most likely revealed around the same time as Sūrah 72, al-Jinn, two years before the Prophet's migration to Madinah. The last of the seven sūrahs that begin with the Arabic letters ḥā' and mīm, it takes its name from the mention of the sand dunes in v. 21 as a place near which the pre-Islamic Arabian prophet Hūd warned his people, the tribe of ʿĀd.

Al-Aḥqāf begins with a response to the disbelievers, calling them to account for their rejection of the revelation and confirming the nature of revelation as something that is not a human innovation (vv. 2–9). A brief reference to the Torah and those who believed in it (vv. 10–12), followed by an affirmation of belief in one God (vv. 13–14), then transitions into a discussion of the rights of parents (vv. 15–17), which are often considered second only to the rights of God and His messengers. A discussion of the disbelievers (vv. 18–20) then segues into a story of the Prophet Hūd, the manner in which the people rejected him, and the punishment that was sent upon them (vv. 21–25). The story of their destruction is used as a warning to the Quraysh that they can be destroyed, just as those who were more powerful than they were destroyed before (vv. 26–28). A recounting of the story of the jinn who heard the Quran and then called their community to follow the Prophet (vv. 29–32) concludes with a reminder of God's Omnipotence (vv. 33–34). A final verse counsels the Prophet to follow the example of prophets before him who patiently endured the insults of the disbelievers (v. 35).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Ḥā. Mīm. (2) The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Wise. (3) We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth and for a term appointed. Yet those who disbelieve turn away from that of which they were warned. (4) Say, "Have you considered that which you call upon apart from God? Show me that which they have created of the earth. Or do they have a share in the heavens? Bring me a book before this or some vestige of knowledge, if you are truthful." (5) Who is more astray

1 This sūrah is the last in a series of seven *sūrah*s that open with the Arabic letters ḥā' and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm. The letters ḥā' and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine *sūrah*s and whose meanings are considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. For some possible meanings of the letters ḥā' and mīm, see 40:1c.

2 Cf. 39:1; 40:2; 45:2. For the meaning of this verse, see 39:1c. For other possible readings, see 40:2c. Here al-Maybudī notes that the Mighty can also be read as an active participle meaning "the One Who makes mighty" or "the One Who exalts" and writes, "The name means that He exalted the believers by making them the object of His address and worthy of His book and message."

3 We did not create . . . save in truth is repeated in 15:85, while in 30:8 the same concept is conveyed in the third-person singular (see also 44:39). In truth indicates both that the world is created with precision and perfection and that the nature of the created world is just (R). Regarding the Quranic idea that all of creation came in truth, or "through truth," see 6:73c; 15:85; 44:38–39c. For a term appointed (2:282; 11:3; 13:2; 14:10; 16:61; 22:5, 33; 30:8; 31:29; 35:13, 45; 39:42; 42:14; 71:4) refers to the duration of the world and thus alludes to both the final end of the heavens and the earth (IJ) and the Final Judgment (see 35:45; 71:14). Save . . . for a term appointed (Q, R, Ṭ) thus indicates that creation, as it is other than God, cannot but have a beginning and an end, as in 28:88: All things perish, save His Face; see 10:24c. As translated, the last sentence of the present verse reiterates that many people turn away from the messengers God sends. It could also be read, "Those who deny that of which they were warned turn away," meaning that they turned away from understanding the true nature of creation, thus implying that they do not reflect upon the signs of God and the ephemeral nature of the world (R).

4 This is one of several verses that challenge the disbelievers to bring something to verify their claims (see also 2:23c; 10:38c; 21:24; 37:156–57; 54:43c; 68:37). That which you call upon apart from God means idols or beings such as jinn whom the idolaters treat as partners with God. Bring me a book is a request that they bring a revealed scripture (Q, R, Ṭ), and some vestige of knowledge means some remnant from the teachings of those of old (Q, R, Ṭ). Others interpret vestige of knowledge to mean something that was written by those before (Q, Ṭ), though it is also understood to mean any authentic report that has been transmitted (R). In all interpretations, it means something that indicates the veracity of the idolaters' claim that these idols and jinn whom they worship are indeed partners with God (Ṭ). Elsewhere the Quran asks rhetorically, or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it? (35:40; cf. 34:44; 43:21; 68:37–38).

5 Who are heedless of their calling can refer to those upon whom they call or to those who call, the latter meaning that the idolaters are oblivious to the fact that their supplications are in vain.

than one who calls, apart from God, upon such as do not answer him, [even] unto the Day of Resurrection, and who are heedless of their calling? (6) When mankind is gathered, such will be enemies unto them and deniers of their worship. (7) Yet when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, those who disbelieve say to the truth when it comes to them, "This is manifest sorcery." (8) Or do they say, "He has fabricated it"? Say, "Had I fabricated it, you would not be able to avail me aught against God. He knows best that about which you carry on. He suffices as a Witness between me and you, and He is the Forgiving, the Merciful." (9) Say, "I am no innovation among the messengers, and I know not what will be done with me or with you. I only follow that which has

6 When mankind is gathered refers to the Day of Judgment (see 42:7c). Such will be enemies unto them alludes to the fact that the false objects of worship upon whom the idolaters called in this life will testify against them on the Day of Judgment (Q, Ṭ), saying, Our Lord! These are those whom we perverted. We perverted them as we ourselves were perverse. We disavow [them] before Thee; it was not us whom they worshipped (28:63). It can also be understood to mean that those upon whom they called are their enemies, because calling upon them, and thus attributing partners to God, was the cause of their destruction (Q).

7 This verse speaks of one of the various ways in which the disbelievers react to the recitation of God's signs, that is, verses of the Quran; cf. 8:31; 19:73; 22:72; 31:7; 34:43; 42:25; 68:15; 83:13. The charge of manifest sorcery is said to have been brought by the disbelievers against the Quran and several messengers of God, most notably the prophets Moses and Muhammad (see 5:110c; 6:7; 10:2; 11:7; 34:43; 37:15; 43:30; 61:6; 74:24).

8 Such charges of fabrication are repeated throughout the Quran; see 10:38c. To attribute anything falsely to God is considered to be among the greatest of sins, thus the Quran frequently asks, Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God? (6:21, 144; 7:37; 10:17; 11:18; 29:68; 61:7), meaning, "Who does greater wrong than one who holds to false beliefs or engages in erroneous religious practices?" Here the Prophet is commanded to explain that, were he to make such claims, as others have, God would punish him and that no one could avert His Punishment, as in 5:41: For whomsoever God desires that he be tried, thou hast no power to avail him aught against God (R). For He suffices as a Witness between me and you, see 29:52c.

9 I am no innovation among the messengers reaffirms the Quranic position that all revelations contain the same essential message. As the Prophet has said, "The prophets are half brothers; their mothers differ and their religion (dīn) is one." In this vein al-Tustarī writes of this verse, "That is, 'There were messengers before me who commanded what I command and forbade what I forbid. I am not a marvel (ʿajab) among the messengers. I do not call you to anything except testifying to God's Oneness (tawḥīd), and I do not guide you to anything other than the most noble character traits. It was with this [message] that the prophets before me were sent' " (ST; cf. 2:62; 5:69; 26:192–96; 41:43; 78:18–19). For more on the Quranic understanding of the unity of prophethood, see the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions."

I know not what will be done with me or with you most likely indicates that the Prophet was not a fortune-teller, an ability that many of the Arabs expected of a prophet. Some maintain that this phrase was abrogated by 48:2, in which the Prophet is told that God has forgiven him his sins that went before and that which is to come (Q). But the two verses can be seen as references to very different issues: the present verse refers to the events of this world, and 48:2 to forgiveness and reward been revealed unto me, and I am naught but a clear warner." (10) Say, "Have you considered if it is from God and you disbelieve in it, though a witness from the Children of Israel bore witness to the like thereof, then believed in it, while you waxed arrogant? Surely God guides not wrongdoing people." (11) And those who disbelieve say of those who believe, "Had it been good, they would not have outstripped us in [attaining] it." Since they will not be guided by it, they will say, "This is an ancient perversion." (12) Yet before it there was the Book of Moses, a guide and a mercy. This is a Book that confirms in an Arabic tongue in the Hereafter, in which case there is no need for abrogation (Q). Regarding I am naught but a clear warner (cf. 11:12; 13:7; 27:92; 34:46; 35:23; 79:45), see 38:65–66c.

10 If it is from God and you disbelieve in it likely refers to the Quran itself, although the second clause may be rendered "and you disbelieve in him," meaning that the people disbelieve in the Prophet. Most exegetes interpret a witness from the Children of Israel as a reference to ʿAbd Allāh ibn Salām, one of the leading Jews of Madinah who followed the Prophet and was rejected by his community for doing so. Bore witness to the like thereof would then imply his bearing witness to the truth of both the Torah and the Quran. In this vein, Saʿd ibn Abī Waqqāṣ is reported to have said, "I have never heard the Prophet say of anybody walking on the earth that he is from the people of the Garden except ʿAbd Allāh ibn Salām. The following verse was revealed concerning him: Though a witness from the Children of Israel bore witness to the like thereof (T). But if, as many commentators maintain, the whole of this sūrah is from the Makkan period, this verse most likely refers to Moses (Q). In this case, bore witness to the like thereof would again refer to the Torah, in which case the verse is most likely a challenge to the disbelievers, comparing their arrogance in the face of revelation to the Israelites' acceptance of the Torah.

Bore witness to the like thereof could also be read "bore witness to one like him," implying that Moses foretold the coming of the Prophet Muhammad. In light of the latter interpretation, this verse would be read as an affirmation of 7:157, which refers to the Prophet being inscribed in the Torah and the Gospel. In this vein, many Muslims read Deuteronomy 17:15 and 18:18, among other Biblical verses, as allusions to the Prophet Muhammad.

11 The objection of the disbelievers among the Quraysh was that those who were of low social standing in Makkah could not have discerned the value of the new religion to which the Prophet called them when the leaders of Quraysh did not, as in 6:53, where they are also reported to say of those who followed the Prophet, Are these the ones whom God has graced among us? Such objections are similar to those voiced by the leaders among Noah's people, who said, We see none who follow you, save the lowliest among us (11:27), and asked, Shall we believe you, when the lowliest follow you? (26:111). This verse thus relates back to v. 3, because the disbelievers' arrogance caused them to continue going further astray after they first turned away. They say, This is an ancient perversion, because they deny that whose knowledge they cannot comprehend and whose interpretation has not yet come to them (10:39; Q).

12 From a Quranic perspective, every revelation fulfills the function of guiding and is a mercy for human beings, as is said of the Torah here. This is a Book that confirms refers to the Quran confirming the Torah and the Gospel, among other revelations, as in 5:48: And We have sent down unto thee the Book in truth, confirming the Book that came before it, and as a protector over it. Just as the Quran is God's Word in Arabic, so too the Torah is considered to have been God's Word in Hebrew. As al-Dārimī writes, "God knows all languages and speaks in whichever language He wishes: if He wishes, He speaks in Arabic; and if He wishes, He speaks in Hebrew; and if He wishes, in Syriac. So He has made the Quran His Word in Arabic" (al-Dārimī, al-Radd, 123); see to warn wrongdoers, and a glad tiding for the virtuous. (13) Truly those who say, "Our Lord is God," then stand firm, no fear shall come upon them; nor shall they grieve. (14) They are the inhabitants of the Garden, abiding therein, as a recompense for that which they used to do. (15) And We have enjoined man to be virtuous unto his parents. His mother carried him in travail and bore him in travail, and his gestation and weaning is thirty months, such that when he reaches maturity and reaches forty years he says, "My Lord inspire me to give thanks for Thy blessing with which Thou hast blessed me and hast blessed my parents, and that I may work righteousness such that it pleases Thee; and make commentary on 14:4: And We have sent no messenger, save in the language of his people.

13–14 Then stand firm means that these believers do not confound the truth with falsehood (3:71; cf. 2:42) and do not oppose God's Commands and Prohibitions (Ṭ). According to some, no fear shall come upon them means that they will have no fear of retribution and will be spared many of the trials that occur on the Day of Resurrection (R). The first part of v. 13 is repeated in 41:30, but there it is the angels who promise that in the Hereafter there shall be no fear or sorrow for the believers; see commentary on 41:30–33. That such rewards will be afforded those who say, "Our Lord is God," then stand firm could be understood as an allusion to the salvific nature of all revealed religions, as in 2:62: Truly those who believe, and those who are Jews, and the Christians, and the Sabeans—whosoever believes in God and the Last Day and works righteousness shall have their reward with their Lord. No fear shall come upon them; nor shall they grieve (cf. 5:59).

15 Goodness, gratitude, and virtue toward one's parents are enjoined in several verses (4:36; 17:23; 29:8; 31:14–15) and are presented as second in importance only to the duty to worship God in other verses (see 2:83; 4:36; 6:151); see 29:8c. To be virtuous translates iḥsān, which means "to make beautiful" or "to do what is beautiful" and comes from a root (ḥ-s-n) meaning "beautiful," other derivations of which mean "virtue" or "virtuous" in the sense of having a beautiful character and intrinsic morality; see 29:69c. The mention of the mother alone after the mention of both parents indicates that her right to be honored is greater than that of the father (R). In this regard, a well-known ḥadīth reports that a man asked the Prophet, "O Messenger of God, who among the people is most deserving of my good companionship?" He said, "Your mother." The man asked, "Then who?" The Prophet replied, "Your mother." He asked again, "Then who?" The Prophet again replied, "Your mother." After he asked a fourth time, the Prophet replied, "Your father."

The first instance of travail refers to the difficulties of pregnancy, and the second refers to those of childbirth. For the discussion of the combined period of gestation and breast-feeding, which is here said to be thirty lunar months, see 2:233c; 31:13–14c. When he reaches maturity is understood by the majority of commentators to mean thirty-three lunar years, the age at which the body is traditionally thought to reach its peak. Forty years is then the age at which one reaches intellectual (IK) and spiritual maturity, whereupon one can focus more upon worship and obedience to God (R). Forty is also said to be the age of prophethood (R), and according to Islamic teachings all prophets received the call to prophethood at the age of forty, except Jesus, who was aware of his prophetic mission from the moment of his birth (see commentary on 19:30–33). Inspire me to give thanks literally means, "Inspire me to be [in a state of] thankfulness" (R, Ṭū). The prayer for both parents and children may indicate greater awareness of responsibility toward both the older and younger generations that comes with being in the prime of life. Regarding the importance of respecting both the young and the old, a ḥadīth states, "Whosoever is unkind to our young and righteous for me my progeny. Truly I turn in repentance unto Thee, and truly I am among those who submit." (16) They are those from whom We accept the best of that which they have done and over whose evil deeds We pass. [They] will be among the inhabitants of the Garden—the true promise that they were promised. (17) As for one who says to his parents, "Fie upon you both! Do you promise me that I shall be brought forth when generations have passed away before me?" while they call upon God for succor, "Woe unto you! Believe! Surely God's Promise is true." Whereat he says, "This is naught but fables of those of old." (18) They are those for whom the Word among the communities of jinn and men that had passed before them came due. Truly they are lost. (19) For each there are degrees according to that which they have done. He will pay them for their deeds in full, and they will not be wronged. (20) And the day when those who disbelieve are exposed to the Fire: "You squandered your good disrespectful to our old is not one of us." Make righteous for me my progeny is a request to guide them in faith and in doing what pleases God (Ṭ), which are considered among the greatest blessings for a parent (R). While many Sunni commentators say that this verse was revealed regarding Abū Bakr's prayer for his parents when they embraced Islam (IJ, JJ, Q, Ṭ), Ḥasan al-Baṣrī says that the verse is general, applying to all Muslims.

16 They refers to the people who have the attributes described in v.15 (IK, Ṭ). That God accepts the best of that which they have done (cf. 9:121; 16:96–97; 24:38; 29:7; 39:35) indicates that they are only recompensed for their good deeds, while over whose evil deeds We pass means that they have been absolved of such deeds; see 29:7c. Here the true promise can also be read "the promise of truth." In either reading it refers to the first part of the verse (Q).

17 Saying Fie upon you both is seen by most as referring to every form of disobedience toward parents. Others understood it as specifying those who reject their parents' call to religion (R). Brought forth refers to the Resurrection. Here the example given would be considered the most egregious, as it also entails disobedience toward God. God's Promise refers to the promise of the Resurrection, the Gathering, the Reward, and the Punishment (Ṭs, Ṭū). Referring to the revelations as fables of those of old was a common way for the disbelievers to dismiss the Prophet and the revelation (see 6:25; 8:31; 16:2; 23:83; 25:5; 27:68; 68:15; 83:13).

18 That the Word . . . came due (cf. 10:96; 28:63; 36:7, 70; 40:6) indicates God's Punishment, as in 39:71: But the Word of punishment has come due for the disbelievers.

19 For each there are degrees pertains to all believers and disbelievers (JJ) and to the hierarchy among them. That God will reward or punish in degrees in accord with people's actions is also stated in 6:132, while 3:163 speaks of people being ranked in degrees and 6:165 states that God has raised some . . . by degrees above others (see also 6:83; 58:11); see 3:163c; 4:96c. They will not be wronged (cf. 2:281; 6:160; 10:47, 54; 16:111; 36:54; 39:69; 45:22), because every soul will be paid in full for that which it has done (16:111; 39:70; cf. 2:281; 3:25).

20 Exposed to the Fire (yuʿraḍu ʿala'l-nār) indicates that the disbelievers are thrown into it or shown its terrors before being thrown into it (R). It can also mean "killed or destroyed by the Fire," as in the Arabic phrase ʿuriḍa ʿala'l-sayf, meaning, "He was killed by the sword" (Aj). Squandered your good things in your life in the world means they enjoyed the things of this world and followed their lusts (Q), so that during this things in your life in the world and sought enjoyment therein; so today you are recompensed with the punishment of disgrace for having waxed arrogant upon the earth without right and for having been iniquitous." (21) And mention the brother of ᶜĀd, when he warned his people by the sand dunes; warners had passed away before him and after him, [saying], "Worship none but God. Truly I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day." (22) They said, "Have you come to us to pervert us from our gods? Then bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are among the truthful." (23) He said, "Knowledge lies with God alone, and I only convey to you that wherewith I have been sent. But I see that you are an ignorant people." (24) And when they beheld it as a cloud bound for their valleys, they said, "This is a cloud bringing us rain." Nay! It is what you sought to hasten—a wind carrying a painful punishment, (25) destroying everything by the Command of its Lord. They became such that life they already spent the share of good that was destined for them and will have no share of good in the Hereafter. Regarding the contrast between enjoying goods in this life and in the next, ᶜUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb is reported to have implored the Prophet to pray to God for prosperity like that of the people of Persia and Byzantium, whereupon the Prophet said, "Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, do you doubt that they are a nation for whom good things have been advanced to them in the life of this world?" (Q), implying that they would not have these goods in the Hereafter. This verse does not reprimand the disbelievers simply for enjoying the things of this world, as such enjoyment is expressly permitted in the Quran (see, e.g., 7:32); rather, it reprimands them for failing to be thankful for the goods God has permitted them and for indulging in those that were not permitted (Q, R). People could thus avail themselves of good things in this world and continue to receive good things in the Hereafter, so long as it is done with a sense of gratitude and proportion. If, however, they waxed arrogant, failing to acknowledge the rights of God and other human beings and thus being iniquitous, they would be subject to the punishment of disgrace.

21 The brother of ᶜĀd is the prophet Hūd, who was sent to the tribe of ᶜĀd in the Ḥaḍramawt region of southern Yemen. For the account of the tribe of ᶜĀd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16; 54:18–21. Sand dunes translates aḥqāf, which is taken by some as a proper name for a valley in Yemen (JJ). Worship none but God is the same message with which all prophets are said to have been sent. I fear for you implies, "If you disobey me" (Aj).

22 To pervert us from our gods means to turn the tribe of ᶜĀd away from worshipping their gods (Aj). Their challenge, Bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, which refers to the punishment, is similar to the one posed to Noah by his people (7:70; 11:32) and to the prophet Ṣāliḥ by the Arab tribe of Thamūd (7:77). In each case it refers to a manner of mocking the prophets that is similar to the way in which the disbelievers are said to have mocked the Prophet Muhammad, saying, When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25).

23 Hūd's response, Knowledge lies with God alone, is what the Prophet Muhammad is also enjoined to say in the face of mocking (see 67:25–26). In both cases it refers to knowledge of when the Day of Judgment will come (Aj).

24–25 The people of ᶜĀd reportedly suffered from a drought for three years. They then naught was seen but their dwellings. Thus do We recompense the guilty people. (26) Indeed We established them in a manner in which We did not establish you, and We endowed them with hearing, sight, and hearts. But their hearing, sight, and hearts availed them naught, since they rejected God's signs, and that which they used to mock beset them. (27) And indeed We destroyed the towns around you, and We vary the signs that haply they might return. (28) Why, then, did they—whom they had taken as gods apart from God and as a means of prayed for rain, and when they saw the cloud, they thought it was an answer to their supplications, because they believed they were in fact good and thus deserving of God's Mercy; see 7:72c. According to the Prophet's wife ʿĀʾishah, "Whenever the wind was stormy, the Messenger of God would say, 'O God! I ask Thee for what is good in it, and the good that it contains, and the good of that for which it was sent. I seek refuge with Thee from what is evil in it, what evil it contains, and the evil of that for which it was sent.' And when there was thunder and lightning in the sky, his color would change; he would go out and in, backward and forward; then when the rain came, he would be relieved, and I noticed that on his face. I asked him about it, and he said, 'It may be as the people of ʿĀd said, when they saw a cloud formation coming to their valley, This is a cloud bringing us rain' " (IK). That the people of ʿĀd sought to hasten the wind that brought their punishment refers to the manner in which disbelievers, by way of mocking the warnings of the prophets in v. 22, hasten the Punishment of God. This attitude of derision is attributed to all disbelievers in one way or another and is elsewhere contrasted with that of the believers: Those who believe not in it seek to hasten it, and those who believe are wary of it and know that it is the truth (42:18; for other passages where the disbelievers seek to hasten their punishment, see 10:50–51; 13:6; 22:47; 26:204; 27:46, 72; 29:53; 37:176–77; 38:16; 51:14). The people of ʿĀd were destroyed by a howling, raging wind that was inflicted upon them for seven nights and eight days consecutively (69:6–7; cf. 41:16; 54:19). Then they were felled as if they were hollowed palm trunks (69:7; cf. 54:20).

26 The Quraysh are called upon to contemplate the greater power of those who had passed before them, as the tribe of ʿĀd was among the most powerful in the memory of the people of Arabia, the like of which was never created in all the land (89:8). This principle is expressed more broadly in 6:6: Have they not considered how many a generation We destroyed before them? We had established them on the earth more firmly than We have established you. Despite their strength, their hearing, sight, and hearts availed them naught because they did not listen to the revelation, see the signs in creation pointing to the Oneness of God, or reflect upon either (Aj). And that which they used to mock beset them (cf. 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 21:41; 39:48; 40:83; 45:33) indicates that the punishment they received is a direct result of their own iniquity, since God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44). Thus 11:58 clarifies that, although God destroyed the tribe of ʿĀd, He saved Hūd and those who believed with him.

27 The towns around you refers to the ʿĀd and other Arabian tribes, such as the Thamūd, who dwelt between Makkah and Syria; Saba', who were in Yemen; the Midianites, who were on the route to Palestine; and the people of Lot, who are believed to have lived by the Dead Sea (IK), all of whose stories are given as examples in other *sūrah*s. Regarding We vary the signs (cf. 6:46, 65, 105; 7:58; 17:41), see 6:46c.

28 Just as the Quraysh worshipped idols, so too did the ʿĀd, the Thamūd, and other tribes. The disbelievers are thus asked how the gods they worship will help them, if the gods worshipped by the ʿĀd and the Thamūd did not help them, though those tribes were wealthier and more powerful than the Quraysh (cf. 11:100–101; 21:43; 36:74–75). That they took other gods as a means of drawing nigh [unto God] implies that some dis-drawing nigh [unto God]—not help them? Nay, they forsook them. That was their perversion and that which they used to fabricate. (29) And [remember] when We made a group of jinn incline unto thee, listening to the Quran, when in its presence they said, "Hearken!" Then when it came to an end, they went back to their people as warners. (30) They said, "O our people! Truly we have heard a Book sent down after Moses, confirming that which came before it, guiding to the truth and to a straight road. (31) O our people! Answer God's caller and believe in him, then He will forgive you some of your sins and protect you from a painful punishment. (32) And whosoever does not answer God's caller thwarts not on earth and has no protectors apart from Him—they are believers tried to reconcile their polytheism by envisioning a hierarchy with a single God reigning supreme; see commentary on 39:3, where the disbelievers say of their deities, We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God.

29 This verse is a reference to a group of jinn (seven or nine, according to most) who came upon the Prophet while he was performing the morning prayer in the valley of Nakhlah during his return to Makkah from the city of Ṭā'if. After hearing the Quran, the jinn accepted it and then returned to their fellow jinn, enjoining them to accept the Quran and the Prophet. For a full account of this event, see the introduction to Sūrah 72. Here its presence could also be read "his presence," meaning that of the Prophet (Aj, R, Ṭ).

30 Some interpret the reference the jinn make to Moses to mean that the jinn had been Jews (IK, R, Ṭ), but given the full context of the story (see the introduction to Sūrah 72), it may simply mean that they are comparing the Quran to another revelation. The Quran is also described as confirming earlier scriptures in 2:41, 89, 91, 97, 101; 3:3, 81; 5:48; 6:92; 35:31. Guiding to the truth can also be understood to mean "guiding to God" (Aj), as "the Truth" (al-Ḥaqq) is one of the Names of God. The way of Islam is referred to throughout the Quran as a straight path, and the straight path (al-ṣirāṭ al mustaqīm) is often taken as a synonym for Islam, but this is the only verse that refers to a straight road (ṭarīq mustaqīm). Combining the two terms, al-Tustarī writes of this verse, "It indicates that the road of truth is to leave worldly transactions (muʿāmalāt) and formalities (rusūmāt), and to realize the truth, which is the straight path" (ST).

31 God's caller means the Prophet, while in him can refer to the Prophet or to God (Ṭs) or to all that the Prophet commands (R). Al-Tustarī sees the phrase answer God's caller and believe in him as an allusion to the mystery of faith in the depths of one's heart: "In the heart of every believer there is a caller calling him to his sound judgment (rushd). Happy is the one who listens to the call of the caller, and follows it" (ST). Some commentators understand some of your sins to mean that only some sins will be removed by belief (Aj, R), implying that for complete forgiveness one must also act in accord with the revelation. Together, these verses are understood to demonstrate that the jinn are subject to command and prohibition, reward and punishment the same way human beings are, while others maintain that the believers among the jinn are only rewarded with being saved from the Fire (Q).

32 The reference to "thwarting" God alludes to vv. 4–5, as the jinn were among those upon whom the disbelievers would call to save them. That no one can thwart God or His signs is repeated in over a dozen verses (6:134; 8:59; 9:2–3; 10:53; 11:19–20, 33; 16:46; 22:51; 24:57; 29:22; 34:5, 38; 35:44; 39:51; 42:31;), since from a Quranic perspective naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God (35:44; see also 52:8).

in manifest error." (33) Have they not considered that God, Who created the heavens and the earth and did not weary in their creation, is able to give life to the dead? Yea! He is Powerful over all things. (34) On the day when those who disbelieve are exposed to the Fire: "Is this not true?" They will say, "Yea, by our Lord!" He will reply, "Taste the punishment for having disbelieved." (35) So be patient, as the resolute among the messengers were patient. And seek not to hasten for them. It shall be for them, on the day when they see that which they are promised, as though they had tarried naught but an hour of a day. A proclamation! Will any but the iniquitous people be destroyed?

33 This verse presents one of the Quranic arguments for God's ability to resurrect human beings (IK, Q), as if to say, "If God can create the heavens and the earth, then surely He can give life to the dead" (cf. 40:57c). Regarding the absence of fatigue or weariness from the Divine Nature, see the discussion of Neither slumber overtakes Him nor sleep in 2:255c (also see 50:15).

34 For exposed to the Fire, see 46:20c. Is this not true? is a rhetorical question posed elsewhere to the disbelievers (see 7:44); this refers to the Fire and the punishment whose reality they had denied. It could also be understood as a reference to God, in which case Is this not true? would be rendered, "Is He not the Truth?" Even though they now realize the truth and admit to it, the gates of repentance have been closed, and they are cast into the Fire and thus made to taste the punishment (cf. 3:106, 181; 4:56; 6:30; 8:35, 50; 22:22; 32:14, 20; 34:12; 34:42).

35 The injunction Be patient is addressed to the Prophet or to all Muslims. The resolute among the messengers is most often understood to mean the messengers who brought a new Book and a new revealed law from God: Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus, who are listed together in 33:7 and 42:13, and Muhammad (IK, Kā). There are, however, other proposals for the referent, ranging from three prophets—Noah, Hūd, and Abraham—to all the prophets (Q). Relating this term directly to the specific trials many prophets endured, al-Tustarī writes, "The resolute among the messengers are Abraham, God's friend; he was tried with fire, and with the sacrifice of a son, but was content and submitted. Job was tried by trials, and Ishmael [was tried] with the sacrifice, and was content. Noah [was tried] with denial but was patient, while Jonah was in the belly of the fish, but called [upon God] and sought refuge [in Him]. Joseph [was tried] with prison and the well, but he did not change, and Jacob was tested by the loss of his sight and the loss of a son, but he complained of his grief only to God and did not complain to anyone other than Him. There are twelve prophets who were patient with what befell them, and they are the resolute among the messengers" (ST).

The Prophet is enjoined not to pray for punishment to be hastened against the disbelievers, as some prophets had done in the past, since their punishment would come in due course (JJ, Q). This postponement can be understood as a mercy from God or to mean that God has a greater punishment for them in the Hereafter (see 41:16). Either way, the reality and duration of the Hereafter will make the life of this world seem for them as though they had tarried naught but an hour of a day (cf. 10:45; 17:52; 23:112–14; 30:55; 79:46). The iniquitous are destroyed by being punished in the Hereafter, but moreover by being led astray (see 2:26) and made to forget God, resulting in distance from Him and from their true selves, as in 59:19: And be not like those who forget God, such that He makes them forget their souls. It is they who are the iniquitous.

Muhammad

Muḥammad

All scholars agree that Muḥammad is a Madinan sūrah. Some maintain that it is early Madinan, with the exception of v. 13 (Āl, IJ, JJ), which is reported to have been revealed during the Prophet's migration from Makkah to Madinah and thus before the beginning of the Madinan period (Āl). It takes its name from the mention of Muhammad in v. 2, one of only four verses to mention him by name; the others are 3:144; 33:40; and 48:29. It is also known to some as al-Qitāl ("Fighting"; al-Suyūṭī, Itqān), due to the criticism of those who shrink from the call to fight in the way of God in v. 20. The disease of hearts (vv. 20, 29) and the reasons for which God seals (v. 16) and locks (v. 24) them is an important theme of this sūrah, as is the true nature of human action. It therefore provides a subtle reflection upon the intrinsic connection between actions and belief or between deeds and the state of one's heart.

The sūrah begins by distinguishing between the believers and the disbelievers with regard to the true nature of their deeds (vv. 1–3). An exhortation to fight the disbelievers (vv. 4–7) then segues into an examination of the state of disbelievers (vv. 8–10), followed by a comparison of the final ends of the believers and the disbelievers (vv. 11–15) that culminates in a stark contrast between what each group is given to drink in their final abode (v. 15). This contrast is followed by a more specific discussion of the manner in which the disbelievers react to the Prophet and the Quran (vv. 16–30). The discussion then focuses again upon the contrast between the believers and disbelievers, exhorting the believers to continue striving against the disbelievers (vv. 31–35). A final passage cautions against miserliness and enjoins the believers to spend in the way of God (vv. 36–38).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Those who disbelieve and turn from the way of God—He has made their deeds go astray. (2) And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, and believe in what has been sent down unto Muhammad—and it is the truth from their Lord—He has absolved them of their evil deeds and set their state aright. (3) That is because those who disbelieve follow falsehood and because those who believe follow the truth from their Lord. Thus does God set forth for mankind their likenesses. (4) When you meet those who disbelieve, strike at their necks; then, when you have overwhelmed them, tighten the bonds. Then free them graciously or hold them for ransom, till war lays down its burdens. Thus [shall it be]. And if God willed, He would take vengeance upon them, but that

1 Turn from translates ṣaddū ʿan, which can mean both "to turn away from" and "to prevent from" (Iṣ, Z). Taking the two meanings together, the verse indicates that the disbelievers turn away from the way of God and also seek to prevent others from following it. As this behavior reflects their disposition toward religion, God has made their deeds go astray, meaning that their evil deeds will not have the intended effect, that any good deeds they have performed will bring no benefit for them in the Hereafter (JJ), and that they mistake evil deeds for good deeds because the evil of their deeds is made to seem fair unto them (9:37). In this way, God brings their scheming and plotting to naught (Q). This verse stands in stark contrast to the last sentence of v. 4: And as for those who are slain in the way of God, He will not make their deeds go astray. But the use of the past tense here in v. 1 leaves open the possibility that those who disbelieve may repent in the future and thus be forgiven for their evil deeds.

2 Whereas even the good deeds of disbelievers go astray, the evil deeds of believers are absolved and forgiven. Has absolved them of their evil deeds is understood by some to mean all of the evil deeds that they performed before they believed (Q), as it is a fundamental tenet of Islamic theology that embracing Islam "wipes out all previous sins."

Absolution (takfīr) is said to cover over evil deeds, rendering them as if they had never been committed (Iṣ). It is thus a greater reward than forgiveness wherein although one will not be punished for one's evil deeds one will still witness them on the Day of Judgment.

Set their state aright then means that God helps them in following the teachings of Islam after embracing religion (Z), as in 25:70, which says of those who repent, God will replace their evil deeds with good deeds (R). State translates bāl, which can also mean the heart or the mind (Ṭū).

3 That is because refers to God's rendering the deeds of the disbelievers void and absolving the believers of their evil deeds (JJ, Q), as the disbelievers follow falsehood and the believers follow truth (Q). In this context, Thus does God set forth for mankind their likenesses indicates that God has made clear the difference between good and evil deeds (Q), or it refers directly to the distinction made in the beginning of the verse between the disbelievers following falsehood and the believers following truth (R).

4 Strike at their necks conveys the gravity and severity of the fighting (Q). Rendered literally, it would be "striking the necks" in the accusative, which is understood to mean "strike the necks with a strike" (IK, Q, Ṭ), indicating the brevity of the act, as it is confined to battle and

He may test some of you by means of others, [. . .]. And as for those who are slain in the way of God, He will not make their deeds go astray. (5) He will guide them and set their state aright, (6) and cause them to enter the Garden, having made it known to them. (7) O you who believe! If you help God, He will help you and make firm your steps. (8) As for those who disbelieve, wretched is not a continuous command. When you have overwhelmed them can mean, "When you have overcome those whose necks you did not strike and made them captives" (Ṭ), or "When you have slaughtered them" (IK). Tighten the bonds means that prisoners should only be taken after the victory has definitely been achieved, as in 8:67: It is not for a prophet to take captives until he overwhelms [his enemy] in the land (Q). The bonds are to be tightened so that the enemy can neither cause further harm nor escape (Ṭ). According to the present verse, prisoners of war can be set free as a gracious act, ransomed for money, or freed to the other side in an exchange of prisoners (JJ, Q). It does not, however, command that prisoners be released. They may thus continue to be held captive as well or in certain cases even executed, alternatives practiced by the Prophet at various times during different battles according to different circumstances (Q). Although there are debates as to whether verses such as 8:57; 9:5; and 9:36 may abrogate this verse, al-Qurṭubī notes that abrogation only need arise in cases where two verses are considered irreconcilable in their legal intent, but that when it is possible to implement both verses under different circumstances, as in this case, there is no abrogation. Whether to slay prisoners of war because they are implacable adversaries, continue to hold them captive, or set them free must thus be decided on a case-by-case basis. For a more complete discussion of the treatment of captives, see commentary on 8:67–71; 9:5; and the essay "Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran."

Till war lays down its burdens means either until war ceases or so that war will cease. Some interpret its burdens literally to mean weapons, while others allow that it means all the hardships that war entails (Q). Many understand till war lays down its burdens as a reference to the time when only God is worshipped (Q, Ṭ, Ṭū). If God willed, He would take vengeance upon them without any fighting (JJ), but instead He tests some human beings by means of others (cf. 6:53), as in 5:48: And had God willed, He would have made you one community, but [He willed otherwise], that He might try you in that which He has given you. So vie with one another in good deeds.

5 See 47:2c. In this context, the future tense indicates a promise that God will set their state aright.

6 After being guided and having their state set aright, God will bring the believers into the Garden (R). Then each person will know his or her place in Paradise, as in a ḥadīth: "When the believers have been saved from Hell, they will be stopped at a bridge between the Fire and the Garden, where they will retaliate against each other for the injustices done among them in the world. Then when they are purified and cleansed, they will be permitted to enter the Garden. And by Him in Whose Hands lies the soul of Muhammad, everybody will recognize his dwelling in the Garden better than he recognizes his dwelling in this world" (Q).

7 If you help God is understood to mean if believers help God's religion and the Prophet (JJ, Q) or if they help the party of God (58:22). The manner in which believers help God is made more explicit in 22:40: Were it not for God's repelling people, some by means of others, monasteries, churches, synagogues, and mosques, wherein God's Name is mentioned much, would have been destroyed. And God will surely help those who help Him. The phrase make firm your steps (cf. 2:250; 3:147) refers to walking on the straight path (Q), or it means making one stand firm while fighting (JJ). It is also understood as an allegory for making hearts firm in faith (Q), as in 8:12, where God says to the angels before the Battle of Badr, Truly I am with you; so make firm those who believe.

8 Wretched are they translates taʿsan lahum, an emphatic phrase that conveys ruin, sorrow, misery, revilement, destruction, defeat, failure, are they, and He has made their deeds go astray. (9) That is because they were averse to that which God sent down, so He made their deeds come to naught. (10) Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? God destroyed them; and the disbelievers shall have the like thereof. (11) That is because God is Master of those who believe, and because the disbelievers have no master. (12) Truly God causes those who believe and perform righteous deeds to enter Gardens with rivers running below, while those who disbelieve enjoy themselves and eat as cattle eat; and the Fire shall be an abode for them. (13) And how many a town greater in strength than thy town which cast thee out have We destroyed, having none then to help them?

ignominy, evil, and misfortune (Q). With regard to God's making their deeds go astray, see 47:1c.

9 That is because refers to their being wretched and to their deeds going astray (Q). That they were averse to what God sent down implies aversion to all revealed books and religions (Q). God makes their deeds come to naught in this world and the Hereafter (2:217; see also 3:22), since in the absence of proper belief, good deeds provide no reward in the next life (cf. 2:217; 3:21–22; 5:5; 6:88; 7:147; 9:17; 11:16; 18:105; 39:65; 5:53c).

10 Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? is repeated several times in the Quran (see 12:109; 30:9c; 30:42; 35:44; 40:21, 82). The Quran frequently mentions the fate of the guilty, the corrupt, the wrongdoers, and those who denied God's messengers as an admonition for the disbelievers (see 3:137; 6:11; 7:84, 86, 103; 10:39, 73; 16:36; 27:14, 69; 37:73; 43:25). Those before them is thus understood as a reference to the ruins left by previous tribes who were destroyed despite being of greater might than those who opposed the Prophet (see 35:44; 40:21, 82). For more on the Quranic discussion of journeying upon the earth and the spiritual and moral edification that derives from it, see 30:9c. That the disbelievers shall have the like thereof is understood to mean that they will suffer a fate like that of those before them (Q, Ṭ).

11 Here that refers to the destruction and degradation suffered by disbelievers of past generations (R). Master translates mawlā, which also means "protector" and "helper." The implication is that anyone who does not recognize God as master, protector, and helper will have no master or protector, since they will find no protector or helper for themselves apart from God (33:17; cf., e.g., 29:22; 33:65; 42:31, 46; 46:32). Some maintain that this verse was revealed on the Day of the Battle of Uḥud, when, after gaining the upper hand over the Muslims, the idolaters shouted from afar, "A day for a day. We have [the goddess] ʿUzzā and you have no ʿUzzā." The Prophet then told his Companions to shout back, "God is our Master, and you have no master" (Q).

12 Regarding Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c. That the disbelievers eat as cattle eat means that they have no concern other than filling their bellies—and by implication satisfying their carnal desires (JJ, Q)—and are heedless of the Hereafter (JJ). In this vein, it is said, "In the world the believer makes provision [for the Hereafter], the hypocrite preens, and the disbeliever revels" (Q).

13 According to some accounts, this verse was revealed at the beginning of the Prophet's migration from Makkah to Madinah. After the Prophet left Makkah, he turned to the city and said, "By God, thou art the most beloved land to God and the most beloved land to me. Were it not that thy people had expelled me from thee, I would not have left thee" (Āl, IK, Q). This is one of several verses to mention previous peoples destroyed for their iniquity and for their refusal to accept the teachings of the messengers God had sent them, referring to towns (7:4; 21:11; 22:45, 48) and to whole generations (17:17; 19:74; 20:128;

(14) Is one who stands upon a clear proof from his Lord like one whose evil deeds are made to seem fair unto him and like those who follow their caprices? (15) The parable of the Garden that has been promised to the reverent: therein lie rivers of water incorruptible, rivers of milk whose flavor does not change, rivers of wine delicious for those who imbibe, and rivers of purified honey. Therein they partake of every fruit and of forgiveness from their Lord. [Are they] like 32:26; 36:31; 38:3; 50:36), all of which serve as a reminder that God can undo the power of any people.

14 A clear proof refers to the revelation, or to affirmation and certainty (Q), or simply to a definitive argument from his Lord (JJ). Elsewhere it is said of those who reject God's messengers that Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them (16:63; 27:24; 29:38). That they follow their caprices is then a greater degree of disbelief, since one whose evil deeds are made to seem fair unto him may still have doubt and thus reflect upon and question his evil deeds and in doing so be closer to one who stands upon a clear proof (R). In this vein, 28:50 asks, And who is more astray than one who follows his caprice without guidance from God? Regarding the Quranic understanding of caprice, see 45:23c. Similarly, 32:18 asks rhetorically, Is one who believes like one who is iniquitous? They are not equal. And in 39:9 the Prophet is told, Say, "Are those who know and those who do not know equal?"

15 Water incorruptible means either water whose nature, in contrast to the water of this world, does not change (JJ) or water whose smell and taste do not change (Q). Milk whose flavor does not change means milk that does not sour, as does the milk of this world (Q). The rivers of wine provide a drink wherefrom they suffer neither headache nor stupefaction (56:19), unlike the wine of this world. And purified honey means that it is not earthly honey, which is made by bees and must then be harvested and filtered because of impurities, but is created directly by God (Q). Some equate these four rivers with the rivers seen by the Prophet during his Night Journey and Ascension through the seven heavens (see 17:1c; introduction to Sūrah 53). Regarding this part of the journey, the Prophet is reported to have said, "I was raised to the lote tree of the boundary (53:14) and saw four rivers, two of which were flowing out and two of which were flowing in. Those that were flowing out were the Nile and the Euphrates, and those that were flowing in were two rivers in Paradise. Then I was given three bowls: one containing milk, another containing honey, and a third containing wine. I took the bowl containing milk and drank it. It was said to me, 'You and your followers will be on the right path.' "

Many Sufis see these rivers as four different kinds of Divinely granted knowledge by which the human heart is enlivened. According to al-Kāshānī's detailed interpretation, water incorruptible is the knowledge that "does not change with the defects of delusions (wahmiyyāt), doubts (tashkīkāt), and differences in corrupt tenets (iʿtiqādāt) and customary beliefs. And it is for the reverent . . . who have reached the station of the heart" (K). Milk whose flavor does not change then represents a lower degree of knowledge that does not change by being mixed with caprice or innovation, the differences between schools of law, and the tribalism of those attached to creeds. This is the knowledge pertaining to proper actions that prevents one from acts of disobedience and depravity. The rivers of wine are then different kinds of love for the Divine Attributes and the Divine Essence. They are delicious "for those who are complete (kāmil), who have reached the station of witnessing the beauty of the manifestations of the [Divine] Attributes, and directly witnessing the beauty of the [Divine] Essence, the ardent lovers who desire Absolute Beauty, in the station of the spirit." And the rivers of purified honey are "holy delights that descend [upon the heart], luminous gleams, and the raptures of realization in states and stations for [spiritual] wayfarers . . . and seekers." Those who drink from the rivers of purified honey are thus less numerous than those who drink from the rivers of wine; and "not everyone who one who abides in the Fire and those who are made to drink a boiling liquid which then tears apart their bowels? (16) Among them are those who listen unto thee. Then when they depart from thee they say to those who have been given knowledge, "What did he say?" It is they whose hearts God has sealed and who follow their caprices. (17) But those who are guided, He increases them in guidance and grants them their reverence. (18) Do they await aught but that the Hour should come upon them suddenly? Yet its portents have already come. Then when it has come upon them, what will their remembrance do for them? (19) Know, then, that there is no god but God, and ask forgiveness for thy sin tastes the delight of honey tastes the sweetness of wine." From this perspective, they partake of every fruit means that they partake of every delight from the manifestations of the Divine Acts, Attributes, and Essence (K).

Although other verses speak of those who are made to drink a boiling liquid (see 6:70; 10:4; 18:29; 37:67; 38:57; 44:46; 78:24–25; 88:5), none provides as stark a contrast. In the context of this sūrah and according to the Sufi interpretation, it could be said that they are made to drink the boiling liquid of their own caprice (K), as in 4:10: Truly those who consume the property of orphans unjustly only consume fire in their bellies, a reality that the Prophet is said to have directly witnessed in his glimpse of Hell during the Night Journey and Ascension. In this way, it is the disbelief and evil deeds of those in Hell that tear apart their bowels, since God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44).

16 Among them refers to the hypocrites of Madinah, while those who have been given knowledge refers to the Prophet's Companions (Q, Ṭ, Z). In this context, that God seals their hearts (see 2:7c) means that, although they hear the words and profess belief outwardly, they are blinded by their desire to follow their caprices. Thus they cannot understand and do not act in accord with what they hear. This verse can also be understood as a message to believers that they must be attentive when reciting the Quran, lest they hear the words but do not understand them or heed their meaning. In his Revival of the Religious Sciences, al-Ghazzālī lists four obstacles that prevent those who listen to the Quran from understanding it: confining their focus to the correct pronunciation of the letters of the Quran; dogmatic adherence to a particular school of thought (madhhab); persistence in sin or being characterized by pride and worldly passions; and reading the outward commentary on the Quran and thinking that the Quran contains only those meanings that have been transmitted from early commentators such as Ibn ʿAbbās, Ibn Masʿūd, and the like (Iḥyāʾ: Qirāʾāt al-qurʾān).

17 Increases them in guidance indicates that God increases those who are guided in faith (Q, Ṭ), knowledge, and insight (Q), which does not occur for those whose hearts are sealed. That God grants them their reverence indicates either that God helps them attain reverence or that He gives them rewards for their reverence (Z).

18 This verse asks whether those disbelievers and hypocrites (mentioned in the previous verses) are waiting for the Final Hour, and whether they know that it will come upon them suddenly and that they will not have time to repent and remember God (Ṭ). Although there are many discussions regarding the signs or portents of the Hour, the sign to which this verse refers is most likely the coming of the Prophet, who is reported to have said, "I was sent like this in relation to the Hour," while pointing to his index finger and his middle finger (Mw, Q).

19 Some understand this verse to mean that what one has learned by way of reason and deduction, one must know for certain (Mw). Others see it as a command to say, "There is no god but God," as the form of remembrance mentioned in and for the believing men and the believing women. God knows your coming and going, and your abode. (20) Those who believe say, "Would that a sūrah were sent down." Then when a definitive sūrah wherein fighting is mentioned is sent down, thou seest those in whose hearts is a disease looking at thee as if death had overcome them. More fitting for them (21) would be obedience to God and honorable speech. Then, when the matter is resolved, were they true to God, it would be better for them. (22) Were you to turn away, would you perchance the previous verse. God knows your coming and going, and your abode is interpreted as a reference to waking activity and sleep (Mw, Q, Ṭ) or to activity in this life and the state in the grave and the Hereafter (Aj, Q). In each interpretation, it refers to God knowing all of one's states because nothing is hidden from Him (Aj).

20–21 For the meaning of definitive or "determined" *sūrah*s or verses, see 3:7c. It is said that the context for this verse is a time when some believers were hoping for a sūrah that would allow them to fight their enemies. While in Makkah, a group of the Muslims had reportedly asked the Prophet why they could not fight the disbelievers even though they were oppressed by them. The Prophet responded that he had not been commanded to fight. When verses came enjoining fighting, many feared fighting even as they should have feared God (4:77; see 61:2–3c). Though they went into battle, some of the believers were at first reluctant to fight, and some even retreated at the Battle of Uḥud (see 3:121c; 3:155c). This verse, however, most likely refers only to the hypocrites (Q, R, Ṭ), since those in whose hearts is a disease (cf. 2:10; 5:52; 8:49; 9:125; 22:53; 33:12, 60; 47:29; 74:31) describes those of impure intentions (see 33:32) or those who secretly harbor in their souls a deep religious hypocrisy or doubt (see 2:8–11; 5:52; 24:47–50; 33:12, 60). As translated, a single thought continues through these two verses, though some prefer to place a full stop at the end of v. 20, so that the last clause means "[death] would be more fitting for them" (R). In this context, honorable speech means words that are kind to the Prophet (JJ), rather than scoffing, and when the matter is resolved means when fighting has been decreed.

22 What the hypocrites turn away from is the religion and the Prophet. Although here working corruption is linked specifically to breaking family relations, it is more generally linked to all manner of iniquity, such as arrogance (7:74) and oppression (26:183; 28:4). For the Quranic understanding of working corruption, see 30:41c. Regarding the prohibition against working corruption upon the earth, see 7:56c. Maintaining family relations, literally, "womb relations," is considered to be among the most important virtues; see 4:1c, where reverence is linked to maintaining family relations in the same way that obedience is linked to it in these verses. According to a ḥadīth qudsī, "God created creatures, and when He finished His creations, the womb said, '[O God,] at this place I seek refuge in Thee from all those who sever me [i.e., sever the ties of kinship].' God said, 'Yes. Will you not be pleased that I will keep good relations with the one who will keep good relations with you, and I will sever relations with the one who will sever relations with you.' It said, 'Yes, O my Lord.' God said, 'Then that is for you.'" To this the Prophet added, "Read if you wish, the statement of God: Were you to turn away, would you perchance work corruption upon the earth and break your family relations?" In this context, breaking family relations is understood to mean returning to the ways of paganism and idolatry before Islam (JJ, Ṭ). But as maintaining family relations was also an esteemed virtue among the Arabs before the advent of Islam, for such an interpretation to hold true, family relations would need to be used as a metaphor for the bonds of brotherhood between Muslims, as mentioned in 49:10: The believers are but brothers; so make peace between your brethren, and reverence God, that haply you may receive mercy.

work corruption upon the earth and break your family relations? (23) They are those whom God has cursed, making them deaf and blinding their sight. (24) Do they not contemplate the Quran? Or do hearts have their locks upon them? (25) Truly those who turn their backs after guidance has been made clear to them—Satan has seduced them, yet He grants them respite. (26) That is because they say to those who are averse to what God has sent down, "We shall obey you in some matters." And God knows their keeping of secrets. (27) Then how will 23 They are those who turn away, work corruption, and do not honor family ties. Making them deaf and blinding their sight indicates that their hearts are unreceptive to truth, as in 22:46: Truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind (cf. 18:57; 41:44). They continue to hear and to see, but because the heart, the seat of the intellect, is hardened and therefore, spiritually speaking, dead, they are like the cattle mentioned in v. 12 in that they have no intellect (Q).

24 The question Do they not contemplate the Quran? is repeated in 4:82; see also 23:68: Have they not contemplated the Word, or has there come unto them that which came not unto their forefathers? Although recitation of the Quran is enjoined in several passages, it is also noted that one must contemplate, understand, and implement the Quran's teachings to the best of one's ability. In this vein, Ibn Masʿūd is reported to have said of the Companions, "The Prophet used to recite for them ten verses, and they would not move on to the next ten until they had learned everything about [the first ten]. Thus he taught them the Quran and the deeds based upon it together." Regarding the knowledge to be obtained by meditating upon the Quran, the fourth Shiite Imam, ʿAlī Zayn al-ʿĀbidīn, is reported to have said, "The verses of the Quran are stores of treasure. So whenever you open one of them, you must see what lies inside." Another famous ḥadīth says, "The best of you is one who learns the Quran and teaches it." In this same vein, Ibn Masʿūd is reported to have said, "When you intend to acquire knowledge, study the Quran in depth, for in it lies the knowledge of those of old and those of later times." Or do hearts have their locks upon them is understood to mean, "But hearts have their locks upon them" (IJ). Some understand the locked heart to refer to the heart of the most severely afflicted, whom no guidance reaches, while hearts with rust upon them (see 83:14) and hearts that are sealed (see v. 16) are less diseased (IJ).

25 Here those who turn their backs refers to those who turn their backs on the Prophet, which could mean the hypocrites who turned away when fighting was enjoined upon them (IJ, Q) or the Jews of Madinah who rejected the Prophet and turned away from part of what was revealed to them (IJ), as in 2:85, when they are asked, Do you, then, believe in part of the Book and disbelieve in part? Some say that it refers to the disbelievers who knew the Prophet's trustworthy character well before the coming of Islam, but nonetheless rejected him after the coming of Islam (Q). As translated, the last phrase means that God grants them respite in this world, so that they may turn in repentance before they die, or to allow them to further prove their sinful nature (see 3:178). He grants them respite could also be rendered "he gives them false hope," deriving from the verb amala, meaning "to hope" (Ṭ), in which case the subject of the verb would be Satan.

26 That refers to the seduction by Satan and the granting of respite (or false hope). Here commentators mention that it is either the hypocrites or the Jews who turn to the disbelievers who are averse to what God has sent down and offer to follow them. An alternate reading of And God knows their keeping of secrets (isrārahum) is, "And God knows their secrets (asrārahum)" (IJ, Q). Both readings refer to their secret consultations with the disbelievers.

27 This verse asks what the state of the disbelievers will be when the angels take their souls, given that God granted them respite but they still it be when the angels seize them, striking their faces and their backs? (28) That is because they followed that which angers God and were averse to His Good Pleasure; so He made their deeds come to naught. (29) Or do those in whose hearts is a disease suppose that God will not expose their rancor? (30) And if We willed, We would show them to you so that you would know them by their mark. And you will certainly know them by their tone of speech. And God knows your deeds. (31) And We shall test you until We know those among you who strive and those who are patient, and We shall test your proclamations. (32) Truly those who disbelieve and turn from the way of God, and oppose the Messenger of God after guidance has been made clear to them will not harm God in the least. And He will make their deeds come to naught. (33) O you who died in a state of disobedience (Q). Regarding the angels' striking their faces and their backs, see 8:50, which adds that the angels say to them, Taste the punishment of the burning, and 8:50c.

28 That refers to the punishment mentioned in the previous verse. For made their deeds come to naught, see 47:9c.

29 This verse asks if the hypocrites fear that God will expose their hypocrisy by exposing their enmity for the Prophet (IJ)

30 Regarding the marks upon the disbelievers and the hypocrites, 55:41 states, The guilty shall be known by their marks; and they shall be seized by the forelocks and by the feet. For other verses that mention marks that reveal belief or disbelief, see 2:273; 7:46–48. For a discussion of the ability to know them by their mark, see 2:273c. Their tone of speech can refer to the tenor with which they said things or to their actual words, as when ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy, the leader of the hypocrites in Madinah, is reported to have said with regard to the Prophet and his Companions, If we return to Madinah, the mightier will surely expel the weaker therefrom (63:8).

31 God will test people to see if their testimony of faith and willingness to fight are indeed true, as was reportedly done in the Battle of Uḥud (see 3:121c; 3:155c). In the context of this sūrah, this verse means both that one must act in accord with revelation in order for one's proclamations of belief to be accepted and that many of the hypocrites declared their willingness to fight until they were commanded to do so (v. 20). Those among you who strive (cf. 3:142; 9:16) refers not only to those who fight, but also to those who strive in the way of God with their property and themselves (49:15; cf. 2:218; 4:95; 5:54; 8:74; 9:20, 41, 44, 81). Until We know could also mean "in order to know" (cf. 2:143c). In either translation, it is understood to mean, "in order to make manifest" in existence, as God already knows their true nature (IJ); see 10:14c; 29:3c. In a more general sense, the present verse indicates that all hypocrisy will be exposed.

32 Regarding turn from, see 47:1c. After guidance has been made clear means after the revelation has been made clear. Whereas vv. 9 and 28 state that God made their deeds come to naught, which can be understood as a reference to deeds for which one would receive reward if they were combined with faith and thus right intention, here the deeds that come to naught is understood as a reference to acts done in defiance of the Prophet (R), and the use of the future tense thus conveys a promise that they will not prevail against him.

33 The Command to obey God and obey the Messenger (3:32; 4:59; 5:92; 24:54; 64:12; see also 3:132; 4:80; 7:156–57; 8:1, 20, 46; 33:33; 49:14; 58:13) is an underlying theme of the Quran; see 3:32c; 4:59c. Although most commentators relate the Command let not your deeds be in vain to undoing good deeds through disobedience, it believe! Obey God and obey the Messenger and let not your deeds be in vain. (34) Truly those who disbelieve and turn from the way of God, then die while they are disbelievers, God will not forgive them. (35) So do not falter and call for peace while you have the upper hand. God is with you and will not deprive you of your deeds. (36) The life of this world is but play and diversion. If you believe and are reverent, He will give you your rewards and not ask you for your wealth. (37) Were He to ask you for it, then implore you, you would be miserly, and He would expose your rancor. (38) Behold! You are those who are called upon to spend in the way of God; yet among you some are miserly. And whosoever is miserly is only miserly toward himself. God is the Rich, and you are the poor. And if you turn away, He will cause a people other than you to take your place, and they will not be the likes of you.

can also be understood as an injunction to purify one's intentions. In this vein, al-Tustarī writes, "Let not your deeds be in vain, that is, by seeing them as coming from yourselves and by seeking recompense from your Lord, for sincere action is that which seeks no recompense" (ST).

34 Those who die in a state of disbelief will not be forgiven, because God forgives not that any partner be ascribed unto Him, but He forgives what is less than that for whomsoever He will (4:48, 116). In contrast those disbelievers, such as Khālid ibn al-Walīd (d. 642), who initially sought to turn others away from Islam before repenting and embracing Islam are believed to have been absolved of their evil deeds (see 47:2c). Khālid ibn al-Walīd, for example, later became a legendary Muslim military leader and is held in high regard by Sunni Muslims.

35 Do not falter, that is, show weakness (IJ). Many understand this verse as a command not to make treaties with the disbelievers (IJ, Q). If this is the case, it would be a command to the nascent Muslim community during its first years in Madinah, when this sūrah is believed to have been revealed, as the Prophet later made significant treaties with many of the tribes who remained disbelievers, the most important of which was the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, made with the Quraysh in 6/628 (see the introduction to Sūrah 48). The command to not make treaties with the disbelievers would also stand in stark contrast to the command to make peace given in 8:61: And if they incline toward peace, incline thou toward it, and trust in God. Some thus say that 8:61 abrogates this verse (Q), but, as discussed in 47:4c, in questions such as these many commentators prefer to see such differences as a description of different options or conditions or different rulings under different circumstances rather than abrogation.

36 This world is described as mere play and diversion (see also 6:32; 29:64) or as naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185) and more fully as play, diversion, ornament, mutual boasting among you, and vying for increase in property and children—the likeness of a rain whose vegetation impresses the farmers; then it withers such that you see it turn yellow; then it becomes chaff (57:20). That He will . . . not ask for your wealth means that God will allow people to keep most of their wealth, requiring only that they pay the mandatory alms (zakāh); it can also be understood to imply that God is not asking for people's wealth but for His wealth, since all things ultimately belong to Him (cf. 25:57; Q).

37 Were He to ask you for it is understood to mean, "Were He to ask you for all that you own," while expose your rancor means, "make manifest your enmity toward God and His Messenger"

(IJ). In other words, God is Merciful in that He only asks that a small amount of the wealth He has given be spent in the way of God.

38 Whosoever is miserly is only miserly toward himself indicates a moral and spiritual reflexivity of actions in which one's actions ultimately affect oneself more than anyone else (see also 4:131; 5:54; 6:133; 14:19). In this context, it is understood to mean that refusal to pay the mandatory alms is in fact to deprive oneself of the benefits that accrue from it (IJ), since God has no need of one's money (Q). Conversely, whatever good you spend, it is for yourselves, when you spend only seeking the Face of God (2:272). This "reflexive" nature of good and evil deeds is emphasized throughout the Quran (see 2:9, 272; 3:69; 4:111; 6:123; 8:60; 9:34–35; 10:23; 29:6; 35:18; 36:19).

God is the Rich, and you are the poor (cf. 35:15c) means that God is completely sufficient unto Himself, and human beings are utterly dependent upon Him. In the present context, it also refers to the fact that all of one's wealth is from God; so to refuse to pay the mandatory alms in the way of God is to refuse to give back to God what is rightfully His. It can, moreover, be understood as a reference to the fact that one's very existence is from God and that one must thus submit fully and completely to Him. In this vein, al-Tustarī writes of this phrase, "Knowledge of poverty before God is the knowledge that wealth is in God" (ST).

He will cause a people other than you to take your place (cf. 4:133; 5:54; 6:133; 9:39; 11:57; 14:19; 35:16) means that God will replace some with others more worthy of His religion, meaning either another people who already exist or a whole new people whom He will create (IJ). They will not be the likes of you then means that they will be better people (IJ), not miserly and refusing to spend in the way of God (Ṭ).

Victory

al-Fatḥ

A Madinan sūrah, al-Fatḥ was revealed while the Prophet was returning to Madinah from the area of Ḥudaybiyah, just outside of Makkah, during the month of Dhu'l-Qa'dah in the year 6/628. The Prophet had set out on a pilgrimage to Makkah with many pilgrims, fourteen hundred according to most accounts. They donned the pilgrim garb and were unarmed, save for sheathed swords used mostly for hunting. They stopped at Ḥudaybiyah, and the Quraysh refused them entry into the sacred precinct. There, the Muslims and the Quraysh agreed upon a treaty, known as the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, which stipulated the following: both parties would cease hostilities for ten years; neither would interfere with the free movement of the other; the Prophet and his followers would abandon the pilgrimage that year, but then be allowed to perform the pilgrimage every year for the following ten years; any man who left the Quraysh to join the Muslims would be returned to the Quraysh, but any man who left the Muslims for the Quraysh would not be returned to the Muslims; and any tribes that wished to enter into an alliance with the Muslims were free to do so, as were any that wished to enter into an alliance with the Quraysh.

Some of the Prophet's Companions, however, considered the terms unfavorable for the Muslims and even tantamount to defeat. Nonetheless, the Prophet accepted the terms, and the treaty worked quickly and decisively to the advantage of the Muslim side. The freedom of any tribe to ally with either the Muslims or the Quraysh absolved the tribes of their former alliances, and some that had been allied with the Quraysh quickly switched to the Muslims. The concluding of a treaty with the Quraysh clearly demonstrated that the Muslims had acquired at least equal footing with the Quraysh, which was a feat in and of itself.

After the Prophet slaughtered his sacrificial animals in the area of Ḥudaybiyah, where the Muslim pilgrims had stopped, and they had begun the return trip to Madinah, this sūrah was revealed, declaring the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah a manifest victory. Regarding this event, 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb is reported to have said, "We were with the Messenger of God on a trip, and I asked him about a matter three times, but he did not answer me. So I said to myself, 'May your mother be bereft of you, O Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb! You were stubborn in repeating your question three times to the Messenger of God; each time he did not respond to you.' So I mounted my camel and went ahead for fear that a part of the Quran might be revealed regarding my case. Suddenly I heard someone calling, 'O ᶜUmar!' So I went to the Messenger while fearing that part of the Quran had been revealed about me. The Prophet said, 'Last night, a sūrah was revealed to me that is dearer to me than all over which the sun rises.' Then he recited [the sūrah beginning with] Truly We have granted thee a manifest victory" (IK, Q). The Prophet is also reported to have recited this sūrah while riding his camel on the day of the conquest of Makkah (IK).

Al-Fatḥ begins with a description of the manifest victory that God granted to the Prophet and his followers, which is described in spiritual terms (vv. 1–7). It then transitions into a discussion of the function of the Prophet and a reference to the pledge of allegiance made by those who traveled with him to Ḥudaybiyah (vv. 8–10), followed by a criticism of those who stayed behind making excuses for having rejected the Prophet's invitation to join him on pilgrimage (vv. 11–17). Those who traveled with the Prophet and pledged allegiance are praised and promised extensive spoils in this life and reward in the next (vv. 18–21). The sūrah then discusses God's reasons for having prevented fighting in this instance (vv. 22–25) and concludes with a contrast between the disbelievers, who remain consumed by the zealotry of the Age of Ignorance (v. 26), and the believers, who have been granted God's Tranquility (v. 26) and who are likened to a plant that continues to grow firm (v. 29).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Truly We have granted thee a manifest victory, (2) that God may forgive thee thy sins that went before and that which is to come, and complete His Blessing upon thee, and guide thee upon a straight path; (3) and that God may help thee with a mighty help. (4) He it is Who sends down Tranquility into the hearts of the believers, that they might increase in faith along with their faith—to God belong the hosts of the heavens and the earth, and God is

1 In historical context, this verse is understood by many as a reference to the conquest of Makkah (JJ, Q, R) and, by extension, other future Muslim victories (JJ). But many of the Prophet's Companions, such as Ibn Masᶜūd and Anas ibn Mālik, saw it as a specific reference to the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah (IK, Q), as this treaty allowed Muslims and non-Muslims to mix more freely and thus resulted in an increase in the number of adherents to Islam (IK, Q). In this regard, Ibn Masᶜūd is reported to have said, "You consider the conquering of Makkah to be the victory, while to us the victory is the treaty conducted at Ḥudaybiyah" (IK). The verse can also be understood as a reference to the victory of Islam by means of proofs and revelation (R). Victory translates fatḥ, which also means "opening." Read in this way, some understand fatḥ as a reference to the opening of the heart and thus to the unveiling of the secrets of the Divine Essence, the lights of the Divine Attributes, and the beauty of Divine Acts (Aj).

2–3 Many commentators understand v. 2 to mean that God has forgiven the Prophet all of his sins, past and future; thus some take it as a prooftext for the spiritual inerrancy (ᶜiṣmah) of the Prophet (JJ, R). According to some commentators, thy sins that went before refers to sins committed before the manifest victory, while that which is to come refers to sins committed after it (JJ, Q, R, Ṭ). Others say this verse refers to the period before and the period after the revelation began (Q, R, Ṭ), while still others say it means what preceded the revelation of this verse and what followed it (Q). Even after this promise of forgiveness, the Prophet continued to stand in prayer at night until his feet swelled, asking forgiveness of God. When asked why he did so, the Prophet replied, "Should I not be a thankful servant?" (IK, Ṭ). Complete His Blessing refers to attaining Paradise, the blessing of prophethood and wisdom, or the conquests of Khaybar, Makkah, and Ṭāᵓif (Q).

4 Tranquility (sakīnah; cf. 2:248; 9:26, 40; 48:18, 26) is understood by some as a reference to God's Mercy (Ṭ) or to patience in carrying out what God has ordered (Aj). Others say, "It is an angel that dwells in the hearts of believers, providing them support" (Iṣ). It is also said that the sakīnah is the intellect (ᶜ*aql*), or that one has sakīnah when one alleviates (sakkana ᶜ*an*) the inclination toward desires (shahawāt; Iṣ). Some see the repetition of the term faith in increase in faith along with their faith as a reference to an increase in certainty along with faith (Aj, Q). Others say the increase in faith reflects the gradual increase in religious obligations that are added to the initial faith, the testimony of faith, There is no god but God, that is, prayer, almsgiving, fasting, and the ḥajj (in that order). Each time the Muslims confirmed one of these obligations, God added another until the religion was complete (Q, Ṭ, Z). Here the hosts of the heavens and the earth may refer to those helpers whom God sends upon his enemies as He wills (Ṭ), thus indicating both that God will defeat those who oppose Him and His Messenger and that, if He so willed, He could vanquish them at any moment, but instead grants them respite.

Knowing, Wise— (5) that He may cause the believing men and the believing women to enter Gardens with rivers running below, therein to abide, and that He may absolve them of their evil deeds—that is a great triumph in the sight of God— (6) and that He may punish the hypocritical men and the hypocritical women, and the idolatrous men and the idolatrous women, who think an evil thought concerning God. Upon them is an evil turn. God is wroth with them, curses them, and prepares Hell for them—what an evil journey's end! (7) And to God belong the hosts of the heavens and the earth, and God is Mighty, Wise. (8) Truly We have sent thee as a witness, as a bearer of glad tidings, and as a warner, (9) that you may believe in God and His Messenger, and support Him,

5 After the Prophet informed the believers of the revelation of vv. 1–3, saying of them, "A passage more beloved to me than the world entire has been revealed to me," the Companions said, "Congratulations, O Messenger of God. God has made clear to us what He will do with thee. What will He do with us?" This verse was then revealed (IK, Q, Ṭ, W). The verse can thus be viewed as following upon v. 1, meaning, Truly We have granted thee a manifest victory . . . that He may cause the believing men and the believing women to enter Gardens (Ṭ). Or it can be seen as following upon v. 4, meaning that the Tranquility was the cause of their entering the Gardens (Q). Attaining "the Garden" is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses, though some see the great triumph as a stage of nearness to God that is even beyond the paradisal Garden; for the blessings of Paradise, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57.

6–7 Who think an evil thought concerning God refers to those who thought that God would not help the Prophet and his followers (Ṭ, Z) or those who thought that the Prophet and those who left with him on pilgrimage would not return to Madinah (Q; see v. 12). An evil turn refers to the punishment that will be leveled upon the idolaters and the hypocrites in this life and the next (Ṭ), to their corruption (Q), or to the manner in which what they are waiting to befall the Prophet and his followers will in fact befall them (Z). Although the previous mention of the hosts in v. 4 confirms the manner in which such hosts assist the Prophet and the believers, their mention here affirms God's Power over the hypocrites and the disbelievers. Commenting upon the meaning of God's hosts, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, "His hosts are of different kinds. His hosts in Heaven are the prophets, and on earth, the saints. His hosts in Heaven are hearts, and on the earth, souls. Whatever God empowers over you is among His hosts. If He empowers your soul over you, your soul will destroy your soul. If He empowers your bodily members over you, they will destroy you. If your soul overpowers your heart, it will drive you to follow caprice. But if your heart overpowers your soul and your bodily members, it will tether them with propriety (adab), compel them to worship, and then adorn them with sincerity in servanthood. All of these are God's hosts" (ST).

8 The Prophet was sent as a witness to Divine Oneness (ST) or as one who will bear witness for or against people in the Hereafter; see 33:45c. The Prophet is also referred to as both a bearer of glad tidings and a warner in 2:119; 5:19; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 25:56; 33:45; 34:28; 35:24, while in other verses these functions are attributed to all prophets (see 2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56).

9 Some early authorities are said to have read this verse, "That they may believe in God and His Messenger, that they may support Him" (Ṭ). In either reading, it can be understood as an address and honor Him, and that you may glorify Him morning and evening. (10) Truly those who pledge allegiance unto thee pledge allegiance only unto God. The Hand of God is over their hands. And whosoever reneges, reneges only to his detriment. And whosoever fulfills what He has pledged unto God, He will grant him a great reward. (11) The Bedouin who stayed behind will say to thee, "We were occupied by our property and our families; so ask forgiveness for us." They say with their tongues that which is not in their hearts. Say, "Who can avail you to the believers of the Prophet's time or to all of humanity. Believers support God either by magnifying Him or by fighting in God's way (Q; Ṭ). The words here translated support and honor can indicate both honoring and magnifying. The first is thus taken by some as a command to honor God and the second as a command to honor the Prophet (Q). Others see it as a command to both support and honor the Prophet (Q in commentary on 47:25), since the pronoun can refer to either God or the Prophet. Regarding the injunction to glorify Him morning and evening (cf. 6:52; 18:28; 19:11; 24:36; 76:25), see 33:42c; 76:25–26c.

10 In the same way that whosoever obeys the Messenger obeys God (4:80), to pledge allegiance to the Prophet is to pledge allegiance to God (Q). The pledge of allegiance is widely known as the Pledge of Good Pleasure (bayʿat al-riḍwān); see 48:18c. There is extensive debate over how to understand phrases such as the Hand of God, which seem to describe God as having human and bodily characteristics. Some say that the complete meaning of such verses cannot be understood by human beings and should be relegated to God alone. Others claim that the literal meaning has significance, but that it should be interpreted as a reference to one of God's Attributes, such as Power, which is associated with God's Hand, or that a symbolic and metaphorical meaning is what is intended rather than a literal one. Others, however, say that the literal meaning is the true meaning, but that its actuality is unknown, since the manifestation of Divine Attributes such as Living, Knowing, Hearing, and Seeing on the human plane is not commensurate with the Divine Reality of these Attributes. There is thus no correlation between what is meant by God's Hand and the physical, human hand, since naught is like unto Him (42:11). This verse is thus understood by some as containing the highest praise for the Prophet in the Qurʾān, since it equates grasping his hand with grasping the Hand of God and pledging allegiance to him with the pledging of allegiance to God (Aj).

This verse is often invoked by Sufi masters in the rite of initiation of a disciple into the spiritual path, or ṭarīqah. For Sufis it has a spiritual significance related to the transmission of the spiritual power, or wilāyah/walāyah, from the Prophet to certain of his Companions and through them to one generation after another of those seeking to follow the spiritual path.

Whosoever reneges his pledge of allegiance reneges only to his detriment insofar as he has prevented himself from earning reward and made himself liable to punishment (Q). What He has pledged unto God refers to the pledge of allegiance, but can also been seen as an allusion to the pretemporal covenant made between God and humanity in 7:172, of which the pledge of allegiance stated in the present verse is a reaffirmation.

11 The Bedouin who stayed behind refers to those tribes in the area of Madinah that, due to their fear of the Quraysh, made excuses for refusing the invitation to go on pilgrimage with the Prophet (Q). In this context, Who can avail you aught from God should He desire harm for you or should He desire benefit for you? (cf. 3:160; 10:107; 36:23; 39:38) means that no one can avert what God desires or has ordained (IK). It can also be understood to imply that the Prophet's prayer for forgiveness of them can do them no good if God has already made a determination regarding their hypocrisy, as in 63:6: It is the same for them whether thou askest forgiveness for them or thou askest forgiveness for them not; God will never forgive them. Truly God guides not iniquitous people aught from God should He desire harm for you or should He desire benefit for you? Nay, but God is Aware of whatsoever you do. (12) Nay, but you thought the Messenger and the believers would never return to their families, and that was made to seem fair in your hearts. You thought an evil thought and were a people ruined." (13) And whosoever does not believe in God and His Messenger—truly We have prepared a Blaze for the disbelievers. (14) Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. He forgives whomsoever He will and punishes whomsoever He will; and God is Forgiving, Merciful. (15) Those who stayed behind will say when you set out to capture spoils, "Let us follow you." They desire to change the Word of God. Say, "You will not follow us; thus has God said before." Then they will say, "Nay, but you are jealous of us." Nay, but they have not understood, save a little. (16) Say to the Bedouin who stayed behind, "You will be called against a people possessed of great might; you will (see also 4:107; 9:80). Elsewhere the Quran asks, And if He forsakes you, who then can help you thereafter? (3:160).

12–13 To think that the Prophet and his followers would not return to Madinah was an evil thought, because it means those tribes thought God would not help them (Ṭ). Here ruined translates būr, which means something that is thoroughly corrupt and has no good in it whatsoever; it can also indicate something that is vanishing to the point of becoming nothing (Ṭ). That God has prepared a Blaze or a humiliating punishment (4:37, 102, 151; 33:57) or a painful punishment (4:161; 33:8) along with chains, shackles, and a blazing flame (76:4) is asserted in various ways throughout the Quran.

14 Regarding Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth (3:189; 5:17, 18; 24:42; 45:27), see 45:27c. That God forgives whomsoever He will and punishes whomsoever He will (2:284; 3:129; 5:18) indicates both that God has the ability to forgive all sins and that no one may determine whom God forgives, as in 5:18, where the Prophet is enjoined to utter this same phrase as a response to Jews and Christians who say in a haughty manner, We are the children of God, and His beloved ones. The opportunity for the Bedouin who stayed behind (v. 11) to make amends and thus be forgiven is presented in v. 16.

15 The Bedouin in question had refused to make the pilgrimage to Makkah with the Prophet, but wished to go on the immediately subsequent conquest of Khaybar to the north of Madinah, as they knew that it would likely be an easy victory with ample spoils. But a victory at Khaybar was understood to have been promised to those who had been present at Ḥudaybiyah in exchange for being unable to complete the pilgrimage. Their desire to change the Word of God thus means that they wished to change God's Promise regarding the spoils of Khaybar (Q, Ṭ). Save a little indicates that they only understand the affairs of the world or that they understand little concerning religion (Q). It could also be rendered "save a few," meaning that only a few of them understand.

16 A people possessed of great might is understood by some as a reference to the tribe of Banū Ḥanīfah, who were defeated after the death of the Prophet by armies under the direction of the first Caliph, Abū Bakr (Q). Others maintain that this verse foreshadows future battles against the Byzantine and/or Persian armies (Q, Ṭ), while others say it refers to the tribes of Banū Hawāzin and Banū Thaqīf, who were defeated immediately after the conquest of Makkah (Q, Ṭ). You will fight them or they will submit refers to the two options given to the idolatrous tribes in Arabia when confronted by the Muslim army (Q). God will grant you a fight them or they will submit. So if you obey, God will grant you a beautiful reward; but if you turn away as you turned away before, He will punish you with a painful punishment." (17) There is no blame upon the blind; nor is there blame upon the lame; nor is there blame upon the sick. Whosoever obeys God and His Messenger, He will cause him to enter Gardens with rivers running below. And whosoever turns away, He will punish him with a painful punishment. (18) God was content with the believers when they pledged allegiance unto thee beneath the tree. He knew what was in their hearts and sent down Tranquility upon them and rewarded them with a victory nigh (19) and abundant spoils that they will capture; and God is Mighty, Wise. (20) God has promised you abunbeautiful reward in this life through the spoils of war and assistance and by granting Paradise in the Hereafter. As you turned away before refers to refusing to go on pilgrimage with the Prophet.

17 Cf. 4:95c; 9:91. There is no blame upon the blind, the lame, and the sick for staying behind from the pilgrimage; see 9:91c. The stark contrast between obeying God and His Messenger or turning away from them is made throughout the Quran, as in 24:54: Say, "Obey God and obey the Messenger." But if they turn away, he is only accountable for that wherewith he has been burdened, and you are accountable for that wherewith you have been burdened. But if you obey him, you will be rightly guided.

18–19 This verse refers to the pledge discussed in v. 10. While the Prophet and the pilgrims waited at Ḥudaybiyah for permission to enter Makkah and perform the pilgrimage, the Prophet sent ʿUthmān ibn ʿAffān (d. 36/656) to inform the Quraysh that their intentions were peaceful and that they sought only to make pilgrimage to the Kaʿbah. While ʿUthmān was negotiating with the Quraysh, false rumors reached the Prophet that ʿUthmān had been killed, greatly increasing the anxiety of the Muslims. Thereupon he gave instructions that everyone be summoned to take a pledge with him. Everyone present, save one hypocrite, came to him as he sat beneath an acacia tree and took their pledge. Most accounts say that they pledged that they would not flee, though some say the pledge was that they would fight with the Prophet until death (IK, Q, Ṭ). Regarding this event, al-Barāʾ ibn ʿĀzib is reported to have said, "You consider the victory to be the conquest of Makkah, which was indeed a victory. However, we consider the victory to be the Pledge of Good Pleasure (bayʿat al-riḍwān) on the Day of Ḥudaybiyah" (Ṭ). According to one account, the Prophet said of this pledge, "None of the companions of the tree who made the pledge under it will enter the Fire" (IK, Q). That God knew what was in their hearts indicates that God knew the sincerity (ṣidq) and loyalty with which they took the pledge (Q, Ṭ) or that God knew the dejection they felt at not being able to complete the pilgrimage and thus sent Tranquility upon them in order to console them (Q). In its immediate context, a victory nigh most likely refers to the conquest of Khaybar, which followed soon after Ḥudaybiyah, though some believe it refers to the conquest of Makkah (Q, Ṭ). Abundant spoils refers to the spoils obtained at the Battle of Khaybar, which immediately followed the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, or to those of the conquests of Persia and Byzantium after the death of the Prophet (Q, Ṭ). From a spiritual perspective, Tranquility refers to certainty (Aj) and a victory nigh refers to the spiritual victory over one's carnal soul that comes as a result of adhering to the pledge with a true spiritual guide.

20 This second mention of abundant spoils is either a reiteration of the first for the purpose of emphasis or a reference to greater spoils beyond those mentioned in the previous verse (Ṭ). Some interpret it to mean all spoils obtained by dant spoils that you will capture—then He hastened this for you and restrained the people's hands from you, that it may be a sign for the believers, and that He may guide you upon a straight path— (21) and others of which you were not capable, God has encompassed them; and God is Powerful over all things. (22) If those who disbelieve had fought you, they would have turned [their] backs, and then would have found neither protector nor helper. (23) [That is] the wont of God that came to pass aforetime; and you will find no alteration in the wont of God. (24) He it is Who restrained their hands from you and your hands from them in the valley of Makkah, after having made you victorious over them.

Muslims until the Day of Resurrection (Q, Ṭ). God hastened this for you—that is, by way of the advantages the Muslims gained through the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah—through which God also restrained the people's hands (IK, Q, Ṭ). It may also refer to the conquest of Khaybar (Ṭ), although some read this verse to mean that God hastened the attainment of spoils in general (Q). From a spiritual perspective, it refers to the inner riches received by those who follow the spiritual path.

21 And others alludes to still more spoils of war (Q), to Khaybar (Ṭ), to the conquest of Makkah (IK, Q, Ṭ), to the future conquests of Islam against the Persians and Byzantines (IK, JJ, Q, Ṭ), to all the conquests that God would open to the Muslims (IK, Q, Ṭ), or to other spiritual rewards. And others of which you were not capable refers to spoils or conquests that could not be achieved prior to the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah. Before the treaty, the Muslim armies could not campaign to the north, lest they risk an attack from their enemies to the south. But now that they had reached a truce with the Quraysh and their allies, they could fight other enemies to the north more freely. That the Muslims were then able to conquer their enemies to the north left them free to focus all of their energies upon the south when the Quraysh broke the treaty by supporting one of their allied tribes in a raid against a tribe allied with the Muslims. The treaty thus proved to be a crucial turning point in the political fortunes of the Muslim polity.

22 Had the disbelievers of Makkah chosen to attack rather than to make a treaty, they would have been destroyed and would have fled from battle (Q, Ṭ). That they would have found no one to protect or to assist them could refer to their situation in both this life and the next (cf. 4:123, 173; 33:17, 65). With regard to this world, the Quraysh derived their power, wealth, and prestige from being keepers of the Kaʿbah. To attack a large group of pilgrims would thus have irreparably compromised their standing with all of the tribes of Arabia.

23 Here the wont of God (cf. 3:137; 33:38, 62; 40:85) is usually taken to mean the way God deals with those who fight His prophets (Ṭ) as in 58:21: I shall surely prevail, I and my messengers (Z). Here it is rendered as nominative, an accepted interpretation (Iṭ), but it is always recited in the accusative, in which case it could be the object of an implied verb (Sh). Regarding the more general implications of there being no alteration in the wont of God, see commentary on 35:43: Thou shalt find no alteration in the wont of God, and thou shalt find no change in the wont of God (cf. 33:62).

24 There is some debate about the referent of this verse (Q, Ṭ). If in the valley of Makkah is understood as a reference to Ḥudaybiyah, the verse most likely pertains to a group of thirty young men who attempted a surprise attack on the Muslims at Ḥudaybiyah before the treaty had been ratified. After they were caught by the Muslims, the Prophet asked them, "Have you come under someone's protection?" When they said no, he let them go (Q, Ṭ, W). According to another

And God sees whatsoever you do. (25) It is they who disbelieved and turned you from the Sacred Mosque and the offerings detained from reaching their place of sacrifice. And were it not for believing men and believing women whom you know not, lest you trample them, and thus incur guilt unknowingly—that God may cause whomsoever He will to enter into His Mercy—had they been clearly separated, We would surely have punished the disbelievers among them with a painful punishment. (26) When those who disbelieve had set zealotry in their hearts, the zealotry of the Age of Ignorance, God sent down His Tranquility account, it was an attack by eighty men who came upon them during the morning prayer (Q, Ṭ, W).

25 To turn or bar others from the Sacred Mosque is criticized in several verses (see 2:114; 5:2; 8:34; 22:55). In this context, it also affirms that the Prophet and pilgrims were not at fault for failing to reach Makkah and perform the pilgrimage. As they had intended to make pilgrimage and their failure to do so was beyond their own control, the pilgrimage was believed to have been accepted by God. Thus this event also came to be known as the Minor Pilgrimage of Ḥudaybiyah. When the treaty was concluded, the Prophet instructed his Companions to slaughter their animals and shave their heads, as was the custom upon completion of the ordinary pilgrimage (see 2:196c). Likely confused because they had not completed the pilgrimage and what the Prophet commanded was uncustomary, none of them got up, and the Prophet repeated his order thrice. As they remained sitting, the Prophet went to his wife Umm Salamah, who counseled him, "O Prophet of God! Dost thou want thine order to be carried out? Go forth and say no word to any man till thou hast performed thy sacrifice." The Prophet followed her advice, and upon seeing him sacrifice his animal and shave his head, the Companions sacrificed their animals in turn and started shaving the heads of one another with such urgency that they almost cut one another (Q).

And were it not for believing men and believing women refers to the believers in Makkah whom the Muslims might have killed along with the disbelievers, had God granted the Muslims permission to fight their way into Makkah. Had they been clearly separated is interpreted to mean that if the believers in Makkah had been clearly discernible from the disbelievers, the Muslims would have been permitted to fight the disbelievers. The last part of this verse can also be seen as an allusion to the subtle way in which the presence of pious believers can serve as a spiritual protection for others, even when they are not aware of it.

26 Zealotry in their hearts refers to the excessive manner in which the disbelievers of Makkah barred the Muslims from performing the pilgrimage. Some see this zealotry as a reference to specific acts connected with this event and the resulting treaty, such as the Makkans' refusal to accept the presence of the words "In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful" and "Muhammad, the Messenger of God" at the beginning of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah (Q, Ṭs). But it most likely refers to a general contrast between the condition of the disbelievers and that of the believers. In this regard, zealotry of the Age of Ignorance (jāhiliyyah), which refers to the zealotry of the period of idolatry before the coming of the revelation, could be understood more literally to mean "the zealotry of impassioned haughtiness," as jahl denotes not only "ignorance," as it later came to be understood, but also stubborn pride and being so subject to the dictates of one's passions that one cannot discern right from wrong and truth from falsehood. For the believers to have received Tranquility from God then indicates the peace, patience, and dignity that stand in direct opposition to "impassioned haughtiness." This is to say that, although they appeared weak for turning away from the pilgrimage, the believers conducted themselves with dignity and nobility, while their adversaries fell victim to their own passions and upon His Messenger and upon the believers, and enjoined the word of reverence upon them, they being more worthy of it and deserving of it. And God is Knower of all things. (27) Surely God has fulfilled for His Messenger the vision in truth: you shall enter the Sacred Mosque in security, if God wills, with the hair of your heads shaven or cut, not fearing. For He knows what you know not, and He has given you therewithal a victory nigh. (28) He it is Who sent His Messenger with guidance and the Religion of Truth to make it prevail over all religion. And God suffices as a Witness. (29) Muhammad is the Messenger of God. Those who are with him are harsh against the disbelievers, merciful to one another. You see them bowing, prostrating, seeking bounty from God and contentment; their mark upon their faces is from the effect of prostration. That is their likeness in the Torah. And their likeness in the Gospel is a sapling that puts forth its shoot and strengthens it, such that it grows stout and rises firmly upon its stalk, impressing the sowers, that through them He may enrage the disbelievers. God has promised forgiveness and a great reward to those among them who believe and perform righteous deeds.

thus harmed themselves. The word of reverence is understood by most as a reference to one of the common formulas of faith, most likely "There is no god but God" (Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs). Ibn ʿAjībah says the testimony of faith is referred to as the word of reverence because it purifies one's character traits, excising illness and hypocrisy from the heart.

27 This verse refers to the dream that had prompted the Prophet to perform the Minor Pilgrimage that resulted in the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah. The Prophet saw himself entering Makkah and circumambulating the Kaʿbah. He told his Companions about this dream while they were still in Madinah. When they traveled to Makkah in the year of Ḥudaybiyah, none of them doubted that the Prophet's vision would come true that year. When the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah was concluded and they had to return to Madinah without performing the pilgrimage as expected, some of the Companions were saddened and dejected. ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb asked the Prophet, "Didst thou not tell us that we would go to the House and perform the circumambulation around it?" The Prophet responded, "Yes, but did I tell you that you would do so this year?" (IK, Q). You shall enter the Sacred Mosque thus indicates that the vision of the Prophet would be fulfilled, but not in the same way that his Companions had expected. The vision was fulfilled the following year, 7/629, when, in accordance with the terms of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, the Prophet returned with a large group of Muslim pilgrims, and they completed the pilgrimage and stayed in Makkah for three days before returning to Madinah. A victory nigh is understood as a reference to either the Battle of Khaybar or the conquest of Makkah (Q, Ṭ), but can also be seen as a reference to the general victory of Islam that was partly facilitated by the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah. That Muslims were now able to mingle freely with the Quraysh and their allies resulted in the members of the Islamic community doubling in the two years following the treaty (Q).

28 The majority of commentators interpret Religion of Truth, or "the True Religion" (din al-ḥaqq), here and in 9:33 and 61:9 as a reference to Islam itself and thus see all three verses as a reference to the triumph of Islam over all other religions. But as the Quran attests to the veracity and salvific efficacy of other religions (see, e.g., 2:62; 5:69), the Religion of Truth can be more broadly understood to mean all religions revealed by God. See 61:9c and the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions."

29 Those who are with him refers to all who follow the Prophet or those who were with him at Ḥudaybiyah (Q). That they are harsh against the disbelievers implies that they never relent in their opposition to them and fight them when necessary (IK). In this context it also reflects an aspect of mercy, for just as the sunlight is most intense on black surfaces and less so on white surfaces, so are the believers harsher or "more intense" with the disbelievers. In this sense, the believers must display the truth to them with a greater intensity of light and insight. Among each other, however, there is less need for such intensity, because the truth is manifest as gentle warmth. The importance of displaying the virtue of mercy among all human beings is emphasized by a ḥadīth: "God is not merciful to one who is not merciful." Mercy is understood to be an essential component for binding together any community; thus another ḥadīth states, "The merciful are shown mercy by the Merciful. Be merciful to those on earth, and He who is in Heaven will be merciful unto you." The believers are also described as humble toward the believers, stern toward the disbelievers (5:54). That one knows the believers by their mark upon their faces that is from the effect of prostration is similar to the manner in which one is said to be able to distinguish the guilty in 55:41: The guilty shall be known by their marks; and they shall be seized by the forelocks and by the feet. For other verses that mention marks that reveal belief or disbelief, see 2:273c; 7:46–48; 47:30. Some understand the marks upon their faces as an allusion to the effects of night vigil, as in a well-known ḥadīth, "Whose prayer is much at night, his face is beautiful by day" (IK, Q). When asked about the mark upon their faces in this verse, Mujāhid is reported to have said, "It is a light upon their faces [resulting] from humility" (Q). While such interpretations allude to the mark upon their faces being discernible in this life through the light in their faces and the expression of their countenance, others see it as a reference to the light upon their faces on the Day of Resurrection (Ṭs), though it can be understood as a reference to both. Others say that the mark upon their faces refers to the dust upon their foreheads after prostrations (Q, Ṭs).

The parable of the sapling serves as a symbolic and allegorical description of the Companions of the Prophet. At the outset they were weak and few in number; but then their numbers grew and they acquired strength (Q). It provides a fitting end to this sūrah, as the events to which it alludes, the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, the conquest of Khaybar, and the conquest of Makkah, marked a decisive turn in the early history of Islam; through these events it was spread over the entire Arabian Peninsula in a few years. Such a spread would no doubt enrage the disbelievers. Seen in this light, the great reward refers to the victories that were to follow upon the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah and to the promise of Paradise.

The Private Apartments

al-Ḥujurāt

Al-Ḥujurāt is from the late Madinan period, although a minority maintain that v. 13 is from the Makkan period (Āl). It derives its name from the reference to the private apartments of the Prophet's wives in v. 4. The sūrah was most likely revealed in the year 9/630 after the Muslims had captured Makkah and most of Arabia had come under the Prophet's rule. As such, it addresses the complexities of ruling over this larger and more diverse community and instructs more recent members in proper conduct toward the Prophet. This is most evident in the first part of the sūrah (vv. 1–5), which instructs the Muslim community in the proper etiquette for their encounters with the Prophet.

The second section (vv. 6–12) focuses upon the ties of brotherhood within the Muslim community and the forms of behavior that should be avoided in order to facilitate it. This unifying theme can be seen as following directly upon the description of those who are with the Prophet at the end of the previous sūrah (see 48:29). As Ibn ʿAjībah states, "After giving them the good news of forgiveness [in 48:29], God instructed the companions in proper conduct (adab) because it is among the greatest means for obtaining forgiveness and proximity [to God]." The last part of this sūrah (vv. 13–18) clarifies the true nature of faith and belief, providing one of the most famous lines of the Quran: Surely the most noble of you before God are the most reverent of you (v. 13).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) O you who believe! Advance not before God and His Messenger, and reverence God. Truly God is Hearing, Knowing. (2) O you who believe! Do not raise your voices above the voice of the Prophet, nor address him in the manner that you address one another, lest your deeds come to naught, while you are unaware. (3) Truly those who lower their voices before the Messenger of God, they are the ones whose hearts God has tested for reverence. Theirs shall be forgiveness and a great reward. (4) Truly those who call thee from behind

1 Advance not before God and His Messenger sets the tone for this sūrah. In the immediate context, it enjoins Muslims to avoid coarse manners in the presence of the Prophet, reminding many of those who had recently joined the Muslim polity that he was more than a tribal leader. Some also interpret it to mean that one should not contradict the Quran or the Sunnah of the Prophet (IK). More broadly, it indicates that people should not follow their own opinions rather than the teachings of the Prophet (Q) or allow personal desires to take precedence over the commands of God and the Prophet, as in a famous ḥadīth of the Prophet, "None of you truly believes until he loves me more than his father, his children, and mankind all together."

2 This verse was reportedly revealed in response to an argument between Abū Bakr and ᶜUmar. Each favored a different individual for the honor of receiving a delegation from an outlying tribe. Their quarreling in the presence of the Prophet was so loud that his voice was drowned out, at which God revealed this verse (IK, Q). Nor address him in the manner that you address one another speaks primarily to new members of the Muslim polity who had taken an attitude of excessive familiarity with the Prophet; they should not call him by name, "Muhammad," but by his title, "Messenger of God" or "Prophet of God" (Q). See also 24:63: Do not deem the Messenger's calling among you to be like your calling to one another. That deeds may come to naught if one raises one's voice above that of the Prophet or fails to respect his position indicates the gravity of these offenses. Elsewhere the Quran maintains that in the absence of proper belief, good deeds come to naught or provide no reward in the next life (see 2:217; 3:21–22; 5:5; 6:88; 7:147; 9:17; 11:16; 18:105; 33:19; 39:65; 47:9, 28, 32; 5:53c).

3 Tested translates imtaḥana, which indicates testing something for purity (Aj, R). That God has tested their hearts for reverence thus indicates that God has tested the purity of their hearts, expanded their hearts for reverence (Aj), and purified their intentions (ST). The trials that believers confront in this life are thus considered an important part of their inner purification. This is perhaps most evident in 3:154, which says of the losses the Muslims suffered in their defeat at the Battle of Uḥud: And [this is] so that God may test what is in your breasts and so that He may assay what is in your hearts. Regarding the role of trials and tribulations in the spiritual life, see commentary on 29:2–3.

4 A group of Bedouin reportedly came to the Prophet while he was sleeping and shouted for him to come out from his apartment. They did not know in which of his wives' apartments he was sleeping; so they went behind each apartment and called to the Prophet in a crude manner. One Aqraᶜ ibn Ḥābis reported that he had called out, "O Muhammad, verily my praise is sweet and my curse is bitter!" To which the Prophet responded, "Only God is like that." Then this verse was revealed (IK, Q, Ṭ).

the apartments, most of them understand not. (5) Had they been patient until thou camest out unto them, it would have been better for them. And God is Forgiving, Merciful. (6) O you who believe! If an iniquitous one comes to you with tidings, then be discerning, lest you harm a people out of ignorance and become remorseful over that which you have done. (7) And know that the Messenger of God is among you. Were he to obey you in many matters, you would suffer. But God has caused you to love faith and has made it seem fair in your hearts, and He has caused you to despise disbelief, iniquity, and disobedience—such are the rightly guided— (8) as a bounty from God and a blessing;

5 This verse reprimands the Bedouin for their behavior; it and the following verses indicate the proper protocol to be used with the Prophet and by extension with other Muslims, as in a ḥadīth, "If any one of you seeks permission [to enter a house] and no permission is given, he should go away." In this instance the group of Bedouin had reportedly called upon the Prophet to request that he intercede on behalf of some prisoners who had been taken in the recent wars that they had lost to the Muslims. The Prophet agreed to free half of them and allow the rest to be ransomed. According to some, had they been patient, the Prophet would have freed them all (Q, Sh).

6–8 Although these verses convey principles that should be followed in any Muslim polity, they were reportedly revealed regarding a false accusation that could have led to internecine fighting between the Muslims of Madinah and the tribe of the Banū Muṣṭaliq, whom the Muslims had defeated in 5/627 and who had accepted Islam and agreed to pay the alms (zakāh). The Prophet sent Walīd ibn ʿUqbah to collect it. There had, however, been enmity between him and the Banū Muṣṭaliq in the pre-Islamic period. When the people heard of his coming, they came out to receive him out of reverence for God and the Prophet. But Walīd was scared of them and took it into his mind that they wanted to kill him. He returned and went to the Prophet saying, "The Banū Muṣṭaliq have refused to pay the alms and wanted to kill me." The Prophet became angry and began arranging for an armed delegation. Meanwhile, when the Banū Muṣṭaliq realized that the emissary had gone back, they went to the Prophet and said, "We heard of your emissary, and we went out to receive him, honor him, and give him the right of God that was due upon us. But your emissary went back, and we feared that what sent him back might be a message he received from you because you are angry with us. We seek refuge in God from His Wrath and from the wrath of His Messenger." Then these verses were revealed clearing the Banū Muṣṭaliq (Q, Ṭ, W). On the basis of v. 6, many Muslim scholars reject the testimony in legal matters of anyone known to be iniquitous (fāsiq) unless a corroborating witness or corroborating evidence can be found. There is some debate as to whether the testimony of the iniquitous can be accepted for other matters, such as marriage, and whether an iniquitous believer can be allowed to lead the prayer (Q). Regarding the penalties for false accusation, see 24:4c.

The Messenger of God is among you (v. 7) means that he was among the Muslims at the time of the revelation and that he continues to be with Muslims, for the Prophet is closer to the believers than are they to themselves (33:6). As the Prophet does not speak out of caprice (53:3), his determination in all religious and legal matters is understood to be guided by God. Therefore, he is to be obeyed; if he were to obey others, it would be an inversion of the proper order and thus lead to adversity. The believers are thus counseled to follow his rulings, as in 59:7: Whatsoever the Messenger gives you, take it; and whatsoever he forbids to you, forgo. The Prophet is also warned, Were the truth to follow their caprices, the heavens and the earth and those and God is Knowing, Wise. (9) If two parties among the believers fall to fighting, make peace between them. If one of them aggresses against the other, fight those who aggress until they return to God's Command. And if they return, make peace between them with justice and act equitably. Truly God loves the just. (10) The believers are but brothers; so make peace between your brethren, therein would have been corrupted (23:71). The presence of the Prophet is also understood to remain with the community after his death. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "My life is a great good for you; you will relate accounts from me, and accounts will be related from you. And my death is a great good for you; your deeds will be presented to me, and if I see goodness I will praise God, and if I see evil I will ask forgiveness from Him for you." Additionally the presence of the Prophet continues in the Hereafter, as in 9:94: God and His Messenger will see your deeds.

God has caused you to love faith and disposed your hearts to it means that faith and guidance are a bounty from God and thus points to the humility that must always accompany faith for it to be sincere, lest one attribute what comes from God to oneself. Made it seem fair in your hearts means both that God makes the believers incline to faith and that God beautifies them with their faith.

9 Here the basic principles for dealing with disputes between Muslims are explained. The Prophet enjoined his followers, "Help your brother whether he oppresses or is oppressed." When asked what it means to help the oppressor, he replied, "You help him by preventing him from oppressing" (IK, Q). This verse was reportedly revealed regarding an incident in which the Prophet went to call upon ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy, the leader of the hypocrites in Madinah. When the Prophet reached him, ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy said, "Keep away from me. The stench of your donkey is offending me." A man from the Helpers said to him, "By God, the donkey of the Messenger of God smells better than you." One of ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy's tribesmen became angry. The parties exchanged blows; then this verse was revealed (W). Regarding antagonisms between Muslims, a ḥadīth states, "Cursing a Muslim is a sin, and fighting him is disbelief." That God loves the just (cf. 5:42; 60:8) reinforces the general principle stated in 4:135 that, in order to maintain justice, Muslims must be impartial, swayed by neither self-interest nor ties of kinship. Although Sufis affirm the literal understanding of the present verse, they also see it as an allusion to the process of inner purification. As al-Tustarī writes, "If nature, caprice, and lust tyrannize the heart, intellect, and spirit, the servant must fight them with the swords of vigilance, the arrows of self inspection, and the lights of conformity [to the truth], such that the spirit and the intellect prevail, and desire and lust are vanquished" (ST).

10 This is among the most important verses in the Quran for understanding the structure of the Muslim community (ummah), regarding the unity of which the Prophet said, "The believers are like a single structure, each part supporting the other." The centrality of brotherly love in Islam may be best expressed in this famous ḥadīth: "None of you truly believes until he loves for his brother what he loves for himself." This ḥadīth goes to the heart of this sūrah, which emphasizes a bond of faith that transcends those of kinship and suggests that one should no longer make alliances based merely upon tribal bonds (see 9:23; 58:22). As another ḥadīth states, "God helps His servant as long as the servant helps his brother." Bonds of faith are esteemed so highly in Islam that among the seven types of people whom the Prophet said will be granted Paradise, he lists "two men who love each other for the sake of God, meeting for that reason, and parting with this love." In another ḥadīth, the love of another for God's sake is combined with the love of the Prophet and the fear of disbelief to make up the three qualities needed for entrance into Paradise: "Whosoever possesses these three qualities will have the sweetness of faith: the one to whom God and His Messenger become dearer than anything else; one who loves a person and loves him only for God's sake; and one who hates to revert to disbelief as and reverence God, that haply you may receive mercy. (11) O you who believe! Let not one people deride another; it may be that they are better than they. Nor let women deride other women; it may be that they are better than they. And do not defame yourselves or insult one another with nicknames; how evil is the iniquitous name after having believed! And whosoever does not repent, they are the wrongdoers. (12) O you who believe! Shun much conjecture. Indeed, some conjecture is a sin. And do not spy upon one another, nor backbite one another.

he would hate to be thrown into the Fire." And a famous ḥadīth qudsī states, "God will ask on the Day of Judgment, 'Where are those who loved each other for the sake of My Glory? Today, on a day wherein there is no shade but Mine, I shall shade them with My shade.' "

11 In the context of this sūrah, which emphasizes the transition from tribal bonds to those of faith, this verse indicates that boasting on the basis of tribal lineage should cease, as explained in a ḥadīth, "Unless people cease boasting about their dead ancestors, who are merely coals for the Fire, they will be more despicable to God than the beetle that rolls dung with its nose. God has removed from you the pride of the Age of Ignorance [see 3:154; 5:50; 33:33c; 48:28] and boasting about ancestors. One is either a pious believer or a miserable sinner. All men are descendants of Adam, and Adam came from dust." Do not defame yourselves or insult one another with nicknames is said to have been revealed in order to abolish the pre-Islamic practice of calling people by derogatory nicknames (IK). How evil is the iniquitous name after having believed warns those who have become believers not to call other believers by derogatory names; or it points to the manner in which abusing others in word and deed can undo the benefits of good deeds. On occasion the Prophet would even change names whose meanings might be negative, as when a man named Ḥazn, or "rough," was renamed Sahl, meaning "soft" or "easy."

12 This verse continues to address the manner in which community ties can be undone by bad blood. Regarding conjecture, a ḥadīth warns, "Beware of conjecture, for it is indeed the most misleading form of speech." On another occasion the Prophet warned, "A leader will corrupt his people if he pursues conjecture regarding them."

Spying (tajassus) is considered a sin, as it usually indicates suspicion of another's sin and thinking ill of another; inquiring (taḥassus), on the other hand, is done for the benefit of the one being inquired about (IK). In this regard, ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, "Do not be quick to expose another's sin, for he may be forgiven for it, and do not feel yourself safe even from a small sin, since you may be punished for it. Every one of you who comes to know the faults of others should not expose them in view of what he knows about his own faults, and should remain busy in gratitude that he has been saved from that in which others have been indulging" (Nahj al-balāghah, Sermon 139). A ḥadīth states that those who eavesdrop "will have molten copper poured in their ears on the Day of Judgment." As spying usually implies seeking faults, it is closely tied to backbiting, which is understood to mean saying anything about another that he or she would not like to have said (IK). In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, "O gathering of those who submit with their tongues, but in whose hearts faith has not yet taken hold! Do not harm Muslims, do not shame them, and do not pursue their faults. For whosoever pursues the faults of his Muslim brother, God will pursue his faults. And he whose faults are pursued by God, God disgraces him, even in his own home." In contrast, another ḥadīth states, "Whosoever covers [the faults] of a Muslim in this world, God will cover [his faults] in this world and the next. Truly God continues to help the servant, so long as the servant continues to help his brother."

God's "relenting" correlates with human beings' repenting, as both translate the same verb, tāba/yatūbu. The majority of scholars have stated that repentance for backbiting entails refraining

Would any of you desire to eat the dead flesh of his brother? You would abhor it. And reverence God. Truly God is Relenting, Merciful. (13) O mankind! Truly We created you from a male and a female, and We made you peoples and tribes that you may come to know one another. Surely the most noble of you before God are the most reverent of you. Truly God is Knowing, Aware. (14) The Bedouin say, "We believe." Say, "You believe not. Rather, say, 'We have submitted,' for belief has not yet entered your hearts. Yet if you obey God and from backbiting and intending not to repeat it. There is a difference of opinion as to whether one must apologize to the harmed party. Some maintain that it is not necessary to ask forgiveness from the victim, because if the person knew what was said, it would cause more hurt than not being told about it. It is better to praise the wronged person among those who had previously heard the negative comments. It is also better to defend the injured party against any further backbiting as recompense for the previous ill-advised words (IK). When backbiting becomes open and extends to slander and false accusations, the punishment can be severe, as in 24:4: And as for those who accuse chaste women, but then do not bring four witnesses, flog them eighty lashes, and never accept any testimony from them.

13 This is among the most famous verses of the Quran. From a male and a female can be understood as a reference to Adam and Eve (Q), but also to the creation of each human being from the fluid of a man and a woman (Ṭ). That people have been divided into diverse peoples and tribes that they may come to know one another indicates the manner in which differences in tribe, race, ethnicity, language, nationality, and religion can be sources through which human beings gain a deeper appreciation for the reality of the human condition. In this regard, the Prophet has said, "God does not look at your bodies, nor at your forms. He looks at your hearts." In another ḥadīth, the heart is presented as the reality that determines all other dimensions of one's being: "There is in man a clump of flesh. If it is pure, the whole body is pure. If it is polluted, the whole body is polluted. It is the heart." The outward diversity that divides human beings is thus one of the greatest tests that human beings confront in the life of this world, as in 5:48: And had God willed, He would have made you one community, but [He willed otherwise], that He might try you in that which He has given you. So vie with one another in good deeds. Unto God shall be your return all together, and He will inform you of that wherein you differ.

The combination of nobility and reverence marks a remarkable transition from the attitudes of pre-Islamic Arabia, in which reverence (taqwā, which also has the sense of "God-fearing," or just "fearing" in pre-Islamic Arabia) and nobility were considered polar opposites. This late Madinan verse thus signals a revamping of the moral order of Arabia to one in which true worth is no longer determined by lineage and grandiose displays of valor and generosity, but by the depth of faith and piety. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "Truly God has ennobled those who were lowly during the Age of Ignorance. Through Islam, God removed the zealotry of the Age of Ignorance and its custom of vainglorious boasting regarding kinsfolk and noble descent. Today, all the people, be they white, black, Qurayshī, Arab or non-Arab, are seen to be descendants of Adam. And, assuredly, God created Adam from clay, and the people most beloved by God on the Day of Resurrection will be the most obedient and the most reverent among them."

14 This verse indicates that belief is of a higher rank than submission (IK), that faith has degrees, and that tribal affiliations are superseded by those of faith. It was reportedly revealed with regard to members of the tribe of Banū Asad who had moved to Madinah after a drought and sought charity, claiming that they were true believers and had a right to the same considerations as those who had followed the Prophet for many years. Some say that they were hypocrites (W), while others say they simply had not yet attained faith (IK), though they had made a formal submission.

His Messenger, He will not diminish for you aught of your deeds. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful." (15) Only they are believers who believe in God and His Messenger, then do not doubt, and who strive with their wealth and theirselves in the way of God; it is they who are the truthful. (16) Say, "Would you teach God about your religion, when God knows whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth?" And God is Knower of all things. (17) They count it as a favor to thee that they have submitted. Say, "Do not count your submission as a favor to me. Nay, rather God confers a favor upon you, in that He has guided you to belief, if you are truthful. (18) Truly God knows the unseen of the heavens and the earth, and God sees whatsoever you do."

In this sense, this verse admonishes all forms of religious pretension, as in 53:32: Do not deem yourselves purified. He knows best the reverent. Modesty and humility are thus exalted as among the highest of virtues, as in a ḥadīth, "Modesty produces naught but good." The injunction to obey God and His Messenger (e.g., 3:32, 132; 4:59; 5:92; 8:1, 20, 46; see 3:32c; 4:59c) here indicates that, as long as Muslims remain obedient, they will be rewarded for the best of their deeds. It also implies that their bad deeds may be forgiven, as stated in a ḥadīth, "If a servant submits and perfects his submission (islām), God will record for him every good deed that he performed before [submitting], and every evil deed that he performed before [submitting] will be erased. After that the requiting for the good deed will be tenfold up to seven hundred fold, and for the evil deed one like it, unless God absolves him of it."

15 After v. 14 rebuked those who claim belief without attaining it, this verse emphasizes the steadfast nature of true faith and the depth of commitment it entails. While the previous verse emphasizes obedience, this verse emphasizes belief. Those who strive with their wealth and theirselves in the way of God (cf. 8:72; 9:20, 44, 81; see also 2:218; 4:95; 5:35, 54; 8:74; 9:41) are those who are willing to give everything for the sake of seeking God's good pleasure (IK); see 4:95c; 8:72c. They are truthful in their claim to believe, unlike the members of the Banū Asad, who claim belief only outwardly (IK).

16 This verse asks, "Would you propose to tell God what lies within you, when nothing is hidden from Him?" (IK, Ṭ); or more specifically, "Are you going to declare that you have faith when God knows that you do not know?" (Ṭ). More generally, this verse can be understood to mean that one should maintain a sense of humility when speaking of religious matters.

17 The Banū Asad (see 49:14c) count their submission as a favor, because, unlike other tribes, they submitted without fighting (JJ), or because, when they entered Islam, they came with goods and families (Q). That they would think this way demonstrates that they had still not grasped the principles of belief and continued to think of their pledge to the Prophet as if it were another tribal allegiance. They should not count their submission as a favor on a practical level, because they came to Madinah with needs resulting from the drought. They should also not do so from a religious perspective, because God and the Prophet have no need of them; rather, it is they who are in need of God and the guidance He provides through His Prophet. More generally, this verse can be understood as a continuation of the discussion in vv. 7–8 and thus as a reminder that all belief and all guidance is a favor from God.

18 Elsewhere God is said to be Knower of the Unseen and the seen (6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 32:6; 39:46; 62:8; 64:18), but this is one of only two verses to assert that God knows the Unseen of the heavens and the earth (cf. 35:38). In the context of this sūrah, it also indicates that God knows the true depths of one's faith.

Qāf

Qāf

Although all scholars agree that Qāf is a Makkan sūrah, some maintain that v. 38 is from the Madinan period (Āl, Q). The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the Arabic letter qāf at the beginning and is known to some as al-Bāsiqāt, "The Towering," after the reference to date palms towering with layered spathes in v. 10 (Sy, Itqān). It could also be understood to be the "Sūrah of the Threat," since of the six times that threat or "warning" (waᶜīd) is employed in the Quran, four occur in this sūrah. Just as the previous sūrah criticized those who claim to believe, but have not yet realized the fullness of faith, this sūrah criticizes those who do not believe in the prophethood of Muhammad and the Hereafter (Āl).

Many scholars consider Qāf to mark the beginning of the "separated" (mufaṣṣal) *sūrah*s, the shorter *sūrah*s whose length leads to the more frequent appearance of the basmalah—In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful—which marks the beginning of each new sūrah. It is reported that in later years, the Prophet would recite Qāf from the pulpit during the sermon of the Friday congregational prayer (Q). He is also reported to have read Qāf and Sūrah 54, al-Qamar, during the two *ᶜīd*s (the Feast of Sacrifice and the Feast of Breaking Fast; Āl, Q) and to have often recited Qāf during the morning prayer (Āl, Q). The Prophet's frequent recitation of this sūrah has led some to consider it as among the greatest of *sūrah*s (Āl).

After beginning with a reference to the Quran and addressing those who reject the Prophet and deny Resurrection (vv. 1–5), the sūrah calls one to reflect upon the wonders of creation as evidence of God's Omnipotence (vv. 6–11). A brief reference to previous communities that rejected the prophets sent to them (vv. 12–15) leads into the main subject of the sūrah, death and the disparate ends of the believers and the disbelievers in the Hereafter (vv. 16–35). Another brief allusion to past generations (vv. 36–37) paves the way for an injunction to be mindful of death (vv. 38–44) and a final injunction to the Prophet to remind those who fear God's Threat (v. 45).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Qāf. By the glorious Quran; (2) nay, but they marvel that a warner has come unto them from among their own; so the disbelievers say, "This is an astounding thing! (3) What! When we are dead and have become dust? That is a far-fetched return!" (4) Well do We know what the earth diminishes from them, and with Us there is a preserving Book. (5) Nay, they denied the truth when it came unto them; so they are now in a confounded state. (6) Have they not

1 The letter qāf is among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaᶜāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine *sūrah*s and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. Qāf is understood by many as a proper name for an emerald mountain whose reality encompasses the earth (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭ). This is not a literal physical mountain, but a cosmic mountain that represents the created order as such. Others say that Qāf is one of the Names of God (IJ, Q, Ṭ) or that it represents the Divine Names that begin with the letter qāf (IJ, Q), such as "the Powerful" (al-Qadīr), "the Paramount" (al-Qahhār), and "the Holy" (al-Quddūs). Still others say that Qāf is one of the names of the Quran (IJ, Q, Ṭ). A few commentators say that Qāf is the name of a mountain in Hell (IJ). This is one of two verses in which the revelation is referred to as a glorious Quran (cf. 85:21), which means the utmost in nobility, magnanimity, grace, and glory.

2 Here and in the almost identical 38:4, the disbelievers' incredulity may result from the idea of God's choosing as a prophet one who previously did not have a position of influence among them, as when they ask, Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns? (43:31). It may also result from God's choice of a human being as His Messenger, as in 25:7: What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him? (see also 6:8–9; 6:50; 11:12; 14:10; 17:94; 23:33; 36:15; 41:14; 54:24; 64:6c). For other verses that speak of the disbelievers marveling at this phenomenon, see 7:63c; 10:2; 25:20; 38:4c. Alternately, this verse could indicate that they are amazed that they could be deemed to be in need of a message and especially of a warning or admonition (JJ).

3 These are the words of the disbelievers when they disparage the Quranic teaching regarding bodily resurrection; see also 17:49; 36:78; 37:16–17, 53; 56:47; 79:11.

4 This verse implies that God is able to take into account all parts of their bodies that have decomposed. A preserving Book may be a reference to the Preserved Tablet (85:22), which contains all that has been decreed by God (JJ), or to the book in which all of one's deeds are recorded; see 18:49c.

5 In this context many understand the truth as a reference to the Quran (JJ, Q, Ṭ), but it may also refer to Islam or to the Prophet (Q). Confounded translates marīj, which derives from the verb maraja, indicating something that has been completely mixed up so that its true nature cannot be discerned. Here it is understood to mean that they are unable to distinguish truth from falsehood (Ṭ), that they are misguided or even iniquitous (Q, Ṭ), or that they are of many different opinions (Q, Ṭ) and thus in an ambiguous and precarious situation (Ṭ) because they believe one thing and then another.

6–11 This is one of several passages to call human beings to reflect upon the beauty, proportionality, and bounty of the natural world as evidence of God's Mercy and wisdom and of the Resurrection; see 16:79–81; 24:43–50; 26:7–8; 33:27; 35:27–28; 36:71–73; 45:1–5.

6 Here the sky can also mean the heavens or be read as an allusion to all of creation; see 67:3–4c. That creation has no rifts means that there is no looked upon the sky above them, how We built it and adorned it, and [how it] has no rifts? (7) The earth We spread out, and cast therein firm mountains, and caused every delightful kind to grow therein, (8) as a source of insight and a reminder for every penitent servant. (9) And We sent down blessed water from the sky whereby We grew gardens and the harvested grain, (10) and the date palms towering with layered spathes, (11) as provision for His servants. And We revive a dead land therewith—likewise shall be the coming forth. (12) Before them the people of Noah, the inhabitants of al-Rass, and Thamūd denied, (13) as did ᶜĀd, Pharaoh, and the brethren of Lot, (14) the inhabitants of the thicket, and the people of Tubbaᶜ—each denied the messengers; so My Threat came disproportionality and that each thing is in its proper place, since He it is Who created the heavens and the earth in truth (6:73; 16:3; 29:44; 39:5; 45:22; 64:3).

7 See 15:19c. Every delightful kind can be taken as a reference to all that is created. In the present verse, every . . . kind translates kulli zawj, which can also mean "every pair," in which case it is similar to 51:49: And of all things We created pairs.

8 Everything that exists serves as a reminder of God's Might and Power and an indication of His Oneness (Ṭ), because "in each thing there is a sign, indicating that He is the One." Every penitent servant means all those whose hearts turn to God (Ṭ). For the Quranic understanding of repentance and turning to God, see 4:17–18c; 42:25c.

9 God's sending down water relates to the giving of all life. Although many verses refer to God's sending down water (e.g., 23:18; 27:60; 31:10; 35:27; 39:21; 41:39; 43:11), the present verse provides the only reference to blessed water. Water is understood in the Quran as the source of all life, as in 21:30: And We made every living thing from water. Other verses allude to God's ability to remove water, thus life and blessings, at any time (e.g., 18:41; 67:30).

10 The date palm was for the Arabs the best of plants. It can thus be understood as a reference to the highest of God's Blessings in the physical realm and as an allusion to all forms of fruit and nourishment.

11 As provision for His servants refers to the waters, gardens, grain, and date palms in the previous verses. God revives a dead land with the water that is sent down, as in 16:65: And God sends down water from the sky, and thereby revives the earth after its death. Surely in this is a sign for a people who hear (see also 2:164; 41:39; 45:5; 57:17). The coming forth refers to the Resurrection, meaning that just as God has created all that is mentioned in vv. 9–10, so too will He bring forth all human beings and jinn. This argument is made more explicit in 30:19: He brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living, and He revives the earth after its death. Even so shall you be brought forth (cf. 16:65; 25:48–49; 30:50; 35:9; 36:33; 43:11; 45:5). In all such verses, the revival of the earth can also be taken as a reference to the manner in which God revives the hearts of those who are spiritually dead.

12–14 Before them means before the idolaters who oppose the Prophet (Ṭ). For the Quranic account of Noah and the flood, see 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; Sūrah 71. The inhabitants of al-Rass (cf. 25:38) is an enigmatic reference that some understand to mean one of the towns of the tribe of Thamūd (Ṭ). Others understand al-Rass to mean "the well" and interpret it as a reference to the well in which the people spoken of in 36:13–27 threw the prophet whom God had sent to them (Ṭ). The ᶜĀd and the Thamūd were pre-Islamic Arabian tribes who rejected the prophets sent to them. For the account of the ᶜĀd see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16; 54:18–21. For that of the Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:24–31. The story of Lot and his people is discussed most extensively in 11:77–83; see also 7:80–84; 15:57–77; 21:74–75; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 29:28–35; 37:133–38. The

due. (15) Did We then weary in the first creation? Nay, but they are in doubt regarding a new creation. (16) We did indeed create man, and We know what his soul whispers to him; and We are nearer to him than his jugular vein. (17) When the two receivers receive, seated on the right and on the left, (18) no word does he utter without a ready watcher beside him. (19) And the agony of death comes thicket translates al-aykah, which according to some is a proper name. The inhabitants of the thicket are either the people of Midian, who are said to have rejected the prophet Shuʿayb (see 7:85–93; 11:84–95; 26:176–89; 29:36–37), or a second community to which Shuʿayb was sent (Mw). For Tubbaʿ, most likely a reference to a line of kings in southern Arabia, see 44:37c.

15 This verse is a rebuke to what the idolaters say in v. 3. They are questioned as to how it is that they could doubt God's ability to resurrect when they have the evidence of God's ability to create everything that is around them (Ṭ). The rhetorical question is answered in 46:33: Have they not considered that God, Who created the heavens and the earth and did not weary in their creation, is able to give life to the dead? Yea! He is Powerful over all things. In the present verse, the first creation means the creation of this world. When confronted with the Quranic teaching regarding bodily resurrection, the reaction of the disbelievers is that they say, What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation? (17:49, 98). In this interpretation new creation refers to the Resurrection; see also 13:5; 14:19; 34:7; 35:16–17c. New creation can also be understood as a reference to the perpetual creation of the world, in which God's creative act is renewed at every instant (K). That most human beings are in doubt regarding a new creation indicates that they are unable to see because their sight is not yet piercing (see v. 22).

16 Man translates al-insān, which also means the human being as such. In this context, some understand it as a reference to Adam and God's knowledge of his inclination to eat of what had been forbidden to him (Q). Most, however, see it as a reference to God's Knowledge of all that lies within breasts (3:119; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13), in which case it means that God knows the true intentions behind all words and actions, even when the speaker or agent is unaware of them. The second phrase could also be read, "and We know that of which his soul whispers" (Aj).

We are nearer to him than his jugular vein is problematic for many commentators. Some seek to avoid the literal meaning, saying that "we" refers to two angels (IK). Others understand this verse as connected to the following verse so that they read, "We are nearer to him than his jugular vein when the two receivers receive," indicating that God continues to have power over the two receivers and that, although He has appointed two angels to each person, He is not in need of them in order to know what the person is doing (Z). Although this second reading is part of what is implied, this is one of several verses that indicate the Immanence of God in all of creation (see, e.g., 2:115), that the Divine Reality is the substrate of every reality, and that God is the nearest and closest Reality to the human being. God is with human beings wherever they may be (see 57:4) and is always close to them, but human beings, nonetheless, often fail to be with or close to God and thus remain far from Him.

17–18 The two receivers refers to the two attendant angels charged with recording all of an individual's deeds (JJ, Ṭ); see also 43:80; 82:10–12. Each angel could be said to be a ready watcher, but the angel who sits on the right recording good deeds is believed to be superior to the angel who sits on the left recording evil deeds, often telling him to wait to see if an evil deed is erased through repentance or asking forgiveness (Ṭ, Z). Seated is understood to mean "observing" or "keeping watch" (Ṭ). When one stands for judgment on the Day of Resurrection, the scroll in which one's deeds are recorded is unfolded as a book one will meet wide open (17:13), and it is said, Read your book! On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you (17:14, Ṭ); see 17:13–14c.

19 Agony translates sakrah, which is related to a word used to refer to "intoxicants" (sakar) and "intoxicated" (sakrān). Sakrat al-mawt, or agony with the truth. That is what you were avoiding. (20) And the trumpet is blown. That is the Day of the Threat. (21) Then every soul comes, with it a driver and a witness: (22) "You were indeed heedless of this. Now We have removed from you your cover; so today your sight is piercing." (23) And his companion says, "This of death, is thus understood to mean the state of confusion brought on by the severity of death (Ṭ), which for some may be a state of fear and for others a state of ease (Aj). But given that sakrah is said to come with the truth, or "through the truth," others see it as a reference to the wisdom that comes with death (Z), meaning the vision of the Unseen Realm. In this sense it could be understood as an allusion to the transition from one state of being to another that accompanies death. Just as intoxication separates one from the true self, the agony of death describes the manner in which death comes between a person and the self, indicating the transition from one state of being to another.

Here the truth most likely indicates the reality of death, since every soul shall taste death (3:185; 21:35; 29:57; Z), or the reality of "the affair," meaning that one will now know the joy of death or its sorrow (Aj). The truth can also be understood to mean God (Ṭ), as "the Truth" is one of the Names of God. That in the second sentence refers to death (Aj, Z) or the truth (Ṭ). From a Quranic perspective, the disbelievers seek to avoid both, whereas the believers embrace them. That is what you were avoiding can be understood as addressed directly to readers or as recounting the address of God or the angels to the disbelievers at the moment of death.

20 The blowing of the trumpet on the Day of Judgment is mentioned in several verses (see 6:73; 18:99; 20:102; 23:101; 27:87; 36:51; 39:68c; 69:13; 74:8; 78:18c).

21 A driver and a witness refers to two angels, one who drives a person to the place where all souls are gathered and another who bears witness to the deeds one has performed (Ṭ, Z), or to a single angel who performs both functions (Z). Others understand the driver to be an angel and the witness to be one's own soul (Ṭ), as in 17:14: On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you. This verse could also be understood as a reference to every soul or as a reference only to the souls of the disbelievers (Ṭ).

22 Today your sight is piercing, so that now souls are able to see what they could not see before (JJ). At the moment of death, the veils that cover one's vision in this life are lifted and one sees the reality of creation and of one's own condition (see 67:10–11c). Some Muslims maintain that such piercing sight can be attained before the moment of physical death by those who have purified their souls, since the cover is attachment to the sensory experiences of this world. In commenting upon this verse, Ibn ʿArabī thus writes, "The believer who is granted the unveiling of things 'as they are' is granted [the return from the many to the One]. . . . And this is before he leaves this world" (Futūḥāt, III 388.33–34). In his philosophical commentary on Sūrah 36, Mullā Ṣadrā writes, "The soul's inner faculties will become powerful and piercing because of its perception of matters related to the next world, as in [God's] saying, Now We have removed from you your cover; so today your sight is piercing. The unseen forms, which store the results of the soul's actions, its ambitions, the intentions of its disposition, and the aims and shortcomings of its aspirations, will be witnessed."

23 His companion means the angel charged with overseeing the person (JJ), which could also be understood as the driver from v. 21 (Ṭ). Companion might also refer to the jinn or satan who is assigned to an individual, as in 43:36: And whosoever turns blindly away from the remembrance of the Compassionate, We assign to him a satan who is then a companion unto him (Z). In this latter interpretation, the verse would refer only to disbelievers, though many take it as a reference to all human beings (Ṭ). This is what I have ready are the words of his companion upon presenting the record of deeds for the reckoning (Ṭ).

is what I have ready." (24) "Cast you both into Hell every stubborn disbeliever, (25) every hinderer of good, every transgressor, every doubter (26) who has set up another god along with God. Cast him into the severe punishment." (27) His companion will say, "Our Lord, I did not make him rebel; rather, he was far astray." (28) He will say, "Dispute not before Me, since I have already presented unto you the Threat. (29) With Me the Word is not changed, and I do not wrong My servants." (30) That Day We shall say to Hell, "Have you been filled?" And it will say, "Is there more?" (31) And the Garden will be brought nigh unto the reverent, not distant: (32) "This is what is promised for every oft turning keeper, (33) who fears the Compassionate unseen and comes with a penitent heart.

24–26 Hinderer of good means one who does not render unto God and to others that to which they have a right (Ṭ). With regard to God's Commands, this means one who does not pay the obligatory alms (zakāh). With regard to other human beings, it means honoring contracts and dealing justly. Transgressor indicates one who violates others by reviling or oppressing them (Ṭ).

27 For the meaning of his companion, see 50:23c. I did not make him rebel declares the companion's innocence of what the person does (Ṭ), as when Satan says to human beings after they have followed his injunction to disbelieve, Surely I am quit of you. Truly I fear God, Lord of the worlds (59:16), and when Satan declares, I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves (14:22). Such verses indicate that all human beings bear responsibility for the state of their soul and would not incline to suggestions from Satan, were they not already far astray.

28 Human beings received ample warning during the life of this world, since there has been no community but that a warner has passed among them (35:24; cf. 16:36). Thus some read Threat here as a reference to the Quran (Ṭ), since to warn people of the impending punishment is considered a function of all revelations and is a central theme of the Quran. To dispute before God on the Day of Judgment is therefore futile, since such people did not avail themselves of the warning when it came, and all of their iniquities are now on display.

29–30 The Word is not changed refers to God's Decree (Ṭ) or to the Quran itself, as in 6:115 and 18:27: None alters His Words. It can also be understood as a reference to both, for in 32:13 God says, I shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together. The question posed by Hell, Is there more? is interpreted by some to mean, "I am full" (Ṭ), while others say it means, "Give me more" (Ṭ). Both interpretations are possible depending upon how one understands aḥādīth such as the following: "As for the Fire, it will not be filled until God puts His Foot upon it, saying to it, 'Enough, Enough.' Then it will be full, and it folds in upon itself. And God will not wrong anyone among His creation" (Q, Ṭ). Were Hell to say, Is there more? before the Foot of God, which is often understood as a symbol of Divine Mercy, is placed upon it, it could be read as a request for more. Were it to be said afterwards, it could be read as an acceptance of God's Decree or as a query as to whether it had fulfilled its task by accepting all whom God had decreed for it.

32 Oft turning translates awwāb, which indicates someone who is penitent and could also mean one who is constantly turned to God and thus remembers Him in all things; see 38:17c. Keeper indicates a person who keeps the Commands of God and avoids falling into sin (Ṭ). Translated according to the interpretation of these terms, this verse would mean, "everyone who is penitent and steadfast."

33 Fears the Compassionate unseen (cf. 36:11) can be interpreted as a reference to worshipping

(34) Enter it in peace. This is the day of abiding." (35) Therein they shall have whatsoever they will; and with Us there is more. (36) How many a generation before them have We destroyed who were of greater prowess than they? Then they searched about in the lands: "Is there any refuge?" (37) Truly in that is a reminder for whosoever has a heart, or gives ear as witness. (38) And indeed We created the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in six days, and no fatigue touched Us. (39) So bear patiently that which they say, and hymn

God while God remains unseen or worshipping God in seclusion (see also 67:12c). To come with a penitent heart means to come with a heart that has turned away from what displeases God to what makes God content (Ṭ).

34 Peace translates salām, which also denotes "greeting" and "safety." Enter it in peace is thus interpreted to mean, "Enter secure from every fear," or "Enter with the greeting of peace" (JJ), as in 56:25–26: They hear no idle talk therein, nor incitement to sin, save that "Peace! Peace!" is uttered (cf. 7:46; 10:10; 13:23–24; 14:23; 16:32; 19:62; 25:75; 33:44; 36:58). Thus the Garden is also known as the Abode of Peace (6:127; 10:25). That this is the day of abiding indicates that it is the day on which everlasting life in the Garden will begin (JJ, Ṭ).

35 That they shall have whatsoever they will (cf. 39:34; 42:22) is reaffirmed in 56:20–21, which speaks of their having fruits as they choose, and the meat of birds as they desire (cf. 52:22). And with Us there is more indicates the vision of God (Ṭ), which is considered the greatest blessing, beyond all else, that one can desire in Paradise. When viewed in contrast to the query of Hell at the end of v. 30, Is there more?, it could also be understood to mean that, whereas the punishment of Hell is set and delimited, the rewards of the Garden are infinite.

36 This verse refers to those tribes and peoples mentioned in vv. 12–14. The same rhetorical question is asked of previous generations in several Quranic verses with slight variations (see 6:6; 17:17; 19:74, 98; 20:128; 32:26; 36:31; 38:3). Other verses refer to similar destruction of towns (see 7:4; 21:11; 22:45, 48; 47:13). In all such verses, it is stated or implied that such people were destroyed for their iniquity and their refusal to accept the teachings of the messengers whom God had sent to them; see 6:6c; 47:13c. That they wandered in the land asking, Is there any refuge? implies that the disbelievers and the iniquitous had no place in which to find security in this life or the Hereafter.

37 In Arabic, to say that one "has a heart" is to say that one's heart is alive and awake, which also implies the ability to understand (Ṭ). Whosoever has a heart can thus mean, "Whoever has a heart that is aware, because if one's heart is not aware, it is as if he has no heart" (Z); see 2:7c. Gives ear as witness can mean "present with his intelligence, because whosoever is not present in mind, it is as if he is absent" (Z). As witness could also be rendered "and is a witness," in which case this verse would, from a Quranic perspective, refer to the three main faculties through which understanding is achieved: the heart, the ears, and the eyes. When interpreted to mean "and is a witness," this verse is also understood as a reference to the People of the Book, whose books Muslims believe bear witness to the prophethood of Muhammad (Ṭ, Z; see 7:157c), or to the believer who hears the Quran and bears witness to it (Ṭ, Z). It can also be seen as a reference to the hypocrite who hears the Quran, but does not benefit from it (Ṭ).

38 Regarding the creation of the earth in six days (cf. 10:3; 11:7; 25:29; 32:4; 57:4), see 7:54c. No fatigue touched Us is understood as a response to the assertion that God rested on the seventh day after creating the earth and all that is in it (JJ, Z). Regarding the preclusion of fatigue or weariness from the Divine Nature, see 2:255c.

39 Cf. 20:130. Bear patiently that which they say (cf. 20:130; 38:17; 73:10) enjoins the Prophet and, by extension, all Muslims to bear patiently the chiding of disbelievers and naysayers. The command to hymn the praise of thy Lord (cf. 15:98; 20:130; 40:56; 52:48; 110:3) indicates that one the praise of thy Lord before the rising of the sun and before its setting. (40) And at night glorify Him, and after prostrations. (41) And listen on the Day when the caller calls from near at hand, (42) on the Day when they hear the Cry of Truth; that is the Day of coming forth. (43) Truly We give life and We cause death, and unto Us is the journey's end. (44) That Day the earth is split asunder from about them—as they hasten forth. That is a gathering easy for Us. (45) We know best that which they say. Thine is not to compel them. So remind, by means of the Quran, those who fear My Threat.

should not dwell upon the words of disbelievers, but instead turn to God. According to some commentators, before the rising of the sun refers to the morning prayer and before the setting refers to the late afternoon prayer (Ṭ), though others say that before the setting refers to both afternoon prayers (JJ, Z). On a night of the full moon, the Prophet is reported to have said to a group of his Companions, "You will see your Lord as you see this moon, and you will have no trouble looking at Him. So whosoever can should not miss the offering of prayers before sunrise [fajr prayer] and before sunset [ʿaṣr prayer]." Then the Prophet recited, And hymn the praise of thy Lord before the rising of the sun and before the setting.

40 And at night glorify Him (cf. 52:49) refers to the obligatory night prayer (Q), or both the sunset prayer and the night prayer (JJ, Ṭ, Z), or the two supererogatory prayer cycles before the morning prayer (Q). It can also be taken as a general command to glorify God throughout the night (JJ, Q) and thus to practice the night vigil (Z); regarding the night vigil, see 11:114; 17:79; 21:20; 20:130; 25:63–64; 73:6, 20; 76:26; 73:1–2c. After prostrations is taken by some as a command to glorify God after each prayer. According to Ibn ʿAbbās, "The receding of the stars [52:49] is the two prayer cycles before the morning prayer, and after prostrations is the two prostrations after the sunset prayer" (Q). According to some, v. 39 refers to performing all of the obligatory prayers, though only two are mentioned specifically, while v. 40 refers to supererogatory prayers at night and after the prescribed prayers.

41–42 And listen to My Words (JJ) either on the Day when the caller calls, referring to the Archangel Seraphiel's blowing his trumpet and heralding the end of the world (see 39:68c; 78:18c), or "regarding the Day when the caller calls," meaning the description of that day provided in the Quran (Z). Some say that Seraphiel blows the trumpet, while Gabriel calls (Z). From near at hand refers to a place close to Heaven or a place close to those who are called (Z). In the case of a place close to Heaven, it is interpreted to mean Jerusalem (Ṭ, Z). In the case of a place close to those who are called, it is interpreted to mean "from beneath their feet" (Z). The Cry of Truth most likely refers to the second blast of Seraphiel's trumpet, when all souls are brought forth from their graves and gathered before God.

43 Although the plain sense of We give life and We cause death (cf. 15:23) indicates that God alone controls every phase of existence, it is also understood as an allusion to spiritual life and death. As Ismāʿīl Ḥaqqī writes, "We give life to hearts that are dead and cause carnal souls that are alive to die. And unto Us is the journey's end for one whose carnal soul has died and whose heart is alive." Echoing the famous verse Truly we are God's, and unto Him we return (2:156), that the journey's end is unto God is reaffirmed in several verses (see 2:285; 3:28; 5:18; 22:48; 24:42; 31:14; 35:18; 40:3; 42:15; 60:4; 64:3), though this is the only verse where it is phrased in the first-person plural, unto Us.

44 The earth being split asunder is among the many signs of the Last Day (see also 19:90), along with the heavens being rent, the mountains falling, and the seas swelling over. In this case only the earth is mentioned, since it pertains to the bodies being brought forth from their graves for the Resurrection. That is a gathering easy for Us reasserts one of the central themes of this sūrah, that just as God brought forth the first creation, so too can He bring about the Resurrection, as in 29:19: Have they not considered how God originates creation, then brings it back? Truly that is easy for God (see also 64:7c).

45 That God knows best that which they say (cf. 20:104) provides the rationale for enduring insults with patience (see v. 39). As true speech is that of the heart, and just as some hypocrites profess faith though they disbelieve (see 63:1c), some who have faith in their hearts may appear outwardly to reject the truth. This verse is thus related to the understanding that God knows best what they conceal (3:167; 84:23) and what is in their souls (11:31; see also 17:25), implying that God knows both the inveterate disbelievers and those who simply decry the Prophet due to social norms, but may eventually be among those who are reminded by the Quran of the truth and of their true nature, as happened with several of the Prophet's early detractors, most notably ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, who later became one of his closest Companions and the second Caliph after his death. Given the general principle in Islam that there is no coercion in religion (2:256), the Prophet is not to compel disbelievers. His function is only to remind human beings through revelation (see 88:21–22), as prophets are only responsible for proclaiming the message (see, e.g., 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 29:18; 36:17; 42:48). Those who fear My Threat (see also 87:9–10) is understood by some to mean the believers (JJ), but can be taken more generally to mean all but the most obstinate disbelievers, since every human being is believed to bear the primordial covenant, and thus the remembrance of God, within the depths of his or her soul (see 7:172c; 30:30c).

The Scatterers

al-Dhāriyāt

Al-Dhāriyāt is a Makkan sūrah, most likely from the later Makkan period. The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the winds that scatter in the first verse. It can be seen as following upon the previous sūrah in that vv. 5–6 guarantee the advent of the Day of Judgment, which will follow upon the Resurrection and Gathering, mentioned at the conclusion of the previous sūrah (Āl).

After attesting to the Judgment in the opening lines (vv. 1–6), the sūrah discusses the intellectual fallacies that lie at the heart of disbelief (vv. 7–14) and contrasts the final end of those who conjecture with the final end of the reverent (vv. 15–19). It then calls upon the signs within creation and the human soul as evidence of the Day of Judgment (vv. 20–23). This is followed by references to the stories of Abraham, Lot, and Moses (vv. 24–40), transitioning into a discussion of the pre-Islamic Arabian tribes of ʿĀd and Thamūd (vv. 41–45), and concluding with a reference to Noah (v. 46), who preceded all of the aforementioned tribes and peoples. The next passage (vv. 47–55) begins with another allusion to the evidence of Divine Omnipotence provided by the natural order (vv. 47–49) and provides counsel to the Prophet Muhammad. The sūrah concludes with a discussion of the relationship between the Divine and the human (vv. 56–58) and a final warning to the disbelievers (vv. 59–60).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) By the scatterers as they scatter, (2) and by those that bear a burden, (3) by those that course with ease, (4) and by those that apportion the Command, (5) verily what you are promised is true, (6) and truly the judgment shall come to pass. (7) By Heaven possessed of paths, (8) truly you are of differing claims. (9) Whosoever has been turned away shall from it be turned away. (10) Perish

1 A reference to the winds that scatter dust (Bḍ, JJ, Ṭ) or an allusion to the cycles by which women bring forth subsequent generations (Bḍ).

2 A reference to the clouds that carry moisture (Bḍ, JJ, Q, Ṭ) or to women who are pregnant (Bḍ, Q).

3 Ships that course upon the surface of the ocean (Bḍ, JJ, Q, Ṭ) or the planets that run through their stations (Bḍ).

4 The angels who apportion all that God has ordained for creation (Bḍ, JJ, Ṭ) or the winds that apportion the rains by dispersing the clouds (Bḍ).

5 The promise of the Resurrection and what follows it will come to pass (JJ), indicating that the final accounting, reward, and punishment are inevitable (Ṭ). Vv. 5–6 constitute the response to the oaths taken in vv. 1–4, which can be understood to mean that the subtle ways in which life is supported in this world, through winds and rain and other means, bear witness to the existence of a Creator behind them to Whom they all return, as in 2:164: And the water God sends down from the sky whereby He revives the earth after its death, scattering all manner of beast therein; and the shifting of the winds; and the clouds subdued between the sky and the earth are surely signs for a people who understand (see also 7:57; 30:48).

6 Cf. 52:7. Shall come to pass can also be translated shall befall (wāqiᶜ), for which see 56:1–2c.

7 Paths translates ḥubuk, which indicates ripples made upon sand or water by the wind (Ṭ) or the streaks upon mountains. In this context, ḥubuk refers to the subtle paths through which the heavenly bodies move. Heaven could also be interpreted to mean "sky," in which case ḥubuk would refer to streaks of clouds. As all of these various meanings of ḥubuk indicate subtle wonders of the natural world, this verse is understood in relation to the verb ḥabaka, meaning, "to make well and firm," as an allusion to the beauty and sound structure of the created order (Ṭ).

8 Differing claims refers to the different opinions among people regarding the Quran, as some believe in it and some deny it (Bḍ, JJ, Ṭ); or to the different opinions the disbelievers have regarding the Prophet, some maintaining that he is a poet, others that he is a sorcerer, and others that he is possessed (Bḍ, JJ); or to the disbelievers' opinions regarding the Resurrection and Judgment (Bḍ).

9 Away here means away from the Quran (Ṭ), or the Prophet and the Quran (JJ), or from the truth. Turned away translates ufika/yuʾfaku, which also means "to lie" or "to pervert." The verse is therefore understood to mean that those whose intellects and souls have already strayed or been perverted will continue to stray (IK). Mujāhid thus interprets it to mean that whoever is weak in intellect and judgment will thereby be turned away from religion (IK). Some also read has been turned away (ufika) as an active verb rather than a passive one and interpret it to mean "to lie," thus indicating, "Whosoever lies shall be turned away from it" (Bḍ, R).

10 Perish (qutila) could also mean "cursed be." Most interpret this verse as a reference to those who say that human beings will not be resurrected and that they cannot have certainty (IK, Ṭ). Those who conjecture translates kharrāṣūn, which indicates those who guess and opine, but do not seek to ascertain and confirm. It also indicates those who speak as if they have ascertained those who conjecture! (11) Those who blunder along in a stupor, (12) asking, "When is the Day of Judgment?" (13) A day when they are tried upon the Fire. (14) Taste your trial! This is what you sought to hasten! (15) Truly the reverent shall be amidst gardens and springs, (16) partaking of that which their Lord has given them. Truly they were virtuous aforetime. (17) Little of the night did they slumber, (18) and ere dawn would seek forgiveness. (19) And in their wealth was a due for the beggar and the deprived. (20) Upon the earth are signs for those possessing certainty, (21) and within your souls. Do you not then behold?

and thus lie, or those who make false accusations (yatakharraṣūn) against the Prophet (Ṭ).

11 The conjecturers roam about in stupefying ignorance (JJ), heedless of what is to befall them and of what God has commanded them to do (Ṭ).

12 This question and variations upon it are repeated throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 10:48; 34:29–30; 67:25; 75:6). In general, the disbelievers do not pose it in a spirit of inquiry, but one of derision, mockery, and denial (IK).

13 Tried upon the Fire means punished and burned in the Fire (IK, Ṭ). Tried translates yuftanūn, which relates to the means by which gold is tested and purified with fire (IK, Ṭ).

14 Taste your trial; that is, taste the punishment for having disbelieved (3:106; 6:30; 8:35; 46:34) or taste the punishment of the burning (3:181; 8:50; 22:22). The disbelievers seem to wish to hasten the Punishment of God when they ask mockingly, When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25), and point to the Prophet's inability to bring about the Judgment of which he warns them as evidence of his assumed folly. Thus the Prophet is told to say, That which you seek to hasten is not within my power. Judgment belongs to God alone, He relates the Truth, and He is the best of deciders (6:57; see also 8:32; 22:47). This attitude of the disbelievers is elsewhere contrasted with that of the believers, as in 42:18: Those who believe not in it seek to hasten it, and those who believe are wary of it and know that it is the truth.

15 See 15:45–46c; see also 44:51–52.

16 The reverent will be partaking of all the delights of the Garden in the Hereafter, because they had been virtuous in the life of this world.

17 Little of the night did they slumber implies, "Much of the night did they pray" (Ṭ). Many interpret this verse to mean that they would sleep little and pray during the period between the sunset prayer (maghrib) and the night prayer (ʿishāʾ) or during another period of the night (Ṭ).

18 Ere dawn translates asḥār (see also 3:17), which refers to the last part of the night before the morning twilight. Regarding seeking forgiveness at this hour, a famous ḥadīth states, "Every night during the last third of the night, our Lord descends to the Heaven of this earth and says, 'Who calls upon Me that I might answer him? Who asks of Me that I might give to him? Who seeks My Forgiveness that I might forgive him?' " (IK). The Prophet was known to sleep little. He would usually rise for supererogatory prayers before dawn and strongly encouraged others to do so. Regarding the practice of night vigil (tahajjud), see 17:79c; 73:1–2c.

19 Cf. 70:24–25. Due is interpreted as a reference to the required alms (zakāh) rather than supererogatory charity (ṣadaqah; Q, Ṭ), but may refer to both. For a list of those who have a due or right to a share of one's wealth, see 2:177. The beggar indicates those who ask to be given charity, while the deprived indicates those who have need but do not beg (JJ, Ṭ). The deprived can be understood as a reference to human beings or to all living creatures who are unable to voice their needs (R). In either case, there is an implied obligation upon those with wealth to be aware of the needs of others, even when others may be reticent or unable to bring those needs to their attention.

20–21 These verses relate to the opening lines of the sūrah, which call upon some of the subtleties of nature as evidence of God's Wisdom and Omnipotence. The theme that the created order presents signs for those who have eyes to see recurs throughout the Quran; see commentary on 41:53 and 45:3–4. For the relationship between the signs in the external world and those within the human soul, see 41:53c. In relation to v. 21, the famous commentator and Ḥadīth scholar Qatādah is reported to have said, "Whoever meditates upon his own creation recognizes that he was only created for worship and that his joints were only made flexible for worship" (IK). Souls could also be rendered "selves," in which case it is taken to indicate the variations in human languages, forms, colors, and natures (Āl) or the lowliness of the physical body, given the manner in which food and drink leave the body (Āl). "In your selves" could thus refer to the waste matter the body contains (Ghazzālī, Iḥyāʾ: K. dhamm al-kibr waʾl-ʿujb).

(22) And in Heaven is your provision and that which you were promised. (23) So by the Lord of Heaven and earth, it is indeed true—as it is that you are endowed with speech. (24) Hast thou heard tell of Abraham's honored guests, (25) when they entered upon him and said, "Peace!" he said, "Peace—an unfamiliar folk." (26) Then he went quietly to his family and came with a fattened calf. (27) He placed it close to them, saying, "Will you not eat?" (28) Then he conceived a fear of them. They said, "Fear not!" and gave him glad tidings of a knowing son.

22 As translated, your provision refers to all the things that God has destined for every person (R) and that are brought down by the angels (Qu). It could also be rendered "in the sky is your provision," implying primarily precipitation (R, Ṭ), but also light and wind. That which you were promised is understood as a reference to all that God has apportioned for every person (Ṭ), thus indicating the manner in which God determines all things (JJ).

23 It is indeed true refers to that which you were promised in v. 22 (JJ, R), to the Quran as a whole (R), or to the Judgment, as in v. 6 (R). The ending phrase means that just as you have no doubt that you speak, you should have no doubt in its reality (Bḍ).

24–36 The account of Abraham provided here is very close to that in 11:69–76 and 15:51–60; for more details, see commentary on these passages. For other aspects of the Abraham story in the Quran, see 14:35–41; 37:83–109. For the Biblical account, see Genesis 18.

24–25 V. 24 could also be rendered as a definitive statement, "Thou hast heard tell of Abraham's honored guests" (Q). Honored guests refers to a group of three, ten, or twelve angels, one of whom was Gabriel (JJ); see also 11:69. The angels' salutation to Abraham is in the accusative, indicating, "We wish you peace," whereas Abraham's response is in the nominative, indicating, "Peace be upon you," the greeting of the people of Paradise (56:26) and the one enjoined among the believers (6:54). "Peace be upon you" is a firmer and more complete salutation, indicating that Abraham greeted the angels in conformity with the injunction in 4:86: And when you are offered a greeting, respond with a greeting that is better, or return it (R, Z).

26 Elsewhere it is said and he hastened to bring them a roasted calf (11:69). The Quranic account of this encounter is similar to that found in Genesis 18 in that Abraham is at first unsure as to the identity of his guests. It differs, however, in that in the Genesis account the angels eat the meal that Abraham offers them.

27–28 See 11:70c. Abraham conceived a fear of them (cf. 11:70) because in the ancient world, including the Arab world, refusing to partake of offered food was considered a sign of hostility or ill will. It is also proposed that Abraham thought they were angels sent to punish him (Āl). While here it is the angels who gave him glad tidings, 37:112 states, We gave him glad tidings. Together the two verses indicate that God gave glad tidings through the angels as intermediaries. The majority of commentators maintain that a knowing son (cf. 15:53) refers to Isaac, but others see it as a reference to Ishmael (Āl, Ṭ); see also 11:71.

(29) Then his wife came forward with a loud cry; she struck her face and said, "A barren old woman!" (30) They said, "Thus has thy Lord decreed. Truly He is the Wise, the Knowing." (31) He said, "What is your errand, O messengers?" (32) They said, "We have been sent unto a guilty people, (33) to send upon them stones of clay (34) marked by thy Lord for the prodigal." (35) So We brought forth those among them who were believers; (36) yet We did not find therein but one house of submitters. (37) And We left therein a sign for those who fear the painful punishment. (38) And in Moses [We left a sign], when We sent him to Pharaoh with a manifest authority. (39) But he turned away with his court and 29 In 11:72 Sarah exclaims, Oh, woe unto me! Shall I bear a child when I am an old woman, and this husband of mine is an old man? That would surely be an astounding thing. Abraham was said to be 120 years old at this time, while Sarah was 99 (JJ).

30 This declaration is similar to the declaration that Gabriel makes to Mary when announcing the conception of Jesus: Thus shall it be. Thy Lord says, "It is easy for Me." And [it is thus] that We might make him a sign unto mankind, and a mercy from Us. And it is a matter decreed (19:21).

31–32 See 15:57–58c. A guilty people refers to the people of Lot.

33 In other passages, before the stones are sent, the town has already been afflicted: So when Our Command came, We made its uppermost to be its lowermost, and We rained down upon them stones of baked clay (11:82; see also 15:74).

34 Marked . . . for the prodigal is understood to mean that each stone bore the name of the person at whom it was to be hurled (Āl, JJ). Marked by the Lord can be understood to mean that each stone fell with a Divine purpose; see also 11:83.

35–36 God removed the believers in order to spare them from the punishment intended for the disbelievers. One house refers to Lot and his two daughters; they were saved from this punishment, but his wife was not (see 7:83; 11:81; 15:59–60; 26:170–71; 27:57; 29:32; 54:34; cf. Genesis 19:26). The mention first of believers and then of submitters can be seen as a reference to those who combine faith and action (Āl).

37 We left therein a sign indicates that the ruins of the town were left as a sign or that the story of the punishment was preserved as a warning for later generations, or both.

38–40 The account of Moses, whose name appears 136 times in the Quran, is featured more prominently than that of any other prophet. As with most Makkan sūrahs that feature the story of Moses (40:23–45; 43:46–56; 44:17–31; 79:15–25), here the account is given more as a spiritual example reflecting aspects of the Prophet Muhammad's challenge than as history. The more detailed accounts of Moses' mission are found in 2:49–61; 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 17:101–4; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46.

38 A manifest authority is understood as a reference to the miracles associated with Moses (Āl, Bq), because they provided a clear indication of the truth of the message (Bq). It can also be seen as a reference to the belief that God grants His messengers authority over whomsoever He will (59:6).

39 His court translates ruknihi, which literally means "his support" and in this context is understood by some to imply might and strength (Sh) or something in which Pharaoh trusts or on which he relies. Some interpret it to mean "his people" (Āl, Ṭ), "his companions" (Ṭ), or the hosts around him (Sh), because he "relies upon them" (yarkanu ilayhim) and derives strength from them (Āl). That Pharaoh must turn to them implies that he has no response to Moses but to deride him, since he cannot argue against the proofs that Moses has brought. A sorcerer (see said, "A sorcerer or one possessed." (40) So We seized him and his hosts and cast them into the sea, for he was blameworthy. (41) And in ᶜĀd [We left a sign], when We sent upon them the barren wind. (42) Naught did it leave that it came upon, but that it made it as bones decayed. (43) And in Thamūd [We left a sign], when it was said unto them, "Enjoy yourselves for a time." (44) Then they insolently defied the Command of their Lord, and the thunderbolt seized them as they looked on. (45) So they were not able to rise; nor could they help one another. (46) As for the people of Noah before, truly they were an iniquitous people. (47) And the sky We established with might; truly We make vast!

also 7:109; 26:34; 40:24) or one possessed is the same accusation often leveled against the Prophet Muhammad by the Quraysh; see 51:52c.

40 The casting of Pharaoh and his hosts into the sea refers to the parting of the Red Sea for the Israelites and its closing over Pharaoh and his hosts, who were in pursuit, as in 2:50: And when We parted the sea for you and so delivered you, and drowned the House of Pharaoh as you looked on. The drowning of Pharaoh and his army is mentioned in several Quranic passages; see 7:136; 8:54; 17:102–3; 43:55–56; 44:22–24.

41–45 The ᶜĀd and the Thamūd were pre-Islamic Arabian tribes who rejected the prophets sent to them. For the account of the tribe of ᶜĀd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16; 54:18–21. For that of the tribe of Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31.

41–42 Barren wind indicates a wind with no benefit, because it does not carry rain or pollinate any trees (Āl, JJ), unlike those winds mentioned in the opening of the sūrah. Elsewhere the wind that comes upon the tribe of ᶜĀd is described as a howling wind (41:16; 54:19) or, more emphatically, a howling, raging wind (69:6). The wind laid waste to all of the people and all of the land upon which it came (JJ). For the broader use of wind and winds in the Quran, see 30:48–49c.

43 The people of Thamūd were allowed to enjoy themselves in this world for three days after hamstringing the camel that God had sent them as a sign; see 11:65. While in other verses enjoy indicates partaking of the blessings God has provided (e.g., 16:80; 36:44; 37:148), this use of enjoy has a sense of irony, since the life of this world is naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20). It thus indicates that God will grant them a brief respite in this life, but that they will then suffer greater punishment in the Hereafter. For more on the ironic use of enjoy in the Quran, see commentary on 77:46: Eat and enjoy yourselves a little; truly you are guilty.

44 The tribe of Thamūd is also said to have been destroyed by a thunderbolt in 41:13, by the Cry (or a cry) in 11:67 and 54:31, and by an earthquake in 7:78. These are not necessarily contradictory, but instead are different aspects of the overwhelming (al-ṭāghiyah) that is said to befall them in 69:5.

45 The people of Thamūd were unable to flee due to the force with which it seized them, as in 7:78, which says: So the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode (cf. 11:67; Āl, Sh).

46 For the Quranic account of Noah and the destruction of his people, see 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; Sūrah 71.

47–48 These verses return to the motif of the first verses of the sūrah, which point to the composition of the natural order as bearing signs of God. We make vast indicates God's ability to create as He wills and His Generosity in providing for all things (Āl, Sh). What excellent spreaders refers to God Himself with a plural noun because the sentence is in the first-person plural and indicates both the wisdom behind the manner in which God created the earth and God's Generosity in doing so. Spreaders translates māhidūn, which derives from the same root, m-h-d, as cradle

(48) And the earth We laid out—what excellent spreaders! (49) And of all things We created pairs, that haply you may remember. (50) So flee unto God. Truly I am a clear warner unto you from Him. (51) And do not set up another god along with God. Truly I am a clear warner unto you from Him. (52) Likewise, there came no messenger unto those before them, but that they said, "A sorcerer or one possessed." (53) Do they exhort one another to it? Nay, they are a rebellious people.

(mahd), to which the earth is likened elsewhere: He it is Who made the earth a cradle for you and made paths for you therein, that haply you may be guided (43:10; see also 20:53).

49 Pairs can be seen as a reference to the fact that all animals are created both male and female (Āl) or to the manner in which creation is made up of opposites, such as night and day, Heaven and earth, distress and happiness, and so forth (Āl). Here that haply you may remember is understood to mean that creation is for people to reflect upon and to realize that God is the Creator (Āl, R, Sh).

50 So flee unto God may mean, "Flee from the Punishment of God to His Mercy through faith in Him, follow His Command, and work in obedience to Him" (Ṭ); or "Flee from obeying Satan to obeying God"; or "Flee from ignorance to knowledge" (Sh). According to Ibn ʿAbbās, this verse means, "Flee from sins and take shelter with God through repentance." Others understand it to mean, "Be cautious of everything other than God, because whoever flees to what is other than Him does not benefit from it" (Sh). Similarly, the Prophet is reported to have often prayed, "O God! I seek refuge in Thy Contentment from Thine Anger, and in Thy Pardon from Thy Punishment, I seek refuge in Thee from Thee." Regarding the reasons one must flee unto God, al-Qushayrī writes, "The human being is in one of two states: either the state of coveting something or the state of dreading something, either the state of hope or the state of fear, either the state of attracting benefit or the state of repelling harm. So his fleeing must be to God, for the one who benefits and the one who harms is God." Al-Qushayrī goes on to say, "It is incumbent upon the servant to flee from ignorance to knowledge, from caprice to reverence, from doubt to certainty, and from Satan to God. It is incumbent upon the servant to flee from his actions that are a trial to his actions that are sufficient; and from characterizing Him in terms of God's Wrath to characterizing Him in terms of His Mercy; and from His Self, as when He says, God warns you of Himself [3:28] to His Self, as when He says, So flee unto God" (Aj, Qu). From this perspective, the command to flee unto God is placed after the creation of all things in pairs to emphasize that one cannot flee to anything other than God, since all things perish, save His Face (28:88).

51 That one should not set up equals unto God (2:22) or ascribe partners unto God (4:36; 7:33) is among the most predominant themes of the Quran; see 4:48c; 6:151–52c. Regarding the present verse, al-Ghazzālī writes, "One who does not see God in everything sees something other than Him. And if there is something other than God to which one gives attention, this attention involves an element of hidden idolatry (al-shirk al-khafī). Rather, pure monotheism (al-tawḥīd al-khāliṣ) consists in seeing only God in everything" (Iḥyāʾ, K. Qirāʾat al-Qurʾān).

52 This verse parallels the manner in which Pharaoh and his people sought to discredit Moses in v. 39. It can be read as providing solace to the Prophet by showing him that his plight is the same as that of previous messengers or as a warning to the Quraysh that the fate of Pharaoh and his followers will be their fate as well if they do not follow the Prophet. The accusation that the Prophet was a sorcerer (10:2) or one possessed (52:29) is among the many accusations the Makkans brought against him (cf. 15:6–7; 23:70; 34:8; 68:51). For other verses that liken the plight of the Prophet Muhammad to that of previous prophets, see 15:11; 34:34; 36:30; 43:7, 23.

53 Exhort one another to it; that is, exhort one another to saying that the Prophet is a sorcerer or

(54) So turn away from them, for thou shalt not be blamed. (55) And remind, for truly the Reminder benefits the believers. (56) I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me. (57) I desire no provision from them; nor do I desire that they should feed Me. (58) Truly God is the Provider, the Possessor of Strength, the Firm. (59) And surely for those who do wrong is a share like unto the share of their companions; so let them not seek to hasten. (60) Woe unto those who disbelieve on account of the Day that they are promised.

one possessed (R), hence to denying the Prophet (Ālī, Bg). Most commentators interpret this verse as an expression of wonder that they would in fact exhort one another to denial of God and of revelation (Ālī, R). But it could also be understood as a negation meaning, "They do not exhort one another to it" (Ālī), in which case "it" would refer to belief.

54 This verse says to the Prophet, "Once you have delivered the message, you are not responsible for whether the disbelievers follow it or for the punishment that will afflict them if they do not; you are only responsible to continue reminding the believers who do benefit from the message"; see 2:272c.

55 Remind is aimed at either the believers to the exclusion of the disbelievers or both the believers and the disbelievers. Here the Reminder is understood as a reference to the Quran. The verse is thus taken as an injunction to preach the Quran, because it benefits believers by increasing their spiritual insight (baṣīrah) and giving them strength in certainty and knowledge (Aj, Ālī).

56 Together, this and the preceding verse indicate that God did not create human beings merely to seek their own sustenance, but rather to worship and submit to Him (Aj, IK), or in other words to remember God. Al-Zamakhsharī argues that this points to the purpose for which human beings were created, even if most of them do not fulfill this function. From this perspective, God only created human beings to worship Him by choosing to worship freely and not being constrained to do it, because He created them as contingent beings. Had God wanted their worship by way of coercion (qasr) and compulsion (iljāʾ), it would be found among all human beings (Z). Regarding God's desire that human beings worship, a ḥadīth qudsī states, "O Son of Adam! Dedicate yourself (tafarrugh) to worshipping Me, and I will fill your chest with riches and make your poverty dissipate. Otherwise, I will fill your chest with distractions and will not make your poverty dissipate" (IK). In this vein, the verse expands upon the command to flee unto God (v. 50), as everything else in which one seeks refuge distracts human beings from their true purpose. This passage could thus be interpreted as another expression of the central Quranic theme that human beings are not created for this world alone, but for the next. Ibn Kathīr links this to his understanding of what is reported to have been written in a previous scripture: "It has been transmitted in one of the Divine books [that] God says, 'Son of Adam, I created you to worship Me, so play not! I have taken on the burden of your provision, so tire yourself not! If you seek Me, you will find Me. If you find Me, you have found everything. If I pass you by, everything has passed you by. And I am more beloved to you than everything.'"

According to a saying attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās, save to worship Me means "save to know Me" (Bg). Viewed in this light, v. 56 follows upon the declaration in v. 49 that all things were created so that people could remember or recollect, "since God created the cosmos only for knowledge of Him" (Futūḥāt, IV 221.20). In this vein, al-Ālūsī cites the famous ḥadīth qudsī whose authenticity through transmission cannot be substantiated, but which is widely repeated among Muslims: "I was a hidden treasure, and I loved to be known; so I created creation in order to be known."

57–58 God has no need of human beings, for they are needful of God; and He is the Self-Sufficient, the Praised (35:15).

59 A share like unto the share of their companions indicates fellow wrongdoers from generations past, thus implying that current wrongdoers will be forced to endure a punishment similar to those endured by the people who rejected the prophets mentioned in previous verses (e.g., vv. 41–46). It can also be seen as a reference to those who follow the people or customs of their own time blindly, as this will not suffice as an excuse on the Day of Judgment. Let them not seek to hasten relates to the trial that they sought to hasten in v. 14.

60 The Day is the Day of Judgment, as promised in vv. 5–6.

The Mount

al-Ṭūr

All commentators agree that al-Ṭūr is from the Makkan period, most likely from the latter half. According to some it was revealed immediately after Sūrah 32, al-Sajdah. It takes its name from the mention of the Mount (al-Ṭūr) in the first verse. Al-Ṭūr is understood by most as a reference to Mt. Sinai here and wherever else it is found in the Quran (2:63, 93; 19:52; 20:80; 28:29, 46), although the full name "Mount Sinai" is given twice (Ṭūr Saynāʾ in 23:20 and Ṭūr Sīnīn in 95:2). It follows upon the previous sūrah in that the first half (vv. 1–28) focuses upon the subject of the concluding verse of that sūrah, the Day that they are promised (51:60; Aj, Āl), and in that it promises punishment for the wrongdoers and disbelievers mentioned in 51:59–60 (R). This sūrah can thus be understood as an affirmation of the promise made in Sūrah 51 (see 51:5, 22) and as a further warning thereof (Bq).

Al-Ṭūr begins with a series of oaths and a promise of God's impending punishment and the Day of Judgment (vv. 1–10), followed by a description of what will befall the deniers (vv. 11–16), whose fate is then contrasted to the rewards bestowed upon the reverent (vv. 17–28). This is followed by a reply to accusations made regarding the Prophet (vv. 29–31) and a series of challenges to those who deny him and the revelation (vv. 32–43). The sūrah then concludes with counsel to turn away from disputing with the disbelievers, to be patient, and to praise God (vv. 44–49).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) By the Mount, (2) and by a Book inscribed (3) on parchment outspread; (4) by the house inhabited, (5) by the canopy raised, (6) and by the sea swelling over, (7) truly thy Lord's Punishment shall come to pass. (8) None can avert it. (9) On a day when the sky churns with [great] churning, (10) and the mountains move with [great] motion; (11) woe that Day to the deniers (12) who play in idle talk, (13) a day when they are thrust violently into the Fire of Hell:

1 The Mount is a reference to Mt. Sinai and by extension to what was revealed to Moses on Mt. Sinai (Bq). It can also be seen as a general reference to all mountains (Bq, R).

2–3 These verses may refer to the Torah, the Quran (Bḍ, JJ, R), or the Preserved Tablet (85:22; Bḍ, IK, R), the last of which most interpret to mean the source of all revelations. It could also be seen as a reference to the books in which the deeds of all human beings are recorded (R) or to the knowledge and wisdom written within the hearts of God's friends (Bḍ).

4 The Prophet is reported to have said regarding his Night Journey and Ascension (for which see 17:1; 53:1–14), "I was taken to the house inhabited. It is visited every day by seventy thousand angels who will not come back to visit it again" (IK). According to many classical scholars, every heaven has its own house of worship, which is the direction of prayer for its residents. The house inhabited is said to be in the third, sixth, or seventh Heaven (JJ); Ibn Kathīr reports that the house located in the lowest heaven is called "the Glorious House" (bayt al-ʿizzah). Others say the house inhabited can also be understood as a reference to the Kaʿbah or to the heart of the believer and its being "inhabited" by knowledge (Bḍ).

5 The canopy raised is the sky (Bḍ, JJ), as in 21:32: And We made the sky a canopy preserved (IK).

6 This verse can be understood as a reference to the sea being full (Bḍ, JJ) or to the seas "boiling over" on the Day of Judgment, as in 81:6: And when the seas are made to swell over (cf. 82:3; Bḍ, IK).

7–8 Cf. 51:6. Shall come to pass can also be translated shall befall (wāqiʿ), for which see 56:1–2c. Here the phrase indicates that the punishment shall come upon all who deserve it (JJ). These verses constitute the response to the oaths taken in vv. 1–7, all of which point to the completeness of God's Power and Wisdom, which, like His Punishment, none can avert (Bḍ).

9 Elsewhere it is said that the sky shall be rent asunder (42:5; 55:37; 73:18; 84:1; also see 25:25; 82:1), and that the sky shall be opened as if it were gates (78:19).

10 The mountains move, becoming heaps of shifting sand (73:14), as in 27:88: And thou seest the mountains that thou dost suppose are solid pass away like clouds—the work of God, Who perfects all things. See also 18:47; 69:14; 70:8–9; 78:20; 81:3; 89:21; 101:5.

11 This phrase is repeated ten times in Sūrah 77. Here, as there, it refers to those who deny the Day of Judgment (as the same phrase does in 83:10) or those who deny the prophethood of Muhammad.

12 To play in idle talk is often associated with vain discussion (6:68; see 6:68–69c), but it means more generally to become engrossed with the vanities of this world (R). Regarding the meaning of this verse, which has become an idiomatic Arabic expression, see 70:42c; 74:45c. Several Quranic passages indicate a direct connection between denying God and idle talk. This is made more explicit in a ḥadīth: "Whosoever can guarantee me that he will control what is between his two lips and his two thighs, I will guarantee him the Garden." The Prophet is also reported to have said, "The fornication of the tongue is the enticing word." And it is reported that when the Prophet

(14) "This is the Fire that you used to deny. (15) Is this sorcery, or do you not see? (16) Burn therein! Be patient, or be not patient; it will be the same for you. You are only requited for that which you used to do." (17) Truly the reverent shall be in Gardens and bliss, (18) rejoicing in what their Lord has given them. And their Lord has shielded them from the punishment of Hellfire: (19) "Eat and drink in enjoyment for that which you used to do," (20) reclining upon couches arrayed, and We shall wed them to wide-eyed maidens. (21) And those who believe and instructed the prominent Companion Muʿādh ibn Jabal in the principles of Islam, he took hold of his own tongue and said, "Restrain this." Muʿādh said, "O Prophet of God, are we to be held accountable for what we say?" He said, "May your mother be bereaved of you Muʿādh! Is there anything that drags people on their faces"—or he said "on their noses"—"into the Fire other than the harvests of their tongues?"

13 The violent way the deniers are cast into the Fire is described graphically in many verses: they are dragged upon their faces (54:48), they are bound in shackles and chains (40:71; see 36:8c; 40:70–72c), and they drink a boiling liquid and a cold, murky fluid (38:57), among other forms of punishment. This verse could also be read, "a day when they are called unto the Fire of Hell with a [great] calling" (Bḍ).

14 Cf. 83:17. This verse is similar to 77:29: Away to that which you used to deny! Vv. 14–16 are understood to be uttered by the angels to the inhabitants of the Fire.

15 This verse asks, "Is this sorcery, as you used to claim?" as in 54:2: And if they see a sign, they turn away and say, "Incessant sorcery!" And as in 15:15, where it is said that among the responses to the miracles and revelations brought by prophets, people say, Our eyes are merely spellbound. Nay, we are a people bewitched! The disbelievers are said to have made this charge against several messengers of God, most notably the prophets Moses and Muhammad (see 5:110; 6:7; 10:2; 11:7; 34:43; 37:15; 43:30; 46:7; 61:6; 74:24).

16 Whereas patience with the trials or punishments in this life can ease the trial, lessen the punishment, and even provide spiritual benefit, in the Hereafter one no longer benefits from exercising this virtue, which should have been exercised before, and the punishment will not be lessened, regardless of one's disposition toward it (R). You are only requited for that which you used to do (cf. 27:90; 37:39; 66:7) indicates that everyone receives the punishment that they have brought upon themselves, as in 10:44: Truly God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves.

17 This is the only verse that presents Gardens and bliss as parallels. Other verses speak of Gardens of bliss (see 5:65; 10:9; 22:56; 31:8; 37:43; 56:12; 68:34).

18 Regarding God's shielding the believers from Hellfire, see 44:56c.

19 Cf. 69:24; 77:43. In enjoyment conveys the idea of a gracious host who provides hospitality with no reservations. Here it is understood to mean "while you are enjoying [them]," referring to the eating and drinking, or to mean "as congratulations" for that which you used to do (Bḍ).

20 Elsewhere couches are described as embroidered couches (56:15) upon which the reverent recline facing one another (37:44; 44:53; 56:16), in the shade with their spouses (36:56). The word for "couches," surur (sing. sarīr), is semantically related to both "joy" (surūr) and "secret" (sirr, pl. asrār). Joy (surūr) is thus described as "rejoicing that remains concealed," and the couches upon which believers sit can be seen as couches of joy (Iṣ). Thus al-Qushayrī glosses reclining upon couches as "they remain in joy and felicity." For wide-eyed maidens (cf. 44:54; 55:72; 56:22), see 44:54c.

21 According to a saying attributed by some to the Prophet (Bḍ, Q) and by others to Ibn ʿAbbās (IK, Ṭ), "God elevates the ranks of the believers' progeny to the rank of their parents, even when the former have not performed as well as whose progeny followed them in faith, We shall cause their progeny to join them and will not stint them aught of their deeds. Each man shall be held in pledge for that which he has earned. (22) And We shall bestow upon them fruits and meat as they desire. (23) Therein they shall pass to one another a cup wherein is no idle talk, nor incitement to sin, (24) and there wait upon them youths, for them, as if they were hidden pearls. (25) And they will turn to one another, questioning each other, (26) saying, "Truly aforetime, when among our families, we were anxious, (27) but God was gracious unto us and shielded us from the punishment of the scorching wind. (28) Truly we did call upon Him aforetime.

the latter, to comfort the parents thereby." Then he recited this verse. Join them can mean both that they will be together and that the children will receive a reward equal to that of their parents (Ṭ). Ibn ʿAbbās is also reported to have said, "No part of the reward their parents receive for their good deeds will be reduced for them" (IK), though all such interpretations assume the children are believers as well. Each man shall be held in pledge for that which he has earned (cf. 74:38) indicates that the good and evil deeds that a soul has committed bind it to a particular end, since God attends to every soul in accordance with what it has earned (13:33). The first part of this verse can also be read with progeny as a direct object and with "follow" in the first-person plural (atbaʿnāhum), meaning, "Those who believed and whose progeny We caused to follow in belief," a reading preferred by several commentators (JJ, Ṭ).

22 Cf. 56:20–21; 77:42. Several other verses also refer to the fruits of the Garden that will be at the disposal of the believers (e.g., 36:57; 37:42; 38:51; 43:73); see 36:57c.

23 Nor incitement to sin (see also 56:25) translates lā taʾthīm, which can also indicate that there is no lying or any form of sinful speech. Both readings indicate that this wine does not bring about the negative effects that might result from the wine of this world (JJ); see also 37:47; 56:19.

24 For the youths who wait upon the believers, see 56:17c; 76:19c. For them translates lahum, which could be taken to mean that these are their own children (R).

25 Cf. 37:27, 50. This verse refers to the believers speaking with one another about their lives in this world while they are in the Hereafter, in contrast to the disbelievers, of whom the Quran says, There shall be no kinship between them that Day, nor will they question one another (23:101; see also 28:66). Their questioning one another can also refer to the questions they pose about their former companions who did not enter the Garden (see 37:50–55).

26–27 That they were anxious can be understood to indicate that their questioning one another arises from their humility, as they do not think that they have merited entry into Paradise and are aware that it is only through the Grace of God that they could have achieved such a station. Scorching wind translates samūm, which indicates a wind that penetrates the pores (masāmm) of one's body (Aj, Q, Z). It is among the punishments said to afflict the companions of the left in 56:42.

28 Truly He is translates innahu, which could also be read annahu (Bḍ), meaning "for He is" ("for He is the Righteous, the Merciful"). This is the only appearance of the Divine Name al-Barr or the Righteous in the Quran. Barr usually appears in the Quran in relation to certain virtuous human beings who are referred to in several passages as al-abrār, or the pious (3:198; 76:5; 82:13; 83:18, 22). In relation to both God and humans, birr connotes beneficence and all the attributes associated with it. It is thus similar to nobility or magnanimity (karāmah; see 49:13c; 96:3c) and to "doing what is beautiful" (iḥsān; see 29:69c), qualities that encompass many other virtues and can be used to describe both God, Who is seen as the source of all virtues, and human beings.

Truly He is the Righteous, the Merciful." (29) So remind, for thou art not, by the Blessing of thy Lord, a soothsayer or one possessed. (30) Or do they say, "A poet—let us await the vagaries of fate for him." (31) Say, "Wait! For truly I am waiting along with you." (32) Do their minds command them to this, or are they a rebellious people? (33) Or do they say, "He has invented it"? Nay, but they believe not. (34) Then let them bring an account like unto it, if they are truthful. (35) Were they created from naught? Or are they the creators? (36) Or did they create the heavens and the earth? Nay, but they have no certainty.

29 The placement of the command to remind between the mention of those who feared God in this world (vv. 25–28) and a series of verses (vv. 30–33) in which the disbelievers cast aspersions upon the Prophet is in keeping with the broader Quranic theme that the Prophet's function is to deliver the message to those who fear God and to leave the disbelievers for God to deal with, as in 50:45: We know best that which they say. Thine is not to compel them. So remind, by means of the Quran, those who fear My Threat (see also 87:9–10; 88:21–26). That the Prophet was a soothsayer (cf. 69:42) or possessed (cf. 68:2) are among the many accusations the Makkans made against him, as in 15:6–7; 23:70; 34:8; 68:51.

30 A poet refers to the Makkans' accusation that Muhammad had authored the Quran himself; regarding this accusation, see 26:224–27; 29:48; 36:69. The vagaries of fate can also indicate the vagaries of death or the calamities of time (Z). Here the phrase indicates that the disbelievers expected the passage of time to prove the Prophet wrong.

31 This verse is understood to mean, "I shall await your destruction just as you await my destruction" (Bḍ, Z); for other instances of this ironic statement with slight variations, see 6:158c; 7:71; 9:52; 10:20, 102; 11:122; 20:135; 32:30. Some view this statement as fulfilled by the defeat of the Makkans at the Battle of Badr in 2/624 (JJ).

32 The question is rhetorical, meaning that the disbelievers' mental faculties could not possibly lead them to say that the Prophet is a soothsayer, a possessed man, or a poet (JJ, Z). Therefore, they must be a rebellious people.

33 An accusation similar to the charge the disbelievers make in 38:7: We did not hear of this in the creed of latter days. This is naught but an invention. According to many commentators, the beginning verses of the next sūrah (53:1–11) follow upon this verse by asserting that the Prophet neither invents or speaks out of his own desire; see the introduction to Sūrah 53.

34 This is one of the famous "challenge verses" of the Quran that implore those who claim the Quran to be a human creation to create its like if they can. See also 2:23–24; 10:38; 11:13. Regarding this challenge, 17:88 enjoins, Say, "Surely if mankind and jinn banded together to bring the like of this Quran, they would not bring the like thereof, even if they supported one another."

35 Both this verse and a similar verse, 56:59, question why the disbelievers do not acknowledge their Creator by worshipping Him. This verse could also mean, "Is it they who have created themselves?" Or it could be read as a reminder that human beings have been created from a draught of base fluid (32:8). It can also be understood as a reminder that human beings will be resurrected, as in 23:115: Did you suppose, then, that We created you frivolously, and that you would not be returned unto Us? (see also 74:36–40).

36 The disbelievers do not think they have created the universe, but in failing to worship God they fail to acknowledge that He is the Creator and fail to worship Him accordingly. Several verses indicate that the pagan Arabs acknowledged that God was the Creator, but did not conclude from this affirmation that they must worship God, as in 31:25: And wert thou to ask them, "Who created the heavens and the earth?" they would surely say, "God." Say, "Praise be to God." Nay, but most of them know not (see also 29:61; 39:38; 43:9, 87). From a Quranic perspective, that God is the Creator also indicates

(37) Do they possess the treasuries of your Lord? Or are they in control? (38) Or do they have a ladder whereby they listen? Then let their listener bring a clear warrant. (39) Does He have daughters while you have sons? (40) Or dost thou ask a reward of them, such that they are burdened with debt? (41) Or do they possess the Unseen, such that they write it down? (42) Or do they desire to devise [a scheme]? Then those who disbelieve shall be the ones against whom a scheme is devised! (43) Or do they have a god other than God? Glory be to God above the partners they ascribe. (44) Were they to see a fragment falling from the sky, they would say, "A heap of

His Omnipotence and Omniscience, as in 67:14: Does He Who created not know? He is the Subtle, the Aware; and that He is able to resurrect, as in 36:81: Is not He Who created the heavens and the earth able to create the like thereof? Yea, indeed, He is the knowing Creator.

37 Cf. 38:9. The treasuries can refer to the stores of God's Mercy (38:9), the stores from which God sends prophecy to whom He wills (Z), God's Knowledge (Z), or the Divine secrets hidden from human perception (R). See comment on 15:21: Naught is there, but that its treasuries lie with Us, and We do not send it down, save in a known measure. No human being could have such access to the Divine treasuries; hence the Prophet is instructed, Say, "I do not say to you that with me are the treasuries of God; nor do I know the unseen; nor do I say unto you that I am an angel. I follow only that which is revealed unto me" (6:50; see also 11:31). In this context, control most likely indicates the ability to measure out from God's treasuries, thus to determine and to decree as does God.

38 By ladder is meant a ladder to Heaven. This is one of several passages that speak of the audacity of those who deny revelation, asking whether they have better access to the truth, which from a Quranic perspective, can only be from God. In this vein, 37:156–57 states: Or have you a manifest authority? Bring your Book, then, if you are truthful. Elsewhere the Quran asks rhetorically, Or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it? (35:40; see also 6:148; 34:44; 43:21; 68:37–38, 47). The notion of ascending to Heaven to listen to heavenly discourse is a concept related to the jinn, as in 72:8–10, where it is implied that the jinn once had the privilege of overhearing the Heavenly discourse, but are now barred from it (see also 15:16–18; 67:5). In 38:65–70, the Prophet is instructed to declare that he himself has no knowledge beyond what is revealed to him and is not privy to what is said among the angels.

39 This verse is similar to 37:149 and 43:16. The Quran frequently criticizes the idea that God has sons or daughters (see 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149, 153; 39:4; 43:16, 81–82; 52:39; 72:3). Here the disbelievers blaspheme by ascribing offspring to God and further blaspheme by ascribing to themselves offspring that according to their particular worldview would be superior to those they ascribe to God, namely, sons instead of daughters.

40–41 These verses are repeated in 68:46–47. See also 23:72: Dost thou ask any recompense of them? For thy Lord's recompense is better, and He is the best of providers. This rhetorical question is answered by the Quran itself in 12:104: And thou askest of them no reward for it; it is naught but a reminder for the worlds.

42 This is one of several verses to illustrate the folly of those who would attempt to outwit God, for only His scheme is firm (68:45; cf. 7:184); see also 8:18; 22:15; 40:26; 77:39; 86:16–17.

44 This verse can be seen as a response to the disbelievers' words to the Prophet in 26:187: Then make fragments from the sky fall upon us, if you are among the truthful (Bd). The implication is that even when the disbelievers receive a proof that they have requested, they will still disbelieve, as in 15:14–15: Were We to open for them a gate unto Heaven, that they might continue to ascend through it, they would say, "Our eyes are merely spellbound. Nay, we are a people bewitched!"

clouds." (45) So leave them until they meet the Day when they will be thunderstruck, (46) a day when their scheming will avail them naught and they will not be helped. (47) And truly for those who do wrong there is punishment besides that. But most of them know not. (48) Be patient with the judgment of thy Lord, for thou art before Our eyes; hymn the praise of thy Lord when thou dost rise; (49) and at night glorify Him, and at the receding of the stars.

45 The command to leave them or elsewhere to turn away from them (4:63; 32:30; 51:54) recurs throughout the Quran, especially in the Makkan verses, implying that the Prophet should leave the disbelievers to their own devices, since they will eventually sow the seeds of their own demise in this world and will, in the Hereafter, be punished by God for their disbelief; see 52:29c. Their being thunderstruck describes the state that will come upon them the day they die (JJ), or on the Day of Resurrection (IK).

46 Elsewhere it is said that God makes feeble the scheming of the disbelievers (8:18), because those who are guilty only plot against themselves, though they are unaware (6:123). The scheme of Satan is also described as ever feeble (4:76; see also 3:120; 8:18), since in the end only God's scheme is firm (7:183; 68:45), and God is swifter in plotting (10:21). Thus 16:127 counsels the Prophet, And grieve not on their account, nor be distressed by what they plot.

47 Punishment besides that may refer to the punishment in the grave before the Day of Resurrection (Sh; see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran") or to the punishment received in this life in addition to the punishment that will be meted out in the Hereafter (Sh), as in 32:21: And We make them taste the lesser punishment before the greater punishment, that they might turn back (IK, R). The last sentence is thus interpreted to mean that most people do not understand that the afflictions and calamities they suffer in this life are so that they might reflect and turn to God (IK).

48 This verse begins an address to the Prophet instructing him to bear patiently either the burden of revelation (Q), or the insults of the disbelievers, as in 50:39: So bear patiently that which they say. It can also be taken as general advice to all believers. In contrast to those who do not understand the nature of afflictions and for whom they thus bring angst, believers are said to be patient with all that God sends, the good and the bad. In this vein, a ḥadīth says, "No fatigue, disease, sorrow, sadness, hurt or distress befalls a Muslim—even if he be pricked by a thorn—but that God absolves some of his sins thereby." Regarding the spiritual benefit of trials and afflictions, see commentary on 29:2–3; 67:2. Thou art before Our eyes indicates that God preserves and protects the Prophet and the believers against their enemies and their scheming (Bd, JJ). Hymn the praise of thy Lord when thou dost rise means to say, as was the custom of the Prophet, "Glory be to Thee, O God, and with Thy praise," when getting up in the morning or standing to leave an assembly (IK, Q, Sh). Some commentators also interpret this phrase to be an injunction to recite the formulas of praise that are said during the course of the ritual prayer (Q).

49 At night glorify Him (cf. 50:40) refers to the obligatory night prayer (ʿishāʾ; Q), both the sunset prayer (maghrib) and the night prayer (Sh, Ṭ), or the two supererogatory prayer cycles before the obligatory morning prayer (ṣalāt al-fajr; Q, Sh). It can also be taken as a general command to glorify God throughout the night (Q). Some thus link it to the command to perform night vigil (tahajjud) in 17:79: And keep vigil in prayer for part of the night, as a supererogatory act for thee (IK). According to a saying attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās, "The receding of the stars indicates the two prostrations before the morning prayer, and after prostrations (50:40) indicates the two prostrations after the sunset prayer" (Q). It is reported that the Prophet did not perform any of the supererogatory prayers as frequently as he did the two cycles before the obligatory morning prayer; of them he said, "The two cycles of the supererogatory morning prayer are better than this world and all that is in it" (IK, Q).

The Star

al-Najm

Al-Najm is usually considered an early Makkan sūrah, revealed soon after Sūrah 112, al-Ikhlāṣ. Vv. 13–18, which refer to the Ascension of the Prophet, may, however, be from a later period, since many commentators maintain that the Ascension of the Prophet Muhammad (miʿrāj) did not occur until the late Makkan period, most likely in the year 619, although a minority maintain that it occurred seven years before the hijrah in 614. V. 32 is also considered by some to be from the Madinan period (Āl, JJ, Q), to which some add v. 33 (Āl). Al-Najm takes its name from the oath with which it opens, By the star. This sūrah is reported to be the first that the Prophet recited in public in Makkah (Āl, IJ, Q). It can be seen as following from the previous sūrah in two ways: the reference to the star (v. 1) connects back to the injunction in 52:49 to glorify God at the receding of the stars (Āl), and the opening verses respond to the contention of the disbelievers in 52:33, He has invented it (Aj).

Al-Najm is among the most famous *sūrah*s of the Quran, because of its poetic rhetorical power and the debate that arises over the meaning of the first section (vv. 1–18), which is taken as a reference to two different seminal events. Many commentators say the passage refers to the Prophet's two visions of the Archangel Gabriel in his true form rather than the human form in which he would usually appear to the Prophet. Many others interpret it as a reference to the Prophet's vision of God, either with the heart alone or with the eye and the heart together, during his famous Night Journey and Ascension (al-isrāʾ wa'l-miʿrāj), when he is said to have traveled through the seven heavens to within two bows' length of God.

The second section (vv. 19–30) reproaches the Quraysh for worshipping idols (vv. 19–23), followed by a brief discussion of the ignorance and conjecture from which such worship originates (vv. 24–26) and concluding with a similar condemnation of those who seek intercession from angels (vv. 27–30). After contrasting the punishment of those who do evil with the rewards of those who are virtuous (v. 31), the third section (vv. 31–54) calls upon people to reflect upon their creation and then transitions into a discussion of the perennial truths attested in the scriptures of Moses and Abraham (vv. 36–49). This is followed by a brief reference to the destruction of former peoples (vv. 50–54) and a final admonition to heed the Quran (vv. 55–62).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) By the star when it sets, (2) your companion has neither strayed nor erred; (3) nor does he speak out of caprice. (4) It is naught but a revelation revealed, (5) taught him by one of awesome power. (6) Possessed of vigor, he stood upright (7) when he was upon the highest horizon. (8) Then he drew nigh and

1 This verse refers to the setting of Pleiades, or to the destruction of all stars on the Day of Judgment, as in 81:2: And when the stars fade away (Aj, Ṭ, Ṭū). According to another interpretation, the word usually translated "star," najm, could refer to the gradual revelation of the Quran in continual installments (nujūm; Bq, Ṭ, Ṭū); see 56:75c.

2–3 Your companion refers to the Prophet Muhammad. Some maintain that "to be astray" or "to stray" (ḍalla) is the opposite of having guidance (hudā), while "to err" (ghawā) is the opposite of having sound judgment (rushd; R). "To err" is also understood to indicate ignorance that results from adhering to a corrupt creed (Iṣ, R, Ṭb). In this sense, "to be astray" indicates the absence of guidance, while "to err" indicates that one is mistaken in how one follows religion. Caprice (hawā) is an important Quranic concept, often placed in direct opposition to guidance and truth, indicating that one follows either God and God's messengers or the inclinations of one's own soul; see 45:23c. That the Prophet does not speak out of caprice indicates both that he did not author the revelation himself and that his own speech is guided. Together these three claims amount to saying that the Prophet has a true religion, is following it correctly, and is not subject to his own whims.

4 The alliteration of revelation revealed is a form of emphasis interpreted to mean that revelation is not to be understood as inspiration, but as a Divine Reality (Aj). It can also indicate that the revelation is continuously renewed at each moment (Aj), meaning, "It is a revelation being revealed."

5 The one of awesome power is understood by most commentators to be a reference to the Archangel Gabriel, who imparted the revelation to the Prophet (JJ, Ṭ), and by others as a reference to God Himself.

6 Possessed of vigor is also understood to mean "possessed of a beautiful stature" (Ṭ). This verse is said to indicate one of two times the Archangel Gabriel displayed his full form to the Prophet (Ṭ, Z): the first was when Gabriel appeared to the Prophet on the horizon with six hundred wings and delivered the initial revelation; the second was during the Prophet's Ascension. Stood upright translates istawā, which indicates the manner in which Gabriel taught the Prophet the revelation (Aj) or the manner in which he appeared upon the horizon when the Prophet asked to see him in his true nature (Aj). When these verses are viewed as a reference to the vision of God, stood upright is taken to indicate the manner in which God disclosed His Light to the Prophet (Aj).

7 When he was upon the highest horizon refers to when Gabriel appeared to the Prophet on the eastern horizon after the Prophet requested to see him in his true form (JJ), to when Gabriel appeared in the highest Heaven (Ṭ), or to when the Prophet reached the horizon during the Night Journey and Ascension.

8 This verse indicates that Gabriel drew close to the Prophet (Q, Ṭ) or that God drew close to came close, (9) till he was within two bows' length or nearer. (10) Then He revealed to His servant what He revealed. (11) The heart lied not in what it saw. (12) Do you then dispute with him as to what he saw? (13) And indeed he saw him the Prophet (Ṭ). When understood in relation to the process of spiritual perfection, this verse is also interpreted to mean, "Then he [the Prophet] drew nigh and He [God] came close." In this vein, some relate this verse to a famous ḥadīth qudsī: "God says . . . 'My servant draws nigh unto Me through nothing that I love more than what I have made obligatory upon him. And My servant never ceases to draw nigh unto Me through supererogatory devotions until I love him. And when I love him, I am the hearing through which he hears, the sight through which he sees, the hand with which he strikes, and the foot upon which he walks' " (Q).

9 The Prophet Muhammad drew to within two bows' length of God or of the Archangel Gabriel (Q, Ṭ). A bow's length was a standard measure among the Arabs. A minority say that vv. 8–9 indicate that it was Gabriel who drew close to God and was two bows' length or nearer to God (Q). Or renders the particle wa, which in this context could also mean "and" or "nay"; using "nay," it could be rendered "within two bows' length, nay, nearer" (Q). The two bows (qawsayn) can also mean "two arcs." When viewed as forming the two halves of a single circle, some see them as representing the circle of existence, in which one bow represents the arc of descent whereby God brings forth creation and the other bow represents the arc of ascent whereby creation returns to God.

10 This verse can be understood to indicate one of three relationships in the process of revelation: (1) that Gabriel revealed to the Prophet (His servant) what God had revealed to Gabriel (JJ, Q, Ṭb), in which case it would be rendered, "Then he revealed to His servant what He revealed"; (2) that God revealed the revelation directly to the Prophet (Q, Ṭb); or (3) that God revealed to Gabriel (His servant) what Gabriel then transmitted to the Prophet. What is revealed is not mentioned by name out of reverence for its exalted status (JJ, Ṭb).

11 The heart is the Prophet's heart. Some say this verse refers to the time when the Prophet saw Gabriel (JJ), and others say it refers to the vision of God (Q). When interpreted as a reference to an actual vision with the eyes, what it saw can be read "what he saw," meaning that the heart did not deny what the eyes saw (Q). Most of those who maintain that this verse refers to the vision of God understand it to mean the vision with the heart, because other verses are taken to indicate that no one can see God by means of the physical eye, especially 6:103: Sight comprehends Him not, but He comprehends all sight; and 42:51: It is not for any human being that God should speak unto him, save by revelation, or from behind a veil (Q, Ṭ). In this vein, some also cite a well-known response by the Prophet when asked if he had seen God: "[He is] a light. How could I see Him?" (Aj, IK, Q). However, others argue that the Prophet also said, "The light of my vision was placed in my heart; then my heart gazed upon Him" (Aj, IK, Sy), which is interpreted to mean that the vision of the physical eye saw what the inner vision (baṣīrah) saw. Thus many understand this verse to mean that, although the Prophet did see God, he did not see the Divine Essence in and of Itself, but saw the highest Self-Disclosure (tajallī) of God with both his heart and his physical eye. In this vein, some also cite the ḥadīth: "His veil is light. Were He to remove it, the disclosures of His Face would burn whatsoever His Sight reaches" (Aj), meaning that this highest Self-Disclosure that the Prophet saw is itself a veil of light over the Divine Essence.

12 This verse is addressed to those who denied the Prophet's vision of Gabriel (JJ) or to those who denied the Night Journey and Ascension (Aj). Dispute translates tumārūn, which also indicates resistance and opposition.

13 This verse refers to either the two times in which the Prophet is said to have seen Gabriel in his true form or two separate visions of God (Aj). The Prophet is said to have seen Gabriel's true form only twice, once at Mount Ḥirāʾ, where he received the first revelation, and a second time during the Ascension. Those who maintain that it refers to the vision of God say that the Prophet saw his Lord twice in a special Self-Disclosure: once at the rending of the highest veil above the another time, (14) at the lote tree of the boundary, (15) by which lies the Garden of the refuge, (16) when there covered the lote tree that which covered. (17) The gaze swerved not; nor did it transgress. (18) Indeed, he saw the greatest of the signs of his Lord. (19) Have you considered al-Lāt and al-ʿUzzā (20) and Manāt, Divine Throne and once at the lote tree of the boundary (v. 14; Aj).

14–15 The lote tree of the boundary is an enigmatic term that has led to many interpretations. Most say it is a tree in the seventh Heaven to the right of the Divine Throne; it is of the boundary either because it is the end of Paradise or because all that is created ends there, so that none can pass beyond it and none knows what lies beyond it (Aj, JJ). Others say the lote tree is at the boundary between the sixth and seventh heavens (Ṭū). In this interpretation, the Garden of the refuge is taken as a reference to the seventh Heaven (Ṭū). It is said to be the Garden in which the spirits of the prophets, the righteous, and those who bear witness (see 4:69) take refuge (Aj).

16 The enigmatic structure of this sentence indicates something ineffable (Aj, Z). Some say the lote tree was covered with "light and brilliance, beauty and purity that please the eyes to an extent that is indescribable" (Ṭū). Others say it was covered with angels and butterflies of gold, which were circumambulating it (Aj, IK, Q, Ṭū).

17 The Prophet's gaze did not swerve from the wonders being revealed to him (Aj). More generally, it implies that he did not swerve away from the truth that he sought (Ṭū). Nor did it transgress then means that he did not seek anything beyond what was disclosed to him (Ṭū), whether it was the vision of Gabriel or the vision of God.

18 When the preceding verses are seen as an allusion to the Prophet's vision of Gabriel, this verse may be read "some of the signs," meaning that the Prophet saw some of the greatest signs of God when he witnessed Gabriel on the horizon in his true form with six hundred wings (JJ, Ṭ). Others say that this verse refers to the green curtain he saw covering the horizon at this same time (Ṭ). When the preceding verses are viewed as a reference to the Night Journey and Ascension, the greatest of the signs indicates the wonders of the Dominion (malakūt, the level of being above this world) and the secrets of the archangelic realm (jabarūt, what lies beyond the Dominion), which God showed the Prophet (Aj).

19–20 Al-Lāt, al-ʿUzzā, and Manāt are the names of some of the idols worshipped by the pre-Islamic Arabs. Al-Lāt (which some say is a shortened form al-Ilāhah, meaning "the Goddess") is said to have been a white stone with inscriptions in the city of Ṭāʾif, the sister city of Makkah, that was worshipped by the tribe of Thaqīf. Al-ʿUzzā (meaning "the Most Mighty" and referring to Venus or the morning star), worshipped by the tribe of Ghaṭafān, had a shrine consisting of three trees on which the idolaters placed a monument and curtains in the area of Nakhlah, between Makkah and Ṭāʾif; she is said to have been the most venerated idol among the Quraysh. Manāt, worshipped by the tribes of Khuzāʿah, Aws, and Khazraj, was said to be the goddess of destiny; her shrine was in the area of Mushallal near Qudayd, between Makkah and Madinah. The three idols together formed a triad. Sometimes all three were said to be daughters of "Allāh," an idea alluded to in vv. 21–22, and sometimes al-Lāt and Manāt were considered daughters of al-ʿUzzā. Many other idols in the Arabian Peninsula were reportedly worshipped by the pagans, but these three are mentioned because they were more famous (IK) or because of their proximity to Makkah.

In several early histories of Islam, it is reported that when the Prophet came to the end of vv. 19–20 Satan whispered to him another two verses falsely according these pagan deities an exalted status: "Verily, they are high flying cranes! And their intercession is indeed anticipated/hoped for." These verses appeared to accept the idols of the pagan Arabs as legitimate deities and greatly pleased the Quraysh, who according to some accounts then prostrated with the Prophet and his followers when the Prophet reached v. 62: So prostrate unto God and worship (Ṭ). As a result, the persecution of Muslims abated for a brief period. The Prophet later realized that he had been deceived when he received the revelation of 22:52: And no messenger the third, the other? (21) Unto you males and unto Him females? (22) This, then, is an unfair division. (23) They are naught but names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority. They follow naught but conjecture and that which their souls desire, though guidance has surely come to them from their Lord. (24) Or shall man have whatsoever he longs for? (25) Yet unto God belong the Hereafter and this world. (26) And how many an angel is there in the heavens whose intercession avails naught, save after God grants leave unto whomsoever He will and unto the one with whom He is content? (27) Truly those who believe not in the Hereafter name or prophet did We send before thee, but that when he had a longing, Satan would cast into his longing, whereupon God effaces what Satan cast. The Prophet then recanted the satanic interpolation, whereupon the persecution of the Muslims at the hands of the Quraysh resumed. This is known as the "Story of the Cranes" in the Islamic tradition and as the "Satanic Verses" in modern Western literature; see 22:52c.

21–22 This verse asks, "Do you claim that you have male offspring as it pleases you, but that God has female offspring, whom you do not want for yourselves?" (Ṭ). Unfair translates ḍīzā, which indicates decreasing something in an unjust manner that deprives others of their rightful due (Ṭ). The attribution of "daughters" to God is presented as unjust in light of the contempt that the pagan Arabs are said to have had for female offspring (see 16:57–59, 62). This is one of several passages that criticize the pagan Arabs for ascribing offspring, especially daughters, to God; see also 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149, 153; 39:4; 43:16, 81–82; 52:39; 72:3.

23 That the idols are naught but names that you have named indicates that they have no reality other than what has been imagined, as in the Prophet Joseph's words to his fellow prisoners in 12:40: You worship apart from Him naught but names that you have named (R). Conjecture is what one follows in the absence of knowledge (see 53:28c), while that which their souls desire refers to their caprice, which is the tendency to wander one way and then another in the absence of truth (for caprice, see 45:23c). The phrase could also be translated more literally, "that which their souls fancy." To follow that which their souls desire or "fancy" is to succumb to the soul that commands to evil (see 12:53c).

24 This verse can be understood as a reference to everything that human beings desire. In this context it speaks more specifically to the desire of the Quraysh to have their idols as intercessors with God and, by extension, to the desire of human beings to fashion religion according to their own desires, rather than conforming themselves to revealed religion.

25 Although the followers of the pagan religions that are criticized in this sūrah would appear to believe in "a god" and in a hereafter, by attempting to make this understanding conform to their conjectures and caprices, they in effect deny that God is the Master of this world and the next.

26 This verse asks, "If the angels who are with God can do nothing except through God's permission, then how can the idols that you yourselves have set up avail you in any way?" From one perspective, this rhetorical question is answered by 34:23: And intercession will benefit none with Him, save whomsoever He gives leave. Ultimately, there is no intercessor, save by His Leave (10:3; see also 19:87; 20:109; 21:28; 39:44; 43:86; 53:26) and God is the only intercessor (6:51, 70; 32:4, 39:44). Regarding the complex question of intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c.

27 The idolaters' efforts to fashion reality according to their liking—they name the angels with any names they choose—demonstrate that they have no understanding of God and thus no appreciation for God's Power over all that is the angels with female names. (28) Yet they have no knowledge thereof. They follow naught but conjecture; and surely conjecture avails naught against the Truth. (29) So shun whosoever turns away from Our Reminder and desires naught but the life of the world. (30) That is the extent of their knowledge. Surely thy Lord knows best those who stray from His way, and He knows best those who are rightly guided. (31) Unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth, that He may requite those who commit evil for that which they have done, and that He may requite those who created. They thus misunderstand the final ends of things, which indicates disbelief in the Hereafter even if they believe in a hereafter, and disbelief in the origins of things, as indicated in 43:19: And they have made the angels, who are servants of the Compassionate, females. Did they witness their creation?

28 They have no knowledge thereof means they have no knowledge of the matters pertaining to the angels that are discussed in the preceding verses. Alternately, thereof, translating bihi, could be understood as a reference to God, thus meaning "of Him." From a Quranic perspective, people follow either God and His messengers or conjecture and their own desires (see v. 23). To follow conjecture is thus equated with following something other than revelation, as in 10:35–36: Say, "Is there any among your partners who guides unto Truth?" Say, "God guides unto Truth. Is one who guides unto Truth worthier to be followed, or one who cannot guide unless he be guided? What ails you? How do you judge?" And most of them follow naught but conjecture. Truly conjecture does not avail against the Truth in the least (see also 6:116–17c; 10:66). In this vein, a ḥadīth states, "Beware of conjecture, for verily conjecture is the most mendacious form of speech" (IK).

29 The command to shun or "turn away" indicates that the Prophet should not concern himself with the affairs of those who deny him and the revelation, as his function is only to warn and remind, and after that he is to leave their fate to God (Āl, R), as in 4:80: Whosoever obeys the Messenger obeys God, and as for those who turn away, We have not sent thee as their keeper (see also 5:92; 64:12; 79:45; 88:21–22). Here Our Reminder is understood by most as a reference to the Quran, one of whose names is "the Reminder" (al-Dhikr). It could also be read, "Our remembrance," in which case it is understood as a reference to belief in general (Bg, Q). In juxtaposition to the next phrase, it also can be seen as a reference to the remembrance of death (Aj). One could, moreover, understand "remembrance" as indicating the practice of remembering God with both tongue and heart (see 13:28c; 29:45c). The disbelievers desire only this life, because they believe that there is naught but our life in this world: we die and we live, and we will not be resurrected (23:37).

30 The extent of their knowledge can be seen as a reference to the fact that the disbelievers look only to the world and are ignorant of religion (Q) or as an indication that their "knowledge," especially as pertains to the angels and idols mentioned in the preceding verses, derives solely from conjecture, caprice, and their own desires. The second sentence of this verse is repeated in 6:117, and with minor variation in 68:7 (see also 28:85). In general it indicates that God knows the final ends of all things, but in this context it also refers to God knowing the difference between the beliefs of the Muslims and that of the pagans.

31 This verse alludes to the fact that everything in the heavens and on the earth has been created with design and purpose, in truth (16:3; 29:44; 30:8; 39:5; 45:22; 46:3), not in play (21:16; 44:38), or in vain (3:191; 38:27); thus people's actions will be dealt with accordingly. That which is most beautiful is interpreted by most commentators as a reference to the Garden (Bḍ, Q). It could also be rendered "for that which is most beautiful," meaning for their good deeds (Bḍ). Those who are virtuous (alladhīna aḥsanū) and that which is most beautiful (al-ḥusnā) derive from the are virtuous with that which is most beautiful, (32) those who shun grave sins and indecencies, save what is slight; truly your Lord is of vast forgiveness. He knows you best, from when He brought you forth from the earth and when you were hidden in your mothers' bellies. So deem not yourselves purified. He knows best the reverent. (33) Have you seen the one who turned away, (34) gave same root ḥ-s-n; literally it means that God rewards those who do what is beautiful with what is most beautiful or with what is more beautiful, thus indicating the manner in which beautiful character begets greater beauty in this life and the Hereafter; see 29:69c; 55:60c.

32 Regarding shunning grave sins and indecencies, see 42:37c. Although grave sins are often discussed in the Islamic tradition, there is no agreement on a single definition and there are many different lists of "grave sins"; see 4:31c. Some define grave sins as "sins for which the retribution is not removed except through repentance" (Z). Indecencies translates fawāḥish, which is often equated with fornication or, more generally, with grave sins that are considered particularly atrocious (Z); see 4:15c; 4:22c.

Save what is slight is understood by most to mean minor sins from which one repents (JJ). To explain this term, many commentators cite the same ḥadīth: "Verily, God has decreed for the son of Adam his share of fornication (zinā), and he will certainly earn his share. The fornication of the eye is by looking, the fornication of the tongue is by talking; the heart wishes and lusts, and the sexual organ either manifests all of this or not" (IK, Q). In interpreting this ḥadīth, Ibn Masᶜūd is reported to have said, "The eyes fornicate by looking, the lips by kissing, the hands by transgressing, the feet by walking, and the sexual organ either manifests all of this or not. When one has [illicit] sexual intercourse, he will be someone who fornicated. Otherwise, it is what is slight (al-lamam)" (IK). So although small sins may be more easily forgiven, one must still avoid them and be wary of what they may lead to.

Your Lord is of vast forgiveness in that He forgives small sins by keeping one away from grave sins, and grave sins through repentance (tawbah; Z). The commentator al-Baghawī says that this phrase may be placed after the mention of those who are virtuous in the previous verse, so that those who have not been as virtuous or who have even committed grave sins will not despair of receiving God's Mercy, as in 39:53: Say, "O My servants who have been prodigal to the detriment of their own souls! Despair not of God's Mercy. Truly God forgives all sins. Truly He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.

Brought you forth from the earth is understood as a reference to God's creation of Adam from dust (JJ, Q). That God knows you best is thus understood as a reference to the fact that God knows the state of every human being even before they are born, from the time all human beings were in the loins of Adam (Bḍ, IK, Q; see 7:172). As God knows you best, you should deem not yourselves purified, for only God knows who is truly pure. Thus people should not think well of themselves for performing pious deeds, but should be mindful that the deeds themselves only come through God's support (Z), as in 4:49: Hast thou not seen those who deem themselves pure? Rather, it is God Who purifies whomsoever He will. The Prophet even enjoined his followers not to ascribe good deeds to their companions, but only to God, saying several times, "Woe to you! You have cut off the neck of your companion!" Then continuing, "If one of you must praise a friend of his, let him say, 'I think that so-and-so is this and that; God knows best about him, and I would never declare anyone pure before God,' if he knows his friend to be as he is describing him" (IK).

33–34 Cf. 75:31–32. Withheld translates akdā, which derives from al-kudyah, designating earth that is rock hard. If someone is digging a well and comes upon such earth, the Arabs say, "He dug and came upon hard rock (akdā)." The verb akdā is then used as a metaphor for any endeavor that fails (Bḍ, Iṣ, Z). This verse thus implies that when people are satisfied that past deeds will suffice or consider themselves pure and consequently cease to perform good deeds, even past deeds may come to naught. Similarly, the effort to dig a well is useless if one does not reach water.

little, and then withheld? (35) Does he have knowledge of the Unseen, such that he sees? (36) Or has he not been informed of that which is in the scriptures of Moses (37) and Abraham, who fulfilled: (38) that none shall bear the burden of another; (39) that man shall have naught but that for which he endeavored, (40) and that his endeavoring shall be seen, (41) whereupon he will be rewarded for it with the fullest reward; (42) that the ultimate end is unto thy Lord; (43) that

Though they apply to all who ignore the needs of others, these verses were reportedly revealed in relation to al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah when he offered some of his wealth to one of the Prophet's followers on the condition that he return to the religion of the Quraysh. After the man accepted, he gave the man some of the money, but did not fulfill the pledge in full (Bḍ, Ṭ).

35 In this context, this verse implies, "Does the one who stopped giving charity know that his past deeds will suffice or that his wealth will actually be preserved if he does not give it out in charity?" In the broader Quranic context, it indicates the arrogance of those who act as if they know better than God; see 52:41; 68:47.

36 Though Abraham precedes Moses chronologically, the scrolls of Moses are here mentioned before those of Abraham (v. 37), because they are more widely known (Bḍ).

37 Abraham is referred to as he who fulfilled for patiently enduring what no one else was made to endure, such as being cast into the fire for smashing the idols of his people (21:67–69) and agreeing to sacrifice his son as commanded by God before the Archangel Gabriel stopped him (37:102; Bḍ). Others say this verse refers to Abraham's fulfillment of the command to deliver God's message (IK, Ṭ) or to Abraham fulfilling the covenant with God (R).

38 This is the first instance of this Quranic axiom in the chronological order of revelation (cf. 6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; see 35:18c). No one will be forced to endure the punishments accrued through deeds committed by another. Nonetheless, one will be punished for influencing others to perform bad deeds, as in a famous ḥadīth: "Whosoever establishes a sinful custom shall bear its burden and the burden of whosoever acts in accord with it until the Day of Resurrection" (Bḍ). In this vein, those who lead others astray are said to have "a double punishment" (see 7:38–39c; 33:68).

39 Just as none will bear the sins of another, so too will none be rewarded for the good deeds performed by another. Nonetheless, the effects of good deeds can continue to provide benefit. As a famous ḥadīth states: "When a person dies, his deeds are cut off, save for three things: a righteous child who makes supplication for him; a charitable deed that continues [to bear fruit] after his death; or knowledge [he has imparted] from which people benefit" (IK).

40 This verse means that everything one does in this life will be witnessed on the Day of Judgment. God will judge all deeds and human beings will be shown their deeds and bear witness to how they had lived. Thus the Prophet is told to say, Perform your deeds. God will see your deeds, as will the Messenger and the believers, and you will be brought back to the Knower of the Unseen and the seen, and He will inform you of that which you used to do (9:105).

41 The fullest reward that God has promised to people (Ṭ), according to some, is the vision of God (R).

42–50 Each verse in this passage, except v. 46, begins with wa anna, translated "that" or "and that," indicating a continuation of the preceding verses (vv. 36–41), which discuss all that is in the scriptures of Moses and Abraham. But wa anna could also be read wa inna, which would make each occurrence mark a new, independent thought and be translated "truly," "surely," or "verily."

42–43 Unto thy Lord conveys a sense of the Day of Judgment, when everyone will stand before God. Although the ultimate end of all created things is from one perspective "unto thy Lord," there are nonetheless disparate ends for various

it is He Who causes laughter and weeping, (44) that it is He Who causes death and gives life, (45) and that He creates the two—male and female— (46) from a drop when emitted; (47) and that with Him lies the second genesis; (48) that it is He Who enriches and grants possessions; (49) that it is He Who is the Lord of Sirius; (50) and that He destroyed ᶜĀd the Former (51) and Thamūd, sparing none, (52) and the people of Noah aforetime—truly they were most wrongdoing and most rebellious, (53) and He razed the subverted cities, (54) such that there groups, as in 13:35: The parable of the Garden that has been promised to the reverent: with rivers running below, its food everlasting, as is its shade. That is the ultimate end of those who were reverent, while the ultimate end of the disbelievers is the Fire! The reverent will thus be those who laugh, as in 80:38–39: Faces that Day shall be shining, radiant, laughing, joyous. And the disbelievers will be those who weep. The ultimate end can also be seen as a reference to God as the One Necessary Being, Who is the Source of all beings (R).

43 This verse indicates that God decrees the causes that bring about laughter and weeping and that He is the One who brings joy and sadness in this world (Q), that God causes the believers to laugh in the Garden and the disbelievers to weep in the Fire (Q), or that God causes the believers to laugh in the Hereafter and weep in this world, while He causes the disbelievers to laugh in this world and weep in the Hereafter (Qu). Dhu'l-Nūn al-Miṣrī is reported to have said, "He causes the hearts of the believers and the gnostics to laugh through the sun of knowledge of Him. And He causes the hearts of the disbelievers and the disobedient to weep through the darkness of His Wrath and Punishment" (Q).

44 That it is He Who causes death and gives life (cf. 2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 9:116; 10:56; 22:6; 23:80; 40:68; 44:8; 57:2; 67:2) indicates God's Power over all phases of existence and nonexistence. It is also understood to mean that "He causes the hearts of His enemies to die through disbelief and darkness and gives life to the hearts of His friends through faith and the lights of gnosis" (ST).

45–48 The two (zawjayn)—male and female— are said to be mates (azwāj) created from a single soul (4:1; 6:98; 7:189; 39:6). For the meaning of these verses, see 75:37–40c. In both passages, God's ability to create human beings from a drop (cf. 16:4; 18:37; 22:5; 35:11; 36:77; 40:67; 75:37; 76:2; 80:19) is cited as evidence of His ability to resurrect—resurrection is what is referred to here as the second genesis, according to most commentators. Al-Rāzī, however, understands the second genesis as a reference to the breathing of the Spirit into the human being (see 15:29c; 38:72c), because it is the Spirit, not the body, that ennobles human beings and sets them apart from other animals.

49 Pre-Islamic Arabs worshipped Sirius (JJ), a star of the first magnitude belonging to Canis Major. This verse thus returns to the theme of vv. 19–30, emphasizing that God is the Lord of everything to which the pagans ascribe some independent power.

50–51 And that relates back to v. 36, thus meaning, "Or has he not been informed that." The ᶜĀd and the Thamūd are pre-Islamic Arabian tribes who rejected the prophets sent to them. ᶜĀd the Former (v. 50) is understood as a reference to Iram, the tribe of Noah's grandson by the same name (see 89:7–8), while ᶜĀd the latter was simply referred to as ᶜĀd. For the account of the tribe of ᶜĀd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16; 54:18–21. For the account of the tribe of Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31.

52 For the Quranic account of Noah and his people, see 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; Sūrah 71. According to some commentators, Noah's people were most wrongdoing in that they established customs, particularly idol worship, that were then imitated by others and most rebellious in that most of them rejected the message to which Noah called them for over nine hundred years (R).

53–54 These verses are understood by most as a reference to the calamities that befell the cities covered them that which covered? (55) So which of thy Lord's boons do you dispute? (56) This is a warning from the warners of old. (57) The imminent is nigh. (58) It has no unveiler apart from God. (59) Do you then marvel at this discourse? (60) And do you laugh and not weep, (61) while you stand with head held high? (62) So prostrate unto God and worship!

of Sodom and Gomorrah (see 11:82–83c). But it may also indicate all those who have been destroyed by calamities that overturned their cities (R). Whereas the enigmatic phrase that which covered conveys the indescribable wonder of the lote tree of the boundary in vv. 14–16, here it conveys the indescribable terror that overcame the people of Lot, of which 11:82 says, We made its uppermost to be its lowermost, and We rained down upon them stones of baked clay.

55 This verse reflects the refrain So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? which occurs thirty-one times in Sūrah 55. In the context of the preceding discussion in this sūrah it suggests that those who disputed with the Prophet regarding the nature of the angels and the idols will suffer fates similar to those of the communities mentioned in vv. 50–54.

56 As translated, this verse refers to the Quran itself as part of the continuous stream of revelation (Bḍ). It could also be rendered, "This is a warner from the warners of old," referring to the similarity between the Prophet Muhammad and the messengers who had been sent to previous communities (Bg, IK, JJ), such as those mentioned in vv. 50–54.

57 The Resurrection is near, and the Hour has drawn nigh (54:1; Bg).

58 That God is the only unveiler of the Hour means both that no one other than God can know when it will come and that only God will bring it to pass, as in 7:187: None save He shall manifest it at its proper time.

59 This discourse refers to the Quran. That the disbelievers marvel at it indicates that they do not accept that a revelation could be sent from God, as in 10:2: Is it a marvel for mankind that We have sent revelation unto a man from among themselves? (see also 7:63, 69; 38:4; 50:2).

60 In this context, laugh means mocking the Quran and the believers, as in 23:110: But you took them in mockery, till it made you forget My remembrance, and you used to laugh at them. Here weep indicates the manner in which all human beings, but especially those who disbelieve, would react, were they to understand the reality of the Day of Judgment and what is to follow. In this vein, the Prophet's wife ʿĀʾishah reported, "One day, the Messenger of God passed by a group of people who were laughing, and said, 'If you knew what I know, you would laugh little and cry much'" (Q). According to a ḥadīth, "The Fire will not reach a man who weeps for fear of God" (Q). In a famous ḥadīth, one of seven categories of people said to be "shaded by God on the Day wherein there will be no shade other than His Shade" is "a person who remembers God while alone and his eyes flow with tears."

61 Stand with head held high translates sāmidūn, which can also mean "diverted and heedless" (Ṭ). In the Yemeni dialect, it can also be understood to mean that they sing when they hear the Quran (Ṭ), meaning that this is their way of mocking it.

62 This is one of fifteen verses after which one must prostrate when reciting the Quran; see 19:58c. Most maintain that there is an obligatory prostration after this verse, but according to Imam Mālik, in this instance it is optional (Āl, Q). It appears that the Prophet would usually prostrate upon completing the recitation of this sūrah, but that this may have been a supererogatory custom rather than an obligation (Āl).

The Moon

al-Qamar

Most commentators maintain that al-Qamar is a Makkan sūrah, although some say that v. 45 and others that vv. 44–46 are from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ). It takes its name from the mention of the moon in the first verse and is also known by its first words, Iqtarabat al-sāᶜah, "The Hour Has Drawn Nigh" (Āl, IK). This sūrah follows thematically upon the previous sūrah in that the first verse reiterates 53:57, The imminent is nigh, and the stories of the destruction that befell former communities expand upon the references to the tribes of ᶜĀd and Thamūd, and the people of Noah in 53:50–52 (Āl, Sy). It is reported that the Prophet would recite Qāf (Sūrah 50) and al-Qamar during the prayers of ᶜ*Īd al-aḍḥā* (the Feast of Sacrifice) and ᶜ*Īd al-fiṭr* (the Feast of Breaking Fast) and during other major prayer gatherings (IK).

The first two verses of al-Qamar are understood by the vast majority of commentators as a reference to a miracle performed by the Prophet. One evening he was addressing a group of disbelievers and Muslims on the plain of Minā, just outside of Makkah. The disbelievers had been disputing with the Prophet for several days, demanding a miracle as proof of his prophethood, and they began to do so again. The Prophet then raised his hand and pointed to the moon, whereupon it appeared to separate into two halves, one on either side of nearby Mt. Ḥirāʾ. He then said, "Bear witness!" (IK, Ṭ), and the line of separation disappeared. All were left speechless, but his opponents soon discounted it as an illusion produced by sorcery. According to one account, one of the disbelievers said, "Muhammad has merely bewitched us, but he cannot bewitch the entire world. Let us wait for travelers to come from faraway places and hear what reports they bring." Then, when some travelers arrived in Makkah a few days later, they confirmed that they too had witnessed the splitting of the moon (IK).

After warning the opponents of the Prophet of the judgment that will overtake them (vv. 1–8), the sūrah cites the people of Noah (vv. 9–15), the tribes of ᶜĀd (vv. 18–21) and Thamūd (vv. 23–31), the people of Lot (vv. 33–38), and the people of Pharaoh (vv. 41–45) as examples of previous peoples who were overthrown for similar offenses. Mention of the punishments that await the guilty (vv. 46–48) segues into a discussion of the nature of God's Decree and accounting (vv. 49–53), and the sūrah concludes with a discussion of rewards that await the reverent (vv. 54–55).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) The Hour has drawn nigh, and the moon has been cleaved; (2) and if they see a sign, they turn away and say, "Incessant sorcery!" (3) They denied and followed their caprices—and every matter shall be made to endure. (4) Indeed reports have come to them wherein is a reproof, (5) conclusive wisdom, but the warnings availed not. (6) So turn away from them on the Day wherein the caller

1 The Hour refers to the Final Hour as well as the imminent demise of the world (IK), and to the Resurrection (JJ), as in 21:1: For mankind, their reckoning draws nigh, while they turn away heedless (see also 16:1). Many aḥādīth state that relative to the earth's life span there is little time left between the Prophet's coming and its final end, as in the Prophet's statement, "I was sent like this in relation to the Hour," while pointing to his index finger and his middle finger (IK). A few commentators note that the second half of this verse could be read, "and the moon will be cleaved," referring to one of the signs of the end of time (Iṣ, Mw, Z). But all who relate this opinion also mention the miracle of the Prophet splitting the moon (see the introduction to this sūrah).

2 Incessant translates mustamirr, which could also be understood to mean "powerful" or "intense" (Ṭ). Regarding their turning away from God's signs, which can also mean the verses of revelation, see commentary on 32:22: And who does greater wrong than one who has been reminded of the signs of his Lord, then turns away from them? (cf. 6:157; 18:57).

3 They denied the signs of God after they had come to them (Ṭ), and they denied the Prophet (JJ). In the Quran, following caprice is often contrasted with following God and His Messenger, and people tend to follow either one or the other. Thus 4:135 says, Follow not your caprice, that you may act justly (see also 2:120, 145; 5:48–49). That every matter shall be made to endure is understood to indicate that good will be established in the Garden for those who do good and evil will be established in the Fire for those who do evil (Ṭ) or, more broadly, that "everything has a reality of its own and is bound to display that reality in the Hereafter" (Bg).

4 The reports are of the destruction of previous communities that denied the messengers sent to them (JJ), such as those mentioned later in this sūrah. Reproof translates muzdajar, which could also mean "deterrent," as it is something that rebukes the disbelievers for their own denial and idolatry and should deter them from persisting in it.

5 In the context of the previous verse, this verse means that the reports are conclusive wisdom or that the reproof contains wisdom (Ṭ). Conclusive can be understood to mean complete or perfect (JJ). But the warnings availed not could also be read as a rhetorical question: "What did the warnings avail them?" (Ṭ). In both translations, warnings could also be read to mean "warners," referring to the prophets. This is similar to 10:101: Say, "Observe that which is in the heavens and on the earth." But neither signs nor warnings avail a people who believe not.

6 The Prophet is enjoined to turn away from the disbelievers to prevent them from persisting will call unto a terrible thing. (7) With their eyes humbled they emerge from the graves as if they were scattered locusts, (8) scrambling toward the caller. The disbelievers say, "This is a calamitous day." (9) The people of Noah denied before them, for they denied Our servant and said, "Possessed!" And he was reproved. (10) Then he called upon his Lord, "Truly I am overcome. Help!" (11) So We opened the gates of the sky with pouring water, (12) and We caused the earth to burst forth with springs, such that the waters met for a matter determined. (13) Then We carried him upon a thing of planks and nails, (14) coursing under Our Eyes as a recompense for one who was rejected. (15) And indeed We left it in their blasphemy, as in 6:68: And when thou seest those who engage in vain discussion about Our signs, turn away from them till they engage in other discourse; and in order to turn toward God, as in 4:81: So turn away from them and trust in God. God suffices as a Guardian. This verse also implies that the Prophet should focus upon guiding those who have accepted the message, as in 51:54–55: So turn away from them, for thou shalt not be blamed. And remind, for truly the Reminder benefits the believers (see also 4:63; 6:106; 7:199; 9:95; 15:94; 32:20; 37:174, 178). The caller refers to the Archangel Seraphiel (Isrāfīl; JJ), who is said to blow the trumpet that heralds the Hour (see 39:68c). Terrible translates nukur, which could also mean "not known," indicating that the Day of Judgment is something that human beings cannot comprehend, because they have never seen anything like it (Z).

7 All of humanity will emerge from the grave in a state of fear and confusion (JJ), like scattered locusts or scattered moths (101:4). According to al-Qurṭubī, their emerging like scattered moths refers to the first phase, when they rise from the graves in a state of confusion, going one way and another, while their being like scattered locusts refers to the second phase, when they respond to the trumpet blast (see 39:68c) and head together in one direction (Q). The image of scattered locusts could also be seen as a reference to the number of people (Z), since every person who has ever lived will be brought forth on this day.

8 Scrambling toward is also understood to mean "looking at" (Ṭ). This event shall be 'a difficult day (74:9), for the disbelievers in particular; it shall be a day that is not of ease (74:10).

9–14 This is most likely the first account of the story of Noah in the chronological order of revelation. As these verses only allude to aspects of the story, the Makkans may have already known the story of Noah, which is fleshed out in 11:25–48; 23:23–30; and Sūrah 71 (see also 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 21:76–77; 26:105–21; 29:14–15; 37:75–82), though 11:49 says of the account of Noah, These are among the accounts of the Unseen that We reveal unto thee. Thou knewest not of them, neither thou nor thy people, beforehand. V. 9 reflects the narrative in vv. 2–5, in which the Makkans reject the Prophet and turn away from God's signs. In this respect the story of Noah appears to be mentioned in order to give solace to the Prophet, for just as people had turned away from the prophet Noah for hundreds of years, so too did they turn away from the Prophet Muhammad. And just as God helped Noah and those who were with him prevail, so too would He ensure that Muhammad and his people would prevail. Such that the waters met is the punishment of those who rejected Noah. A thing of planks and nails refers to the Ark, whose construction is discussed in greater detail in 11:37–44. Coursing under Our Eyes indicates God's protection (JJ). One who was rejected refers to Noah and could also be read "for one who was disbelieved." For more on the story of Noah, see the introduction to Sūrah 71 as well as commentary on 7:59–64; 11:25–48.

15 We left it is taken by some to mean that the ark had been preserved for many generations to as a sign; so is there any who remembers? (16) How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings? (17) And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers? (18) ᶜĀd denied. How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings? (19) Truly We sent upon them a howling wind on a day of incessant misfortune, (20) tearing out people as if they were uprooted palm trunks. (21) How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings? (22) And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers? (23) Thamūd denied the warnings. (24) They said, "Shall we follow a single witness, even up to the time of the Prophet (IK). But it most likely means, "We preserved" the story of Noah within human memory as a sign or warning for future generations. Who remembers could also be rendered "who takes heed" or "who will be admonished."

16 This poetic and evocative verse serves as a refrain in this sūrah, coming at the end of each of the reports of former communities that were destroyed. It can be taken to mean, "How severe were My Punishment and My warnings?" or to indicate that the punishment they received was justified, because God had already sent them a warning (JJ, comment on v. 18).

17 Juxtaposed to the ominous refrain that first appears in the previous verse, this verse introduces a second, more positive refrain in this sūrah. The first refrain emphasizes the wrath that comes upon those who reject God and His signs, while the second emphasizes the mercy by which God makes access to revelation, and hence truth, easy. The Quran is made easy to remember as a mercy to human beings in that its recitation is made easy for the tongue and the understanding and memorization of it are made easy for the mind and heart (Aj). Many aḥādīth speak of the virtues of memorizing the Quran, among them: "The best among you are those who learn the Quran and teach it to others"; and "If the Quran is enclosed by skin [i.e., memorized by a human being], God will never burn it in Hellfire." Similar to who remembers in v. 15, to remember could also be understood to mean, "to be admonished" (Aj) and who remembers can indicate those "who will be admonished" or "who will take heed." In both readings, it can also be understood as a reference to the covenant made between God and human beings before time (see 7:172c), thus meaning, "Is there anyone who remembers (or takes heed of) the pact or covenant with God?" (Aj).

18 For the story of the people of ᶜĀd, a pre-Islamic Arabian tribe whose prosperity led to its decadence and whose members rejected the Prophet Hūd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16. Regarding the second part of this verse, see 54:16c.

19–20 While the wind that destroys the people of ᶜĀd is called a howling wind in 41:16 and the barren wind in 51:41, 69:6 is more emphatic: And as for ᶜĀd, they were destroyed by a howling, raging wind. Here, as in v. 2, incessant translates mustamirr; here too it can also indicate "powerful" or "severe" (Ṭ). Tearing out people refers to their being wrenched from holes in the ground in which they sought shelter and being flung headfirst so that their necks were crushed and their heads severed from their bodies (JJ). They are likened to palm trees, because they were known for their large physical stature (JJ; see 89:7–8). They are also compared to hollowed palm trunks in 69:7.

22 See 54:17c. Similar to this refrain, 19:97 states, We have only made this easy upon thy tongue that thou mayest give glad tidings unto the reverent thereby, and that thereby thou mayest warn a contentious people.

23 Warnings could also be rendered "warners"; see 54:5c. For more on the story of the Thamūd people, a pre-Islamic Arabian tribe who the Quran says were destroyed for rejecting the Prophet Ṣāliḥ, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58.

24 The words with which the people of Thamūd rejected Ṣāliḥ reflect those with which the human being from among us? Then we would surely be astray and mad! (25) Has the reminder been cast upon him from among us? Nay, he is an insolent liar." (26) On the morrow they will know who is the insolent liar. (27) Behold! We are sending the she-camel as a trial for them; so watch them and be patient. (28) And inform them that the water is to be divided among them—each share of drink equitably proportioned. (29) Then they called their companion, and he took in hand and hamstrung [her]. (30) How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings? (31) Truly We sent upon them a single cry, and they were like a fence maker's dry sticks. (32) And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers? (33) The people of Lot denied Quraysh rejected the prophethood of Muhammad: What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him? (25:7). The manner in which people are said to reject their prophets, saying, Shall we follow a single human being from among us? or, Shall a human being guide us? (64:6) recurs throughout the Quran and is thus presented as a constant barrier to belief, as in 17:94: And nothing hindered men from believing when guidance came unto them, save that they said, "Has God sent a human being as a messenger?" (see also 6:6–9, 50, 91; 11:12, 27; 14:10–11; 21:3; 23: 24, 33, 47; 26:154, 186; 36:15; 41:14; 50:2; 74:25).

25 Here the reminder refers to the revelation sent to Ṣāliḥ. The verse can be understood to mean either that they doubt anything had been sent at all (JJ) or that they question how a reminder could have been sent to Ṣāliḥ rather than to another whom they would have considered more worthy. In this latter sense, it is similar to the words of the Quraysh in 43:31: And they said, "Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns?" (see also 50:2).

26 The people of Thamūd will know that they were wrong to deny Ṣāliḥ and will be punished for their denial. Arabic morphology allows that, without diacritical markers, they will know could instead be read, "you will know." When read in this manner, it is taken as Ṣāliḥ's address to the disbelievers among his people (Bg).

27 This verse represents God's address to Ṣāliḥ. The she-camel is said to have been a sign from God brought forth from a mountain or a rock (JJ), regarding which Ṣāliḥ said, This she-camel of God is a sign unto you. Leave her to graze freely on God's earth, and cause her no harm, lest a painful punishment seize you (7:73; see also 11:64).

28–29 In 26:155 Ṣāliḥ says, This is a she-camel; she shall have drink and you shall drink on an appointed day. Both instances are understood to mean that God had ordered that the people could drink of the water one day and the she-camel the next. At first they followed this allotment, but then grew impatient and called their companion, whom some say was named Qudār ibn Sālaf, who drew his sword and smote her (Bg, JJ); see 11:64–65c. Took in hand is understood to mean that he undertook the task of hamstringing the she-camel (Bḍ, Q, R, Sh, Z), or that he took a sword in hand (Bḍ, JJ, Z), or that he took the she-camel in hand (R, Ṭ, Z).

30 See 54:16c.

31 Here a single cry indicates the instantaneous and overwhelming nature of the punishment that came upon the Thamūd people, though elsewhere it refers to the herald of the end of time and the Final Judgment for all humanity (see 36:29; 36:49; 37:19; 38:15; 79:13). The Thamūd people are also said to have been destroyed by the Cry in 11:67, a thunderbolt in 41:13 and 51:44, and an earthquake in 7:78. These are not contradictory accounts, but different aspects of the overwhelming (ṭāghiyah) that is said to befall them in 69:5.

32 See 54:17c; 54:22c.

33–38 In the Quran Lot has greater status than in the Bible; the story of Lot and his people the warnings. (34) Truly We sent upon them a torrent of stones, save the family of Lot, whom We delivered at dawn (35) as a blessing from Us. Thus do We requite whosoever gives thanks. (36) And indeed he had warned them of Our assault, but they disputed the warnings. (37) They had sought to lure him from his guests; so We blotted out their eyes. So taste My Punishment and My warnings! (38) And indeed an enduring punishment greeted them early in the morning. (39) So taste My Punishment and My warnings! (40) And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers? (41) And indeed the warnings came unto the House of Pharaoh. (42) They denied Our signs—all of them; so We seized them with the seizing of One Mighty, Omnipotent.

is discussed most extensively in 11:77–83; see also 7:80–84; 15:57–77; 21:74–75; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 29:28–35; 37:133–38.

34 Elsewhere the torrent is described as a rain of stones of baked clay (11:82; 15:74). All members of Lot's family were saved from this punishment except his wife (cf. 7:83; 11:81; 15:59–60; 26:170–71; 27:57; 29:32; Genesis 19:26). At dawn can be taken to describe when the stones were sent or when Lot and his family were saved.

36 When warned by Lot in various ways, his people would say, Bring us God's Punishment if you are among the truthful (29:29).

37 The people of Lot's town had sought to have sexual relations with his guests, who, unbeknownst to Lot and the people, were angels sent by God; some say they were the Archangels Gabriel, Michael, and Seraphiel (IK). Lot sought to dissuade and warn his people, saying, Among all creatures do you come unto males, leaving your spouses your Lord created for you? Nay, but you are a transgressing people (26:165; see also 7:80–81; 27:54–55; 29:29). But as they would not heed his warning, they were destroyed the next day (see 11:82–83c). According to some, blotted out their eyes refers to the blinding of the crowd (some say by the tips of Gabriel's wings striking their eyes [IK]), so that they could not violate Lot's guests, as in Genesis 19:11: "And they struck with blindness the men who were at the door of the house, both small and great, so that they were unable to find the door." It can also be understood to mean that, due to their sinful natures, God deprived them of understanding and insight, as in 2:7: Upon their eyes is a covering, and theirs is a great punishment (see also 47:23c).

38 Their punishment is described most emphatically in 26:173 (cf. 27:58), And We rained a rain upon them. Evil was the rain of those who were warned! (see also 7:84c; 29:34), and is said to have been manifest as stones of baked clay (11:82; 15:74) or a torrent of stones (54:34) that rained down upon them.

39 This verse and v. 37 are two of over a dozen verses where God tells the disbelievers, Taste My Punishment or taste the punishment (see 3:106, 181; 4:56; 6:30; 7:39; 8:35, 50; 10:52; 22:22; 32:14, 20; 34:42; 46:34). In this context, the first instance of this phrase, in v. 37, can be understood as a reference to their punishment in this world, and the second, in v. 39, as a reference to their punishment in the next world. Alternately, the first can be seen as God's address to the people of Lot at the time of their destruction and the second can be seen as God's warning to the disbelievers among the Quraysh and by extension to disbelievers in general.

40 See 54:17c; 54:22c.

41–42 Although the story of Pharaoh is given only two lines here, the account of Moses and Pharaoh is the most extensive account provided in the entire Quran; for more detailed accounts of Moses' mission to Pharaoh, see 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 28:3–46. Shorter accounts pertaining to particular aspects of Moses' mission can be found in

(43) Are your disbelievers better than those? Or have you some exemption in the scriptures? (44) Or do they say, "We are a host victorious!"? (45) The whole shall be routed and they will turn [their] backs. (46) Nay! The Hour is their tryst, and the Hour is more calamitous and more bitter. (47) Truly the guilty are astray and mad. (48) On the Day they are dragged upon their faces into the Fire, "Taste the touch of Saqar." (49) Truly We have created everything according to a measure.

43 This verse asks whether the disbelievers among the Quraysh are somehow exempt from the punishments that afflicted the ʿĀd, the Thamūd, and the peoples of Lot and Pharaoh, mentioned in this sūrah (Ṭ, Z). Better can be taken to mean better generally or "better in strength" (Z). The second sentence of this verse asks whether there is something in previous revelations that would excuse their rejection of Muhammad (Sh, Ṭ, Z). It is somewhat similar to 68:37–39: Or do you have a book wherein you learn that you shall have therein whatsoever you choose? Or do you have oaths binding upon Us until the Day of Resurrection that you shall have whatever you ordain? (see also, e.g., 6:148; 37:156–57; 52:37–38; 68:47).

44 We are a host victorious! was the response of the Quraysh to the Prophet's call. It implies that they had great faith in their strength and numbers, thinking nothing could overcome them, a folly attributed to many peoples of the past, such as the tribe of ʿĀd in 41:15: As for ʿĀd, they waxed arrogant upon the earth without right and said, "Who is greater than us in strength?" Have they not considered that God, Who created them, is greater than them in strength? Yet they rejected Our signs (see also 9:69; 28:78; 30:9; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:13).

45–46 Interpreted in historical context, the whole indicates all the disbelievers among the Quraysh (Sh). It is reported that at the Battle of Badr the Prophet came forth from his tent reciting these verses. Some thus interpret them as prophesying the future victory of the Muslims over the Quraysh (Bg, Ṭ). But they can also be seen more generally to indicate the triumph of truth over falsehood, as in 17:81: Say, "Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Truly falsehood is ever vanishing." While v. 45 refers to defeat in this world, v. 46 is understood as a reference to punishment in the next, which shall be more calamitous and more bitter than the destruction and humiliation experienced in this life (Bg, Sh).

47–49 These verses are reported to have been revealed in connection with a dispute between the Prophet and the idolaters among the Quraysh concerning God's "measuring out" (qadar; IK, Q, R, Ṭ), which refers to the manner in which God gives or withholds provision for all of creation.

47 Mad translates suʿur, which is related to saʿīr, or blaze, a word used throughout the Quran to refer to the punishment of Hell. Some thus interpret this verse to mean that the disbelievers are "burning (yusʿarūn) in the Fire" (Bg, Z). They are thus astray in this world and "in the blaze" in the next (Z).

48 Dragged upon their faces likely indicates punishment for various iniquities. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "Are people thrown into Hell and dragged up on their faces [or by their nostrils] for anything other than the harvest of their tongues?" Other verses indicate that the disbelievers will be gathered upon their faces (17:97; 25:34) and that their faces will be struck by the angels (8:50; 47:27) and by the Fire (23:104) and covered with dark patches of night (10:27) or with fire (14:50); see also 21:39; 27:90; 33:66. Saqar is said to be either a proper name of Hell or an attribute of it (see 74:26–28c). To taste its touch is thus to taste the punishment of the Fire; see 54:39c.

49 This verse can be understood as a straightforward affirmation of God's creation of all things (M). In relation to the preceding verses, it can also be understood as a simple statement that God decreed or "measured" a punishment for the disbelievers and cast them into Saqar. But due to the Prophet's own debate with those who denied God's qadar, or Decree, this verse became a focal point for discussing the relation between Divine determinism and human choice. Qadar, or "measuring out," is also said to be one of the tenets of faith, regarding which the Prophet said, "No servant of God truly believes until he believes in qadar, its good and evil, and until he realizes that what has befallen him was not going to miss him and what missed him was not going to befall him."

The earliest determinists, known as the Jabriyyah (lit. "Compulsionists"), held that all human acts were determined by God, including acts of belief, disbelief, good, and evil. From their perspective, 54:49 supports the position that God has predetermined all events, especially when read in light of 76:30: And you do not will but that God wills. Truly God is Knowing, Wise (cf. 81:29). When considering this verse, those who favored a greater degree of human choice or self-determination preferred to focus upon the manner in which God has created everything with precision or "in a perfect measure." This theological debate correlates with the debate over how this verse should be read. As translated, everything (kull shayʾ) is read in the accusative (kulla shayʾin), the reading preferred by most commentators and found in all schools of recitation, but one that is more problematic from a grammatical perspective. If, however, kull shayʾ is read in the nominative (kullu shayʾin), the verse could be understood to mean, "Everything that We have created is according to a measure." This interpretation would still allow one to see the verse as a declaration of God's Omnipotence and of Divine determinism, especially when read in light of the phrase found in 13:16 and 39:62: God is the Creator of all things (see also 40:62). But it could also lead one to think that there might be things that God has not created that are not "according to [His] measure." This reading would then allow for the possibility that human beings create actions of their own free will, an understanding that would support both the early Qadarite theological trend and the Muʿtazilite school of theology. It is thus reported that adherents of both of these theologies held fast to the reading of kull shayʾ in the nominative (Iṭ).

The Qadarites held that human beings are free and are the authors of their own acts, but this does not contravene God's Omnipotence. The Muʿtazilites held that human beings are fully responsible for the creation of their evil deeds and that God simply punishes them accordingly, a position that seeks to absolve a just and merciful God from the apparent injustice of creating the very acts for which He then punishes their perpetrators. The Ashʿarite school of theology finds both of these positions abhorrent, because each would posit a creative agent outside of God. At the same time, they find the Jabrite position to be monstrously fatalistic, reducing human beings to passive agents with no will of their own. Ashʿarite theologians thus sought to explain that God is Just and Merciful and does not punish people for things for which they are not responsible, and that human beings bear responsibility for their actions but are not the creators of these actions, since from their perspective God must be the Creator of all human acts, as He is the Creator of all things (40:62).

In their efforts to maintain God's Omnipotence and explain how human beings could have effective agency in performing their acts, Ashʿarite theologians make a distinction between the creation of acts and their acquisition (kasb). From this perspective, although human beings cannot create anything because God creates everything that exists or that comes to pass, human beings nonetheless choose among the options that God has created and thus freely choose to engage in or play out the acts that God has created, thereby acquiring the acts.

Commentators who incline more toward the Muʿtazilite position and favor a greater degree of free will than that allowed for by the Ashʿarite position do not argue that v. 49 supports their view, but focus instead upon the Divine Wisdom behind the precise measure with which the universe is created (Ṭs, Z). The Muʿtazilite theologian al-Zamakhsharī writes, "We have created everything in a determined measure, ordered according to that which wisdom has decreed, or in a measure written on the Tablet [see 85:22c], known [to God] before its existence (kawn); We knew its state and its duration (zamān)." Likewise, the Shiite theologian al-Ṭabrisī emphasizes that this verse indicates that nothing has been created haphazardly, but only as decreed by Divine Wisdom. Everything is thus created according to "a known measure" and for a known purpose: "the tongue for speech, the hand for striking, the eye for seeing, the ear for hearing, the stomach for food; and if anything increased or decreased from what We measured, then the objective [of creation] would not be attained."

Many who are more closely aligned with the Ashᶜarite position also see this verse as an expression of the Divine Wisdom according to which everything is "measured" (Aj, Āl) and as an affirmation that everything is inscribed on the Preserved Tablet (85:22; IJ). But many also argue that although human beings have some effective agency in bringing about their acts through acquisition, or kasb, they are not able to create and determine, or "measure," their own actions, and they see vv. 47–48 as a criticism of those who adhered to such positions. Along these lines they cite several aḥādīth, among them: "Every community has its Magians, and the Magians of my community are those who say that there is no measuring out (qadar)" (Āl, IK, Q, R). In elaborating upon their understanding of Divine determinism, Ashᶜarites identify two stages or aspects of the Divine Decree: the first they call qaḍāʾ, which indicates the pretemporal Decree of God; the second they call qadar, which indicates the Divine Decree that brings things into existence in the temporal order, rendering to each its measure and limit. Qaḍāʾ pertains to the Divine Essence and is neither created nor finite, while qadar is an attribute of Divine Action that is contingent by virtue of its association with the contingencies it brings forth. Drawing upon this distinction, al-Rāzī argues against the philosophical notion that it is necessary for things to be created in the manner that they are created, saying, "Qaḍāʾ is what pertains to [God's] Knowledge, while qadar is what pertains to [God's] Will. Therefore, His saying, Truly We have created everything according to a measure, means by His Measure with His Will, and not, as they claim, that it is 'necessitated.'"

Following upon the Ashᶜarite position, some see this verse as an indication that one must put all of one's trust in God. Thus Ibn ᶜAjībah writes: "It washes the heart of sorrows and of all that is other [than God], and relieves the servant from the toil of [trying to] arrange and choose, because when a person of intellect knows with the knowledge of certainty [see 102:5c] that his affairs and his states and all that comes upon him has been embraced by the measure, with nothing preceding or coming after its [measured] moment, he entrusts his affair to God [an allusion to 40:44], surrenders to the decrees (aḥkām) of his Master, and meets all that comes upon him with contentment (riḍā) and acceptance, be it good or evil." In this same vein, the commentator al-Maybudī writes of this verse, "One who is deprived [of God], though he may have found everything, has found nothing, whereas one who has found Him, though he may have found nothing, has found everything."

For many Sufi thinkers, such as those of the school of Ibn ᶜArabī and Mullā Ṣadrā, human choice and Divine determinism are understood in light of the teaching that human beings bear within them the potential to know the names, all of them (2:31) and "God created humankind in His image" (Genesis 1:27), and among God's Names are al-Murīd (He Who Wills or Wishes) and al-Qadīr (the Powerful, the Possessor of Power). Human freedom is itself a Divine creation, and because of this could not be in ultimate conflict with God's creative act. Thus, unlike some schools of Islamic theology (kalām) that see between God and human beings two competing wills, Sufis see the human will as a manifestation of God's own Power and Will. Rather than seeing the question of human free will as a question merely of choices between options on a particular plane of reality, Sufis have seen free will ultimately as a characteristic pertaining to a particular state of being. Only insofar as human beings rise above their egotistical desires and submit the will that pertains to their own individuality to God do they realize true freedom in God. But those who attain this true freedom only will what God wills, because they exist in a state of perfect submission to the good and thus also display the attributes of something that is, as it were, totally determined. This is exemplified in a paradox discussed by Ibn ᶜArabī, who says that those saints (awliyāʾ) most capable of performing miracles are the least likely to do so, since they are most content with God's Will for the world and themselves. Moreover, qadar, or one's "lot," is seen, in the ultimate sense, as a manifestation of one's own nature or essence as known by God before one's creation. Since God transcends the dualities of the world, He transcends the duality between free will and determinism, but insofar as human beings are free, they were already free in God by virtue of God's breathing into the first human being of His Spirit (see 32:9c).

(50) And Our Command is naught but one, like the blinking of an eye. (51) We have indeed destroyed the likes of you; so is there any who remembers? (52) Everything that they have done is in the scriptures; (53) everything small and great is inscribed. (54) Truly the reverent are amidst Gardens and a stream, (55) upon a seat of truth before an Omnipotent King.

50 There is no difference between God's willing a thing to be and its coming into being, nor is there a time lag between the two, for when He decrees a thing, He only says to it, "Be!" and it is (2:117; 3:47; 16:40; 19:35; 40:68; see also 36:82; Z). It is thus instantaneous, like the blinking of an eye. In the context of this sūrah, this verse also indicates the manner in which God's Punishment can come about instantaneously.

51 The destruction of former peoples is called upon throughout the Quran as a warning to disbelievers (see, e.g., 6:6c; 7:4; 18:59; 19:74, 98; 20:128; 22:45; 28:58; 32:26; 50:36). For the manner in which such destruction serves as a reminder or admonition for any who remembers, see especially 32:26c.

52 This verse is understood by most commentators to refer to the recording of people's deeds in scrolls (JJ, Ṭ), thus meaning that God knows all that they have done (18:49c; 84:7–10c). When scriptures is understood as a reference to Divine revelations, this verse refers to God's warnings in all of the previous revelations that people failed to heed and for which they are punished. As God's Mercy encompasses all things (7:156) and His Mercy precedes His Wrath, God provides every human collectivity with both guidance and warnings of what will befall them if they do not follow His Guidance before He brings His Wrath upon them, as in 28:59: And thy Lord never destroys towns until He sends a messenger to their mother city to recite unto them Our signs. And We never destroy towns, save when their people are wrongdoers (see also 6:131–32; 10:13; 15:4; 26:208–9).

53 For a more extended discussion of the nature of the deeds inscribed, see commentary on 18:49: And the Book will be set down. Then thou wilt see the guilty fearful of what is in it. And they will say, "Oh, woe unto us! What a book this is! It leaves out nothing, small or great, save that it has taken account thereof." And they find present [therein] whatsoever they did.

54 Cf. 51:15. The rivers of Heaven are usually referred to in the plural as streams, rivers, or springs. Here a stream can be taken either as a reference to the genus and thus to all the streams of Heaven (Bg, R, Z) or as a reference to one of the streams in the Garden, such as Kawthar (see 108:1c) or Tasnīm, the latter of which is described as a spring whence drink those brought nigh (83:28).

55 A seat of truth or "truthfulness" indicates a place of contentment (Z), a place wherein there is no idle talk, nor incitement to sin (52:23; see also 19:62; 56:25; 88:11; Q, Sh, Ṭ), and a place for those who gather for the sake of truth. Omnipotent translates muqtadir, which derives from the same root as qadar, or measure. It thus refers back to v. 49 and reaffirms that it is God Who created everything, then measured it out with due measure (25:2). Regarding this verse, Maybudī writes: "The people of the Garden will enter in upon the Invincible twice a day and recite the Quran for Him. Each person among them will sit in his own sitting place, on a pulpit of pearls, rubies, emeralds, gold, and silver, in accordance with his works. Their eyes will never be so delighted as they are by this. They will never have heard anything more tremendous and more beautiful. Then they will turn back to their lodging places, blissful, their eyes delighted, until the like of it on the morrow."

The Compassionate

Most scholars take all of al-Raḥmān to be a Makkan sūrah, although Ibn ʿAbbās is said to have maintained that v. 29 is from the Madinan period (Āl, Q). A minority maintain that the entire sūrah is Madinan (Āl, Q). It takes its name from the mention of the Divine Name the Compassionate at the opening, the only Divine Name to be directly equated with the Name Allāh, as in 17:110: Say, "Call upon God (Allāh), or call upon the Compassionate (al-Raḥmān). Whichever you call upon, to Him belong the Most Beautiful Names." Because the last verse of the preceding sūrah and the first verse of this sūrah contain two Divine Names that can be read in complementary opposition to one another, Omnipotent King (54:55) and the Compassionate (v. 1), al-Raḥmān is seen by some as an extension of al-Qamar (Āl). This sūrah is known to many Muslims as "The Bride of the Quran" after a well-known yet unauthenticated ḥadīth that says, "For everything there is a bride, and the bride of the Quran is Sūrat al-Raḥmān" (Aj, Āl, Q).

Some commentaries maintain that this sūrah was revealed in response to the idolaters of Makkah, who are said to have asked the meaning of the Prophet's frequent references to the Compassionate, as in 25:60: And when it is said unto them, "Prostrate before the Compassionate," they say, "And what is the Compassionate? Shall we prostrate before that [to] which you command us?" And it increases them in aversion. The idolaters' disbelief in the Compassionate is also mentioned in 13:30, where the Prophet is ordered to declare belief in the Lord: Thus have We sent thee unto a community before whom other communities have passed away, that thou mayest recite unto them that which We have revealed unto thee; yet they disbelieve in the Compassionate. Say, "He is my Lord; there is no god but He. In Him do I trust and unto Him do I turn."

The first section of the sūrah (vv. 1–25) discusses the nature of the Compassionate as Creator, Teacher, and Revealer and the blessings He provides in the created world. It then transitions into an extended discussion of the blessings of Heaven and its many Gardens. The duality between Heaven and earth and the dualities within them are present throughout the sūrah. This thematic structure is reflected in the grammatical structure, which employs the dual form in many of the verbs and pronouns and in the refrain, addressed to both human beings and jinn, So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? This duality is offset by the discussion of the Compassionate in vv. 1–10 and by vv. 26–27, which emphasize that God remains while all else fades away. Appearing in the middle of the sūrah, these verses imply that God's Essence is the center that lies at the heart of and yet transcends all dualities, even those in the Gardens of Heaven. V. 27 is then echoed in the last verse (v. 78), showing that just as God transcends the blessings of this earth, so too does He transcend the blessings of Heaven.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) The Compassionate (2) taught the Quran; (3) created man; (4) taught him speech. (5) The sun and the moon are upon a reckoning. (6) And the stars and the trees prostrate. (7) Heaven He has raised and the Balance He has set, (8) that you transgress not in the balance. (9) So set right the weight and fall not short in the balance. (10) The earth has He laid down for creatures. (11) Therein

1 The Compassionate translates al-Raḥmān, which is considered to denote that aspect of mercy and compassion that is unqualified, boundless, and prior to the created order. In this regard, al-Raḥmān has also been rendered "the Infinitely Good" and "the Loving." It is said to be one of the Divine Names that can only apply to God, for it is one of the Names by which existence itself is made manifest, a universal blessing or mercy (raḥmah) that cannot be attributed to anyone other than God. In this regard, many Sufis say that all of creation is brought forth through "the Breath of the Compassionate." It thus differs from the Merciful (al-Raḥīm), which is said to pertain to a more particular form of Divine Mercy and by which human beings may also be described. From this perspective, al-Raḥmān relates more directly to the Divine Essence, while al-Raḥīm can be seen as referring to the extension of God's Mercy in all acts (see 1:3c). It is also the Compassionate who is said to assume the Throne of God in 20:5 (cf. 25:59).

2 That the verb taught comes directly after the Divine Name al-Raḥmān indicates that teaching revelation is intrinsic to God's compassionate nature. From one perspective, revelation is a blessing through which God sustains creation. Throughout the Quran teaching is presented as one of God's essential functions in relation to human beings, for human beings are created for knowledge and God teaches Adam and thus all of humanity (2:31) before commanding, providing laws, and judging. According to some commentators, this verse is a direct response to the disbelievers who said of the Prophet and the Quran, He has merely been taught by a human being (16:103; Q, Sh). Others understand it as an allusion to the manner in which God has made the Quran easy to learn, as in the refrain of the previous sūrah: And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember (54:17, 22, 32, 40; Q). This verse could also be understood as the beginning of a new thought, that is, "He taught the Quran."

3 Here man is understood by some as a specific reference to the Prophet Muhammad or to Adam (Q). But most understand it as a reference to all of humanity. The creation of human beings following directly upon the mention of God's teaching the Quran indicates that human beings were made to know revelation (Aj) even before their creation in this world. The correspondence between the mention of human beings and revelation here is similar to the combination mentioned in 96:1–2, which are considered by most to be the first two verses in the chronological order of revelation. The present verse also provides a subtle allusion to the mercy and blessing of the creation of human beings and animals, since the word for "womb," raḥim, derives from the same root, r-ḥ-m, as the Compassionate, al-Raḥmān. In this vein a famous ḥadīth says, "The word 'womb' (al-raḥim) derives its name from al-Raḥmān, and God said [to the womb], 'I will keep good relations with one who keeps good relations with you, and will sever relations with one who severs relations with you,'" meaning one who severs relations with family and kin; for the importance of maintaining womb relations, see 4:1c.

4 Just as human beings are distinguished by their ability to know revelation, so too are they distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of speech through which they both articulate and comprehend (Aj). Vv. 2–4 can also be taken as an allusion to God's honoring human beings by making the Quran, His very Word, something they are capable of learning and reciting (Q), as in 44:58: We have only made this easy upon thy tongue, that haply they may remember (cf. 54:17, 22, 32, 40). Speech translates bayān, which also means something that is clear or evident. It is thus seen by some as an allusion to God's having taught Adam the names, all of them (2:31; see 2:31c) or to God's giving human beings the ability to distinguish between good and evil, between what is permitted and what is forbidden (Q, Sh) or between truth and falsehood, all of which is believed to be taught through revelation. Bayān is also considered one of the names of the Quran (Q, R), as in 3:138: This is an exposition (bayān) for mankind, and a guidance and exhortation for the reverent.

5 Are upon a reckoning (cf. 6:96) means that the sun and the moon run according to a known and established pattern from which they do not deviate and without which human beings would have no temporal or geographical bearings (Q), as in 10:5: He it is Who made the sun a radiance, and the moon a light, and determined for it stations, that you might know the number of years and the reckoning [of time]. This is of particular importance to Muslims, as the position of the sun and the moon determines the times for the performance of three of the five pillars of the faith: prayer, fasting, and pilgrimage. This verse can also be seen as an allusion to the fact that celestial bodies were created and are therefore transient, as in 13:2 and 39:5: and He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed (Q). It would then be a rebuke to those who worshipped celestial bodies, as in 41:37: Prostrate not unto the sun, nor unto the moon. Prostrate unto God, Who created them, if it is He Whom you worship (cf. 6:76–78).

6 As translated, this verse alludes to the prostration before God of all celestial and earthly entities, as in 22:18: Hast thou not considered that unto God prostrates whosoever is in the heavens and whosoever is on the earth (cf. 16:49). Stars translates najm, which occurs in the singular, but is understood as a reference to all stars. Najm could also be translated "herbs," in which case the verse could be read as a reference to herbs, or all soft-stemmed plants, and trees, or all hard-stemmed plants (Aj, Ṭ). In either interpretation, their prostration is an indication of their complete submission to God's Will.

7 The Balance is seen by most as a reference to justice (JJ, Q, Ṭ), religious law (al-sharīʿah), or the Quran itself (Q; see 57:25c). It can also be seen as a reference to honoring the balance and harmony of the created order.

8–9 In the translation, v. 8 is taken as a subjunctive. But it can also be taken as an imperative: "So transgress not in the balance." The injunction differs slightly in each translation: the first indicates that one must not be tyrannical and oppressive; the second indicates that one must not withhold what is due to another (Aj), a theme found in many other passages; see 11:84; 83:1–3c. Insofar as the balance is related to justice, the fact that it is here thrice mentioned indicates the fundamental importance of justice as intrinsic to the order of God's creation and also to human transactions. As the Prophet is reported to have said, "The heavens and the earth are founded upon justice."

10 Vv. 1–9 mentioned the realities that provide spiritual nourishment; vv. 10–12 now move to those that provide physical nourishment (Aj). This verse is taken variously as an allusion to all domesticated animals, to all that crawls upon the earth, or to all human beings and jinn (Q).

11 The word for fruit, fākihah, derives from the same root as tafakkaha, meaning to "take delight" in something. This verse is thus interpreted are fruit and date palms bearing sheaths, (12) husked grains and fragrant herbs. (13) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (14) He created man from dried clay, like earthen vessels, (15) and He created jinn from smokeless fire. (16) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (17) Lord of the two easts and Lord of the two wests. (18) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (19) He mixed the two seas, such that they meet one another. (20) Between them by some as an allusion to all the blessings of this earth in which people take delight (Q). The date was for the Arabs the best of fruits. It is thus interpreted as a reference the greatest of God's Blessings in the physical realm and indirectly as an allusion to all forms of fruit.

12 When v. 11 is taken as a reference to the delights one can find in food and earthly blessings in general, this verse can be understood as a reference to the more nutritive dimension of food (Aj). Some say husked grains refers to the stems of plants and fragrant herbs to their leaves (Q).

13 This refrain, which is addressed to both human beings and jinn, is repeated thirty-one times in this sūrah. Both the possessive pronoun in your Lord (rabbikumā) and the predicate in do you two deny are in the dual form, referring to human beings and jinn. Deny may indicate their refusal to acknowledge that a particular blessing is from God by attributing it implicitly or explicitly to themselves or to some other human or natural agency. It could also be taken to indicate the denial of one aspect of God, while accepting another, as do those who believe in God, but scoff at the idea of resurrection or deny the reality of revelation. It is reported that the Prophet recited this sūrah to some of his Companions and said, "Why do I see you silent? The jinn respond better than you, for I come not upon So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? but that they say, 'There is naught among Thy blessings, Our Lord, that we deny. Unto Thee be Praise; unto Thee be thanks' " (Aj, N, Q).

14 Dried clay is literally "sounding clay," referring to the sound fired clay makes when struck. Several verses discuss the creation of the human being from various forms of earth: from dust (3:59); from dried clay, made of molded mud (15:26); and from a viscous clay (37:11). When combined with v. 14, these verses can be seen as describing the stages of human creation: from dust, to viscous clay, to molded mud, to dried clay, like earthen vessels (Q), at which point it is then ready for the Spirit to be blown into it. For the breathing of the Spirit into the human being, see 32:9c; 38:72c.

15 Smokeless fire translates mārij min nār, which can also mean "something in which soot has been mixed." The verse could thus mean that the jinn are created from either pure fire, a substance mixed with fire, or a unique kind of fire (Aj). For a fuller discussion of the nature of the jinn, see the introduction to Sūrah 72.

17 The two easts, translating mashriqayn, could also mean "the two places from which the sun rises," as the verb for the rising of the sun, ashraqa, derives from the same root (sh-r-q) as "east," mashriq. The two wests, translating maghribayn, could also mean "the two places in which the sun sets," as the verb for the setting of the sun, gharaba, derives from the same root (gh-r-b) as "west," maghrib. The two easts and the two wests could thus be understood as a reference to the winter and summer solstices, which mark the farthest point of each rising and setting of the sun. To mention the limits in this fashion can be taken as an allusion to all the settings and risings of the sun, since to mention the limits on each end of the spectrum is to imply the whole; see also 70:40c.

19–20 This is a reference to the two seas in 35:12: Not equal are the two seas: one sweet, satisfying, pleasant to drink, and the other salty, bitter (see also 25:53). As the predicate in they transgress not is in the dual form, most interpret it as a reference to the two seas themselves, but some take it as a reference to human beings and jinn. In the first interpretation, it indicates that these two seas with their distinct natures may meet, but will not intermingle and thus dilute or compromise one another (IK, Q). Some understand the two seas as an allusion to the sky and the earth (Q, lies a barrier that they transgress not. (21) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (22) From them come forth pearls and coral stones. (23) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (24) His are the ships towering aloft upon the sea like standards. (25) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (26) All that is upon it passes away. (27) And there remains the Face of thy Lord, Possessed of Majesty and Bounty. (28) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (29) Those in the heavens and on the earth entreat Him: every day He is Ṭ). Others see them as an allusion to this world and the Hereafter, between which lies the barrier of God's Decree (Q). Others see them as an allusion to formal religious knowledge and spiritual knowledge (maʿrifah), which meet in the complete human being, though the intelligence remains between them as a barrier preventing either form of knowledge from exceeding its bounds, such that one does not stifle the spiritual with the formal or compromise the formal in the name of the spiritual (Aj).

22 This verse can be understood as a reference to God's provision of ornaments that human beings extract from the sea, as in 16:14: He it is Who made the sea subservient, that you may eat fresh meat therefrom, and extract from it ornaments that you wear. Coral stones translates marjān, which is understood by some to indicate small pearls (Aj, IK) and by others to indicate large valuable pearls (IK, Q, Ṭ). The verse can also be read, "Pearls and coral stones are brought forth" (Q).

24 Most read this verse as describing the sails of ships towering aloft upon the sea like standards and take it as a reference to God's providing human beings with the ability to navigate and traverse the sea, as in 14:32: He has made the ships subservient unto you, so that they sail upon the sea by His Command. In this sense, it can be connected to the blessings mentioned in v. 5, for without the ability to measure the celestial bodies seafaring would be impossible. Towering aloft translates munshaʾāt, which can also be read as the past participle of the verb anshaʾa, "to bring into being." It could thus be understood as an allusion to all that has been brought into being, that is, all created things (IK, Q).

26–27 Cf. 28:88: All things perish, save His Face. These verses mark an important turn in this sūrah, as vv. 10–25 refer to the blessings or boons of this world and the remaining verses refer to the blessings of the Hereafter. It is taken by most as a reference to the earth, the face of the earth, or this world in general, thus indicating that all of creation will eventually "pass away." Grammatically it is the Face that is Possessed of Majesty and Bounty. Since the Arabic word for "face" (wajh) is often employed to indicate the very essence of a thing, it is here taken as a reference to God's Being and Essence (Q). Some theologians who see a distinction between God's Attributes and God's Essence maintain that this verse indicates that God's Attributes will also "pass away" and only the Divine Essence will remain (R). Al-Rāzī, however, maintains that for this to be the meaning, one would need to say, "And there remains nothing except the Face of thy Lord." According to some, the Face of thy Lord is used instead of the Face of God, which is used in several other verses (e.g., 2:115, 272; 30:38; 76:9), because "Lord" is closer to the theme of blessing and bounty that pervades this sūrah (R). The use of Majesty and Bounty can be seen as a reference to God's Attributes of Majesty and God's Attributes of Beauty, respectively, a division often made in the discussion of God's Names and Attributes in Islamic theology. For many Shiites the Attributes of Beauty are those positive attributes that are inherent in God's Essence and manifest the perfection of His Nature, whereas the Attributes of Majesty are the "negative attributes," those attributes having to do with physical qualities such as body, appearance, or movement that would imply limitation. The result of the negation of such possibilities is thus seen as a reaffirmation of the positive Divine Attributes.

29 The first phrase indicates that, although the angels in the heavens may be seen as higher than human beings, who live on earth, all are upon a task. (30) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (31) We shall have leisure for you both, O weighty ones. (32) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (33) O company of jinn and men, if you are able to pass beyond the regions of the heavens and the earth, then pass, you shall not pass; save by a warrant. (34) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (35) A flash of fire and molten brass shall be sent against you, and you shall not prevail. (36) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (37) When the sky shall be rent asunder and when it shall turn ruddy like hide? (38) So which of your Lord's boons do you dependent upon God and entreat Him, though those in the heavens are seen as supplicating on behalf of those on earth, while those on earth supplicate on behalf of themselves (Q). Even those who do not call upon God directly do so indirectly (Aj).

Following upon the assertion that everything entreats God, every day He is upon a task can be seen as an indication that God is constantly attending to requests made by those in the heavens and on earth. Regarding this interpretation of the verse, the Prophet is reported to have said, "Among God's tasks is to forgive sin, relieve distress, raise one people, and humble another" (Aj, IK, Q). Every day He is upon a task can also be understood as a response to those who maintain that God "rested on the seventh day from all the work that He had done" (Genesis 2:2), for as 2:255 asserts, Neither slumber overtakes Him nor sleep. From an Islamic perspective, were God to be absent from His creative and sustaining activity for even the blink of an eye, creation would vanish and disappear (Qu). In this vein, this verse is taken by Ibn ʿArabī as a reference to God's Self-Disclosure, or theophany (tajallī), which never repeats and is never renewed, as God never discloses Himself in the same form to two individuals or twice in the same form to one individual (Futūḥāt, II 77.25–26). In more conventional terms, this verse indicates that God's creative Power is inexhaustible and that, as an object of knowledge, God is inexhaustible.

31 We shall have leisure translates nafrughu, which indicates leaving one task in order to attend to another, though in relation to God it is understood to indicate that there is no task or collection of tasks that will keep God from attending to other tasks (Ṭb). This verse is thus taken as a warning to jinn and human beings that they should not think that God will be too busy to resurrect them and call them to account on the Day of Judgment (Ṭb), though it could also be understood as an indication that God is always available to His servants and always watching over them. Weighty ones, which is in the dual form, is taken by most as a reference to jinn and human beings, indicating either that they are made from substances that are heavy (unlike angels who are made from light) or that they bear the weight of the responsibility of their deeds (Aj). A Shiite interpretation sees weighty ones as a reference to the Quran and the Prophet's household (Kā, Qm).

33 According to some commentators, these words will be said to people and jinn on the Day of Reckoning when the angels surround them (IK, Q, Ṭ). The implication is that they will never be able to evade God's Commands and Decrees (IK), except with God's Authority, for though there may be intercessors, none will be able to intercede, save by His Leave (2:255); see 2:48c; 2:255c. This verse can also be understood to mean that human beings cannot know or dominate over anything in creation except by God's Authority and Sanction.

35 This verse is understood to indicate that when people are brought forth from their graves, a flash of fire that they will be unable to escape will spur them on to the Day of Reckoning. Molten brass translates nuḥās, which is taken by some to mean the smoke of the fire (IK, Ṭ) and by others to mean liquid copper (IK, Ṭ).

37 The splitting or rending asunder of the sky is one of several events said to mark the end of this world and the coming of God's Judgment; see also 25:25; 42:5; 69:16c; 73:18; 82:1; 84:1.

two deny? (39) On that Day no man shall be questioned as to his sin; nor shall any jinn. (40) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (41) The guilty shall be known by their marks; and they shall be seized by the forelocks and by the feet. (42) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (43) This is Hell that the guilty deny; (44) to and fro shall they pass, between it and boiling waters. (45) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (46) And for one who fears 39 Cf. 28:78: And the guilty will not be questioned about their sins; and 77:35–36: That is the Day on which they speak not; nor is permission granted them, such that they might offer excuses. None shall be questioned that day, since their deeds have already been recorded (see 17:71; 18:49; 50:17–18; 69:19–28; 82:11–12). And they will not be able to speak for themselves, for on that Day We shall seal their mouths. Their hands will speak to Us, and their feet will bear witness to that which they used to earn (36:65); and their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do (41:20). Interpreting the present verse in light of 15:92–93, So by thy Lord, We shall question them all concerning that which they used to do, some say that they will be questioned, and then their mouths will be sealed (Aj, IK). It is also said that they will not be questioned in order to elicit a response, but only rhetorically, as a form of reproach (Aj). From a Sufi perspective, when the attributes of the lower self have been effaced, after one has passed through the stations of both annihilation and subsistence in God, no sin remains, since at this stage one cannot but act in accord with the Will of God (Aj).

41 The first part of this verse can also be read as an adverbial clause modifying v. 39, meaning that they will not be asked about their sins, because they will already be known by their marks. This is in contrast to the marks by which the believers will be known, such as the light that shines from the parts of their bodies they washed when performing ablutions (IK) or the mark upon their faces . . . from the effect of prostration (48:29). Being seized by the forelocks and by the feet is interpreted by some to mean that their heads will be bent down and bound to their feet (IK, Q), and by others to indicate that the angels will drag them by the forelock or by the feet (Q). From a Quranic perspective, there is no creature that crawls, but that He holds it by its forelock (11:56).

43 For a similar verse, see 32:20: And as for those who are iniquitous, their refuge is the Fire. Whenever they desire to go forth therefrom, they are returned unto it, and it is said unto them, "Taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny."

44 It is interpreted by most as a reference to the Fire of Hell, meaning that they will sometimes be punished with Fire and sometimes with boiling liquid (IK), which could be taken as a reference to experiencing the punishment of Hell both externally and internally. A similar passage is 40:71–72: They will be dragged, with shackles and chains around their necks, into boiling liquid; then they will be set aflame in the Fire (cf. 20:19; 44:48; 56:42). For verses that speak of those who are made to drink boiling liquid, see 6:70; 10:4; 18:29; 37:67; 38:57; 44:46; 47:15; 78:24–25; 88:5. The word here translated boiling, ān, indicates something that has reached the highest possible temperature (IK, Ṭ); others say ān means "prepared" (IK, Ṭ), though the two readings do not necessarily contradict one another (IK).

46 Cf. 79:40–41: As for one who fears standing before his Lord and forbids the soul from its caprice, truly the Garden is the refuge. In both verses, the phrase standing before his Lord translates maqāma rabbihi, which could also be translated "the station of his Lord." It can be understood to indicate that one will stand before God on the Day of Judgment, answering for all of one's deeds, as in 83:6: A day when mankind shall stand before the Lord of the worlds, for the reckoning. Or it could be understood as a reference to God's overseeing every soul, as in 13:33, where God is referred to as He Who attends to (qā'im ʿalā) every soul in accordance with what it has earned. According to Mujāhid, one of the leading scholars among the second generation of Muslims, "One who fears standing before his Lord, there are two Gardens. (47) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (48) Each abounding in green branches. (49) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (50) In each are two fountains flowing. (51) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (52) In each are two kinds of every fruit. (53) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (54) They recline upon beds lined with rich brocade, the fruits of the two Gardens near at hand. (55) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (56) Therein are maidens of modest gaze, whom neither man nor jinn has ever touched. (57) So which of standing before his Lord is one who thinks of committing a sin, then remembers God and abandons it out of fear" (Aj, Q). There are many interpretations to explain the meaning of two Gardens: one as a reward for faith, the other as a reward for good deeds (Aj, Q); one for fearing God, another for abandoning lusts (Aj); one that is spiritual, another that is physical (Aj); one that is created especially for the believer, and one that the believer inherits (Q); one garden of eternity, another of blessing (Q); one that is one's own abode, the other for celestial spouses (Q); one for human beings, the other for jinn; or one for the foremost, the other for the companions of the right (Aj); also see commentary on 56:8–10.

48 This verse begins the description of the first two Gardens, which extends to v. 58 or v. 60. Two other Gardens are then described in vv. 62–76. According to some these first two Gardens are for the foremost (see 56:10c), who are also identified with those brought nigh (56:88), while the next two Gardens are for the companions of the right (see 56:8–9; Aj, IK). This interpretation finds support in a ḥadīth: "Two golden Gardens for the foremost and two silver Gardens for the companions of the right" (Aj, IK). Green branches translates afnān, which denotes branches that bear fruit and leaves providing both shade and nourishment. Afnān could also be read as a plural of fann, meaning "sort" or "variety," thus indicating many different kinds of trees and fruits.

50 Some see this verse as indicating that each garden has a spring of water that flows in it (Q). Others see it as an allusion to the springs mentioned in other verses, such as Tasnīm (83:27) and Salsabīl (76:18; Aj, IK, Q, Ṭ). It could also be understood as a reference to the rivers of wine and milk in 47:15.

52 Two kinds translates zawjān, which can also mean "varieties" or "pairs." Here it is understood to mean one kind that is familiar and one that is not (Z).

54 Cf. 76:13–14: Therein they recline upon couches, seeing neither sun nor bitter cold. Its shade shall be close above them, and its clusters shall be made to hang low. Reclining upon beds or couches is seen as an allusion to being content and at peace (R). The rich brocade is said to be a thick silk embroidered with gold (IK, Ṭ). Many comment on this verse with a sense of wonderment, remarking, "If this is the exterior, then what about the interior?" (Aj, IK). The fruits being near at hand indicates that they will be easy to access whenever one wishes (Aj, IK), similar to the reference to low-hanging clusters in 69:23.

56 Therein refers to the two Gardens. But it could also be rendered "upon them," as a reference to the beds mentioned in v. 54 (IK). Some also allow that it could refer to all the dwelling places of Heaven (Aj). Maidens of modest gaze means those who look upon none but their own spouses (Aj, IK, Q). Touched translates yaṭmith, which also implies loss of virginity when a woman is the direct object of the sentence and menstruation when she is the subject of the sentence (Iṣ). This verse can thus be taken to indicate both that the women of Paradise are chaste and that they are free of the burdens of menstruation and childbearing that beset women in this world.

your Lord's boons do you two deny? (58) Even as the ruby and as the coral stone are they. (59) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (60) Is the reward of goodness aught but goodness? (61) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (62) And beyond these two are two Gardens— (63) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny?— (64) of deepest green. (65) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (66) In each are two fountains bubbling. (67) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (68) In each are fruits, date palms, and pomegranates. (69) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (70) Therein are good and beautiful ones; (71) so which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (72) Maidens secluded in pavilions; (73) so which of your Lord's boons do 58 The maidens of Paradise are said to be as pure as rubies and as white as coral stones (marjān; IK), which can be taken to mean tiny pearls as well as coral stone. If the latter, it is said to refer to the rosy color of their complexion (Aj). A ḥadīth states, "If a woman among the women of the people of the Garden were to look upon the earth, she would fill what is between them [the Garden and earth] with a scent, and all that is between them would become delightful. The veil (naṣīf) over her head is better than this world and all that is in it" (IK). The description of their beauty in this verse hearkens back to the description of the blessings of this earth in v. 22.

60 Cf. 10:26. According to many, this verse indicates that the reward for performing good deeds in this life is goodness in the Hereafter (Aj, Q), as in 42:23: And whosoever accomplishes a good deed, We shall increase him in goodness thereby. In this vein, it is said that the Prophet told his Companions this verse means, "Is the reward of one whom I have blessed with testifying to oneness (tawḥīd) aught but the Garden?" (Aj, Ṭs). According to al-Suddī, it means, "Is the reward of those who live a life of obedience in this world aught but generosity in the Hereafter?" (Aj). And a saying attributed to Jaʿfar al-Ṣādiq asserts that the meaning is, "Is the reward of those to whom I have shown My Goodness before creation (fi'l-azal) other than that I shall continue to show them My Goodness after creation (fi'l-abad)" (Aj, Q). Some also connect this verse with the famous ḥadīth of Gabriel, in which the Prophet says that goodness (iḥsān) is "to worship God as if you see Him, for if you do not see Him, He nonetheless sees you" (Aj). It can furthermore be taken to mean that a virtuous act is its own reward.

62 For the difference between the two Gardens described in vv. 62–76 and vv. 48–60, see 55:48c.

64 Deepest green (mudhāmmatān) indicates a very dark shade of green due to the density of vegetation. This is taken by some to indicate that the ground of these two Gardens is covered with thick vegetation, while in the first two Gardens trees predominate, so that they are abounding in green branches (v. 48).

66 The springs here are bubbling, whereas the springs of the higher Gardens mentioned in v. 50 are free-flowing (Aj, IK) and thus believed to be more copious.

68 According to some, this verse means that the fruits of the two lower Gardens are more limited than those of the higher Gardens, in which there were pairs or two kinds of every fruit (v. 52). Date palms and pomegranates are said to be specified because the former is particularly nutritious and the latter has medicinal properties (IK). These, along with the fig and the olive, are also considered fruits given to human beings here on earth that still retain something of their paradisal quality.

70–74 Whereas the maidens of the higher Gardens are said to be of modest gaze (qāṣirāt

you two deny? (74) Untouched as yet by man or jinn; (75) so which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (76) They recline upon green cushions and beautiful wonders. (77) So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? (78) Blessed is the Name of thy Lord, Possessed of Majesty and Bounty.

al-ṭarf; v. 56), the maidens of the lower two Gardens are secluded (maqṣūrāt), which could indicate that they are enclosed or that their gaze is lowered. Those in the higher Gardens are described with an active participle in the Arabic, while those in the lower gardens are described with the passive participle from the same root, q-ṣ-r. This implies that those of the higher Gardens are chaste women who restrain their glances themselves, while those of the lower Gardens have their glances guarded for them (IK). For wide-eyed maidens, see 44:54c.

76 The cushions (rafraf) indicate thickly brocaded cushions or fabric that can be found wherever the inhabitants of Heaven desire (Aj); they can also be understood as a metaphor for ease and comfort. Wonders translates ʿabqarī, a word used to indicate anything of genius, magnificence, or rarity (Aj, IK). ʿAbqar is said to be the land of the jinn and is employed as an epithet for anything displaying great skillfulness or being beyond the ken of human understanding (R).

77 Regarding the thirty-one times that this refrain occurs in this sūrah, al-Nasafī writes, "Eight are mentioned following verses that enumerate the marvels of God's creation. . . . Seven follow verses wherein are mentioned the Fire and its severities, in accordance with the number of the doors of the Fire. After these seven, there are eight that follow a description of the two Gardens and their inhabitants, in accordance with the number of the doors of the Garden. And there are eight after that for the two Gardens that are below them. So whoever affirms the first eight and acts in accord with what that requires, the doors of the Garden will be open to him and the doors of Hellfire will be shut to him."

78 Just as the phrase Possessed of Majesty and Bounty marks the end of the discussion of earthly blessings in v. 27, here it marks the end of the discussion of heavenly blessings. Here it modifies thy Lord, just as it modified the Face of thy Lord in v. 27. According to another canonical reading, Possessed of Majesty and Bounty could here be read as modifying the Name (i.e., dhū, rather than dhī; Q, Z). It is said that the Prophet advised his followers, "Persist [in invoking] 'O Possessor of Majesty and Bounty' " (IK). Many record an account attributed to ʿĀʾishah that after prayers the Prophet would often sit and say, "O God, Thou art Peace, and peace comes from Thee. Blessed art Thou, Possessed of Majesty and Bounty" (IK).

The Event

al-Wāqiᶜah

All commentators consider al-Wāqiᶜah to be a Makkan sūrah, although some maintain that vv. 81–82 are from the Madinan period (Āl), and others say that v. 83 is Madinan (IJ). A minority consider vv. 39–40 to have been revealed during the Prophet's emigration from Makkah to Madinah (Q). The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the Event in v. 1, a reference to the Day of Judgment.

The central theme of this sūrah is the nature of the Hereafter for three different classes of people, the foremost, the companions of the right, and the companions of the left. Since the previous sūrah, al-Raḥmān, also mentions the states of the Hereafter, this sūrah can be seen as a continuation and completion of it (Aj). Although al-Raḥmān deals mostly with the different blessings attained in different levels of Paradise, al-Wāqiᶜah contrasts the blessings of Paradise, which are enjoyed by the foremost and the companions of the right, with the punishments of Hell, which are suffered by the companions of the left. The sūrah comprises five overlapping sections: the first (vv. 1–7) discusses the signs of the Day of Judgment; the second and longest (vv. 7–56) compares the ends of the three groups mentioned above; the third (vv. 57–74) presents reminders of God's Power and Generosity as proofs or signs of God's ability to resurrect; the fourth (vv. 75–82) speaks of the nature of the revelation, chastising those who scorn it; and the fifth (vv. 83–96) discusses the nature of death and the Afterlife, returning to the threefold classification that had been discussed at length in the second section, and concludes with an exhortation to glorify God.

According to a well-known ḥadīth, "Whosoever recites al-Wāqiᶜah every night shall never be afflicted by need" (Aj, Āl, IK, Q). Ibn ᶜAjībah states that this is because whoever understands the things mentioned in this sūrah regarding the Hereafter will set about preparing for it. The attribution of such qualities to this sūrah has led to its being one of the most often recited sūrahs of the Quran, especially in moments of great significance and portent, including for the dying or recently dead.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) When the Event befalls, (2) none shall deny its befalling, (3) abasing, exalting. (4) When the earth is shaken violently, (5) and the mountains are pulverized to powder, (6) such that they become scattered dust, (7) and you shall be of three kinds: (8) the companions of the right; what of the companions of the right? (9) And the companions of the left; what of the companions of the left?

1–2 When v. 1 is read with a full stop at the end, when (idhā) is taken to introduce something too terrifying to be mentioned directly. If it is read continuously with v. 2, it is considered an adverbial clause: "When the Event befalls, no denial is there of its befalling." The first verse may also be read as a reference to the previous sūrah, meaning that all of the blessings promised to the companions of the right and to the foremost will be granted to them when the Event befalls. In each reading, the Event refers to the eschatological event of the end of the world leading to the Day of Judgment. The Event (al-wāqiᶜah), deriving from the verb "to fall" (waqaᶜa), which can also mean "to happen" or "to occur," expresses a sense of inevitability, as if to say, "When what must happen happens" (Aj). It will be so overwhelming that none of those who denied it in this life will be able to deny it any longer (Q). These verses can also be seen as an allusion to individual transformation through sudden or profound spiritual realization.

3 The event of the Hour of Judgment abases some, lowering them into the depths of the Fire, and exalts others, raising them to the ranks of Heaven. Some take this verse as an allusion to the destruction of the natural order, when the stars and mountains will fall (e.g., 77:8–10; Aj, Ṭ). From another perspective, the Truth abases those who realize it by leveling everything within the soul that may have been opposed to the Truth, and thus exalts the ones it abases by preparing them to receive the Truth. As Ibn ᶜAjībah expresses it, "The supreme Truth exists in the soul like butter in milk: only when the milk is churned does the butter appear."

4 Cf. 99:1; 73:14.

5–6 That mountains will be destroyed at the end of the world is mentioned in several verses, as in 69:14, where they are ground up in a single grinding, and in 70:9 and 101:5, where they are likened to carded wool (see also 18:47; 52:10; 73:14; 81:3). The destruction of mountains symbolizes the destruction of all that seems firm and everlasting, as in 27:88: And thou seest the mountains that thou dost suppose are solid pass away like clouds—the work of God, Who perfects all things. Here scattered dust translates habāʾ, which literally means "floating specks of dust that can only be seen when struck by light" (Aj, Q, Ṭ); the image of scattered dust is similar to that of heaps of shifting sand in 73:14.

7 Almost all commentators take these three divisions to indicate the three categories into which human beings will be divided on the Day of Resurrection.

8–9 In Arabic, as in numerous other cultural-linguistic systems, the right is associated with righteousness and blessedness. The companions of the right are those who will be seated to the right of God's Throne, who will receive the record of their deeds in their right hand (see 17:71; 69:19; 84:7), and who are described as having light spreading before them and on their right (57:12). They are believed to comprise the majority of the residents of the Garden (IK). The companions of the left are those who will receive the record of their deeds in their left hand (see 69:25). What of (mā) in both verses could also be taken to indicate amazement, thus meaning, "How wondrous are the companions of the right" and "How wretched are the companions of the left" (Z). In one account of the Prophet Muhammad's Ascension through the heavens (see 17:1c; 53:1–17c), he is reported to have said, "We went over the nearest heaven, and

(10) And the foremost shall be the foremost. (11) They are the ones brought nigh, (12) in Gardens of bliss— (13) many from those of old, (14) and few from those of later times— (15) upon embroidered couches, (16) reclining upon them, facing there we saw a man sitting with some people on his right and some on his left. When he looked toward his right, he laughed, and when he looked toward his left, he wept. Then he said, 'Welcome! O pious Prophet and pious son.' I asked Gabriel, 'Who is he?' He replied, 'He is Adam, and the people on his right and left are the souls of his offspring. Those on his right are the people of Paradise, and those on his left are the people of Hell. When he looks toward his right, he laughs, and when he looks toward his left, he weeps.'"

10 The foremost translates al-sābiqūn, which derives from the verb sabaqa, meaning "to go first, to go ahead, to outstrip" or "to win a race." The syntax of this verse, in which the same word is the subject and the complement, is used to express something that is great and known to all (Aj, Z). The commentaries vary in identifying the foremost. Many identify them with the spiritual elite of the community, who understand the inner meaning of the religion and walk toward God in this life. Most commentators consider the foremost to be the prophets (IK, JJ). Some include the saints, the truthful (ṣiddīqūn), and the martyrs with them, since they too "outstrip" all others in faith (Ṭū), while others believe the prophets to be beyond the foremost (Aj). Other interpretations include: the first to accept Islam (Aj, IK, Ṭ); the first members of the religious community (ummah; IK, Ṭ); the sincere (mukhliṣ), who are foremost in responding to the call of God and spare nothing in seeking God's Contentment (Z); the first to come to the mosque, and the first to set out in the way of God (IK, Ṭ); those who are foremost in attaining virtue (Aj); and the residents of the highest parts of Heaven (see 83:18; IK). According to some, the foremost will not be subject to the Reckoning before God on the Day of Judgment, going straight to Paradise, while the companions of the left and the companions of the right will stand before God for judgment (R).

11–14 These verses could mean that the foremost are "brought nigh in Gardens of bliss" (Ṭ), brought nigh to the Divine Throne (Z), or brought nigh unto God Himself (Aj, JJ). Ibn ᶜAjībah notes that the ones brought nigh were greater in earlier times with regard to quantity, not quality. Those toward the end of time are considered by some to be of a higher degree, because they have awakened in a time of heedlessness and exerted themselves in a time of lassitude. Thus because they achieve spiritual awakening without many of the supports available to previous generations, God grants them a rank given to no others (Aj). Regarding the spiritual devolution of human beings over time, the Prophet said to his Companions, "You live at a time when whoever omits one-tenth of what he has been commanded [to do] shall be ruined. But there will come a time when whoever fulfills one-tenth of what he has been commanded [to do] shall be saved."

Some maintain that those of old means earlier religious communities and those of later times means the Muslim community (IK, JJ, Ṭ). Others interpret them as references to earlier and later generations of Muslims (Z), in accordance with a famous ḥadīth, "The best generation is mine, then those who follow them, then those who follow them" (Aj, IK). The foremost among those of later times are seen as those mentioned in another ḥadīth: "A group among my community ceases not to follow the truth (ẓāhirīna ᶜala'l-ḥaqq) until the Hour is come, unharmed by those who fail to support them and those who oppose them" (IK). Regarding the conditions of later times that cause others not to support the foremost, a ḥadīth states that at this time, "rapacity reigns, passions are obeyed, the world is given priority, and each person admires his own opinion." From this perspective, these verses point to an ever greater spiritual devolution of human beings rather than progress over time.

15–16 Several verses indicate that the people of Paradise recline upon couches, meaning that they are content and at peace (see 18:31c; 55:54c). Embroidered is here interpreted to mean that the cushions are encrusted with gold or pearls and rubies (Q, Sh). Some also view the couches as thrones, indicating that those reclining upon them have attained a high rank (see also 18:31;

one another. (17) Immortal youths wait upon them (18) with goblets, ewers, and a cup from a flowing spring, (19) wherefrom they suffer neither headache nor stupefaction, (20) with fruits as they choose, (21) and the meat of birds as they desire, (22) and [there shall be] wide-eyed maidens, (23) the likeness of concealed pearls, (24) as a recompense for that which they used to do. (25) They hear no idle talk therein, nor incitement to sin, (26) save that "Peace! Peace!" is uttered.

36:56; 52:20; 76:13; 83:23, 35). Facing one another (cf. 15:47; 37:44; 44:53) implies that none shall need to sit behind another since all will be equally exalted.

17 According to the Islamic tradition, those who died before they were of the age to be held accountable for their sins or rewarded for their good deeds serve the believers in Paradise. According to a saying attributed to the Prophet's Companion Salmān al-Fārsī, "The servants of heaven are the children of the idolaters" (Aj, Q, Sh). In contrast, in a statement attributed to ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, they are said to be the children of Muslims (Q, Sh).

18–19 The mention of drinking vessels is used as a metonym for the drink itself. Ewers translates abārīq, which is said to derive from the verb baraqa, meaning, "to shine, glitter, sparkle," and is thus taken to indicate vessels that glitter and sparkle from their purity (Q, Sh). From a flowing spring (cf. 37:45) indicates that the liquid is pure and the source never runs dry. Though wine is forbidden to Muslims in this life (see 4:43; 5:90), they are said to enjoy a wine in the Hereafter that bears none of the negative side effects of the wine of this world (cf. 83:25–28). Nor stupefaction (cf. 37:47) translates lā yunzafūn, which can also be read as describing the springs, in which case it is read lā yunzifūn, an expression said of a well that does not dry up, thus indicating that this wine will never cease to flow (Q). For more on the wine of Paradise, see 47:15, which speaks of Paradise containing rivers of wine delicious for those who imbibe. Of this wine, the poet ʿUmar ibn al-Fāriḍ (d. 1235) writes in his Wine Ode: "It refines the character of those who drink it: / The irresolute it guides to the path of resolve, / The miser's hand it makes generous, / And when anger strikes it instills / Forbearance in one with no clemency."

20–21 Cf. 52:22; 77:42. Several other verses also refer to the fruits of Paradise that will be at the disposal of the believers (e.g., 37:42; 38:61; 43:73); see 36:57c. The birds of Paradise are described in several aḥādīth as multicolored birds with extraordinary necks and wings; yet when people expressed wonder at their beauty, the Prophet is reported to have said, "Those who eat them are more blessed than are they" (Q, Sy). Elsewhere it is said that the inhabitants of Paradise shall have whatsoever they will (16:31; 25:16; 39:34; 42:22; 50:35).

22–24 For the meaning of wide-eyed maidens, see 44:54c. Here it may be read as the subject of the sentence along with immortal youths (v. 17), meaning that both serve the foremost. Or it may be read as another of those blessings that the foremost receive in Paradise. The likening of wide-eyed maidens to concealed pearls indicates both their exquisite beauty and that they remain untouched, as in 55:56 and 55:74. Regarding all such allusions to the blessings of Paradise, there is a famous ḥadīth qudsī: "God says, 'I have prepared for My righteous servants what no eye has seen and no ear has heard and what has not occurred to the heart of any human being; so recite if you will, No soul knows what comfort is kept hidden for it [32:17].'"

25–26 Cf. 14:23; 19:62; 52:23; 78:35; 88:11. Nor incitement to sin (see also 52:23) translates taʾthīm, which can also indicate that there is no lying or any form of sinful speech. These verses can be taken to mean that the inhabitants of the Garden will hear only the greeting "Peace be upon you" (Sh), with which Muslims greet one another in this world, that they will hear only peaceful speech, or that they will hear the words "Peace, Peace" (Aj), as the discourse of the people of the Garden is said to be remembrance of God and wisdom (Aj). Peace (salām) as employed here comprises spiritual soundness, freedom from all evils and defects, and inner contentment.

(27) And the companions of the right; what of the companions of the right? (28) Among thornless lote trees, (29) clustered plantains, (30) and extended shade, (31) gushing water, (32) and abundant fruit, (33) neither out of reach, nor forbidden, (34) and [upon] raised beds. (35) Truly We brought them into being as a [new] creation, (36) then made for them virgins, (37) amorous peers, (38) for the companions of the right— (39) many from those of old, (40) and many from those 27 As translated, what of the companions of the right? expresses wonder at their state (Aj). Others interpret it as an expression of God's Grace, meaning, "How fortunate are the companions of the right" (IK).

28 Whereas the lote trees of this world have thorns and few fruits, those of Paradise are said to have no thorns and many fruits (IK). Arabian lote trees are believed to be mentioned as a tree of Heaven because of their large leaves under which one can find shade (Iṣ), and can thus be understood as a reference to shade as part of the contentment one finds in Paradise. Thornless translates makhḍūd, which could also mean "fruit-laden," implying that they almost touch the ground.

29 Clustered (manḍūd) indicates fruit that covers a tree from top to bottom (JJ) and is so dense that the trunk of the tree is no longer visible (Aj). Though most interpret the trees bearing the clusters as plantains, which are called ṭalḥ in Yemen (JJ), others believe what is meant is a large thorny shrub that used to grow in the Ḥijāz (IK).

30 According to a ḥadīth, the Prophet said, "In the Garden there is a tree in whose shade a rider would travel for a hundred years without the shade being broken. That is the extended shade" (Q, R, Ṭ). Shade translates ẓill, which also denotes "covering" or "shelter," and can be used figuratively to imply "protection" (Iṣ). Ẓill is also taken by some to indicate "a state of ease, pleasure, and plenty," thus "happiness." This verse and other references to "shade" can thus be seen as allusions to the eternal security and felicity attained in Paradise.

31 Gushing translates mamdūd, which indicates water that is not confined to channels (IK, R, Ṭ, Z), and is interpreted to mean that water flows to those in Paradise wherever and however they wish without any effort on their part (Aj, Z). While there is wine for the foremost and boiling liquid for the companions of the left, the companions of the right enjoy pure water.

32–33 That this fruit is not out of reach is consistent with the descriptions of low-hanging clusters (69:23, cf. 76:14) and the fruits near at hand (55:54) mentioned in other verses. It could also be translated "not cut off," meaning that there is no season in which this fruit is not available (IK, R, Z).

34 Raised beds translates furush, which can also be used in classical Arabic as an allusion to women (Iṣ). Thus several commentators relate this verse to 36:55–56: Truly the inhabitants of the Garden on that Day will be busy rejoicing, they and their spouses reclining upon couches in the shade (Aj, Z). This interpretation is supported by the use of the feminine plural pronoun hunna in the following verse, so that this verse could be read "spouses made high," in which case it is related to the mention of the wide-eyed maidens in v. 22; 44:54; 52:20; 56:22.

35 As a [new] creation could also be translated "in an immediate manner." This verse implies that the maidens of Heaven are always fresh and untouched.

36–37 According to a ḥadīth, the Prophet was asked about those referred to in vv. 35–37 by his wife Umm Salamah. He responded, "They are those who in this world were rendered gray, bleary-eyed, and blind. After their old age God will make them [youthful] peers" (Āl, IK, Q, Ṭ). Amorous implies intimacy and love, while peers implies both that they are of the same age, which is said to be thirty-three years (Aj, Q), and that they are spiritually compatible.

38–40 Although vv. 35–37 can be read as a description of the wide-eyed maidens (v. 22) when v. 34 is read as an allusion to them, others see the wide-eyed maidens as bestowed upon the foremost, and the amorous peers as bestowed upon the of later times. (41) And the companions of the left; what of the companions of the left? (42) Amidst scorching wind and boiling liquid, (43) and the shadow of black smoke, (44) neither cool nor refreshing. (45) Truly before that they lived in luxury, (46) would persist in great sin, (47) and would say, "What! When we are dead and have become dust and bones, are we to be resurrected? (48) What! And our fathers of old?" (49) Say, "Truly those of old and those of later times (50) are gathered for the tryst of a day appointed." (51) Then indeed you—O you straying deniers— (52) shall eat from a tree of Zaqqūm, (53) and fill your bellies there-companions of the right (Q). Whereas the foremost who are brought nigh are few in later generations, the companions of the right will continue to be plentiful as time goes on.

42 Scorching wind translates samūm, which indicates a wind that penetrates the pores (masāmm) of one's body (Aj, Q, Z). Boiling liquid translates ḥamīm, which can mean both intense heat and severe cold, both of which are said to afflict the denizens of Hell (see 78:24–25).

43–44 In contrast to the extended shade (v. 30) that provides unending security and peace for the inhabitants of Paradise, the shade of Hell has no positive attributes (Z); the comforting image of shade is replaced with the ominous image of the shadow of black smoke, which obscures true vision and indicates impure, even choking air. Like the passions and distractions of this world, such shadows are ephemeral, appearing to grant shade, but only obscuring true vision and understanding by cutting off one's supply of the air of intellectual and spiritual clarity until they blow away. Such ephemeral shade can even harm the one who seeks shelter in it, as in 77:29–32: Away to that which you used to deny! Away to a threefold shadow that provides no shade, nor avails against the flame. Indeed, it throws up sparks like massive tree trunks.

45 That they lived in luxury indicates that the companions of the left had no inkling of the judgment to which they would be subjected. It translates mutrafīn, which can also indicate pursuing pleasures without any moral considerations.

46 That the companions of the left would persist in great sin alludes to the fact that God's Forgiveness was open to them, had they desisted and repented. Great sin can mean sin in general or the one great sin, namely, polytheism (Aj, IK), which is considered the only unforgiveable sin, as in 4:48 and 4:116: Truly God forgives not that any partner be ascribed unto Him, but He forgives what is less than that for whomsoever He will. In the present verse, sin translates ḥinth, a word that alludes to the phrase ḥanitha fī yamīnihi, meaning, "He broke the oath that he had taken with his right hand" (Q, Sh, Z), and could thus be seen as an allusion to breaking the covenant with God (see 7:172c). When a youth reaches the age of puberty it is said that he or she has reached the age of ḥinth, meaning the age at which a person can now break the original covenant made with God before the creation of the world and must now adopt the observance of a revealed religion in order to properly maintain the covenant.

47–48 These verses express a common objection to the Quranic teaching regarding bodily resurrection (cf. 17:49, 98; 23:82–83; 36:78; 37:16–17, 53; 50:3; 79:11).

49–50 All human beings from the beginning of creation until the end of time will be gathered together on the Day of Judgment; see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran."

51–53 Just as the inhabitants of Paradise have fruits that befit their station, so too the inhabitants of Hell are provided with "nourishment" befitting their station. The tree of Zaqqūm is best with. (54) Then you shall drink from boiling liquid, (55) drinking as do parched camels. (56) This shall be their welcome on the Day of Judgment. (57) We created you. Would that you affirm it. (58) Have you considered that which you emit? (59) Is it you who created it or are We the creators? (60) We have decreed death among you, and none outstrips Us (61) in replacing [you with] your likenesses and bringing you into being again in what you know not. (62) You have indeed known the first genesis. Why, then, do you not reflect? (63) Have you considered what you reap? (64) Is it you who sow it or are We the sowers? (65) Had We willed, We would have turned it to chaff, such that you would remain bitterly jesting, (66) [saying] "Truly we have suffered loss. (67) Nay! We are deprived." (68) Have described in 44:43–46: Truly the tree of Zaqqūm is the food of the sinner, like molten lead boiling in their bellies, like the boiling of boiling liquid (also see commentary on 37:62–63; 44:43–46). That their stomachs are full implies that they continue eating even when full, because their rapacious natures can never be satiated.

54–55 For boiling liquid (ḥamīm), see 56:42c. Parched camels translates al-hīm, which relates to rabid camels (hiyām); the disease gives them an unquenchable thirst (Aj, IK, Z). Al-hīm is also interpreted to mean smooth earth covered with sand, indicating that they drink sand or a sandy beverage that increases thirst rather than quenching it (Q, Z).

56 Welcome translates nuzul, which literally means food prepared to honor "one who is arriving" (nāzil). There is a sense of irony here, as if to say that they have received the meal they sought, similar to the irony in 3:21: Give them glad tidings of a painful punishment (Q); and 4:138: Give glad tidings to the hypocrites that for them awaits a painful punishment.

57 Would that you affirm it could also mean, "Even if you do not affirm [it]." Here the deniers are being asked to affirm either that God created them, that they will be resurrected (Q, Z), or both.

58–59 That which you emit is taken by most as a reference either to sperm alone (Ṭ, Z), as in 53:46, from a drop when emitted (Z), or to both sperm and ovum, as in some interpretations of 86:6–7. For v. 59, see also 52:35.

60 We have decreed death among you indicates that God takes people at various times, through various infirmities, and for varied reasons that they cannot discern (Aj, Qu) and that no one is able to avoid or delay the moment of death that God has ordained. For a similar verse, see 70:41.

61–62 These verses are taken to mean that if one recognizes that it is God Who creates and fashions human beings in the first genesis, meaning the first time, one will recognize that God has the ability to resurrect them (Q). Some also take it to indicate that God can resurrect human beings as monkeys or pigs or any form He chooses (Aj, Q). Why, then, do you not reflect? could also be rendered as an expression of amazement, "Yet you do not reflect!" (Q), or of regret, "Would that you had reflected."

63–67 This pericope is similar to 18:42, which says of a disbeliever who had lost his crop: So he began to wring his hands on account of what he had spent on it, while it lay in waste upon its trellises, saying, "Would that I had not ascribed anyone as partner unto my Lord!" It is reported that the Prophet said, "Let none of you say, 'We caused [something] to grow,' but rather, 'We sowed it'" (Aj, Āl, IK, Q). There is also an implication, as in the next pericope, that human beings fail to be thankful for the provisions God gives them, focusing more upon what does not come to fruition than upon what God provides them, as is also implied in v. 82. Bitterly jesting translates tafakkahūn, and here indicates both amazement you considered the water that you drink? (69) Is it you who sent it down from the clouds, or is it We Who send down? (70) If We had willed, We would have made it bitter; will you not, then, give thanks? (71) Have you considered the fire that you kindle? (72) Is it you who brought into being the tree thereof, or is it We Who bring into being? (73) We made it a reminder and an enjoyment for the desert dwellers. (74) So glorify the Name of thy Lord, the Magnificent! (75) I swear by the places where the stars descend! (76) And truly it is a magnificent oath, if you but knew. (77) Truly it is a Noble Quran (78) in a Book concealed. (79) None touch it, save those made pure, (80) a revelation from the Lord of the worlds. (81) Do you then scorn this discourse, (82) and make the denial thereof your provision? (83) Why, then, when it reaches the throat, (84) while you are and regret (Q). Deprived translates maḥrūmūn, which indicates someone who has been cut off from receiving provision (Aj).

68–70 Other verses allude to God's power to remove water at any time (e.g., 18:41; 67:30), and in several verses, water . . . sent down is used as an allusion to blessings from God (e.g., 35:27; 39:21; 41:39); in others, the manner in which God brings forth life through water is cited as a sign for those who believe (e.g., 2:164; 6:99; 7:57; 80:25–30); and 21:30 states, And We made every living thing from water (see also 24:45; 25:54). Ingratitude for water thus implies ingratitude for all God's Blessings and for the gift of life itself.

71–73 Fire is a reminder insofar as it reminds one of the Resurrection or the Fire in Hell (Aj, Bd, Ṭ), regarding which the Prophet said, "This fire of yours that human beings kindle contains but a seventieth of the heat in Hell" (Ṭ). Desert dwellers translates muqwīn, which can also refer to all travelers (Q, Sh, Ṭ) and is taken by some as a reference to everyone who benefits from the use of fire (Q, Sh, Ṭ).

74 This is one of many verses in which human beings are enjoined to glorify God. It can also mean, "Glorify by the Name of thy Lord," thus indicating a command to invoke the Name of God. The term for "glorification," tasbīḥ, indicates declaring something transcendent beyond all else. In this context it indicates that, although God is responsible for all of the things mentioned in vv. 58–73, He is completely beyond them, both insofar as He performs many other tasks and insofar as none of their perceived deficiencies can be attributed to Him. The Magnificent can be taken to modify either Name or Lord (Bd). This verse can also be seen as a command to glorify God, since God's Glory is beyond what anyone else can say of it (Aj).

75 I swear translates fa-lā uqsimu. In this context, the particle lā in fa-lā could imply emphasis or negation. Most interpret it to function as the former, but some see it as a particle of negation, in which case it would be translated, "Nay, I swear" (Q, Sh, Ṭ). The verse would then mean, "I denounce what you say, [and] I swear . . ." The places where the stars descend most likely refers to the time, place, or manner in which celestial bodies set or to the stations of the stars referred to in 85:1 and 25:61 (R, Ṭ). It can also be taken as a reference to the fading of the stars on the Day of Judgment (see 81:2; R, Ṭ). When taken as a reference to the setting of the stars, it is seen as an allusion to the times of night that are thought to be best for supererogatory devotions (Aj; see 76:26; commentary on 73:1–2, 20). Stars translates nujūm, which could also mean "portions or progressive installments." It could thus be rendered, "I swear by the descending of the progressive installments [of the Quran]," an interpretation attributed to some early commentators who see this verse as a reference to the gradual revelation of the Quran, three, four, and five verses at a time, over a period of twenty-three years (610–32; IK, Q, Ṭ); see 17:106c; 25:32c. The places where the stars descend can also be seen as an allusion to the hearts of God's servants, angels, messengers, and the righteous among the believers into which the stars or the progressive installments of the Quran descend (R).

76 This verse is read by some with a full grammatical stop after oath, in which case if you but knew is read as a conditional phrase with an implied response, such as, "If you but knew, you would affirm" (Aj, R), or "If you but knew, you would act on what that knowledge entails" (Aj), or "If you but knew, you would strive to attain certainty" (R).

77 It can be seen as a reference to everything that has been mentioned thus far in this sūrah or to the whole of the Quran (R). In this instance, Quran may be read according to its linguistic meaning, "Truly it is a noble recitation." Noble translates karīm, which indicates the joining together of all praiseworthy attributes (R, Sh). What is noble (karīm) is said to be of pure origin and manifest bounty (R).

78 In this context, Book is taken by most to mean the Preserved Tablet (85:22; Aj, Q, R, Sh, Ṭ), which is said to contain all of the books of revelation. That it is both noble and concealed indicates that the Quran is preserved from the influence of anyone but God and thus that it is not, as the Prophet's detractors alleged, the whisperings of jinn or fables of those of old (6:25; 8:31; 16:24; 23:83; 25:5; 27:68; 46:17; 68:15; 83:13; R).

79 It may be read as referring to a Noble Quran (v. 77), or a Book concealed (v. 78) and thus to the Preserved Tablet (Aj, Q, R, Ṭ). Others take it as a reference to the physical book containing the written Arabic Quran (muṣḥaf; Aj, Q, Ṭ). Based upon this latter interpretation, many interpret this verse to mean that no one may touch the physical Quran unless they are in a state of ritual purity, though there is extensive debate regarding this issue. If taken as a reference to the Book concealed, then those made pure can be taken as a reference to the angels (Aj, Q, Ṭ) or to the angels and prophets. In this vein, some relate this verse to 80:13–14, which speaks of pages honored, exalted and purified (Q, Ṭ). It can also be understood to mean that no one will actually understand the allusions of the verses that they are reciting, save one whose heart has been purified (Aj). As al-Ghazzālī writes in The Revival of the Religious Sciences, "Just as the external side of the leather of a Quranic codex and its pages are protected against the external skin of a person who touches it except when he is pure, so also its internal meaning is veiled, by the authority of its greatness and might, from the internal aspect of the reader's mind, except when it is pure from all defilement and is illuminated by the light of glorification and reverence. Just as every hand is not fit to touch the leather of the codex, so too every tongue is not fit to recite its letters, nor every mind fit to understand its meanings" (Iḥyāʾ, K. Qirāʾat al-Qurʾān).

80 This verse is repeated in 69:43. Both instances can be taken as direct responses to those who said that the Quran was fables of those of old (6:25; 8:31; 16:24; 23:83; 25:5; 27:68; 68:15; 83:13), poetry, or mere whisperings from Satan and jinn. In this vein, it is related to 26:210–11: And the satans did not descend with it, nor is it fitting for them, nor are they able.

81 Scorn translates mudhinūn, which implies both demeaning and denying or "those who take something lightly" (Aj). It can also indicate those who appear tractable and compliant in order to hide their disbelief (Q). The verbal form adhana is thus translated "compromise," when it is said of the disbelievers in 68:9: They wish that thou might compromise and that they might compromise. In this sūrah, mudhinūn can also be understood to indicate those who take religion lightly and are thus willing to deny the revelation secretly, while pretending to believe in it publicly.

82 This verse is interpreted to mean, "Do you deny that your provision is from God, when in fact you should thank God for your provision?" (Aj, Q). It is reported that some read this verse with "thanks" (shukr) in the place of provision (IK, Q, Sh, Ṭ, Z), though this is probably a case where an interpretation was recorded as a noncanonical reading. According to a ḥadīth, one morning after a downpour, the Prophet said, "God has said, 'Some of My servants arose as believers in Me and some as disbelievers. He who has said, "We have had a rainfall by the grace (faḍl) and Mercy of God," is a believer in Me and a disbeliever in the stars; and he who has said, "We have had a rainfall by the rising of such and such [a star]," is a disbeliever in Me and a believer in the stars'" (IK, Q). Some say that it was in relation to this event that this verse was revealed (Sh, Ṭ).

83 It is a reference to the soul when it reaches the throat at the moment of death, as in 75:26–28:

looking on (85) —and We are nearer to him than you, though you see not— (86) why, then, if you are unconstrained, (87) do you not return it, if you are truthful? (88) So if one be among those brought nigh, (89) then comfort, bounty, and a Garden of bliss. (90) And if one be among the companions of the right, (91) then peace unto thee from the companions of the right. (92) But if one be among the Nay! But when it reaches the collarbones, and it is said, "Who will [make him] ascend?" And he knows for certain that it is the parting.

84 This verse refers to those who are looking on as another dies, yet have no ability to make the soul stay in the body (IK, Ṭ). Vv. 83–85 point to the unique perspective that death imparts both to the dying and to those witnessing the death of another. Suddenly one realizes that the connection to this world is ephemeral and that God is ever near. Upon witnessing death, one is thus reminded that truly we are God's, and unto Him we return (2:156).

85 God is nearer to human beings at all times than they are to themselves, and He has power over them at every moment, despite their illusions to the contrary, as in 50:16: We are nearer to him than his jugular vein. The manner in which God exercises this power at the moment of death is most clearly expressed in 6:61–62: And He is Dominant over His servants. He sends guardians over you, till, when death comes unto one of you, Our messengers take him, and they neglect not their duty. Then they are returned unto God, their true Master. Surely judgment belongs to Him, and He is the swiftest of reckoners.

86–87 This verse asks, "If you do not owe your life to God and are yourself responsible for it, why do you not control the moment of death when the soul will be returned whence it came?" or "Why are you unable to return the soul to the body after it has reached the throat?" (Aj, IK, Q). Unconstrained translates ghayr madīnīn, which could also mean "if you are not indebted," indicating, "If you truly own your own soul and do not owe the debt of your soul to God, then you should be able to control whence it came and whither it will go."

88–94 This last section returns to the categories of human beings discussed in the first half of the sūrah. Each reference is in the singular, as if referring to the soul of the dying person mentioned in vv. 83–87, but nonetheless entails a general discussion of what confronts all souls at the moment of death. These verses are read by some as a discussion of the intermediate realm said to be experienced by all souls after the smaller resurrection, when they reside in the grave before the final resurrection of all human beings for the Day of Judgment (Aj); regarding this intermediary realm, known as the barzakh, and the relationship between the two resurrections, see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran."

88–89 Those brought nigh will be relieved of the cares of this world (Aj, Q, Sh, Ṭ). Comfort is interpreted as an allusion to being in God's Mercy (raḥmah), a cooling breeze (nasīm; Aj, Q), or the direct vision of God's Face, while bounty alludes to hearing God's Word (Q). Bounty translates rayḥān, which is also the name for sweet basil. Rayḥān is also rendered fragrant herbs in 55:12, where it refers to the blessings of this world rather than the bounties of the next. As employed here, some say it refers to the basil of this earth (Th), while others say it refers to the scent of Paradise, a perfume that fills the souls of those brought nigh (Aj, IK). Several commentators quote a saying attributed to Abū al-ʿĀliyah (d. 90/708), a Quran teacher among the second generation of Muslims: "None among those brought nigh departs this world until they have been given some of the rayḥān of the Garden; so he smells it, and is then taken" (Aj, IK, Th). Rayḥān is also understood as an allusion to and symbol of the provisions in Heaven or to Heaven itself (Aj, Th). Others say comfort means being saved from the Fire, and bounty means entering the Everlasting Abode (Th). Still others say comfort refers to the grave and bounty refers to the Garden (Th).

90–91 These verses can be understood to mean that, after souls are questioned by the angels (see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in deniers who are astray, (93) then a welcome of boiling liquid, (94) and burning in Hellfire. (95) Verily, this is the truth of certainty; (96) so glorify the Name of thy Lord, the Magnificent!

the Quran"), one who is among the companions of the right will be greeted with salutations of peace from the companions of the right (Aj) or salutations from the angels (IK), as in 41:30–31: Truly those who say, "Our Lord is God," then stand firm, the angels will descend upon them, [saying], "Fear not, nor grieve, and rejoice in the Garden that you have been promised. We are your protectors in the life of this world and in the Hereafter; therein you shall have whatsoever your souls desire, and therein you shall have whatsoever you call for" (IK). In this vein, these verses are also interpreted as an indication that they are promised safety from any and all harm (Q). The shift to the second-person singular, thee, is interpreted by some to mean that the companions of the right give salutations of peace to the Prophet, saying, "Peace unto thee, O Muhammad" (Aj, Q, Th). Alternately, it can be understood as an address to the individual who hears or reads this verse.

92–94 Welcome translates nuzul; see 56:56c. V. 93 is similar to 37:67: Then on top of it they will have a brew of a boiling liquid; for the broader implications of boiling liquid (ḥamīm), see 56:42c. As with vv. 88–91, some see these verses as referring to the intermediary realm, though others cite them as proof that disbelievers may be cast into the Fire at the moment of death (Aj). They can also be understood as describing both their punishment in the intermediate realm after the lesser resurrection yet before the greater resurrection and their punishment in Hell after the greater resurrection; for the distinction between these two resurrections, see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran."

95 This is read as a reference to what has been mentioned in the immediately preceding verses regarding states of souls in the intermediate realm (R, Ṭ) or to all that has been mentioned in this sūrah (Aj, Q, Sh). The truth of certainty is understood by most to indicate "the truth of what is certain" (Q, R, Sh, Ṭ). It is reported that regarding this verse Qatādah (d. 117/726), one of the foremost commentators from the third generation of Muslim scholars, said, "God does not leave anyone until He has informed him of this Quran; as for the believer, he is made certain of it in this world, and that benefits him on the Day of Resurrection. As for the disbeliever, he is made certain of it on the Day of Resurrection when certainty of it will not benefit him" (Q, Ṭ). According to this interpretation, this verse could be taken as a reference to the entire Quran (R). The truth of certainty is considered by many to be a reference to the highest level of certainty, above the knowledge of certainty (102:5) and the eye of certainty (102:7); see 102:5c. In discussing these levels, some liken the knowledge of certainty to hearing of or being informed of a fire, the eye of certainty to seeing the fire, and the truth of certainty to being consumed by the fire; see 27:7c.

96 So, which translates the particle fa, can be understood to indicate either the order of actions or that the truth that this sūrah contains requires the affirmation of God's Greatness and Transcendence (Aj).

Iron

al-Ḥadīd

Some scholars consider al-Ḥadīd Makkan, while most consider it Madinan (Āl, IK, JJ, Sh). The sixth/twelfth-century commentator Ibn ʿAṭiyyah proposes a potential resolution to this dispute, saying that it has Madinan verses, but it appears that its middle part is Makkan. It takes its name from the phrase We sent down iron in v. 25. Al-Ḥadīd is the first in a group of five *sūrah*s known as "The Glorifiers" (al-Musabbiḥāt), meaning those *sūrah*s that begin with a glorification of God; the others are 59, 61, 62, and 64. According to a ḥadīth, "Within [the Glorifiers] there is a verse that is better than a thousand verses" (IK, Q, Sh). Some scholars are of the opinion that this ḥadīth refers to v. 3 of this sūrah (IK, Sh), while others propose that it refers to the last verse of Sūrah 59, al-Ḥashr (Sh).

Al-Ḥadīd begins with six verses that emphasize the Omnipresence and Omnipotence of God. The next five verses (vv. 7–11) then enjoin belief in God and spending one's wealth in the way of God. This is followed by four verses (vv. 12–15) that contrast the fate that awaits the believers and the hypocrites on the Day of Judgment. The fourth and longest section (vv. 16–24) begins with a call in v. 16, which most say is to believers, to humble or soften their hearts to the remembrance of God. It then discusses the ephemerality of this world and the illusory nature of its delights, continuing the call to spend of one's wealth from the second section and the contrast between believers and disbelievers from the third. The last section (vv. 25–29) extends the discussion to the People of the Book, criticizing them for having failed to be true to their prophets and calling upon them to believe in the prophethood of Muhammad.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Whatsoever is in the heavens and the earth glorifies God, and He is the Mighty, the Wise. (2) Unto Him belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. He gives life and causes death, and He is Powerful over all things. (3) He is the First, and the Last, and the Outward, and the Inward; and He is Knower of all things. (4) He it is Who created the heavens and the earth in six days.

1 Whatsoever (mā) is used rather than whosoever (man) to indicate that the praise of God predominates throughout all that exists (JJ). All existing realities in the heavens and on the earth glorify God through their tongues or through their states of being (Aj, Z). The verb "to glorify" (sabbaḥa) indicates declaring something to be beyond all evil, which derives from the original meaning of the verb sabaḥa, "he went beyond" (Aj, N, Z). The verb "to glorify" occurs in several different forms in the Quran: past, present, imperative, and verbal noun, indicating that from the moment existents come into being they continuously glorify God through speech and deeds, willingly and unwillingly, for there is no thing, save that it hymns His praise, though you do not understand their praise (17:44; Ālī). In this and other verses, sabbaḥa is followed by the particle li, meaning "to" or "for," an addition that can convey the exact same meaning as when sabbaḥa occurs without it, or it can convey a sense of glorifying God for God's sake alone (N, Z).

2 That unto Him belongs sovereignty (cf. 2:107; 3:189; 5:17, 18, 40, 120; 7:158; 9:116; 24:42; 25:2; et passim) indicates God's complete control over all modes of existence. That He gives life and causes death (cf. 2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 9:116; 10:56; 22:6; 23:80; 40:68; 44:8; 53:44) indicates God's power over all phases of life, existence and nonexistence, at all times (for the stages of life and death, see, e.g., 2:28). Among the Divine Names are the Giver of Life (al-Muḥyī) and the Causer of Death (al-Mumīt). Although neither Divine Name occurs in the Quran, the many Quranic references to God's giving life and causing death serve as their source, and both Names occur in the traditional lists of the Ninety-Nine Names of God.

3 God is the First in that "God was and there was nothing other than Him"; the Last in that All upon it passes away. And there remains the Face of thy Lord, Possessed of Majesty and Bounty (55:26–27); the Outward in that Wheresoever you turn, there is the Face of God (2:115); and the Inward in that Sight comprehends Him not (6:103) and We are nearer to him than his jugular vein (50:16). According to al-Zamakhsharī, rather than a simple list of four Divine Names, this verse can be read as two pairs, "He is the First and the Last, and He is the Outward and the Inward," indicating that God is outwardly manifest and inwardly hidden at every moment, past and future (Ālī, Z). It is also said that the Outward indicates the One Who is above all things, predominating over them, and the Inward indicates the One Who is within everything, such that He knows their inner dimensions (Z). From a Sufi perspective, that God is the Outward points to the manner in which everything that exists can be understood as a "Self-Disclosure" of God.

One of the more famous supplications that the Prophet taught his followers invokes all four of these Divine Names: "O God, Lord of the seven heavens and Lord of the Magnificent Throne! Our Lord, and Lord of everything, Revealer of the Torah, the Gospel, and the Criterion [i.e., the Quran], Splitter of the grain of corn and the date stone! I seek refuge with Thee from the evil of everything over whose forehead Thou hast control. O God! Thou art the First, for nothing is before Thee; the Last, for nothing is after Thee; the Outward, for nothing is above Thee; and the Inward, for nothing is below Thee. Remove the burden of debt from us and free us from poverty" (IK).

4 For the meaning of creation in six days followed by a reference to God's mounting the

Then He mounted the Throne. He knows that which enters the earth and that which issues therefrom, that which descends from Heaven and that which ascends thereto. He is with you wheresoever you are, and God sees whatsoever you do. (5) Unto Him belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth, and unto God are all matters returned. (6) He makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and He knows what lies within breasts. (7) Believe in God and His Messenger and spend from that over which He has appointed you as trustees. For those of you who believe and spend, theirs shall be a great reward. (8) How is it that you believe not in God when the Messenger calls you to believe in your Lord—and He has indeed made a cov-

Throne, see 7:54c; 10:3; 11:7; 25:59; 32:4. The second part of this verse, beginning with He knows, is repeated in 34:2. That which enters the earth refers to both rain and buried corpses, while that which issues therefrom refers to vegetation and minerals (JJ). The manner in which God is with human beings is debated; some say it refers to God's Knowledge (JJ) or His Knowledge and Power (Q), while others maintain that it is through His very Essence (Aj) or Being (wujūd; R). That God is with you wheresoever you are at all times follows from His being the First, and the Last, and the Outward, and the Inward. Nonetheless, such "with-ness" can only be affirmed for God in relation to human beings, but not for human beings in relation to God, since you are needful of God; and He is the Self-Sufficient, the Praised (35:15).

5 For unto God are all matters returned, see 2:210; 3:109; 8:44; 11:123; 22:76; 35:4c; 42:52–53c.

6 The passing of the night into the day and the day into the night (cf. 22:61; 31:29; 35:13) can refer to either the daily exchange of light and darkness (Aj) or seasonal variations in the length of days and nights (JJ). The references to God's Knowledge in vv. 3–6 can be seen as an extension of God being the Outward and the Inward. That God knows all things is made clear in v. 3; v. 4 then relates this to the Outward, saying, God sees whatsoever you do (cf. 2:233, 237; 3:156; 33:9; 48:24; 49:18; 60:3; 64:2); and the present verse relates it to the Inward, saying, He knows what lies within breasts (cf. 3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 64:4; 67:13), emphasizing that God is aware of the intentions behind all deeds and all inner thoughts. In this way the sūrah prepares for the discussion of the hypocrites in vv. 13–15, who are often unable to discern between inner intentions and outward actions or who would prefer that there were no way to discern between inner intentions and outward actions.

7 That God has appointed people as trustees over some things indicates that nothing is actually their property, but the property of God, which He has entrusted to them (R, Z). So spending from it should be just as easy as spending from another person's wealth (Aj, Z). Or the verse can indicate that the property people have inherited from others will then be passed on to the generation after them, so they should not be stingy with it (R, Z). Trustees (mustakhlafīn) derives from the same root as vicegerent (khalīfah). In this way, the command to spend of what God has entrusted is connected to the very purpose for which human beings were created (see 2:30; 6:165; 35:39).

8 He has indeed made a covenant with you could also be read, "Your covenant has indeed been made" (Aj, Bg). Both readings refer to the pretemporal covenant made by God with all of humanity before creation when they were still in Adam's loins (see 7:172c; JJ, N). In this context, the expression How is it that you believe not . . . if you are believers? reflects the broad Quranic argument that everyone has an innate ability to recognize the truth, if they would only follow what enant with you—if you are believers? (9) He it is Who sends down clear signs upon His servant to bring you out of darkness into light, and truly God is Kind and Merciful unto you. (10) And how is it that you do not spend in the way of God when unto God belongs the inheritance of the heavens and the earth? Not equal among you are those who spent and fought before the victory. They are greater in rank than those who spend and fight afterwards; yet God has promised unto each that which is most beautiful, and God is Aware of whatsoever you do. (11) Who is it that will lend unto God a goodly loan, that He might is available to them through the intellect and through revelation (N, R).

9 Clear signs refers to the Quran or to the Quran and other miracles given to the Prophet. In other verses, clear signs refers to the miracles that Moses performed (17:101; 28:36). For bring you out of darkness into light, see also 14:1, 5; 33:43. Regarding the many implications of this phrase, Ibn ʿAjībah writes, "out of the darkness of sin into the light of repentance and righteousness; out of the darkness of heedlessness into the light of wakefulness; out of the darkness of desire and selfishness into the light of renunciation and purity; out of the darkness of the sensual into the light of the spiritual; out of the darkness of ignorance into the light of knowledge through God." For the symbolism of light in the Quran, see 24:35c.

10 The Inheritor is one of the Divine Names, as in 15:23: Surely it is We Who give life and cause death, and We are the Inheritor (cf. 28:58), implying that all things return to God. As all things return to God, nothing should prevent one from spending what belongs to God in the first place (see 57:7c). Unto God are all matters returned (v. 5); so if one willingly spends in the way of God, one derives benefit from it, and if one does not, the property still returns to God, but one derives no benefit.

The victory refers to the conquest of Makkah in 8/630, after which Islam quickly spread throughout the rest of Arabia and it became politically advantageous to donate to its cause. Whereas before the victory, or "opening," anyone who spent, fought, or emigrated for its cause was clearly doing so in the way of God (e.g., 2:195, 218, 244, 261). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said with regard to those who spent and fought before the conquest, "If one of you were to spend the equivalent of Mt. Uḥud [a mountain on the outskirts of Madinah] in gold, it would not reach the extent of what one of them did, not even half of it" (Aj, IK). Some propose that this verse refers specifically to Abū Bakr's willingness to spend all of his wealth in the cause of Islam (R). According to a ḥadīth narrated by Ibn ʿUmar, "One time when the Prophet was sitting with Abū Bakr, Gabriel came and inquired about Abū Bakr's impoverished condition, to which the Prophet responded, 'O Gabriel, he has spent all his wealth before the victory [over Makkah]!' Gabriel said, 'In that case, convey to him God's greetings of peace and tell him that his Lord asks him, "Are you pleased with Me in your state of poverty or are you averse?"' The Prophet addressed Abū Bakr, 'O Abū Bakr, Gabriel is here to convey the greetings of peace from God, and He is asking you whether are you pleased with Him in your state of poverty or are you averse?' Upon hearing this, Abū Bakr wept and said, 'How can I be averse unto my Lord? I am pleased with my Lord! I am pleased with my Lord!' " (Q, W).

This verse introduces a clear gradation among the believers, as does 4:95: God favors those who strive with their goods and their lives a degree above those who stay behind. Unto both God has promised that which is most beautiful. But He favors those who strive with a great reward above those who stay behind. Regarding this distinction, a ḥadīth states, "One who is strong in belief is better and more beloved to God than one who is weak in belief, but in each there is good" (IK).

11 The idea of lending unto God a goodly loan (cf. 2:245; 5:12; 57:18; 64:17; 73:20) may refer to anything given in charity. Some, however, multiply it for him, and his shall be a generous reward? (12) On the Day when you see the believing men and the believing women with their light spreading before them and on their right, "Glad tidings unto you this Day: Gardens with rivers running below, therein to abide. That is the great triumph." (13) On the Day stipulate that for charity to be goodly it must meet certain conditions. The most complete list is provided by al-Rāzī: (1) what is given must be from wealth earned in a permissible (ḥalāl) manner; (2) what is given must be from the best of what one owns rather than the dregs (see 2:267); (3) one should give charity despite one's love for the thing given (see 2:177; 76:8); (4) the charity should be distributed to those who are most needy and most worthy of receiving it; (5) the charity should be concealed to the extent possible (see 2:271); (6) charitable deeds must not be followed by preening or harm (see 2:264); (7) in giving one should seek to please God rather than to be seen of men (see 4:38); (8) what one has given should be regarded as little, no matter how large, as one can only give of the things of this world, which are themselves little; (9) one should give out of what is most valued and loved, for you will never attain piety till you spend from that which you love (3:92); (10) one must not think highly of oneself and poorly of the recipient of the charity. Regarding the multiplication of good deeds, see 57:18c.

12 This verse may be read as a continuation of the previous verse ("his shall be a generous reward on the Day when . . .") or as the beginning of a new sentence with an implied "Remember" at the beginning (Aj, Bḍ). Their light can refer to the light of faith that is hidden in the breast while in this world, but becomes outwardly manifest in the next (Aj); the light of good deeds (Aj, IK); or the light that shines from the countenance of the believers. Al-Rāzī, however, notes, "The real light is God, and the light of knowledge, which is the light of insight, is the most worthy of being [called] light." Despite these varying perspectives, their light is seen by most as the light by which God guides the believers over the traverse (ṣirāṭ that leads from the plain of Judgment (see 18:47; 79:14) to Paradise (Aj, IK, R); see 57:28c and the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran." The light spreads before them and on their right (cf. 66:8), because that is the direction from which they receive the scrolls of their deeds (IK, Q, R, Sh). For the great triumph as the attainment of the Garden of Paradise, see also 4:13; 5:119; 9:89, 100; 61:12; 64:9; 85:11.

13 Wait for us (unẓurūnā) could also be rendered "Look upon us"; if the believers were to look upon the hypocrites, the hypocrites could borrow from their light, as the light of the believers shines in front of them (Aj, R, Ṭ, Z). An alternate reading is anẓirūnā, meaning, "Give us a chance" (JJ). The believers tell the hypocrites to turn back and seek a light, that is, to return to the place where the believers themselves received the light from God (Aj, Z) or to return to the world below to perform good deeds through which these lights are earned (R, Z). After they turn back trying to attain this light, which is no longer available to them, a wall is set down between them. According to Mujāhid, one of the earliest Quran commentators, the gate in the wall is the same as the veil mentioned in 7:46: And there will be a veil between them (JJ, R, Ṭ). The inner side refers to the side of the wall on which the believers stand, which contains mercy, and the outer side refers to the side on which the hypocrites find themselves, which faces the Fire (JJ). The hypocrites thus stand between the wall and the punishment (Aj). That the hypocrites can see through the gate, seeing the light that is not theirs, only increases their sorrow (Aj). Alternately, the inner and outer refer to the two sides of the gate within the wall (Ṭ, Z). The existence of a gate in the wall can be seen as an allusion to the continuing possibility of Divine intercession for those who have been denied Paradise. According to a long ḥadīth qudsī, God tells the angels to bring from the Fire those upon whom God wishes to show mercy, those who did not ascribe any partners to Him. They are removed from the Fire, scraped and torn, and then brought back to life by the water of life. When there is only one who remains looking toward the Fire, God turns him away from the Fire upon his request. Then after he gazes upon the Garden for as long as God when the hypocrites, men and women, will say to those who believe, "Wait for us that we may borrow from your light," it will be said, "Turn back and seek a light!" Thereupon a wall with a gate will be set down between them, the inner side of which contains mercy, and on the outer side of which lies punishment. (14) They will call unto them, "Were we not with you?" They reply, "Indeed! But you tempted yourselves, bided your time, and doubted; and false hopes deluded you till the Command of God came, and the Deluder deluded you concerning God. (15) So this day no ransom shall be taken from you, or from those who disbelieved." Your refuge shall be the Fire; it shall be your master. What an evil journey's end! (16) Has not the time come for those who believe for their hearts to be humbled to the remembrance of God and the truth that has come down, and to be not like those who were given the Book aforetime? But the span of time was too long for them, such that their hearts hardened and many of them wills, God brings him to the door of the Garden, and after he requests, "My Lord bring me into the Garden!" the door of the Garden is opened unto him and God admits him to the Garden, granting every wish until all his wishes and desires are exhausted.

14 When their fate becomes apparent, the hypocrites call to the believers, Were we not with you? They tempted themselves, thus bringing trials and tribulations into their own lives, and bided either to overcome the believers themselves or for disaster to afflict the believers, as in 4:141, which describes the hypocrites and disbelievers as those who wait upon you, and if a victory comes to you from God, they say, "Were we not with you?" But if the disbelievers have some success, they say, "Did we not overwhelm you, and did we not protect you from the believers?" Here waited can also imply that they wavered in their faith, never truly affirming it (Ṭ). Till the Command of God came refers to the moment of death or to the Day of Judgment, indicating that they wavered in religion until the opportunity to repent had passed. The Deluder (gharūr) is a reference to Satan, but can also indicate anything that deludes a person. It could also be rendered "delusion" (ghurūr instead of gharūr), in which case it indicates the self-deluding expectations of one who knowingly commits a sin, thinking that God will forgive it (Bg, Ṭ, Z; see 31:33c). Reading this verse in conjunction with v. 16, "delusion" can be read as an allusion to more subtle degrees of hypocrisy that afflict those who become self-satisfied with their religious attainments and cease to strive upon the spiritual path.

15 No ransom shall be taken from you means that on the Day of Judgment the hypocrites have no way of redeeming themselves, as they did in this world through repentance and performing good deeds (regarding ransom, see 2:48c). That the Fire shall be their master (mawlā) implies both that it has complete control over them and that it is what is nearest to them (awlā bihim; Aj), that is, to their true nature.

16 To be humbled translates takhshaʿ, which is related to the word khushūʿ, "humility," one of the most important virtues in Islam, some say the root of all true virtue. The Prophet is reported to have often prayed, "I seek refuge in God from a heart that is not humbled (lā yakhshaʿ)." According to a ḥadīth, "The first thing to be removed from this community will be humility, until you will not see a single humble person" (Sy). Some maintain that this verse refers to the hypocrites, who displayed faith outwardly, while failing to manifest it in their hearts. But most agree that it is are iniquitous. (17) Know that God revives the earth after its death. We have indeed made the signs clear for you, that haply you may understand. (18) Truly men who give in charity and women who give in charity and lend unto God a goodly loan, it will be multiplied for them, and theirs shall be a generous reward. (19) And those who believe in God and His messengers—it is they who are truthful and are witnesses before their Lord. They have their reward and their light. And those who disbelieve and deny Our signs, they are the addressed to Muslims, as "the believer is not truly a believer without humility of heart" (R). According to Ibn Masʿūd, "There were but four years between the time we entered Islam and the time this verse came to reproach us" (Aj, Āl, IK, Z). Others view this verse as a later revelation, based upon a saying attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās, "The believers' hearts had grown tepid; so they were reproached at the beginning of the thirteenth year of the revelation" (Aj, IK). In this context, the remembrance of God may indicate either the mention of God's Name, as in 8:2, Only they are believers whose hearts quake with fear when God is mentioned, or the Quran, among whose names is the "Remembrance of God" (Dhikr Allāh). If taken as a reference to God, the truth that has come down refers to the Quran (R), while in this particular context the Book refers to scripture in general.

From a Quranic perspective, hearts harden when they become distant from revelation. That the span of time was too long for them thus indicates that hardness overcame the hearts of many Jews and Christians who were living much later in time than their prophets (Aj, R). This verse thus evokes a Biblical theme, as expressed in a prayer of the Prophet Isaiah: "Why, O Lord, do you make us stray from your ways and harden our heart, so that we do not fear you? Turn back for the sake of your servants, for the sake of the tribes that are your heritage" (Isaiah 63:17; cf. Isaiah 6:9–10; Psalm 95:8; 1 Samuel 6:6; Mark 8:17; John 12:40; Romans 9:18; Hebrews 3:8; 4:7). Regarding the hardness of hearts among previous religious communities, see 2:74c; 5:13c; 6:42–44c. In other verses, hearts are referred to as blind (22:46), diseased (2:10; 5:52; 33:12, 32, 60; 47:20, 29; 74:31), locked (47:24), sealed (2:7; 9:87; 47:16), and rusted (83:14). In contrast, the healthy heart softens unto the remembrance of God (39:23), is at peace in the remembrance of God (13:28), and is infused with Tranquility (sakīnah; 48:4).

17 God revives the earth after its death by bringing forth vegetation. So too does He revive hearts by restoring them to humility (IK, JJ, R, Z). The relation of this verse to the previous one is found in the following ḥadīth, "The difference between one who remembers God and one who does not is like the difference between the living and the dead."

18 Who give in charity (muṣṣaddiqūn) can also be read, "who confirm [the truth]" (muṣaddiqūn), which would link it more closely to the mention of the truthful (al-ṣiddīqūn) in v. 19. For a goodly loan, see 57:11c. The manner in which God multiplies charitable offerings is best reflected in 2:261: The parable of those who spend their wealth in the way of God is that of a grain that grows seven ears, in every ear a hundred grains. And God multiplies for whomsoever He will (see also 2:245; 4:40; 6:160; 64:17). Those who lend unto God a goodly loan can also refer to those who strive in the way of God until they have removed the love of all that is other than God from their hearts and have thus given their very selves to Him. He will then multiply the Divine lights and the knowledge of Divine mysteries for them (Aj).

19 It is reported that Mujāhid said, "Every believer is truthful and a witness," and then recited this verse (R, Ṭ). This verse is thus read by some as a reference to all believers, though many maintain that it designates a select group of believers who exceed others in faith (Aj). Truthful (ṣiddīq) is an emphatic form that indicates both those who fervently affirm the truth and those who are ut-inhabitants of Hellfire. (20) Know that the life of this world is but play, diversion, ornament, mutual boasting among you, and vying for increase in property and children—the likeness of a rain whose vegetation impresses the farmers; then it withers such that you see it turn yellow; then it becomes chaff. And in the Hereafter there shall be severe punishment, forgiveness from God, and contentment, and the life of this world is naught but the enjoyment of delusion. (21) Race unto forgiveness from your Lord and to a garden whose breadth is as the breadth of Heaven and earth, prepared for those who believe in God and His messengers. That is the Bounty of God, which He gives to whomsoever He will, and God is Possessed of Tremendous Bounty. (22) No misfortune befalls terly honest and sincere. It is thus interpreted to mean those who have the same virtues inwardly and outwardly (Aj). This verse could also be read as making a distinction between the truthful and the witnesses: "Those who believe in God and His messengers, they are the truthful. And those who are witnesses before their Lord shall have their reward and their light" (R, Ṭ). Witnesses translates shuhadāʾ, which is interpreted by some to mean martyrs (IK, Ṭ), as it relates to those who "witness" by dying in the service of their faith, just as "striving" (jihād) is a spiritual virtue that can include fighting in the cause of God; see 4:69–70c.

20 The relativity of the wealth of this world is a recurring Quranic theme. Such wealth is seen as a cause of gratitude and should be managed properly, as in 28:77: And forget not your portion in this world; see 34:35–37c. Crops that dry or fail are also used as a metaphor for the relativity of the joys of this world in 2:266; 18:32–42; 39:21; 68:17–33. In this passage, farmers translates kuffār, which can also mean "disbelievers" and could be rendered as such in this passage. For the life of this world is naught but the enjoyment of delusion, see also 3:185; 6:32. The discussion of the deceptive nature of this world continues this sūrah's focus upon the relationship between the inward and the outward, about which Ibn ʿAjībah writes: "[The world] is something that appears beautiful on the outside, but that conceals what is ugly within it, like one who tricks people and then cheats them. The world appears to those who pursue it as sweetness and infatuation, overtaking them little by little, until they become totally entangled in it and neglect all preparation for the Hereafter. Life passes from their hand in vanity, and the world continues to delude and betray them until it brings them bankrupt to the moment of their death."

21 Race unto is an encouragement to aspire toward God, Heaven, and all that is good. Elsewhere the believers are told to vie in good deeds (2:148; 5:48) and to vie in patience (3:200). For the breadth of Heaven and earth, see 3:133, which is almost identical to this verse.

22 From an Islamic perspective, misfortunes and afflictions can be a means of spiritual purification if they are endured with patience. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "No illness or fatigue, no sickness or sadness, not even a worry afflicts a believer without expiating some of the wrongs he has committed." That all things have been recorded in a Book (cf. 20:52; 22:70; 78:29) before time indicates that all events of this earth have been recorded on the Preserved Tablet (85:22) before entering this realm (R), a point made emphatically in 35:11: God created you from dust, then from a drop, then He made you pairs, and no female bears or brings forth save with His Knowledge. And none who grows old grows old, nor has aught lessened of his life, but that it is in a Book. Truly that is easy for God. For an extended discussion of the issues of predestination and free will onto which this discussion opens, see 4:79c; 54:49c; see also 76:29–30.

the earth nor yourselves, save that it is in a Book before We bring it forth—truly that is easy for God— (23) that you not despair over what has passed you by, nor exult in that which He has given unto you. And God loves not any vainglorious boaster, (24) those who are miserly and enjoin people to miserliness. Yet whosoever turns away, truly God, He is the Self-Sufficient, the Praised. (25) We have indeed sent Our messengers with clear proofs, and We sent down the Book and the Balance with them, that the people would uphold justice. And We sent down iron, wherein are great might and benefits for mankind, and so that God may know those who will help Him and His messengers unseen. Truly God is Strong, Mighty. (26) And indeed We sent Noah and Abraham and established prophethood and the Book among their progeny. And among them is he who 23 Patience and gratitude are considered the proper responses for all that God bestows (see 2:156–57), as a ḥadīth states, "How remarkable is the situation of the believer: everything is good for him; yet this cannot be said except of the believer. If comfort and ease come to him, he is grateful and that is good for him; and if hardship befalls him, he is patient, and that is good for him." Given that the life of this world is naught but the enjoyment of delusion (v. 20), one should not despair over what has passed nor exult in worldly achievements or possessions; for in the final analysis all things perish, save His Face (28:88). Elsewhere the Quran indicates that one must also avoid being overly exuberant, lest it turn into wanton exultation or lest one attribute blessings from God to other sources or to one's own merit and forget to remember God (see, e.g., 17:67; 30:33; 39:50).

24 The first phrase of this verse is repeated in 4:37. To be miserly and encourage others to be the same is connected to being a vainglorious boaster, as it is only by attributing to one's own merit what God has given that one is able to ignore God's Command to spend from that over which He has appointed you as trustees (v. 7), that is, property that is ultimately His. Some commentators see this verse as a critique of the Madinan hypocrites, who only gave charity for self-serving purposes (see 2:264; 4:142; 8:47; 107:4–7). Others see it as a general critique of "miserliness" in both wealth and knowledge (Aj). Turns away indicates turning from God or from the duty to give charity (JJ).

25 For clear proofs, see the introduction to Sūrah 98. In this context, the Book refers to all scriptures (Q). The Balance has many meanings, including the religious Law (Sharīʿah), which provides the standard by which to weigh what is good and beneficial against what is evil and harmful; see 42:17c. From another perspective, the Balance indicates all of those things by which human beings uphold the justice enjoined in the scriptures, and iron containing great might is the means of fashioning weapons with which to defend the truth and to oppose those who revolt against justice (Aj, N). The benefits in iron are then taken as a reference to tools such as the scythe and the pickax, which facilitate other activities. Sent down may be taken literally to mean that iron was sent down directly by God or simply that God created iron, in the same way that 39:6 states that God sent down for you of cattle eight pairs (Q), meaning that He created them. Those who help God are those who help His religion (Q, T, Z). That they do so unseen refers to those who work for religion even though they have not seen one of God's messengers (Q, Z), or to those who do not perform good deeds for them to be seen by others.

26 The Book refers in a collective manner to each of the scriptures that the progeny of Abraham was given: the Torah, the Psalms, the Gos-is rightly guided; yet many of them are iniquitous. (27) Then We sent Our messengers to follow in their footsteps, and We sent Jesus son of Mary, and We gave him the Gospel and placed kindness and mercy in the hearts of those who follow him. And monasticism they invented—We did not ordain it for them—only to seek God's Contentment. Yet they did not observe it with proper observance. So We gave those of them who believed their reward, yet many of them are iniquitous. (28) O you who believe! Reverence God and believe in His Messenger; He will give you a twofold portion of His Mercy, make a light for you by which you may walk, and forgive you—and God is Forgiving, Merciful—pel, and the Quran (JJ). The Quran here suggests that, although many of those who followed these revelations are iniquitous, it is not a condemnation of their respective religions or revealed books, but of human nature. That such iniquity can afflict Muslims as well is reflected in a ḥadīth in which the Prophet says of the Muslim community in later times, "The upright will depart one after another until nothing remains but impoverished people, the like of leftover barley and dates."

27 We placed kindness and mercy in the hearts of those who follow him indicates that God disposed the followers of Jesus to love one another. This verse could also be read, "and [We] placed kindness, mercy, and monasticism in the hearts of those who follow him," meaning that God gave monasticism to them initially, but then they altered it and made their own innovations in the practices that God had given them (Q). In this sense it is similar to the accusation that some People of the Book distort the meaning of the word (4:46; 5:13, 41). Most interpret only to seek God's Contentment to mean that they wanted to please God by inventing monasticism or to mean that God did not ordain them to practice that; rather, God ordained them only to seek what pleases God (IK). According to the latter interpretation, the translation would be, "and We gave him the Gospel and placed kindness, mercy, and monasticism in the hearts of those who follow him; yet they made inventions therein. We did not ordain it for them except for [the purpose of] seeking God's Contentment." According to the interpretation represented in the translation, Yet they did not observe it with proper observance indicates that they were not able to maintain the practices they had imposed upon themselves (IK), namely, monasticism. In contrast, the alternate translation implies that they were not able to maintain the practices enjoined by God. The view that some form of monasticism may have been enjoined upon Christians by God is supported by a ḥadīth: "Every Prophet has a form of monasticism; striving (jihād) in the way of God is the monasticism of this community" (IK). Regarding the ascetic practices associated with the Christian form of monasticism, the Prophet is reported to have said, "Giving up the world does not mean making lawful things unlawful or wasting possessions. Rather, giving up the world means that you do not rely more upon what is in your hand than upon what is in the Hands of God."

28 In this context, O you who believe is understood by many commentators as an address to Jews and Christians, calling them to believe in the prophethood of Muhammad (IK, Q, R, Z). A twofold portion of His Mercy is thus apportioned to them for following their religion and then believing in and following the Prophet (IK, Q, R, Z). This interpretation is supported by a well-known ḥadīth in which the Prophet stated that among those who will receive their reward twice is "a believer from the People of the Book who has been a true believer in his prophet and then believes in me" (Aj, IK). Others understand this verse as an address to Muslims (Aj, Q), calling upon them to deepen their faith, as in v. 16.

The light for you alludes to guidance or to the Quran (Q), although some say it is the same light mentioned in v. 12 (Z). By which you may walk is understood to be the light by which God guides the believers over the traverse (ṣirāṭ) that leads from the plain of Judgment (see 18:47; 79:14) to Paradise (Q). According to many accounts in the Ḥadīth literature, on the Day of Judgment all believers are called to cross a traverse (ṣirāṭ) over Hell that is as fine as a hair and as sharp as a sword and has large thorns that afflict those who must walk or crawl upon it in accordance with their sins. God provides the believers a light whereby they are able to cross, but does not provide any light for the disbelievers, since he for whom God has not appointed any light has no light (24:40); see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran." From a spiritual perspective, light for you refers to the lights of the spirit and the Self-Disclosure of God's Attributes in the heart of the believer (K) and thus to the light of spiritual guidance from God.

(29) such that the People of the Book may know that they have no power over any of God's Bounty, and that the Bounty is in God's Hand; He gives it unto whomsoever He will; and God is Possessed of Tremendous Bounty.

29 According to some, this verse indicates the People of the Book who do not believe in the Prophet Muhammad (Z), as distinguished from those who follow the command to do so in the previous verse. Many see this verse as a response to those who argued that, since Muslims have come later than previous religious communities, their reward with God would be less. Regarding this interpretation, the Prophet is reported to have said to his Companions, "The parable of you and the Jews and Christians is that of a man who employed some laborers and asked them, 'Who will work for me from the dawn prayer until midday for one qīrāṭ [a special weight of gold] each?' And the Jews worked. Then he asked, 'Who will work for me from the early afternoon prayer until the time of the late afternoon prayer for one qīrāṭ each?' And the Christians worked. Then he said, 'Who will work for me from the later afternoon prayer until sunset for two qīrāṭ each?' You are those who did this work. The Jews and the Christians got angry and said, 'We did more work, but got less wages.' God responded, 'Have I been unjust to you with your reward?' They said, 'No.' So God said, 'Then it is My Bounty, which I give unto whomsoever I will.' " (IK). The verse can also be taken to mean that no one has any control over whom God appoints as a prophet, prophethood and revelation being His greatest bounties. The Jews of Arabia are said to have rejected the prophethood of Muhammad on the grounds that he was not of their lineage and thus could not be a prophet (see 2:90c), while many Arabs opposed him on the grounds that he was not already a leader among them when he was chosen as a prophet (see 43:31c).

She Who Disputes

al-Mujādilah

Al-Mujādilah is a Madinan sūrah, although some commentators maintain that only the first ten verses are from the Madinan period and the remainder is from the Makkan period; others maintain that the entire sūrah is Madinan except for v. 9 (Āl, Q). It takes its name from the story of a woman named Khawlah bint Thaʿlabah, whose husband, Aws ibn al-Ṣāmit, divorced her according to the pre-Islamic custom of ẓihār, in which a man could renounce his wife by saying, "You are to me as my mother's back." Because it addresses this issue, the sūrah is also known as al-Ẓihār. By custom, the invocation of ẓihār meant that the husband was now free of all duties toward the wife, but that his wife was not free to leave her husband and contract another marriage. Khawlah complained of this injustice to the Prophet and to God. Her plea was heard, and God provided a means whereby she and her husband could reconcile.

Al-Mujādilah is the first in a series of ten Madinan *sūrah*s addressing many of the legal issues that confronted the newly independent Muslim community in Madinah. Insofar as they demonstrate God's immediate involvement in the affairs of the Muslim community, this series of *sūrah*s follows upon the statement in 57:4: He knows that which enters the earth and that which issues therefrom, that which descends from Heaven and that which ascends thereto. And He is with you wheresoever you are, and God sees whatsoever you do. God's Omnipresence is especially indicated in this sūrah, as the first four verses provide an example of God's responding directly and instantly to the plea of a Muslim woman.

After the opening verses (vv. 1–4), which address the issue of ẓihār, vv. 5–6 introduce the discussion of those who oppose God and His Messenger, the theme of the remainder of the sūrah. Vv. 7–10 discuss the secret converse of those who oppose and deride the Prophet and the proper manner in which to hold private discourse, followed by vv. 11–13, which initially enjoin Muslims to offer alms before conversing with the Prophet and then lighten this injunction. The longest section, vv. 14–21, addresses the nature of the hypocrites and their opposition to the Prophet, and the sūrah concludes with a long verse regarding the rewards that God gives to those who believe in God and the Last Day.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) God has indeed heard the words of she who disputes with thee concerning her husband and complains to God. And God hears your conversation. Truly God is Hearing, Seeing. (2) Those among you who commit ẓihār against their wives, those are not their mothers. None are their mothers save those who gave birth to them. Truly they speak indecent words and calumny. And truly God is Pardoning, Forgiving. (3) As for those who commit ẓihār against their wives and then go back on what they have said, let them free a slave before they touch one another; to that are you counseled. And God is Aware of whatsoever you do. (4) And whosoever finds not [the means], let him fast two consecutive months before they touch one another. And whosoever is unable, let him feed sixty indigent people. That is so that you may believe in God and His Messenger. These are the limits set by God, and the disbelievers shall have a

1–2 The majority of commentators agree that she who disputes refers to Khawlah bint Thaʿlabah, though some propose other names, which are, however, based upon different lineages of the same individual (Q). It is reported that after her husband said to her, "You are to me as my mother's back," Khawlah complained to the Prophet, saying, "He has worn out my youth and I let him enjoy me, but when I grew older and could no longer bear children, he put me away, saying that I am as his mother's back. O God! I complain to Thee," and that she did not move from her position until the Angel Gabriel came down with vv. 1–4 (IK, Q, Ṭ, W). In other accounts of this story, the Prophet is reported to have said, "You are [now] forbidden to him," implying that there was no way they could reconcile. But she objected that he had not invoked divorce as such, making a distinction between divorce and ẓihār, and complained again of her situation. The Prophet, likely seeing ẓihār as tantamount to divorce, again said, "You are [now] forbidden to him." And they went back and forth in this manner until Gabriel came down with vv. 1–4 (IK, Q, T). That God is Hearing, Seeing (see also 4:58, 134; 22:61, 75; 31:28) would seem to indicate here that God hears and knows the pleas of all people, as in the case of Khawlah. More generally, it reinforces the notion of God's Omniscience; see 4:58c.

3–4 After vv. 1–4 had been revealed, the Prophet said to Khawlah bint Thaʿlabah, "He should set free a slave." She replied, "He cannot afford it." He said, "He should fast for two consecutive months." She replied, "Messenger of God, he is an old man; he cannot keep fasts." The Prophet then said, "He should feed sixty poor people." She replied, "He has nothing to give in alms." At that moment an ʿarq (a date basket holding thirty measures of dates) was brought to the Prophet. Khawlah said, "I shall help him with another ʿarq." The Prophet replied, "You have done well. Go and feed sixty poor people on his behalf, and return to your cousin [meaning her husband]" (Q, W). In other narrations, a similar conversation is said to have occurred between the Prophet and Khawlah's husband, Aws ibn al-Ṣāmit; the final resolution was that the Prophet gave him half of the dates necessary to feed sixty people and attain expiation, and Aws furnished the other half (Q, Ṭ, W).

Freeing a slave also serves as expiation for other offenses, such as slaying a person inadvertently (4:92) or breaking a pledge (5:89), and painful punishment. (5) Truly those who oppose God and His Messenger shall be abased, just as those before them were abased. We have indeed sent down clear signs, and the disbelievers shall have a humiliating punishment (6) on the Day when God resurrects them all together, then informs them of that which they did. God has kept account of it while they have forgotten it; and God is Witness over all things. (7) Hast thou not considered that God knows whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth? There is no secret con-is considered a praiseworthy form of charity (90:13). A slave freed in expiation must be in good health, without physical deficiency (Q, Ṭ). If one does not own a slave, one may pay for the slave of another to be freed (Q). Before they touch one another means before they engage in sexual intercourse (JJ). For those who do not have the means, a fast of two consecutive months serves as expiation in place of freeing a slave, as it does in the case of killing another believer accidentally (see 4:92). For those whose health prevents them from fasting, feeding the indigent can then serve as expiation. Feeding the indigent is also a "ransom" from fasting the month of Ramadan for those who are unable, but fasting is considered preferable (see 2:184). There is some debate as to how much food one must give the indigent to satisfy this requirement. Most maintain that it is one mudd (JJ), which would be enough food to feed one person two full meals in one day. According to most schools of law, one must feed sixty people. But according to the Ḥanafī school of law, one can also feed a single indigent for sixty days or more, until one has given the equivalent to what one would have given for sixty people (Q). Regarding the requirements for feeding the indigent, see 5:89c.

That is so that you may believe in God and His Messenger (cf. 48:9) indicates that God has revealed these rulings in order to clarify and teach His Decree, so that, knowing the Divine Decree, those who follow God and His Messenger can now act upon the rulings and cease to follow those of the pre-Islamic Age of Ignorance (R).

5 Those who oppose God and His Messenger, which occurs three times in this sūrah (vv. 5, 20, 22), can be understood as emphasizing the legislative dimension of the sūrah and the nine *sūrah*s that follow. In this context the phrase thus indicates those who choose to follow rulings that differ from those that God has established (Bḍ); see commentary on 33:36: Whosoever disobeys God and His Messenger has strayed into manifest error.

6 The beginning of this verse is either a clause modifying humiliating punishment or the object of an implied verb, "mention" or "remember" (udhkur), which would mean, "Remember" or "make mention of the Day when God will gather every human being on an open, barren plain for judgment" (see 18:47c; 20:106; 39:69–70c; 79:14c). God keeps account of people's deeds in a book or registry that is then presented to them on the Day of Judgment, whereupon the disbelievers say, "Oh, woe unto us! What a book this is! It leaves out nothing, small or great, save that it has taken account thereof." And they find present [therein] whatsoever they did (18:49; see also 6:59; 17:13–14). For God is Witness over all things, see also 4:33; 5:117; 22:17; 33:55; 34:47; 41:53; 85:9. Elsewhere it is said that God is Witness over what you do (see, e.g., 3:98).

7 Vv. 7–8 address the secret converse (najwā) of those who conspire against the Prophet, insult him, and attempt to divert others from following him, as in 21:2–3: No new Reminder came unto them from their Lord, but that they listened to it while they played, with their hearts diverted. And those who do wrong confide in secret converse, "Is this not but a human being like yourselves? Will you then yield to sorcery, while you see clearly?" Also see 43:80, where the disbelievers and hypocrites are warned that God knows and hears their secret and their secret converse (cf. 9:78). For a discussion of the manner in which God can be said to be "with" human beings, see commentary on 50:16: We are nearer to him than his jugular vein; and 57:4: And He is with you wheresoever you are.

verse among three, but that He is their fourth, nor among five, but that He is their sixth, nor less than that, nor more, but that He is with them wheresoever they are. Then on the Day of Resurrection He will inform them of that which they did. Truly God is Knower of all things. (8) Hast thou not seen those who were forbidden from secretly conversing then returned to that which they had been forbidden, secretly conversing with a view to sin, enmity, and disobeying the Messenger? And when they come to thee and greet thee, they greet thee in a manner that God has not greeted thee and say within themselves, "Why does God not punish us for what we say?" Hell suffices them, burning therein. What an evil journey's end! (9) O you who believe! If you converse in secret, then do not converse in secret with a view to sin, enmity, and disobeying the Messenger; converse in secret with a view to piety and reverence. And reverence God, unto Whom you shall be gathered. (10) Secret converse is only from Satan, so that those who believe may grieve; yet he harms them not a whit, save by God's Leave. And in God let the believers trust. (11) O you who believe! When it is said unto you, "Make room for one another in the assemblies," then make 8 The first half of this verse is reported to have been revealed in connection with the Jewish tribes of Madinah and the hypocrites. The latter would reportedly speak secretly among themselves, then look at the believers and wink at each other. When the believers saw this, they thought the hypocrites had news about their relatives who went out on military expeditions, that they had been killed, wounded, or defeated. But when these secret conversations continued, they complained to the Prophet, and he commanded them not to converse in this manner. They did not heed his command and went back to secret conversations among themselves. God therefore revealed this verse (Q, Sy, Ṭ, W).

The second half of the verse is said to have been revealed in response to some of the Jews of Madinah who, instead of saying, "Peace be upon you (al-salāmu ʿalaykum)" to the Prophet, said mockingly, "Death be upon you (al-sāmmu ʿalaykum)." The Prophet's wife ʿĀ'ishah was present and responded, "Death be upon you. God has cursed you and is wroth with you," to which the Prophet responded, "Go easy, O ʿĀ'ishah! You must be kind." In another account of this same incident, the Prophet is reported to have said, "God does not like indecency, nor the uttering of indecent words" (W). When ʿĀ'ishah objected that she had only responded in kind, the second half of this verse, beginning with And when they come to thee, was revealed (Q, Sy, Ṭ, W). Within themselves could also be rendered "among themselves." Their question, Why does God not punish us? indicates their position that, if Muhammad were a true prophet, God would punish them for greeting him as they did (IK, JJ). Hell suffices them means that, although they may not be punished for abusing the Prophet in this life, in the Hereafter they will receive the appropriate punishment for their deeds (IK).

9–10 Whereas vv. 7–8 discuss the secret converse of the disbelievers and the hypocrites, these verses clarify that, although secret converse is often of an insidious nature, private discourse is not evil in and of itself, as in 4:114: There is no good in most of their secret converse, save for him who enjoins charity or kindness or reconciliation between men. And whosoever does that, seeking God's good plea- sure, We shall grant him a great reward. In this vein, a ḥadīth states, "The speech of the Children of Adam always works against them, not for them, except when it is to command the right and forbid the wrong, or to remember God." That Satan does not harm anyone save by God's Leave indicates that he is ultimately powerless, as in 14:22: And Satan will say, when the matter has been decreed, "Verily God made you the Promise of truth; and I made you a promise, but I failed you. And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves."

11 Regarding the revelation of this verse, the early commentator Muqātil ibn Sulaymān (d. 150/767) is reported to have said, "The Prophet was at al-ṣuffah [a veranda in front of the mosque in Madinah where many who were known for their piety and asceticism would congregate]. The place was not spacious, and it was a Friday. The Messenger of God had the habit of honoring those from among the Emigrants and the Helpers who had taken part in the Battle of Badr. Some of those who had participated in Badr came to the gathering and found that people were already there before them. They stood, therefore, facing the Prophet and waiting for people to make room for them. But no one made room for them. The Messenger of God was pained to see this; so he asked those who did not take part in Badr to get up, and he moved as many people as the number of those who were standing who had participated in the Battle of Badr. Those who were asked to vacate their seats were not pleased, and the Messenger of God saw the displeasure on their faces. Then the hypocrites said to the Muslims, 'Did you not claim that your man deals fairly with people? By God, he has not been fair with these people. He removed people who wanted to be close to their Prophet from places in which they were already sitting and seated in their stead people who came late!' God then revealed this verse" (Q, R, W).

More broadly, this verse indicates that when one follows the example set by God and His Messenger and makes room for God and His Messenger, God makes room or "expands" matters for them, such as their provision and their accommodation, their knowledge and their breast—expansion of the breast implies psychological ease and spiritual understanding. It may also pertain to matters of the Hereafter, meaning that God expands the grave and the Garden for them (Aj), thus making them places of ease and joy. Al-Rāzī argues for the broad applicability of this verse, saying, "For one who opens the doors of goodness and ease (rāḥah) for God's servants, God will expand for him what is good in this life and the Hereafter. Hence no reasonable person could restrict this verse to making room in an assembly. Rather, what is intended by it is extending good to Muslims and making happiness enter their hearts. In this vein, [the Prophet] has said, 'God ceases not to aid the servant so long as the servant aids his Muslim brother.'"

And when it is said, "Rise," then rise means to rise to perform the prayer or other good deeds (JJ). In the words of Qatādah, "Whenever you are called upon to perform a good deed, respond to the call" (Ṭ). Both sentences in the present verse reflect the broader Quranic theme of reciprocity between the Divine and the human, most evident in 2:152: So remember Me, and I shall remember you. From an Islamic perspective, the sincere human effort to seek God is met by God with immeasurable compensation, as in a famous ḥadīth qudsī, "I am as My servant thinks of Me. I am with him when he remembers Me. If he mentions Me within himself, I mention him within Myself. If he mentions Me in an assembly, I mention him in a better assembly. If he comes near to Me by a hand's length, I come near to him by the distance of a cubit. If he comes near to Me the distance of a cubit, I come near to him the distance of two outspread arms. If he comes to Me walking, I come to him running."

Though belief or faith (īmān) in and of itself is considered superior to knowledge in and of itself, the believer who has knowledge is considered superior to the believer who does not have knowledge. There are many aḥādīth to this effect, among them, "The superiority of one who has knowledge over the one who [merely] worships is as the superiority of the full moon over all the planets" (Aj, Q, Z). It is also said to have been revealed to Abraham, "I am Knowing, and I love those who know" (Aj, Āl, Z). Regarding knowledge in degrees, Ibn ʿAjībah writes, "There are different kinds of knowledge. Their nobility corresponds to that which is known [through each kind of knowledge]. The most superior kind of knowledge is knowledge of [God's] Highest Essence (al-dhāt al-ʿulyā) by way of unveiling and eyewitnessing, then knowledge of the Divine Attributes and Names, then knowledge of room, and God will make room for you. And when it is said, "Rise," then rise, and God will raise in degrees those among you who believe and those who have been given knowledge. God is Aware of whatsoever you do. (12) O you who believe! When you converse in secret with the Messenger, offer charity before your secret converse. That is better for you and purer. But if you do not find [the means], truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. (13) Are you apprehensive about offering charity before your secret converse? If you do not do so and God relents unto you, then perform the prayer, give the alms, and obey God and His Messenger. God is Aware of whatsoever you do. (14) Hast thou not seen those who befriend a people with whom God is wroth? They are not of you, nor are you of them. And they knowingly swear upon falsehood. (15) God has prepared for them a severe punishment. Evil indeed is that which they used to do. (16) They took their oaths as a shield and thus turned from the way of God; so theirs shall be a humiliating punishment. (17) Neither their property nor their children will avail them aught against God. They are the inhabitants of the Fire, abiding therein. (18) On the Day when God resurrects them all, they will swear to Him just as they swear to you, supposing that they have some standing. Lo! Truly they are the liars. (19) Satan has overwhelmed them, and so made them forget the remembrance of God. They are the party of Satan. Lo! The party of Satan are losers. (20) Truly those who oppose God and His Messenger, they will be among the abased. (21) God has decreed, "I shall surely prevail, I and My messengers!" Truly God is Strong, Mighty. (22) You shall not find a people who the decrees (aḥkām), then knowledge of the bounties connected to Him."

12–13 These verses were reportedly revealed about some wealthy members of the Muslim community who used to go to gatherings with the Prophet and monopolize the conversation with him, so that the poor had no opportunity, and the Prophet disliked this. God therefore revealed v. 12, commanding that alms be given before each conference with the Prophet. Those in straitened circumstances did not have anything to give for alms, while those who were well off were miserly. The Companions of the Prophet found this difficult, and so a dispensation was revealed in v. 13 (IK, Sy, W). ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said regarding v. 12: "There is one verse in the Book of God that no one has applied before me; nor is there anyone who applied it after me [58:12]. I had a piece of gold that I exchanged for silver pieces, and whenever I conferred with the Messenger, I spent one silver piece in charity until I spent them all. Then the verse was abrogated with another verse [58:13]" (Q, Sy, Ṭ, W). According to a minority, there was only one hour between the revelation of v. 12 and its abrogation or modification by v. 13 (IK).

The Command in v. 13 to obey God and His Messenger (cf. 3:32, 132; 4:59; 5:92; 8:1, 20, 46; 24:54; 47:33; 49:14; 64:12; see also 7:156–57; 59:7) stands in juxtaposition to the condemnation in this same sūrah of those who oppose God and His Messenger (vv. 5, 20, 22). That the Command is combined with the injunctions to perform the prayer and give the alms (as in 33:33) implies that it is through prayer and almsgiving, among other things, that such obedience is achieved.

14–18 These verses address the issue of hypocrisy among the Muslims of Madinah, which is dealt with more fully in Sūrah 63. The present passage is said to have been revealed with regard to a man of whom the Prophet said to a group of Muslims, "A man will come to you and look with the eyes of Satan. When he comes to you, do not speak to him!" A man of blue complexion then entered. The Prophet greeted him and said, "Why do you and your companions insult me?" The man said, "Let me bring them to you." And he and his friends swore by God and made excuses. Then God revealed this verse (Sh, Sy, Ṭ, W). In another account, the man in question is identified as a hypocrite named ʿAbd Allāh ibn Nabtal, who used to keep the company of the Prophet and then report what he heard from him to the Jews of Madinah. When asked why he and his friends insulted the Prophet, he swore by God that he did not, but the Prophet said that he did. ʿAbd Allāh ibn Nabtal went and brought his friends who then swore by God that they did not insult him. Then God revealed vv. 14–18 (Q, W, Z). This verse is also part of the general command to not take enemies of Muslims as protectors, as in 3:28: Let not the believers take the disbelievers as protectors apart from the believers. Whosoever does that has no bond with God (see also 4:139, 144; 5:51, 57; 9:23).

16 That the hypocrites took their oaths as a shield (cf. 63:2) indicates that they have used them deceptively, a practice also abhorred in pre-Islamic Arabia. The Quran thus extols those who keep their oaths (3:77; 38:44) and warns against using them to harm or deceive, as in 16:94: Take not your oaths to practice deception among yourselves, lest a foot slip after it had been firmly planted, and you taste evil for your having turned from the way of God, and yours should be a great punishment (see also 2:224; 5:53, 89; 6:109; 9:13; 16:38, 91–92; 24:53; 35:42). That they turned from the way of God is understood to indicate the manner in which they turn others away or block them from the way of God by disparaging the Muslims and sowing doubt (Sh). But it can also mean that they themselves turned away.

17 This verse is almost identical to 3:10 and 3:116. In the Hereafter, nothing other than belief and good deeds can avail anyone. Thus Abraham is reported to have said that the Day of Resurrection is the Day when neither wealth nor children avail, save for him who comes to God with a sound heart (26:88–89).

18 The hypocrites swear to God that they are Muslims (Z), supposing that they have some standing because they think their outward declarations of faith will benefit them (Z). Such a sentiment also indicates the implacability of their duplicity, as nothing can convince them of their error.

19 Satan rules over the hypocrites, so that their obedience is to him in all that he asks of them, they are among his flock, and they forget to remember God with their tongues and their hearts (Sh, Z). And as a famous ḥadīth states, "The likeness of one who remembers his Lord and one who does not remember is as the likeness of the living and the dead."

20 Those who oppose God and His Messenger refers to those who outwardly oppose and conspire against the Muslim community. Normal relations between Muslims and those non-Muslims who do not oppose them is allowed on an individual and communal level by verses such as 60:8: God does not forbid you, with regard to those who did not fight you on account of religion and did not expel you from your homes, from treating them righteously and being just toward them; and on a societal level by verses such as 8:61: And if they incline toward peace, incline thou toward it.

21 Decreed could also be rendered "inscribed," indicating that this has been written upon the Preserved Tablet (85:22; JJ, Sh, Z). The manner in which God and His messengers prevail is understood to be by means of both proof, which could refer to revelation, and the sword (Sh, Z).

22 This verse is in the second-person singular and can thus be taken as an address to the Muslims in general, as translated, or as an address to the Prophet himself, meaning, "Thou shalt not find" (Sh). The first sentence of this verse was reportedly revealed regarding several instances in which Muslims fought in battle against their own family members for the cause of Islam. Interpreted in believe in God and the Last Day loving those who oppose God and His Messenger, even if they be their fathers, their sons, their brothers, or their tribe. God has inscribed faith upon their hearts and strengthened them with a Spirit from Him. He causes them to enter Gardens with rivers running below, to abide therein, God content with them and they content with Him. They are the party of God. Truly the party of God—it is they who shall prosper.

this manner, their fathers refers to Abū ʿUbaydah ibn al-Jarrāḥ, who killed his father, ʿAbd Allāh, a soldier in the opposing Makkan army, at the Battle of Uḥud (IK, Q, Sy, W); their sons refers to Abū Bakr al-Ṣiddīq, who challenged his son to a duel at the Battle of Badr, saying "O Messenger of God, let me be among the first [to fight or to die]" (IK, W); their brothers refers to Muṣʿab ibn ʿUmayr, who killed his brother, ʿUbayd ibn ʿUmayr, during the Battle of Badr (IK, Q, W); and their tribe refers to ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, who killed his uncle al-ʿĀṣ ibn Hishām at the Battle of Badr (Q, W). Beyond these specific instances to which the verse may refer, it indicates that the bond of faith and belief overrides that of family and provides greater protection (Sh); see 49:10c. It also reflects the broader Quranic theme that one must not love anything of this world at the expense of one's love for God and His Messenger, as when the Prophet is commanded: Say, "If your fathers, your children, your brothers, your spouses, your tribe, the wealth you have acquired, commerce whose stagnation you fear, and dwellings you find pleasing are more beloved to you than God, and His Messenger, and striving in His way, then wait till God comes with His Command." And God guides not iniquitous people (9:24).

That God has inscribed faith upon their hearts indicates that He has established it firmly in believers' hearts and expanded their breasts for it (Z) or that He has consolidated faith in their hearts so that they believe in it fully, rather than believing some parts of it but not others (Q, R). That He has strengthened them with a Spirit from Him is understood in various ways. Some say it indicates the manner in which God aids believers in overcoming their enemies (Sh). Others say that a Spirit from Him refers to the Quran and its proofs; to light and faith; to clear proof and guidance; to the Mercy of God; or to the Archangel Gabriel (Q), all of which are profoundly interrelated. It can also be seen as a reference to the light of certainty (Aj). In this vein, the commentator al-Ālūsī writes, "What is intended [here] by Spirit is the light of the heart, which is the light that God casts into the hearts of whomsoever He will among His servants, and by which hearts attain peace [see 13:28] and ascend to the heights of realization (taḥqīq)." The pronominal suffix from Him (minhu), here interpreted as a reference to God, could also be read "from it," in which case it would refer to the faith that He has inscribed upon their hearts (Aj, Āl, R, Z).

God content with them and they content with Him (cf. 5:119; 9:100; 98:8) indicates that God is content with their obedience to Him and they are content with His Recompense for them in the Hereafter and with what He has ordained for them in the world (Aj, IK). According to al-Rāzī, the items mentioned in this verse can be seen as four blessings from God: faith in the heart, support through a Spirit from Him, being admitted to the Garden, and mutual contentment with God; he also says, "The blessing of contentment is the greatest of blessings and the most distinguished of [spiritual] ranks." Regarding this state of contentment, a ḥadīth states, "Whosoever has submitted is provided for sufficiently, and whomsoever God has caused to be content with that which He has given him has succeeded" (Bg on 98:8). Also see 5:119c.

The party of God is also mentioned in 5:56, where it is used to describe those who avoid taking protectors other than God, the Messenger, and the believers, as enjoined in 5:51 and 5:55. Here it is placed in contrast to the party of Satan (v. 19), which in referring to the hypocrites mentioned in this sūrah indicates those who would compromise the Prophet and the Muslim community for the paltry gains of this world.

The Gathering

al-Ḥashr

Al-Ḥashr, a Madinan sūrah, takes its name from the mention of the first gathering in v. 2. It is also known as al-Naḍīr or Banu 'l-Naḍīr (Āl, IJ, Ṭ), since most of its verses are said to have been revealed in relation to the Jewish tribe of Banu 'l-Naḍīr after they were banished from Madinah for having broken their treaty with the nascent Muslim polity. This is the second in a group of *sūrah*s known as "The Glorifiers" (al-Musabbiḥāt), because they begin with a reference to the glorification of God; the other *sūrah*s in the group are 57, 61, 62, and 64. According to a ḥadīth, "Within [the Glorifiers] there is a verse that is better than a thousand verses" (IK, Q, Sh). Some scholars are of the opinion that this ḥadīth refers to v. 3 of Sūrah 57, al-Ḥadīd (IK, Sh), while others propose that it refers to the last verse of this sūrah (Sh).

After arriving in Madinah, the Prophet established peaceful relations with the Jewish tribes of the surrounding oasis, of which the largest were the Banū Qaynuqāᶜ, the Banu 'l-Naḍīr, and the Banū Qurayẓah. The tribes of the oasis had made a covenant, often known as the Constitution of Madinah, in which they pledged to support one another, should any of them be attacked by outside forces, and to make no alliances against one another. The Muslims believed that the Banū Qaynuqāᶜ had broken these terms after the Battle of Badr; hence the Banū Qaynuqāᶜ were subsequently banished from the oasis.

After the Battle of Uḥud, the Banu 'l-Naḍīr were accused of having entered into an alliance against the Muslims and having plotted to kill the Prophet. When the Prophet heard of their treachery, some say from the Archangel Gabriel, others say through a woman of the Banu 'l-Naḍīr, the Prophet presented them with the choice of leaving the oasis with all their possessions, but retaining the right to the proceeds from their crops, or facing war. They requested a respite of ten days. After conferring with their allies, among whom were some of the hypocrites within Madinah, they chose the latter course, thinking that reinforcements would be forthcoming. The Muslim armies besieged their fortresses for twenty-one days, during which time the fighting was limited to brief exchanges of arrows. The Banu 'l-Naḍīr's hopes dwindled when none of the promised reinforcements arrived. When the Muslim armies cut some of the Banu 'l-Naḍīr's prized date palms that lay just outside their fortresses, it was more than they could bear. They sent word they would agree to the initial terms of exile. The Prophet, however, was no longer willing to offer the same terms. Under the new terms, they would be banished, allowed to keep their considerable wealth, except their armaments, but had to forfeit their land, crops and all. The Banu 'l-Naḍīr had no choice but to accept.

Dealing with the complexities of administering justice when a treacherous group makes up a part of a small community, this sūrah addresses all of the groups that were to be found in the nascent Muslim community: the Emigrants from Makkah; the Helpers who had embraced Islam before the emigration; the Helpers who had embraced Islam after the emigration; the hypocrites, who embraced Islam outwardly but betrayed it inwardly, many of whom conspired against the Prophet; and the Jewish tribes, who initially welcomed the Prophet, but many of whom later developed animosity toward him and his followers. After the first section (vv. 1–5) addresses the situation of the Banu 'l-Naḍīr, vv. 6–10 discuss the proper distribution of spoils from their banishment among the different groups of believers and the relationships among these groups. Their harmonious relations are then contrasted to the disharmony between the hypocrites and the Banu 'l-Naḍīr (vv. 11–19), whose counsel toward one another is likened to that of Satan (v. 16). After declaring the incommensurability of those destined for the Fire and those destined for the Garden (v. 20), the sūrah ends with a famous passage that discusses the nature of the revelation (v. 21) and provides the most comprehensive list of Divine Names in the Quran (vv. 22–24).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorifies God, and He is the Mighty, the Wise. (2) He it is Who expelled those who disbelieve among the People of the Book from their homes at the first gathering. You did not think they would go forth, and they thought their fortresses would protect them from God. Then God came upon them whence they reckoned not, and cast terror into their hearts, as they razed their houses with their own hands and with the hands of the believers. So take heed, O you who are possessed of sight. (3) Had God not ordained banishment for them, He would have punished them in this world. And in the Hereafter theirs shall be the punishment of the Fire. (4) That is because they defied God and His Messenger; and whosoever defies God and His Messenger, truly God is severe in retribution. (5) Whatsoever of the palm trees you cut down or left standing upon their roots, it was by 1 Whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorifies God is repeated in 61:1; 62:1; 64:1; see 64:1c. To the many permutations of this phrase in the Quran, 17:44 adds, And there is no thing, save that it hymns His praise, though you do not understand their praise.

2 Here those who disbelieve among the People of the Book is a specific reference to the Banu 'l-Naḍīr; see the introduction to this sūrah. At the first gathering refers to the gathering of the Muslim forces. Alternately, it can be read "to the first gathering" as a reference to the Banu 'l-Naḍīr having been banished to Syria (Ṭ), but then gathering in Khaybar. God cast terror into their hearts when the Prophet heard of their plans to assassinate him and had their leader, Kaʿb ibn Ashraf, executed instead (Q). God came upon them whence they reckoned not refers to the fact that those who executed Kaʿb had previously been trusted allies of the Banu 'l-Naḍīr (Q). After being forced to leave their homes, the Banu 'l-Naḍīr are reported to have taken them apart with their own hands, as they sought to take with them anything of value (Ṭ). That they razed their houses with their own hands could also be taken as an allusion to the fact that their banishment and loss of property resulted from their breaking their treaty and then rejecting more congenial terms before being forced to forfeit their homes and their land altogether. The injunction to take heed, or "reflect," O you who are possessed of sight, is understood by the philosopher and jurisprudent Ibn Rushd as a "proof of the obligatory nature of the syllogism, or of both the syllogism and legal reasoning (qiyās)" (Faṣl al-maqāl, 28).

3–4 He would have punished them in this world is interpreted to mean that, had the Banu 'l-Naḍīr not been banished, God would have punished them with execution and capture (Ṭ), just as the Banū Qurayẓah were punished for their treachery after the Battle of the Trench in 4/627.

5 After the siege of the Banu 'l-Naḍīr had lasted for several days, the Prophet ordered the cutting down and burning of some palm trees that lay within sight of their fortresses. The Banu 'l-Naḍīr were alarmed and said, "You claim, O Muhammad, that you seek goodness. Is there any goodness in damaging productive trees and cutting them down?" They also said to him, "Is corruption upon the earth part of what you claim has

God's Leave, and that He might disgrace the iniquitous. (6) As for what God has given in spoils from them to the Messenger, you spurred neither horse nor camel for it. But God grants His messengers authority over whomsoever He will, and God is Powerful over all things. (7) That which God has given in spoils to His Messenger from the people of the towns is for God and His Messenger, and for kinfolk, orphans, the indigent, and the traveler, that it not come to circulate among your wealthy. Whatsoever the Messenger gives you, take it; and whatsoever he forbids to you, forgo, and reverence God. Truly God is severe in retribution. (8) For the poor emigrants who were expelled from their homes and their property seeking bounty and contentment from God and who help been revealed to you?" The Prophet was distressed upon hearing this, and the Muslims began to fear that cutting down the trees may have been an act of corruption. Yet they disagreed among themselves. Some said not to cut the palm trees down, for they were part of what God had given as spoils, but others wanted to cut them down. And so God revealed v. 5, confirming the opinion of those who warned against cutting the palm trees down, while at the same time affirming the lawfulness of cutting them down under these particular circumstances. God informed them that the cutting down of trees or leaving them standing is only by His Leave (IK, W). Gratuitous destruction of enemy property, especially trees and crops, is prohibited by Islamic Law (Bg, IK, R, Ṭ, Z).

6 You spurred neither horse nor camel for it indicates that the property taken from the Banū Naḍīr was not to be treated as booty acquired in battle, which would have been distributed among the victorious combatants with one-fifth going to the Prophet for the needs of the Muslim community, as stipulated in 8:41: Whatsoever you take as spoils, a fifth is for God and His Messenger, and for kinsfolk, orphans, the indigent, and the traveler. But in this instance, as the booty had in effect been surrendered without a fight, the Prophet was to be granted full authority over its distribution. He then gave it to the Emigrants, many of whom had been in straitened circumstances since their emigration from Makkah, and to two of the Helpers, the Muslims who had made Madinah their home before the migration of the Prophet. The remainder he used for the needs of his family and to purchase armaments for the Muslims (IK).

7 The recipients of the booty listed here appear in one form or another in several other verses (e.g., 2:177, 214; 4:36; 8:41); see also the essay "Quranic Ethics, Human Rights, and Society." That it not come to circulate among your wealthy indicates that the Prophet sought to distribute the spoils of the siege in a manner that would establish greater economic parity among the Muslims. Although this verse provides specific rulings pertaining to the distribution of booty after the defeat of the Banu 'l-Naḍīr, Muslims have often taken the injunction Whatsoever the Messenger gives you, take it; and whatsoever he forbids to you, forgo, and reverence God as a more general command applying to all that was enjoined by the Prophet, in accord with many verses that command Muslims to obey God and obey the Messenger (3:32; 4:59; 5:92; 24:54; 47:33; 64:12; see also 3:132; 4:80; 7:156–57; 8:1, 20, 46; 33:33; 49:14; 58:13). Hence this verse is often linked to a famous saying of the Prophet: "When I order you to do something, then do as much of it as you can. If I forbid something for you, then shun it" (IK, Q).

8 Rather than being used to further enrich the wealthy, the spoils of war are to be distributed among the poor (Q). Bounty indicates what the emigrants sought in this world, and contentment

God and His Messenger—it is, they who are the truthful. (9) And those who were settled in the land and in belief before them love those who emigrated to them and find in their breasts no need for that which they were given. They prefer others over themselves, even if they be impoverished. And whosoever is shielded from the avarice of his soul, it is they who shall prosper. (10) And those who came after them say, "Our Lord! Forgive us and our brothers who preceded us in faith, and place no rancor in our hearts toward those who believe. Our indicates what they sought in the Hereafter (Q). They help God and His Messenger by striving and fighting in the way of God (Q). Truthful translates ṣādiqūn, which can also mean "sincere," and here indicates those who act in accord with their beliefs, in stark contrast to the hypocrites, who are criticized in vv. 11–12.

9 In the land refers to Madinah, and those who were settled . . . in belief before them refers to the Muslims of Madinah who had embraced Islam before the arrival of the Prophet and the Emigrants from Makkah. This verse was reportedly revealed in relation to an incident in which the Prophet entrusted one of the People of the Veranda (the poor who lived outside the Prophet's Mosque in Madinah; see 2:273c) to a man from the Helpers. The Helper took the man to his family and asked his wife, "Do we have anything [to feed him]?" She said, "We do not have anything except the children's food." He said, "Put them to sleep, and then bring me the food. And when you put the food down, turn the lamp off." He then offered what he had to his guest. The following morning he took him back to the Messenger of God. The Prophet said, "Truly the dwellers of the heavens are amazed at what you two have done." This verse was then revealed (IK, W). They prefer others over themselves is related to those verses that praise giving wealth despite loving it (2:177; 76:8). Find in their breasts no need has broader implications, as it indicates removing this world from one's heart, so that the heart is no longer attached to what passes it by (Aj). In this vein, a ḥadīth states, "Abstain from the world, and God will love you; abstain from what pertains to other people, and the people will love you." Whosoever is shielded from the avarice of his soul (cf. 64:16) thus describes those who feel no need for what is destined for others and are thereby protected, as in another ḥadīth, "Your worst enemy is the soul between your two sides." In this same vein, the Prophet warned his followers, "Be on your guard against committing oppression, for oppression is a darkness on the Day of Resurrection. Be on your guard against avarice, for avarice is what destroyed those who were before you. It made them shed blood and make lawful that which was unlawful for them" (IK).

10 Those who came after them refers to those who embraced Islam after the Prophet and his followers had emigrated from Makkah, in contrast to those Helpers who had embraced Islam before the emigration. It is thus seen as designating a third category of believers, alluded to in 9:100: [As for] the foremost, the first among the Emigrants and the Helpers, and those who followed them with virtue, God is content with them, and they are content with Him (IK). Their prayer indicates their desire that there be no discord between them and those who preceded them in religion. But it can also be understood to impart an attitude that all Muslims should have toward one another (R). Those who came after them can also be read as a reference to everyone who enters Islam until the Day of Resurrection, while our brothers who preceded us in faith can be read as a reference to the People of the Book, who preceded the Muslims in belief (Q). In this sense, the verse indicates that the preferred course with the Banū Naḍīr would have been reconciliation, but that once they had become resolute in their defiance, there was no alternative but banishment.

Lord! Truly Thou art Kind, Merciful." (11) Hast thou not seen those who act with hypocrisy, saying to their brothers who disbelieve among the People of the Book, "If you are expelled, surely we shall go forth with you. And we shall never obey anyone against you. And if you are fought, we shall help you." God bears witness that they are surely liars. (12) Were they expelled, they would not go forth with them, and were they fought, they would not help them. And were they to help them, they would surely turn their backs. Then they would not be helped. (13) Truly you incite more intense dread in their breasts than God. That is because they are a people who do not comprehend. (14) They will not fight you all together, save in fortified towns or from behind walls. Their might is fierce among themselves. You suppose that they are together; yet their hearts are divided. That is because they are a people who do not understand, (15) like those who shortly before them tasted the evil consequences of their affair—and theirs shall be a painful punishment— (16) like Satan when he says unto man, 11–12 In contrast to the different categories of believers mentioned above, these verses discuss the hypocrites of Madinah, chiefly ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy, who reportedly promised the Banū Naḍīr that he and his followers would support them in their fight against the Muslims. But when they could not muster sufficient forces, they reneged on their promise and watched as one of their allies was forced to leave the oasis. The hypocrites are here considered so cowardly and duplicitous that even if they did muster the promised forces, they would soon be driven away by the Muslim army; hence the Banū Naḍīr would still not be helped (Ṭ).

13 The Banū Naḍīr are condemned here for breaking their pact and thus violating the principles of their religion, for, had they feared God, they would not have done so and would not now need to seek refuge from the Muslim army. That they fear human beings more than God indicates that they are focused upon this world rather than the Hereafter.

14 Their might is fierce among themselves has two meanings: first, the Banū Naḍīr believe that they are strong and courageous, though in reality they are not; second, "their enmity is great among themselves," indicating that they appear united but are in fact at odds with one another (IK). You suppose that they are together; yet their hearts are divided refers to either the discord between the Jews of Madinah and the hypocrites (IK) or inner discord among the Jews of Madinah themselves. Although one might see them combining forces and think that these forces are harmonious, in reality they are severely divided (IK). The discord that people experience among themselves is a form of punishment sent by God, as in 6:65: He is the One Who has power to send a punishment upon you from above you or from beneath your feet, or to confound you as discordant factions and make you taste the might of one another. In contrast, it is a sign of God's Mercy when the hearts of those who had been enemies are joined; see 3:103.

15 Those who shortly before them refers to the Banū Qaynuqāʿ, another Jewish tribe which had been driven out of Madinah for similar treachery two years before the Banū Naḍīr (IK). They tasted the evil consequences of their affair through the punishment imposed upon them in this life, and theirs shall be a painful punishment in the Hereafter (Bḍ).

16–17 These verses draw an analogy between the way the hypocrites betrayed the Jews and the way Satan betrays human beings (Bḍ), as in 8:48:

"Disbelieve!" Then when he disbelieves, he says, "Surely I am quit of you. Truly I fear God, Lord of the worlds." (17) The end of both is that they will be in the Fire, abiding therein. That is the recompense of the wrongdoers. (18) O you who believe! Reverence God and let every soul consider what it has sent forth for the morrow; and reverence God. Truly God is Aware of whatsoever you do. (19) And be not like those who forget God, such that He makes them forget their souls. It is they who are the iniquitous. (20) Not equal are the inhabitants of the Fire and the inhabitants of the Garden. The inhabitants of the Garden—they are the triumphant. (21) Had We made this Quran descend upon a mountain, thou wouldst have seen it humbled, rent asunder by the fear of God. These Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them, and said, "None among mankind shall overcome you today, and I am indeed your defender." But when the two hosts saw each other, he turned on his heels and said, "I am quit of you!" The manner in which Satan declares himself to be quit or innocent of what he entices the disbelievers to ascribe to him is most evident in 14:22: And Satan will say, when the matter has been decreed, "Verily God made you the Promise of truth; and I made you a promise, but I failed you. And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves. I cannot respond to your cries for help; nor can you respond to my cries for help. Truly I disbelieved in your ascribing me as partner aforetime."

18 Let every soul consider what it has sent forth for the morrow indicates that everyone should reflect upon their deeds and evaluate how they may fare on the Day of Judgment. It is reported that upon seeing the impoverished state of some Muslims, the Prophet called the people together and then recited 4:1, O mankind! Reverence your Lord, Who created you from a single soul and from it created its mate, and from the two has spread abroad a multitude of men and women, followed by this verse, whereupon many Muslims brought food and clothes for the impoverished members of the community (IK).

19 That God makes those who forget God forget their souls, or themselves, indicates that they cease to listen to what benefits the soul and to do what would purify it (Bḍ), and that they are therefore unable to prepare for the Day of Judgment. Some say this means that they forget the right of God and thus the right of their souls, or the share that is their due (Bḍ, Ṭ). From another perspective, those who forget God, such that He makes them forget their souls is an inversion of the famous saying, sometimes regarded as a ḥadīth, "He who knows himself knows his Lord." Since forgetfulness of God is the cause of forgetfulness of self, remembering the self necessitates that God first remember the self, and God's remembering the self will itself necessitate the self's remembering itself, as in 2:152: Remember Me, and I shall remember you. From this perspective, whoever does not have self-knowledge does not know God and will be unfortunate in the next life. Thus 8:45 enjoins, Be firm and remember God much, that haply you may prosper.

20 This is one of several verses that indicate the disparity between believers and disbelievers (see 38:28). Elsewhere the chasm between the believers and disbelievers is likened to that between the seeing and the blind (see 35:19; 40:58) and to those who know and those who do not know (39:9).

21 Humbled can also be read as "brought low." Most understand this verse as a reprimand to human beings whose hearts remain hard and unmoved in the face of the Quran (Aj, IK, Z), as if to say, "How is it that your hearts are so hard that they do not soften to the Quran, as even the mountains would?" (IK). This verse is thus an injunction for human beings to listen to and receive are the parables We set forth for mankind, that haply they may reflect. (22) He is God, other than Whom there is no god, Knower of the Unseen and the seen. And He is the Compassionate, the Merciful. (23) He is God, other than Whom there is no god, the Sovereign, the Holy, Peace, the Faithful, the Protector, the the Quran with fear and humility (IK, Ṭ). From another perspective, this verse exalts the potentiality of the human heart, which alone among all created things can contain the Quran, as alluded to in 33:72: Truly We offered the Trust unto the heavens and the earth and the mountains, but they refused to bear it, and were wary of it—yet man bore it (Aj). Seen in this light, the Divine Names presented in the verses that follow are an allusion to the Divine Qualities to which it is said the heart of God's believing servants can attain. In this vein, a well-known ḥadīth qudsī states, "My heavens and My earth embrace Me not, but the heart of My believing servant does embrace Me" (al-Ghazzālī, Iḥyāʾ, III.1.5).

22–24 This passage is considered to be among the "Jewels of the Quran" and is often recited in both obligatory and supererogatory prayers. It provides the most extensive list of Divine Names in the Quran, seventeen in all—or eighteen, if one includes the pronoun He (huwa) with which the passage begins and which many consider a Divine Name pertaining to the Divine Essence. Many sayings extol the recitation of this sūrah, especially these last three verses (sometimes including v. 21 as well). According to one saying attributed to the early Ḥadīth specialist Fuḍayl ibn ʿIyāḍ (d. 187/803), "One who reads the end of the sūrah of 'The Gathering' [vv. 21–24] until the morning and then dies on that very day is stamped with the stamp of those who witness [God]. One who reads it in the evening and then dies that very night is stamped with the stamp of those who witness [God]" (Iḥyāʾ, K. Qirāʾat al-Qurʾān).

22 For an explanation of the Islamic testimony of faith (shahādah), with which this passage begins, see 2:255c. The Name Allāh—"God"—is referred to as the all-comprehensive Name (al-ism al-jāmiʿ), because it is said to comprise all the particular qualities that each of the other Names conveys. It is also the most specific of the Names, since it cannot be used to describe any being other than God, whereas many other Divine Names, such as the Merciful or the Clement, can. Knower of the Unseen and the seen (cf. 6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 32:6; 39:46; 62:8; 64:18) indicates that God knows all that is hidden and all that is manifest on all levels of reality, in both this world and the Hereafter (Q, R). It can also mean that God knows all things before they become manifest in external existence, when they are "Unseen," and after they come into external existence, when they can be seen (Aj). Regarding the Compassionate, the Merciful, see 1:3c.

23 According to Abū Ḥāmid al-Ghazzālī in his Commentary on the Most Beautiful Names of God, there is a progression in the first five Names listed here from those that pertain more closely to the Divine Essence to those that pertain more closely to Divine Action. The Sovereign is the One Who in both His Essence and His Attributes has no need of any other being, while all other things are in need of Him. The Holy is the One Who transcends utterly any quality that one might attribute to Him, thus indicating that His Perfection is beyond human conception. Peace translates salām, which indicates being flawless, beyond all imperfections, and untarnished by any evil or inner contradiction. According to a ḥadīth, some Companions used to pray "Peace upon God," until the Prophet corrected them, indicating that God was Himself Peace. The Faithful translates al-Muʾmin, the same word that is rendered "believer" when used to describe human beings. When said of God, al-Muʾmin refers to the One Who provides all safety and security. The Protector is the One Who watches over His creation, tending to their actions and their provision at every moment. The Mighty indicates the One Who is eminent, of Whom others have need and to Whom access is difficult. The Compeller is the One Whose Will prevails over the will of all others, the One Whose grasp nothing escapes, yet Whom nothing else can grasp. The Proud is the Mighty, the Compeller, the Proud. Glory be to Him above the partners they ascribe. (24) He is God, the Creator, the Maker, the Fashioner; unto Him belong the Most Beautiful Names. Whatsoever is in the heavens and the earth glorifies Him, and He is the Mighty, the Wise.

One Who is majestic to the exclusion of all else, so that nothing is worthy of being considered in relation to Him.

24 The Creator, the Maker, the Fashioner can be correlated to three stages in the unfolding of creation: the Creator indicates the Quality of God through which He measures things out before they come into existence in this world; the Maker indicates the manner in which God then brings things into being; and the Fashioner indicates the manner in which God then gives things form with various characteristics (Q). Alternately, these three Divine Names can be seen as referring more specifically to the three stages through which creatures, in particular human beings, develop in the womb (Q).

Regarding unto Him belong the Most Beautiful Names (cf. 7:180; 17:110; 20:8), a famous ḥadīth states, "God has ninety-nine Names—one hundred minus one—and whosoever enumerates them will enter the Garden" (IK), though many scholars maintain that God has more than ninety-nine Names, many of which are not revealed to human beings. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have called upon God saying, "I implore Thee by every Name that is Thine, by which Thou hast named Thyself, or which Thou hast revealed in Thy Book, or which Thou hast taught to any of Thy creation, or which Thou hast assigned to Thyself in Thy knowledge of things unseen."

She Who Is Examined

al-Mumtaḥanah

A Madinan sūrah, al-Mumtaḥanah was most likely revealed sometime after the year 6/628. Some maintain that the first verse was revealed on the day Makkah was conquered by the Muslim army in 8/630. The sūrah takes its name from the injunction to examine them in v. 10. As translated, the title refers to the woman regarding whom several of its verses are said to have been revealed, Umm Kulthūm bint ʿUqbah (Āl, Q). It is also known as al-Imtiḥān, "The Examining" (Āl) or "The Examiner," which describes the sūrah as one that examines and exposes the faults of human beings (Q), a quality that could also be attributed to the entire Quran. Some have also named this sūrah al-Mawaddah, "Affection" (Āl), most likely after the phrases you offer them affection (v. 1) and God will forge affection (v. 7), and because the entire sūrah clarifies where the affections of the believers should lie.

That there should be no affection for or alliances with an enemy party is made clear in vv. 1–3. The case of Abraham and his followers is then cited as an example to be followed (vv. 4–6) in this regard. The next passage (vv. 7–9) provides hope that better relations can be established with enemy parties and allows for good relations with those who do not oppose the Muslims. The last section (vv. 10–12) addresses the complex situation brought about by the emigration of women from Makkah to Madinah and the rules to be observed when women who are married to idolaters choose to embrace Islam. Marriages between believers and disbelievers were henceforth considered invalid, but were to be dissolved in as equitable a manner as possible.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) O you who believe! Take not Mine enemy and your enemy as friends—you offer them affection, though they have indeed disbelieved in the truth that has come to you, expelling the Messenger and you for having believed in God your Lord—if you have gone forth striving in My way and seeking My Good Pleasure. You show them affection in secret, while I know best that which you hide and that which you disclose. And whosoever among you does so has indeed strayed from the right way. (2) Were they to come upon you, they would be enemies unto you and would stretch forth their hands and their tongues against you in evil. And they wish you to disbelieve. (3) Your family relations and your children will not benefit you on the Day of Resurrection; He will distinguish

1 Friends translates awliyāʾ, which could also be rendered "protectors," "helpers," or "allies" (Ṭ). This verse was reportedly revealed in relation to a member of the Muslim community who attempted to disclose the Prophet's plans to the Quraysh. The Prophet sent several Companions to intercept the letter sent by Ḥāṭib ibn Abī Balta'ah. After intercepting the letter, which had information about the Prophet's plans to march upon Makkah, the Prophet asked, "What is this, O Ḥāṭib?" He answered, "Be not hasty [in judging me], I am a man who is merely allied with the Quraysh, for I am not myself a Qurayshite. All the Emigrants with you have relatives who will protect them. I have no relatives in Makkah; so I wanted to obtain some assistance from the Quraysh. By God, I did not do it because I doubt my religion, nor because I have turned to disbelief after choosing Islam." The Prophet said, "He has spoken the truth!" But 'Umar exclaimed, "Let me strike the neck of this hypocrite!" To which the Prophet responded, "He has taken part in the Battle of Badr. You do not know; perhaps God has looked upon those who took part in the Battle of Badr and said, 'Do as you please, for I have forgiven you.'" Then this verse was revealed (Q, Ṭ, W). Despite the Prophet's leniency, the verse indicates that to choose alliance with disbelievers over alliance with the Prophet and the Muslim community is to stray from the right way (sawāʾ al-sabīl), which literally means, "the middle way."

2 Stretch forth their hands means that they would fight and try to kill the believers (JJ, Ṭ), while stretch forth . . . their tongues means that they will insult and revile them (JJ). They wish for derives from the same root as affection in v. 1, w-d-d, indicating that, while some believers still harbor affection for some of the disbelievers, many of the disbelievers only maintain their bonds in the hopes that the believers will revert to idolatry.

3 Here your family relations and your children could be a specific reference to those who remain idolatrous (JJ) or a broader reference to the fact that each person stands alone before God on the Day of Judgment, which is thus described as the Day when neither wealth nor children avail, save for him who comes to God with a sound heart (26:88–89). For other references to this broad Quranic theme, see 3:10, 14, 116; 8:28; 9:24, 55, 69, 85; 18:39–40, 46; 23:55–56; 26:88; 34:35–37; 63:9c; 64:14–15; 68:14; 71:21. This verse could also be read, "Your family relations and your children will not benefit you. On the Day of Resurrection He will distinguish between you." In both readings, that God will distinguish between you means between you. And God sees whatsoever you do. (4) There is indeed a beautiful example for you in Abraham and those with him, when they said to their people, "Truly we are quit of you and of all that you worship apart from God. We have rejected you, and enmity and hatred have arisen between us and you forever, till you believe in God alone"; save for Abraham's saying to his father, "I shall assuredly ask forgiveness for you, though I have no power to avail you aught from God." "Our Lord, in Thee do we trust, unto Thee do we turn in repentance, and unto Thee is the journey's end. (5) Our Lord! Make us not a trial for those who disbelieve, and forgive us. Our Lord! Truly Thou art the Mighty, the Wise." (6) You have a beautiful example in them for whosoever hopes for God and the Last Day. And whosoever turns away—truly God is that the believers and disbelievers will be divided from one another and judged separately.

4 Those with him refers to the prophets (Ṭ) or to those who followed Abraham (JJ, R). According to the first interpretation, the believers are told to look to the examples set by all previous prophets. When they said to their people thus refers to the manner in which all prophets sought to distance themselves from the disbelievers in their respective communities (Ṭ). According to the second interpretation, the believers are enjoined to follow the example of Abraham and his followers in rejecting the idolaters (R). According to both interpretations, Abraham's seeking forgiveness for his father is not a beautiful example to be followed, because one should not seek forgiveness for disbelievers (JJ, R, Ṭ, Z). Thus 9:113 says of Abraham's prayer for his father, But when it became clear to him that he was an enemy of God, he repudiated him. In other passages, Muhammad is told to seek forgiveness for his followers (3:159; 24:62), and Jacob agrees to seek forgiveness for his sons (12:97–8). But where there is no corresponding attitude of repentance on the part of those for whom forgiveness is sought, the Quran says, It is the same for them whether thou askest forgiveness for them or thou askest forgiveness for them not; God will never forgive them. Truly God guides not iniquitous people (63:6; see also 4:107; 9:80). The ability of prophets and angels (see 40:7; 42:5) to pray for the forgiveness of others is related to the heavily debated Quranic topic of intercession, regarding which see 2:48c; 2:255c.

5 The plea in this verse is, "Do not let the disbelievers defeat us such that they are fooled into thinking they are followers of the truth" (Bg, JJ, R), or "Do not let the disbelievers defeat us such that they will be punished on account of what they have done to us" (R); cf. 10:85; 25:20. It can also be seen as expressing the desire that evil not befall the disbelievers, since from a Quranic perspective that is the likely outcome of a situation in which the believers are a trial for disbelievers, as in 85:10: Truly those who persecute believing men and believing women, then do not repent, theirs shall be the punishment of Hell, and theirs shall be the punishment of burning. The verse could also be understood as a general prayer that trial and strife (fitnah) not arise between the two communities.

6 The example of Abraham and his people dissociating themselves from the disbelievers among their own tribe is the model for those who anticipate the meeting with God and hope for the reward of the Hereafter (R); see 43:26–27: Abraham said to his father and his people, "Truly I am quit of that which you worship, save Him who originated me, for surely He will guide me." In the present verse, whosoever turns away refers to those who do not follow the injunctions of vv. 1–4 and the Self-Sufficient, the Praised. (7) It may be that God will forge affection between you and those of them with whom you are in enmity. God is Powerful, and God is Forgiving, Merciful. (8) God does not forbid you, with regard to those who did not fight you on account of religion and did not expel you from your homes, from treating them righteously and being just toward them. Truly God loves the just. (9) God only forbids you, with regard to those who fought you on account of religion and expelled you from your homes and supported your expulsion, from befriending them; whosoever befriends them, they are the wrongdoers. (10) O you who believe! When the believing women come unto you as emigrants, examine them. God knows best their faith. Then if you know them to be believers, do not return them to the disbelievers. Those women are maintain ties with the enemies among the disbelievers (JJ).

7 According to some accounts, after the revelation of vv. 4–6, extolling the example of Abraham and his followers, who shunned the idolaters among them, many Muslims declared their relatives among the idolaters to be their enemies. Knowing that this was hard on them, God revealed this verse (W). God "forged affection" between them through marriage, for example, when the Prophet married Umm Ḥabībah, the daughter of the Qurayshī leader Abū Sufyān (Q, W), and by guiding the disbelievers to belief (JJ). God is Powerful to do that, Forgiving of their past deeds if they repent, and Merciful to them by continuing to offer guidance.

8 Muslims are here encouraged not to treat an entire people as enemies, if only some of those people are in fact enemies. In this context, God does not forbid you is understood as a positive exhortation meaning, "God wishes you to do so" (Q, R, Ṭ). This verse was reportedly revealed in response to a specific incident when Asmāʾ, the daughter of Abū Bakr, refused to meet her mother, who had come from Makkah to visit her in Madinah, because her mother had remained an idolater rather than embracing Islam. When the situation was brought to the attention of the Prophet, this verse was revealed. Asmāʾ then received her mother in her house (Q, Ṭ, W). In this context, that God loves the just (cf. 5:42) indicates that God loves those who are able to discern between those who are enemies and those who are not, thus avoiding indiscriminate animosity.

9 Though Muslims are enjoined to not bear animosity toward an entire people, they are also not to befriend or make alliances with members of an enemy force. Such clarifications were crucial at the beginning of the formation of the Islamic community, because many Muslims still had relatives among the Quraysh of Makkah or had previously held alliances with other tribes that were allied with the Quraysh. Nonetheless, the injunctions of this verse have more general implications; see also 5:51c.

10 This verse discusses the legality of marriage between Muslims and people of other communities, forbidding marriage between Muslims and disbelievers (see also 2:221). Examine them means that when women come to embrace Islam, the Muslims must first be sure that they have migrated to Madinah out of sincere belief, not out of enmity toward their husbands or because they were enamored of other men (JJ). God knows best their faith indicates that, once they have taken an oath, their word is to be trusted and the matter is between them and God. Though marriage between believers and disbelievers is forbidden, in 5:5, one of the last verses to be revealed, marriage between Muslim men and women from among the People of the Book (i.e., Jews and Christians) is permitted; see 5:5c.

not lawful for those men; nor are those men lawful for those women. And give them what they have spent. There is no blame upon you if you marry them when you have given them their bridewealth. And hold not to the ties of disbelieving women. Ask for what you have spent, and let them ask for what they have spent. That is the Judgment of God; He judges between you. And God is Knowing, Wise. (11) And if any of your wives should go over to the disbelievers, and then you have your turn, give those whose wives have gone the like of what they have spent. And reverence God, in Whom you are believers. (12) O Prophet! When believing women come unto thee, pledging unto thee that they will not

This verse was reportedly revealed after the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah in 6/628, which stipulated that the Makkans who fled to the Prophet should be returned to the Makkans, but that anyone among the Prophet's Companions who fled to the people of Makkah would not be returned to Madinah. A Qurayshī man whose wife had joined the Muslims then went to the Prophet and said, "O Muhammad, return my wife to me, for you have agreed to return to us whosoever flees to you." Then this verse was revealed stipulating that Muslim women could not be married to idolaters and that their return was excluded from the treaty. And give them what they have spent stipulates that any bridewealth that had been paid to the Muslim women before they left their disbelieving husbands in order to embrace Islam must be returned to their disbelieving husbands when they are removed from wedlock with them. The Prophet therefore allowed the believing women who had migrated to Madinah to stay and sent back to the Quraysh the men who had fled the Quraysh to join the Muslims in Madinah (Q, W).

11 Any of your wives may refer to the wives themselves, their bridewealth (JJ, Ṭ), or both. And then you have your turn can mean either when Muslim men succeed in battle against their adversaries (JJ) or when they are afflicted with the loss of their women, as were the disbelievers whose wives went over to the Muslims. As the disbelievers could not be expected to follow the Quranic injunction to pay back the bridewealth if a woman left her husband and returned to them from the Muslims (which is said to have happened six times during the life of the Prophet; Z), the Muslim community was then asked to spend from the treasury or the spoils of war to give those whose wives have gone the like of what they have spent on the woman's bridewealth (Bg, Ṭ, Z). The Muslims carried out this command by way of paying back the disbelievers the bridewealth of their former wives, but the idolaters refused to do the same (IK, Ṭ).

12 This verse is reported to constitute the elements of the oath that the Prophet would take from women who came to him to embrace Islam (IK, Q). Nor steal implies any acquisitions or gains made by unlawful means (R). Nor slay their children refers to the pre-Islamic Arabian practice of burying newborn girls to avoid shame and poverty (JJ). Some argue that it applies by extension to those who kill an unborn fetus (IK), though this issue is debated. A slanderous lie that they have fabricated between their hands and feet refers to a baby conceived in adultery whom a woman falsely claims was her husband's child (IK, JJ, Z). When taking this pledge from women, the Prophet is reported to have added on one occasion that they not wail for the dead and on another occasion to have said, "Whosoever among you fulfills the pledge will be rewarded by God, and whosoever commits any of those sins and is punished [in this life], that will serve as expiation for the sin; and whosoever commits any of these sins and God covers that, then it is up to God to punish or to forgive" (Q). In this context, it is important to note that the Prophet took an independent pledge from women, indicating that women remain spiritually ascribe any as partners unto God, nor steal, nor fornicate, nor slay their children, nor bring a slanderous lie that they have fabricated between their hands and feet, nor disobey thee in anything honorable, then accept their pledge and seek God's Forgiveness for them. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. (13) O you who believe! Do not befriend a people with whom God is wroth; those who have despaired of the Hereafter, just as the disbelievers have despaired of the inhabitants of graves.

independent of their husbands and responsible for themselves before God and the Prophet, an issue revisited in Sūrah 66.

13 This verse was reportedly revealed regarding some poor Muslims who would inform the Jews of the activities of the Muslims in exchange for provisions (Q, R, W, Z). In this sense, the sūrah ends with an injunction similar to the one with which it began—to not take God's enemies as friends (Q). Those who have despaired of the Hereafter refers to the Jews of Madinah, who would be in despair for denying the prophethood of Muhammad (Q, R, Ṭ), or to the hypocrites, who would despair for conspiring against the Prophet (Q). It can also be seen as a reference to all those who despair of the Hereafter because they preferred and thus worked only for this world. That they despair as do the disbelievers, here referring specifically to the idolatrous Makkans, indicates that both will be punished in the Hereafter. That they despair of the inhabitants of graves is understood as a reference to the manner in which the disbelievers despair of seeing their deceased relations because they have no concept of a Hereafter (Q), or to the belief that no good will come to those who die as disbelievers (Q).

The Ranks

al-Ṣaff

Most commentators consider al-Ṣaff to be a Madinan sūrah, although a small minority consider it to be Makkan (Āl). It takes its name from the mention of those who fight in His way in ranks in v. 4, but it is also known as al-Ḥawāriyyūn, "The Apostles," after the discussion of Jesus' apostles in v. 14, and as ʿĪsā, "Jesus," after the references to Jesus in vv. 6 and 14 (Āl). This is the third in the group of *sūrah*s known as "The Glorifiers" (al-Musabbiḥāt), *sūrah*s that begin with a reference to the glorification of God; the others are 57, 59, 62, and 64.

The previous sūrah enjoins striving in My way and seeking My good pleasure (60:1), but this sūrah begins by extolling those who fight in the way of God and chastising those who shrink from the task (vv. 1–4). Brief mention of the opposition encountered by Moses and Jesus (vv. 5–6) and condemnation of those who oppose God's revelations (vv. 7–8) leads into a prophecy of the eventual triumph of Islam (v. 9) and a foretelling of the rewards that await those who strive in the way of God (vv. 10–14).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorifies God, and He is the Mighty, the Wise. (2) O you who believe! Why do you say that which you do not do? (3) Grievously odious is it in the Sight of God that you say that which you do not do. (4) Truly God loves those who fight in His way in ranks, as if they were a solid structure. (5) And [remember] when Moses said unto his people, "O my people! Why do you hurt me, though you know well that I am the Messenger of God unto you?" So when they swerved, God

1 All that exists bears witness to God's Lordship and Oneness. He is the Mighty in that He overcomes all that is other than Him and nothing can overcome Him (R); cf. 57:1; 59:1; 62:1; 64:1. For the meaning of the various modes in which God is said to be glorified in the Quran, see 64:1c.

2–3 It is reported that some Muslims would say, "If we knew the deeds most beloved to God, we would expend our wealth and souls to perform such deeds." So God directed them to the works most beloved to Him, saying, Truly God loves those who fight in His way in ranks, as if they were a solid structure (v. 4). But when the Muslims were tested at the Battle of Uḥud (see 3:121c; 3:155c), they retreated, and so God chastised them by revealing, O you who believe! Why do you say that which you do not do? (Q, R, Ṭ, W), meaning, "Why did you claim that you would do what is most beloved to God, but then not do it?" These verses can also be seen as a reference to the hypocrites, who when fighting is enjoined upon them say, Our Lord! Why hast Thou prescribed fighting for us? (4:77; R). V. 2 can also be taken as a reference to all believers, as they have agreed to fulfill that which God has required of them through humility and surrender to God, but if they do not fulfill their promise, they can be accused of claiming falsely to do something that in fact they do not do (R). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "Whosoever claims for himself qualities that he does not have is not one of us; let him prepare his seat in Hell." Regarding those who love to be praised for what they have not done, see 3:188: Do not suppose that those who exult in what they have brought about and love to be praised for what they have not done—do not suppose that they are delivered from the punishment; theirs is a painful punishment.

4 In contrast to vv. 2–3, this verse praises those who heed God's Command to strive in His way. That God loves those who fight in His way in ranks indicates both His Contentment with them and praise for them (R). Solid structure suggests a building made of bricks that are sealed together so that there are no cracks between them. Here it is a metaphor for the Muslim community, who are joined by bonds of love and brotherhood, as in 49:10: The believers are naught but brothers, and in a famous ḥadīth: "A Muslim believer is a mirror reflection of another Muslim. A believer is a brother to another believer; he safeguards him from destruction and prevents his annihilation during his absence." In this regard, another ḥadīth states, "The entire Muslim group is like one single body. If the eye aches, then the whole body is in pain, and if the head aches, then the whole body is in pain." For the importance of the brotherhood of Muslims, see commentary on 49:9–12.

5 The hurt Moses' people caused him can be attributed to several events. The first was when they challenged Moses by saying, Show us God openly (4:153), and worshipped the golden calf (see 7:148–52; also 2:92–93; 20:88). Then, after they had been provided manna from Heaven, they said, O Moses, we will not endure one food (2:61). And finally they refused to enter Israel and fight with him, saying, O Moses! We shall never enter it, so long as they remain therein. So go forth, thou and thy Lord, and fight! We shall sit here (5:24). They caused their hearts to swerve; and God guides not iniquitous people. (6) And [remember] when Jesus son of Mary said, "O Children of Israel! Truly I am the Messenger of God unto you, confirming that which came before me in the Torah and bearing glad tidings of a Messenger to come after me whose name is Aḥmad." And when he came unto them with clear proofs, they said, "This is manifest sorcery." (7) Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates lies against God, while he is being called to submission? And God guides not wrongdoing people. (8) They desire to extinguish the Light of God with – swerved means that they inclined away from the truth (Q, R). Here their swerving can be read as referring to their deeds, as a result of which moral and spiritual "swerving" became manifest in their hearts. They thus came to be among the iniquitous, those whose outward actions manifest their inner iniquity, and for this they were left to wander astray. For God guides not iniquitous people (cf. 5:108; 9:24, 80; 63:6).

6 A function of every Divine messenger is to confirm the revelations that have come before; thus 6:92 says of the Quran, This is a blessed Book that We have sent down, confirming that which came before it (cf. 35:31; 46:30). That the prophets would confirm one another is said to be part of the primordial covenant that they made with God in 3:81 and 33:7. The prophets' confirmation of other messengers is also understood to refer to those who would follow them in time, and several verses are interpreted as references to the mention of the Prophet Muhammad in the Old and New Testaments (see 7:157c). The name Aḥmad means "most praised"; it derives from the same root as Muhammad—ḥ-m-d—and has long been recognized by Muslims as one of the many honorific names given to the Prophet by God Himself. This is based upon a saying of the Prophet: "I have several names: I am Muhammad; I am Aḥmad; I am al-Māḥī (the Effacer) by means of whom God eliminates unbelief." Many other aḥadīth simply refer to the Prophet as Aḥmad.

Some Muslims have likened Jesus' reference to Aḥmad here in the Quran to the reference to the Paraclete (Gk. Paraklētos) or Advocate of whom Jesus speaks in the Gospel of John 14:15–16: "If you love me, you will keep my commandments. And I will ask the Father, and He will give you another Advocate, to be with you forever" (see also John 16:7–14; Āl, R). Such an interpretation is, however, complicated by the next verse, 14:17, where the Advocate or Paraclete is said to be "the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it neither sees him nor knows him. You know him, because he abides with you, and he will be in you," and by 14:26, where the Advocate is again equated with the Holy Spirit.

The clear proofs refers to the many miracles that Jesus performed, such as breathing life into a clay bird, healing the blind and the leper, and raising the dead; see 5:110. The accusation that such evidentiary miracles are manifest sorcery is also brought against Moses (10:76; 27:13). It is also a charge the disbelievers are said to bring against the Prophet Muhammad, as in general those who disbelieve say to the Truth when it comes to them, "This is naught but manifest sorcery" (34:43).

7 To fabricate lies against God (cf. 3:94; 6:21, 93, 144; 7:37; 10:17; 11:18; 18:15; 29:68) indicates seeking to lead others astray by falsely attributing words of revelation to God (see 6:93, 144), declaring what is lawful to be unlawful and what is unlawful to be lawful (see 16:116), and reverting to a false creed after being shown the truth (see 7:89). While he is being called to submission could also be read in the active voice, "while he [the Prophet] calls them to submission." In both cases it expresses amazement that people could fabricate lies against God or deny God in any way while a prophet is present among them (Q).

8 They desire to extinguish the Light of God with their mouths by saying that it is sorcery, their mouths, but God completes His Light, though the disbelievers be averse. (9) He it is Who sent His Messenger with guidance and the Religion of Truth to make it prevail over all religion, though the idolaters be averse. (10) O you who believe! Shall I direct you to a commerce that will save you from a painful punishment: (11) that you believe in God and the Messenger and strive in God's way with your wealth and your souls? That is better for you, if you but knew. (12) He will forgive you your sins and cause you to enter Gardens with rivers running below, and goodly dwellings in Gardens of Eden—that is the great poetry, or soothsaying (JJ). This phrase is repeated in 9:32, where it is said of Jews and Christians who make human judgment a higher authority than the word of scripture. Light is frequently associated with the guidance that comes through the prophets and revelation (see 6:91; 7:157; 21:48; 42:52; 57:9, 28). That God completes His Light thus implies completing His Guidance. In this context, the Light of God is also interpreted as a reference to the Quran, Islam, or the Prophet (Q), who is referred to elsewhere as a luminous lamp (33:46). According to a Shiite interpretation, this verse refers to those who would seek to extinguish the walāyah/wilāyah, that is, the sanctity and rightful successorship of ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, though God completes his position as leader (imāmah). This light is believed to be the light referred to in 64:8: So believe in God and His Messenger and the light We have sent down (Kā); see 64:8c.

9 He it is Who sent His Messenger with guidance and the Religion of Truth to make it prevail over all religion is repeated verbatim in 9:33 and 48:28. Guidance can here be seen as a reference to the Quran (Aj, Āl) or to the truth itself (Q). All religion is understood to mean all religions (Q); see 9:32–33c; 48:28c. Almost all classical commentators interpret Religion of Truth here and in 9:33 and 48:28 as a reference to Islam and thus see all three verses as a reference to the triumph of Islam over all other religions. But as the Quran attests to the veracity and salvific efficacy of other religions (see, e.g., 2:62c; 5:69c), the Religion of Truth can be more broadly understood to mean all revealed religions. From this perspective, the disbelievers' aversion to the completion of God's Light in v. 8, can be understood as a reference to the idolaters who desire to extinguish the light of all revelation and to the People of the Book, most of whom reject the completion of revelation in the Prophet Muhammad. V. 9 would then refer only to the idolaters, as they are opposed to all truthful religion, whereas the People of the Book still seek the Religion of Truth in one form or another. See the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions."

10–11 These verses can be seen as addressing the wish expressed by the Companions when they said, "If we knew the deeds most beloved to God, we would expend our wealth and souls to perform such deeds" (see 61:2–3c). The commerce that saves from a painful punishment is the one that is based upon the Hereafter rather than this world. When one strives in the way of God with one's wealth and self or soul, it is then said, Truly God has purchased from the believers their souls and their wealth in exchange for the Garden being theirs. They fight in the way of God, slaying and being slain. [It is] a promise binding upon Him in the Torah, the Gospel, and the Quran. And who is truer to His pact than God? So rejoice in the bargain you have made (9:111). That is better for you thus means that faith or belief (īmān) and striving (jihād) are better for one than one's wealth and one's soul (Aj).

12 Attaining "the Garden" is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of Paradise, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57. Regarding God's causing people to enter Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c; 3:195; 5:12; 48:5; 64:9.

13 Something else that you love can be a reference to another commerce, thus referring back to triumph— (13) and something else that you love: help from God and a victory nigh. So give glad tidings to the believers. (14) O you who believe! Be helpers of God, just as Jesus son of Mary said to the apostles, "Who are my helpers unto God?" The apostles replied, "We are helpers unto God." Then a group from the Children of Israel believed and a group disbelieved. So We strengthened those who believed against their enemies, and they came to prevail.

v. 10 (Q, R, Ṭ), or to another "blessing" in addition to the forgiveness and Gardens mentioned in v. 12 (Āl, Z). The victory nigh is understood as a reference to the conquest of Makkah or the victories over Byzantium and Persia soon after the death of the Prophet (Q, Z). Victory translates fatḥ, which can also mean "opening" and can thus be seen as a reference to either opening the gates of nearness to God, opening the gates of the Unseen (Aj), or opening the heart to spiritual realities.

14 Be helpers of God indicates being helpers for God's religion and His Prophet (R), since God has no need of human assistance. As helpers is here a noun rather than a verb, as it is in 47:7, If you help God, He will help you, it implies that to be a believer is to be a helper of God at all times (R). Those who are helpers of God are then likened to Jesus' apostles, whose name in Arabic, ḥawāriyyūn, is thought by some to indicate purity (R). While some maintain that ḥawāriyyūn is from the Ethiopic ḥawārya meaning "apostle," others see it as deriving from the word ḥawwara, meaning "to transform" or "to whiten" (Iṣ). The title could thus refer to those who transform and purify the souls of people by guiding them in religion and knowledge (Iṣ). The ḥawāriyyūn are also said to be those who are fully devoted to a prophet and are thus purified from any faults (Ṭs). The Prophet is reported to have said, "Every prophet has his apostle (ḥawārī), and my apostle is Zubayr" (Iṣ).

A group among the Israelites then confirmed the prophethood of Jesus, while others disbelieved. According to many commentators, those who disbelieved includes not only those who rejected Jesus, but also those who maintained that Jesus was God as well as those who maintained that he was the son of God (R, Ṭs).

The Congregational Prayer

al-Jumuᶜah

Although a minority maintain that al-Jumuᶜah is a Makkan sūrah, internal indicators, such as the reference to the Jews in v. 6, affirm that it is from the Madinan period (Āl). It takes its name from the exhortation to gather for the Friday congregational prayer in v. 9 and is the fourth in the group of *sūrah*s known as "The Glorifiers" (al-Musabbiḥāt), which begin with a reference to the glorification of God; the other *sūrah*s are 57, 59, 61, and 64. This sūrah is connected to the previous sūrah by the manner in which both compare the commerce of this world with the affairs of the next. Some also liken the praise for those who fight in His way in ranks in the previous sūrah (61:4) to the call to attend the congregational prayer, as Muslims are also called to stand in ranks during prayer (Āl).

The Prophet is reported to have often recited this sūrah and the following sūrah, al-Munāfiqūn, together during the congregational prayer on Fridays (Āl). According to a ḥadīth, "The best day over which the sun has risen is the day of the congregational prayer (al-jumuᶜah); on it did God create Adam, and on it did Adam enter the Garden, and on it was he removed from the Garden. And the Hour will not come save on the day of the congregational prayer" (Q). According to another ḥadīth, "It is named 'The Gathering' [another translation for al-jumuᶜah], because that is the day on which Adam's physical nature (khalq) was gathered together" (R) or "in which God gathered together the physical nature of Adam" (Q; also see IK, Sy).

After extolling the Prophet as a blessing for his followers present and future (vv. 1–4), al-Jumuᶜah warns of the afflictions that befell the Jews for having failed to uphold the Torah (vv. 5–8). It then calls the Muslims to take leave of worldly transactions for a time in order to observe the Friday congregational prayer (vv. 9–11).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorifies God, the Sovereign, the Holy, the Mighty, the Wise. (2) He it is Who sent among the unlettered a Messenger from among themselves, reciting unto them His signs, purifying them, and teaching them the Book and Wisdom, though before they were in manifest error, (3) and others among them, who have not yet joined them. And He is the Mighty, the Wise. (4) That is the Bounty of God, which He gives to whomsoever He will. And God is Possessed of Tremendous Bounty. (5) The parable of those [who were] made to bear the Torah, then did not bear it, is that of an ass bearing books. How evil is the likeness of the people

1 Whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorifies God is repeated in 59:1; 61:1; and 64:1 (see also 24:41; 57:1; 59:24); see 64:1c.

2 Unlettered (ummī) indicates those who can neither read nor write, but in this context can refer to the idolatrous Arabs, who had no scripture (Ṭ), or to anyone without a Divine book (R; cf. 3:20). Purifying them refers to purification from idolatry (JJ, Ṭs). This is one of several verses in which the Prophet is said to teach the Book and Wisdom (cf. 2:129, 151, 231; 3:164), the teaching of which is part of the primordial covenant made with all prophets, when God said to them, Should a messenger then come to you confirming that which is with you, you shall surely believe in him and you shall help him (3:81). The teaching of the Book and Wisdom is also mentioned in relation to Abraham (4:54), Jesus (5:110), and Muhammad (4:113). In this context, some interpret Wisdom as a reference to the prophetic wont (sunnah), though it also can be understood more broadly as a reference to all Divinely inspired knowledge pertaining to this world and the Hereafter (Ṭs).

3 And others follows upon the unlettered, meaning those who are alive among them, and those who will come after them, who have not yet joined them (JJ). The verse may refer to everyone who will enter Islam from the time of the Prophet until the Day of Resurrection (Qm, R, Ṭs), in which case purifying them, and teaching them (v. 2) describes the Prophet's function in relation to all later generations of Muslims in all lands (R). Given the precedence that the earliest generations of Muslims are afforded, this verse is seen by many as a reference to the generation immediately after the Companions of the Prophet, known as the Followers (tābiʿūn; JJ, R), who are noted especially by Sunni Muslims for their piety and credited with many significant developments in Islamic religion and intellectual life. From this perspective, v. 2 establishes the preeminence of the Companions and this verse establishes the merit of the Followers, as each generation of Muslims is believed to be better than the succeeding one (JJ).

4 That is the Bounty of God, which He gives to whomsoever He will is repeated verbatim in 5:54 and 57:21. In this context, the Bounty of God can also be taken as a reference to the Prophet or to prophethood in general (R).

5 Made to bear is understood to mean "enjoined to act in accord with it" (Q). That they did not bear it thus indicates that they do not implement the teachings of the Torah as enjoined upon them and thus derive no benefit from it. That they are as an ass bearing books means that they have no true knowledge of what their scripture contains (Q, Ṭ). That people recite their scriptures without acting upon them is the same charge brought against the priests by the prophets of the Old Testament in the books of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea, and others who denied God's signs! And God guides not wrongdoing people. (6) Say, "O you who are Jews! If you claim that you are friends unto God apart from [other] people, then long for death, if you are truthful." (7) But they will never long for it due to that which their hands have sent forth. And God knows the wrongdoers. (8) Say, "Truly the death from which you flee will surely meet you; then you shall be returned to the Knower of the Unseen and the seen, and He (see, e.g., Isaiah 24:5; 29:13; Jeremiah 8:5–9; Ezekiel 22:26; Hosea 4:6–7). This verse is not simply a condemnation of Jews for forgetting the tenets of Judaism; it is also a warning to Muslims that this is how human beings often treat revelation. In this vein, the Prophet once warned his community that many calamities would befall Muslims when religious understanding had been lost and falsified. When a Companion asked him how that could happen when Muslims would continue to teach the Quran generation after generation, the Prophet replied, "May your mother weep for you! Do you not see these Jews and these Christians? They read the Torah and the Gospel but do not act in accord with them." Another ḥadīth states, "There will soon come upon the people a time in which nothing of the Quran remains save its trace and nothing of Islam remains save its name; their mosques will be full, though they will be devoid of guidance. Their scholars are the worst people under the sky; from them strife will emerge and spread." For further development of this theme as it pertains to Jews and Christians in the Quran, see 2:75; 5:41, 65–69.

6 According to this verse, if the Jews are indeed favored by God above others, then they should prefer the Hereafter to the life of this world (JJ). Long for death (cf. 2:94) indicates that those who are sure of their standing before God would not fear the coming of death, but would welcome it, or that those who truly believe long to meet God, as in a ḥadīth, "Whosoever desires to meet God, God desires to meet him, and whosoever abhors meeting God, God abhors to meet him."

7 That which their hands have sent forth is understood as a reference to the Jews' evil deeds, especially their denial of the prophethood of Muhammad (JJ) and distortion of the scriptures (see 4:47; 5:13, 41; R). The implication is that they are subtly aware of what awaits them in the next life for their transgressions and thus fear death. Elsewhere the judgment wrongdoers receive in the next life is said to result from that which their hands have sent forth (2:95; 4:62; 28:47; 30:36; 42:48; see also 5:80; 18:57; 36:12; 78:40), as does the evil that befalls them in this life.

8 In commenting upon this verse, Abū Ḥāmid al-Ghazzālī mentions human beings of four different dispositions with regard to death. There are those who are engrossed with this world, so that remembering death only increases their distance from God, as in 21:1: For mankind, their reckoning draws nigh, while they turn away heedless. Such people will have an unfortunate end because, as the Prophet has said, "Whosoever abhors meeting with God, God abhors the meeting with him." Then there are those who are penitent, who do not abhor death, but fear the meeting with God because they are aware of their deficiencies and know that they will be held accountable for their sins. They thus busy themselves with preparing for death. Beyond this there are those with spiritual knowledge (al-ʿārifūn), who remember death constantly and yearn for it as a lover yearns for the meeting with the Beloved. Last, there are those of the highest spiritual rank, who yearn for neither death nor life but only for what pleases their Lord (Iḥyāʾ, Kitāb Dhikr al-mawt, 4:391); see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran." In this context, that God is Knower of the Unseen and the seen indicates that the intentions behind actions cannot be hidden from God. God then informs all human beings of the true nature of what they did while on this earth and requites those who do what is good with good and those who do what is evil with what their actions merit (Ṭ). This is one of several verses where it is said that at the Final Judgment, God will "inform" people about their actions in this life; see also 5:14, 105; will inform you of that which you used to do." (9) "O you who believe! When you are called to the congregational prayer, hasten to the remembrance of God and leave off trade. That is better for you, if you but knew. (10) And when the prayer is completed, disperse throughout the land and seek the Bounty of God, and remember God much, that haply you may prosper." (11) And when they see some commerce or diversion, they scatter toward it and leave thee standing. Say, "That which is with God is better than diversion and commerce; and God is the best of providers."

9 The day of the congregational prayer was also market day in Madinah; hence the Muslims are called to leave off trade during the time of the prayer. In Islam the day of the congregational prayer is not understood as a Sabbath day of rest as in the Jewish and Christian traditions. Thus the injunction to leave off trade does not apply to the entire day, but only to the period of time during which the congregational prayer is held. This verse is connected to the previous verses in that those who flee death do so out of preference for the attractions of this world; so God guides the believers to what will benefit them in the Hereafter, the remembrance of God (R), as that is a commerce that will never perish (35:29). Hasten renders asᶜaw, which can also mean "endeavor," indicating that one should leave off worldly endeavors for a time and focus upon religious endeavors, as in a ḥadīth, "When you come to prayer do not come while you are endeavoring [for this world], but come to it while you are at peace (wa ᶜalaykum al-sakīnah)" (Q, R). In this sense, hasten or "endeavor" can refer to both the attitude in one's heart and one's deeds (Q, Ṭ), indicating that one should prepare for the congregational prayer outwardly by performing the ablutions and purifying one's clothing and inwardly through humility (Q).

According to al-Qurṭubī, Asᶜad ibn Zurārah (d. 1/623) and Muṣᶜab ibn ᶜUmayr (d. 3/625), who had been among the first Madinans to embrace Islam, began the practice of the congregational prayer so that Muslims would have a day for prayer and remembrance like the Jews and Christians. The Friday congregational prayer was thus begun by the Helpers in Madinah before the migration of the Prophet, then institutionalized by the Prophet when he arrived in Madinah, and later given Divine sanction in these verses. The Prophet first led the Friday congregational prayer himself during his migration to Madinah; he had stopped in Qubāʾ, just south of Madinah, for twelve days, then set out for Madinah on a Friday. When the time for prayer came, he prayed with the people in a seasonal riverbed that they used as a mosque. It was here that he delivered the first congregational sermon (khuṭbah; Q).

10 Disperse throughout the land is not a command, but a statement indicating permissibility (Q, R, Ṭ). Seek the Bounty of God can mean that people may now engage in commerce or that they should seek knowledge (Q). Ibn ᶜAbbās is reported to have said that this injunction is not to disperse in order to seek worldly things, but rather to call upon the sick, attend funerals (which are often held after the Friday congregational prayer), and visit one's brothers in God (Q, Sy, Ṭ). And remember God much implies at all times and in all that is done, that haply you may prosper in both this world and the Hereafter (Aj).

11 According to a ḥadīth, the Prophet was delivering a sermon during the Friday congregational prayer when a caravan arrived from Syria. Many people left the mosque during his sermon to attend to the caravan until only twelve people remained. Then this verse was revealed (JJ, Q, Ṭ). This verse thus affirms the precedence of the prayer over commerce. Before this event the Prophet reportedly used to perform the Friday congregational prayer before delivering the sermon. But after that he would perform the prayer after the sermon (Q), as this would ensure that people would stay for both the sermon and the prayer. This is the practice that Muslims follow to this day. That which is with God is understood to mean the reward for performing the congregational prayer or that the provision that God will give those who attend the congregational prayer is better than what they would have attained through commerce (Q). Since God is the best of providers (cf. 5:114; 22:58; 23:72; 34:39), believers should hasten to Him and seek provision from Him rather than from worldly activities, knowing that the provision given by God will not pass them by (Aj).

The Hypocrites

al-Munāfiqūn

A Madinan sūrah, al-Munāfiqūn takes its name from the discussion of the hypocrites who attested to the prophethood of Muhammad and swore fealty to him, but continued to ally themselves with his enemies. It can be seen as a contrast to the previous sūrah, al-Jumuʿah, which addresses the believers. During the Friday congregational prayer, the Prophet is reported to have frequently recited these two *sūrah*s together—al-Jumuʿah in the first cycle of the prayer as encouragement for the believers and al-Munāfiqūn in the second cycle as a rebuke to the hypocrites (Āl). Most of the sūrah warns of the treachery of the hypocrites (vv. 1–8). Then, like the final verses of the previous sūrah (62:9–11), the final verses of this sūrah (vv. 9–11) enjoin the believers not to allow the responsibilities and desires of this world to distract them from remembering God. In this way, the placement of this sūrah also serves as a reminder of the more subtle forms of hypocrisy that can distract those who believe from the proper fulfillment of their religious obligations.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) When the hypocrites come unto thee, they say, "We bear witness that thou art indeed the Messenger of God." Yet God knows that thou art indeed His Messenger, and God bears witness that the hypocrites are surely liars. (2) They took their oaths as a shield and thus turned from the way of God. Evil indeed is that which they used to do. (3) That is because they believed, and then disbelieved; so a seal was set upon their hearts such that they comprehend not. (4) And when thou seest them, their bodies impress thee, and if they speak, thou listenest to their speech. [Yet] they are like leaning timbers. They suppose that every cry is against them. They are the enemy; so be wary of them. May

1 This verse, along with vv. 2, 7, and 8, was reportedly revealed regarding ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy (d. 631), known as the leader of the hypocrites in Madinah, who said while on an expedition with the Prophet, "Do not spend on those who are with God's Messenger, that they may disperse and go away. And if we return to Madinah, surely the mightier will expel the weaker therefrom" (cf. v. 7–8). When the Prophet heard of this utterance from ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy's nephew, Zayd ibn Arqam, he sent for ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy and his companions, who swore that they did not say it. The Prophet did not believe Zayd and believed ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy. Then vv. 1–8 were revealed, after which the Prophet said, "O Zayd! God confirmed your statement" (Q, Ṭ, W). God bears witness that the hypocrites are surely liars indicates that faith is an affirmation with the heart, not only with the tongue, and that true speech comes from the heart (Q); see also 9:74.

2 In swearing that they had not said what Zayd reported to the Prophet, ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy and his companions took their oaths as a shield to protect their possessions and their lives (JJ), as in Islam the blood, property, and honor of Muslims were protected by their oath of allegiance to the Muslim polity. In this sense they swear by God that truly they are of you, but they are not of you (9:56). They thus sell . . . their oaths for a paltry price (3:77), because they are more concerned about the affairs of this world than those of the next. That they turned from the way of God indicates both that they turned believers away from observing God's Decree by dissuading the disbelievers and the Jews of Madinah from entering Islam (Q) and that they themselves turned away. Regarding the nature of the hypocrite, the Prophet is reported to have said, "The signs of the hypocrite are four and whosoever possesses one of them possesses the characteristic of hypocrisy until he abandons it: when he is entrusted, he betrays his trust; when he speaks, he lies; when he makes a promise, he breaks it; and when he quarrels, he uses foul words."

3 This verse means either that the hypocrites first believed and then came to disbelieve or that they affirmed with their tongues, although they disbelieved with their hearts (Q). A seal was set upon their hearts (cf. 2:7; 6:46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 17:46; 18:57; 30:59; 40:35; 41:5; 42:24; 47:16) implies spiritual insensitivity and ignorance, as the heart is considered the principle faculty of knowledge and understanding (see 6:25; 22:46). That a seal has been placed upon the heart as a barrier to religious understanding may be understood either as an inherent insensitivity toward revelation or as a Divinely imposed punishment in response to moral transgression and disobedience (see, e.g., 10:74; 42:24; 2:7c).

4 This first sentence is usually understood to describe ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy and some of his companions, who were said to be handsome and God curse them! How are they perverted? (5) And when it is said unto them, "Come! The Messenger of God will ask forgiveness for you," they twist their heads, and thou seest them turning away in arrogance. (6) It is the same for them whether thou askest forgiveness for them or thou askest not forgiveness for them; God will never forgive them. Truly God guides not iniquitous people. (7) They are the ones who say, "Do not spend on those who are with the Messenger of God, that they may disperse." Yet to God belong the treasuries of the heavens and the earth, but the hypocrites comprehend not. (8) They say, "If we return to Madinah, the mightier will surely expel the weaker therefrom." Yet unto God belongs the might and unto His Messenger and the believers, well spoken (Q). Like leaning timbers indicates that the hypocrites have no roots of their own to support them, but rely upon another structure for support. They are thus "like shapes without spirits, or bodies without minds" or like wood that has been eaten from the inside, so that the exterior seems strong but the interior is hollow (Q). The hypocrites are afraid every time they hear a battle cry, because they fear that their true nature, and in some cases their alliances with enemies, may have been discovered (JJ), in which case their oaths might be discovered to be false and thus no longer protect them. Believers are to be wary of them because their words may deceive (Q) or they may communicate believers' secrets to the disbelievers (JJ). How are they perverted? means, "How can they turn from the truth and deviate from guidance, and how can their intellects be blind to the clarity of these proofs?" (Q).

5–6 After verses such as vv. 1–4 were revealed, some Muslims enjoined the hypocrites to apologize and seek forgiveness from the Prophet. But the hypocrites mocked them and rejected their proposal (Q). Their failure to repent indicates a hardness of heart. Thus the Prophet is told in 9:80, Seek forgiveness for them, or seek not forgiveness for them. If thou seekest forgiveness for them seventy times, God will not forgive them (see also 9:113–15). For similar verses where warnings and guidance are said to be of no avail to disbelievers, see 2:7; 7:193; 26:136; 36:10. These verses remind the Prophet that he cannot guide those whom God has not guided and should leave them to God, as in 35:8: Truly God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will; so let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them.

7 These are the words of the hypocrites to the Helpers, those Muslims who had been residents of Madinah before the Prophet's emigration from Makkah. Many hypocrites thought the spoils of war that the Muslims were now enjoying derived more from the strength of the Madinan forces than from anything the Prophet or God had done for them and thus sought to keep the spoils for themselves. When they first migrated to Madinah, many of the Emigrants had been completely dependent upon the generosity of the Helpers, who provided food, shelter, clothing, fertile land, and others forms of aid, without which many Emigrants might not have survived. The newly acquired spoils of war, however, made many of the Emigrants more self-sufficient and thus altered the balance of power within Madinah, to which some of the hypocrites took exception. To God belong the treasuries of the heavens and the earth thus reminds them that it is God Who has provided all of their wealth and who provides spiritual and material benefits to whomsoever He will, whether the hypocrites spend on those who are with the Messenger or not. Elsewhere the disbelievers are reported to have said of the Prophet, Why has no treasure been sent down upon him? (11:12; see also 25:8).

8 The mightier will surely expel the weaker therefrom could also be rendered, "The more noble will expel the meaner therefrom." ʿAbd Allāh ibn but the hypocrites know not. (9) O you who believe! Let neither your property nor your children divert you from the remembrance of God. Whosoever does so, it is they who are the losers. (10) And spend of that which We have provided you before death comes upon one of you and he says, "My Lord, wouldst that Thou grant me reprieve till a term nigh, that I may give charity and be among the righteous!" (11) Yet God will not grant any soul reprieve when its term has come. And God is Aware of whatsoever you do.

Ubayy is reported to have uttered these words, arguing that he and his companions were morally superior to and physically more powerful than the Prophet and his Companions (see 63:1c). But even his son saw the folly in this position and urged him to recant his statement before returning to Madinah from the expedition. He did not, and is reported to have died soon thereafter.

9 Elsewhere the Quran cautions: It is not your wealth or your children that bring you nigh in nearness unto Us, save those who believe and work righteousness (34:37); and Wealth and children are the adornment of the life of this world, but that which endures—righteous deeds—are better in reward with thy Lord (18:46). The Day of Judgment is thus described as the Day when neither wealth nor children avail, save for him who comes to God with a sound heart (26:88–89). Those who meet the challenge, dealing justly with their worldly possessions and responsibilities, shall be rewarded, but for those who disbelieve, neither their wealth nor their children will avail them aught against God (3:10, 116). In this vein, 9:55 and 9:85 caution: And let not their wealth or their children impress thee. God desires but to punish them thereby in the life of this world, and that their souls should depart while they are disbelievers (cf. 68:10–14); see also 2:212; 3:14; 8:28; 9:69; 26:88; 60:3; 64:14–15; 68:14; 71:21. As rendered, the remembrance of God refers to the practice of ḏhikr or remembrance of God (see 13:28c; 29:45c). It could also be rendered "the reminder of God," in which case it would refer to the Quran (Q), since the Reminder is one of the names of the Quran, as in 6:90; 12:104; and 38:87, which say of the Quran: It is naught but a reminder for the worlds (see, e.g., 11:114, 120; 15:9; 16:44; 20:3, 99; 21:10, 24, 50; 36:69; 38:49; 43:44; 65:10; 68:51–52; 69:48; 73:19).

10–11 These verses are understood to indicate the need to pay the zakāh (alms) with dispatch; likewise, there should be no delay in performing any obligatory religious duties (Q). According to Ibn ʿAbbās, "Every person who has fallen short in [paying] zakāh will ask to be returned [to this world] at the moment of death" (JJ, Q), ostensibly in order to make up for failing to pay the zakāh. When its term has come refers to the moment of death, at which point the door of repentance is closed. This discussion of Divine reprieve follows directly upon the central theme of this sūrah, that is, religious hypocrisy. Although every soul is granted reprieve until the moment of death to make sincere repentance, from a Quranic perspective one should not make a calculated decision to wait until that moment to repent, as in 4:18: Repentance is accepted from those who do evil deeds till, when death confronts one of them, he says, "Truly now I repent," nor from those who die as disbelievers (see 4:17–18c). On the one hand, everyone is granted reprieve out of God's Mercy and Forgiveness, as in 35:45: Were God to take mankind to task for that which they have earned, He would not leave a single creature upon the surface of the earth. But He grants them reprieve till a term appointed (see also 14:42; 16:61). On the other hand, those who deliberately wait until the moment of death to repent and perform good deeds are granted no reprieve when one's term has come, as in the present verse, or respite, as in 2:162: The punishment shall not be lightened for them; nor shall they be granted respite (see also 3:88; 16:85; 21:40).

Mutual Dispossession

al-Taghābun

Al-Taghābun is considered by most to be Madinan, and by some to be Makkan (Āl, Q). According to a saying attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās, the entire sūrah was revealed in Makkah except the last verse (Q). Others are said to have maintained that all but vv. 14–16 are Makkan (IJ). It takes its name from the reference to the Day of Judgment as the Day of Mutual Dispossession in v. 9, a concept unique to the Quran. Al-Taghābun is the last in the group of *sūrah*s known as "The Glorifiers" (al-Musabbiḥāt), which begin with a reference to the glorification of God; the other "Glorifiers" are 57, 59, 61, and 62. Just as the previous sūrah distinguishes between the hypocrites and the believers, calling upon the hypocrites to repent, so too does this sūrah distinguish between the believers and the disbelievers, warning the disbelievers of the fate that awaits them. Both *sūrah*s end with a warning that property and children can be a source of diversion and thus of trial (63:9; 64:15) and with a reminder to spend in the way of God before being overcome by death (63:10; 64:16).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorifies God. His is the Sovereignty and His is the praise, and He is Powerful over all things. (2) He it is Who created you; among you are disbelievers and among you are believers. And God sees whatsoever you do. (3) He created the heavens and the earth in truth and formed you, then made beautiful your forms, and unto Him is the journey's end. (4) He knows whatsoever is in the heavens and the earth, and He knows what you hide and what you disclose; God knows what lies within breasts. (5) Has not the account come to you of those who disbelieved aforetime such that they tasted the evil consequences of their affair,

1 Whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorifies God also appears in 59:1; 61:1; and 62:1 (cf. 57:1; 59:24). Here, as in 24:41, 59:24, and 62:1, glorifies appears in the present tense (yusabbiḥu). In 57:1; 59:1; and 61:1, it is in the past tense (sabbaḥa), and in 87:1 it occurs as an imperative: Glorify the Name of thy Lord. According to al-Rāzī, this is to indicate that the glorification of God should be and in reality is constant in the past, present, and future: the past tense conveys glorification from the beginning of time until the present moment, the present tense conveys glorification from the present moment into the future until the end of time (as the present tense can be used to indicate the future in Arabic), and the imperative indicates glorification at the present moment (R on 61:1).

2 The whole of this verse implies that only God knows those who are truly disbelievers and those who are truly believers. According to a ḥadīth, "People are born in various degrees (ṭabaqāt). A person may be born as a believer, live as a believer, and die as a believer. A person may be born as a disbeliever, live as a disbeliever, and die as a disbeliever. [Another] person may be born as a believer, live as a believer, and die as a disbeliever. And [another] person may be born as a disbeliever, live as a disbeliever, and die as a believer" (Q). With regard to one's actions, another ḥadīth states, "A person may act like the people of the Garden as it appears to the people, though he is among the people of the Fire. And a person may act like the people of the Fire as it appears to the people, though he is among the people of the Garden" (Q).

3 The final words of He created the heavens and the earth in truth (cf. 6:73; 14:19; 16:3; 29:44; 39:5, 45:22; 46:3) may also be rendered "for truth," so that those who do evil and those who do good will be requited in accord with what they have done (Q); see 6:73c. That God made beautiful your forms can mean the human form; the inner reality of the human being, as in 95:4, Truly We created man in the most beautiful stature; or the forms of all things, as it is God Who made beautiful all that He created (32:7), and He formed you and made beautiful your forms (40:64); see 32:7c; 95:4c.

4 In this context, this verse indicates that God knows the actions, intentions, and inner thoughts of all believers and disbelievers and is able to distinguish sincerity from insincerity, as in 2:284: And whether you disclose what is in your souls or hide it, God will bring you to account for it (see also 3:29); cf. 2:77; 11:5; 16:19, 23; 36:76. That God knows what lies within breasts is repeated in 3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 67:13; see 5:7c.

5 That the disbelievers have tasted the evil consequences of their affair (cf. 5:95; 59:15; 65:9) indicates the afflictions that befell them in this life, while the painful punishment refers to the and theirs shall be a painful punishment? (6) That is because their messengers brought them clear proofs, at which they said, "Shall a human being guide us?" So they disbelieved and turned away; yet God is beyond need. And God is Self-Sufficient, Praised. (7) Those who disbelieve claim that they will not be resurrected. Say, "Yea! By my Lord! Surely you shall be resurrected. Then you shall be informed of that which you did; and that is easy for God." (8) So believe in God and His Messenger and the light We have sent down. God is Aware of whatsoever you do. (9) The day that He gathers you for the Day of Gathering, that is the Day of Mutual Dispossession. And whosoever believes in God and punishment that they will receive in the Hereafter. Those who disbelieved aforetime refers to all previous peoples who rejected the messengers that came to them with clear proofs (see 3:183–84; 7:101; 9:70; 10:13; 14:9; 30:47). Jesus, Moses, and Muhammad are most frequently cited as those who were sent with the clear proofs of revelation, but this can also be said of all the other prophets (see 9:70).

6 People's incredulousness at the idea that Divine messages would be sent through human messengers—reflected here in their question Shall a human being guide us?—is presented in the Quran as one of the constant barriers to belief, as in 17:94: And naught hindered men from believing when guidance came unto them, save that they said, "Has God sent a human being as a messenger?" (see also 6:6–9, 50, 91; 11:12, 27; 14:10–11; 21:3; 23:24, 33, 47; 26:154, 186; 36:15; 41:14; 50:2; 54:24; 74:25). This same objection is attributed to those who rejected the prophethood of Muhammad: And they say, "What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him?" (25:7). That God is Self-Sufficient could indicate that God has no need of them or no need for them to believe in Him; thus He did not compel them to believe in Him despite His ability to do so (R, Z). That God is Praised indicates that being praised is intrinsic to the Divine Nature and not dependent upon anything to praise Him (Āl), thus it is often joined with the mention of God's being Self-Sufficient (see 4:131; 14:8; 22:64; 31:12, 26; 35:15; 60:6).

7 They claim translates zaʿama, which refers to false claims of knowledge and thus indicates lying (Z). This is one of several verses where the disbelievers' denial of resurrection is made explicit (see also 6:29; 23:37; 44:35). In other verses, their rejection takes the form of amazement or disparagement, as in 37:16–17: What! When we have died and are dust and bones, are we to be resurrected, and our fathers of old? (see also 17:49; 37:53; 50:3; 56:47; 79:11). That people will be informed of their past actions is central to the Quranic understanding of the Resurrection and the Final Judgment (see 5:14, 105; 6:60, 108, 159; 9:94, 105; 10:23; 24:64; 29:8; 31:15, 23; 39:7; 41:50; 58:6–7; 62:8; 75:13); see 6:60c.

8 Here light refers primarily to the Quran (Q, R, Ṭ, Z), though it can also be understood as a reference to Divine Guidance in general. In the Quran, light is frequently associated with the guidance that comes through the prophets and revelation (see 6:91; 7:157; 21:48; 42:52; 57:9, 28), and in 9:32–33 and 61:8–9 the Quran mentions those who would try to extinguish the Light of God, which in relation to this verse could be read as an attempt to conceal Divine Revelation. According to a Shiite interpretation, in this verse light refers to ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib as the leader of the believers after the Prophet (Kā, Qm), all of the Shiite Imams, or the Imam within the hearts of the believers (Qm).

9 The Day of Gathering (cf. 42:7) refers to the Day of Resurrection, when all human beings of all generations and all jinn will be gathered on a single open, barren plain for judgment (see, e.g., works righteousness, He will absolve him of his evil deeds and cause him to enter Gardens with rivers running below, to abide therein forever. That is the great triumph. (10) And those who disbelieve and deny Our signs, they are the inhabitants of the Fire, abiding therein. What an evil journey's end! (11) No misfortune befalls, save by God's Leave. And whosoever believes in God, He guides his heart. And God is Knower of all things. (12) Obey God and obey the Messenger. Then if you turn away—only the clear proclamation is incumbent upon Our Messenger. (13) God, there is no god but He, and in God let the be-

3:25; 4:87; 6:128; 18:47; 20:106; 79:14), each community behind its prophet (see 17:71), as all living things are gathered unto their Lord in the end (6:38). It can also be seen as a reference to God's gathering together one's bones for resurrection, since one of the objections to resurrection posed by the disbelievers was to say, What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation? (17:49, 98; see also 23:35, 82; 36:78; 37:16, 53; 56:47; 75:3).

Mutual Dispossession renders taghābun, which derives from ghabana, meaning "to stint or shortchange another in a transaction" and implying an element of deception or subterfuge (Iṣ). It is most likely used as a reference to the Day of Resurrection because there is no way that human beings can fully repay the debt they owe to God. Although every soul will be paid in full for that which it has done (16:111; see also, e.g., 2:272, 281; 3:25, 57, 161, 185; 8:60; 11:15, 111), no soul can pay God in full for that which God has done. The believer is also said to be one who sells his soul seeking God's good pleasure (2:207) and one who would sell the life of this world for the Hereafter (4:74). For those who have succeeded in making this transaction, 9:111 says, Truly God has purchased from the believers their souls and their wealth in exchange for the Garden being theirs (see also 35:29). Such a transaction is so completely one-sided that one could be said to have "stinted" (ghabana) God. In addition, those who sell God's pact and their oaths for a paltry price (3:77) have stinted or shortchanged themselves by not honoring the agreement in which they were guaranteed that they would be paid in full. Thus 2:16 says of them, It is they who have purchased error at the price of guidance. Their commerce has not brought them profit, and they are not rightly guided (see also 2:175; 3:177). In contrast, those who sell their souls for God have their evil deeds absolved in this life and enter Paradise in the next; see 66:8c. Attaining the Garden is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of Paradise, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57. Regarding God's admitting people into Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c; 3:195; 5:12; 48:5.

10–11 Signs can also mean "verses," in which case v. 10 would contain a direct reference to the Quran. Together, these verses along with v. 12 are a reminder to the Prophet and his followers that no matter what they do, there are some who will continue to reject revelation, since only God can guide, as in 17:97: Whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided, and whomsoever He leads astray, thou wilt find no protectors for them apart from Him (see also 18:17).

12 Cf. 5:92. Regarding the relationship between obedience to God and obedience to the Messenger, see 3:32, 132; 4:59; 5:92; 8:1, 20, 46; 24:54, 56; 33:33; 49:14; 58:13 (see also 7:156–57; 59:7). From a Quranic perspective, to obey the Messenger is in fact to obey God, since whosoever obeys the Messenger obeys God (4:80); thus those who believe in him, honor him, help him, and follow the light that has been sent down with him, it is they who shall prosper (7:157). Prophets are only responsible for delivering the message (see 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 29:18; 36:17; 42:48), meaning that their duty is to fulfill this responsibility; the salvation or damnation of human souls is for God alone to determine.

13 Regarding the virtue of trust in God (tawakkul), see 14:11–12c; cf. 3:122, 160; 5:11; 9:51; 12:67; 14:11–12; 39:38; 58:10.

lievers trust. (14) O you who believe! Among your spouses and your children there is indeed an enemy unto you; so be wary of them. Yet if you pardon, forbear, and forgive, then truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. (15) Your property and your children are only a trial; and God—with Him is a great reward. (16) So reverence God as much as you are able. Listen, obey, and spend; that is better for your souls. And whosoever is shielded from the avarice of his soul, it is they who shall prosper. (17) If you lend unto God a goodly loan, He will multiply it for you and forgive you; and God is Thankful, Clement, (18) Knower of the Unseen and the seen, the Mighty, the Wise.

14 This verse reportedly refers to those who were prevented by their families from migrating to Madinah after they had embraced Islam. Some took pity on their own families and did not emigrate or delayed their emigration (Q, Sy, Ṭ, W). Then this verse was revealed to instruct them to be on their guard against family members who did not support them in their religion, but also not to punish them for it. For other references to the manner in which family can serve as a distraction or even hindrance in religious matters, see 3:10, 14, 116; 8:28; 9:24, 55, 69, 85; 18:39–40, 46; 23:55–56; 26:88; 34:35–37; 60:3; 63:9; 64:15; 71:21.

15 Cf. 8:28. Property and possessions are a trial insofar as one becomes overly attached to them, even a slave to them, rather than to God. In this vein a famous ḥadīth states, "Wretched is the slave of *dīnār*s. Wretched is the slave of dirhams. Wretched is the slave of fine dress. Wretched is the slave of fine cloth" (Q). Regarding the manner in which property and children can be said to be a trial, see 9:55c; 63:9c.

16 According to some, Reverence God as much as you are able was later abrogated by Reverence God as He should be reverenced (3:102; Q), in which case this verse would be seen as an incremental step toward complete reverence for God. Nonetheless, the two phrases can be seen as complementary rather than contradictory. Together, listening and obeying indicate the two necessary dispositions toward revelation, first to contemplate it and understand it, and second to act upon it by refraining from what it forbids and doing what it enjoins. Thus listening must precede obeying as contemplation must precede action. Here spend means in charity, in alms (zakāh), or upon oneself (Q). It could also be rendered, "Spend what is better for your souls" (Q), which, in relation to vv. 9 and 17, would mean that those who spend what is best will not experience "dispossession" on the Day of Judgment, as they are those who lend unto God a goodly loan (v. 17). In this context, whosoever is shielded from the avarice of his soul (cf. 59:9) indicates both a general principle and that for those who do not succumb to the trials associated with family and property (see vv. 13–15) but are able to treat them in a just and equitable manner, it is they who shall prosper; see 59:9c.

17 This verse follows upon the reference to the Day of Mutual Dispossession in v. 9. In contrast to the disbelievers, who have purchased error at the price of guidance, and punishment at the price of forgiveness (2:175), the believers sell their souls seeking God's good pleasure (see 2:207) and thus lend unto God a goodly loan (cf. 2:245; 5:12; 57:11, 18; 73:20); see 57:11c; 57:18c. The manner in which God multiplies charitable offerings is best reflected in 2:261: The parable of those who spend their wealth in the way of God is that of a grain that grows seven ears, in every ear a hundred grains. And God multiplies for whomsoever He will (see also 2:245; 4:40; 6:160). Regarding the manner in which God can be understood as Thankful, see 35:30c.

18 Regarding God as Knower of the Unseen and the seen (cf. 6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 32:6; 39:46; 59:22; 62:8), see 9:94c; 59:22c.

Divorce

al-Ṭalāq

Al-Ṭalāq is a Madinan sūrah that takes its name from the guidelines it provides for divorce. It is also known as Sūrat al-Nisāʾ al-Quṣrā, "The Shorter Sūrah Regarding Women," in juxtaposition to Sūrah 4, al-Nisāʾ, "Women" (Āl, IJ). Although divorce is permitted in Islam, a ḥadīth states, "Verily, of that which is permitted, the most abhorred by God is divorce." Nonetheless, in 33:28–29 the Prophet himself is permitted to divorce his wives.

The sūrah can be divided into two main sections. The first (vv. 1–7) provides details regarding the waiting period to be observed in cases of divorce, especially for women who are not menstruating, and the manner in which the husband is to provide for the wife, especially if she is pregnant or suckling. The second section (vv. 8–12) admonishes Muslims to observe these laws by providing reminders of previous peoples who failed to follow the laws revealed by God.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) O Prophet! When you divorce your wives, divorce them for the waiting period and count well the waiting period, and reverence your Lord. Expel them not from their houses; nor shall they depart, unless they commit a flagrant indecency. These are the limits set by God, and whosoever transgresses the limits set by God has surely wronged himself. Thou knowest not: perhaps God will bring something new to pass thereafter. (2) So when they have fulfilled their

1 Although this verse is addressed to the Prophet in the second-person singular, it is meant for the entire community (JJ). Such double signification of the second-person singular is found in several verses, such as 4:79. It is reported that the Prophet divorced his wife Ḥafṣah, and so God revealed this verse. It was said to him, "Take her back, for she is one who fasts often and stands often in night vigil, and she is one of your wives in the Garden" (Q, Ṭ, W). The waiting period refers to the three courses of menstruation discussed in 2:228. If, however, the marriage were not consummated, no waiting period would be enforced, as stipulated in 33:49: O you who believe! If you marry believing women and then divorce them before you have touched them, there shall be no waiting period for you to reckon against them. But provide for them and release them in a fair manner. In the present verse, for the waiting period can also be read to mean "during the waiting period," in which case it is understood to indicate that a man cannot divorce his wife while she is menstruating, but must wait until her menstruation is finished, as when the Prophet told ʿUmar regarding his son ʿAbd Allāh, who had declared divorce from his wife while she was menstruating, "Tell him to take her back and keep her until she is clean and then to wait till she gets her next period and becomes clean again, whereupon, if he wishes to keep her, he can do so. And if he wishes to divorce her, he can divorce her before having sexual intercourse with her; that is the prescribed waiting period that God has fixed for the women one intends to divorce" (Q). Expel them not indicates the rights that the wife continues to have over the husband, and nor shall they depart indicates the rights that the husband continues to have over the wife (Q; see 33:33), though they are no longer to engage in conjugal relations. Unless they commit a flagrant indecency indicates that a woman cannot be expelled from her house based upon a suspicion or an accusation of adultery; rather, any charges of infidelity must be properly substantiated (R) through the testimony of four trustworthy witnesses; see 4:15c. Perhaps God will bring something new to pass thereafter means that God may reconcile their hearts during the waiting period that was being observed after the first or second declaration of divorce and before the third (JJ, Q), since after the third declaration divorce is final and marital relations cannot be resumed; see 2:230c.

2 The first sentence of this verse is similar to that of 2:231. When the full period of three menstrual cycles required for a divorce to be final has passed, men may choose to reconcile with their wives and thus take them back in an honorable way, that is, out of a genuine desire to continue the marriage rather than harming them by taking them back just before the waiting period is over and then beginning the divorce process again (see 2:231c). Alternately, the divorce can be finalized in an honorable way, meaning that each party must fulfill its obligations to the other; see 2:228. If the hearts of the husband and wife are reconciled and they wish to retain the marriage bond after initiating the divorce process, they must call two witnesses; some say this is required, others that it is only recommended (Q). In this context, that God will appoint a way out for the reverent means that term, take them back in an honorable way or separate from them in an honorable way. And call two just persons among yourselves to witness and uphold the testimony for God. By this is exhorted whosoever believes in God and the Last Day. And whosoever reverences God, He will appoint a way out for him, (3) and will provide for him whence he reckons not. And whosoever trusts in God, He suffices him. Truly God fulfills His Command. God has indeed set a measure for all things. (4) As for those of your women who no longer await menstruation, if you are unsure, then their waiting period is three months, as it is for those who are yet to menstruate. But as for those who are pregnant, their term is until they deliver. And whosoever reverences God, He will appoint ease for his affair. (5) That is the Command of God that He has sent down unto you.

those who observe the requirements of divorce, despite the difficulties such requirements may entail, will be rewarded. More generally, the phrase indicates that anyone who endures an affliction patiently will be granted a way from the Fire to the Garden in the Hereafter (R).

3 This verse and the last sentence of the preceding verse were reportedly revealed in connection with a poor man who had numerous children. When he asked the Prophet for help, the Prophet told him, "Fear God, and be patient!" Not long after this, a son of this man, who had been captured by the enemy, escaped and led away many of the enemy's sheep, four thousand according to some (Q, W), one hundred according to others (R). The man went to the Prophet to ask him what he should do with the sheep. The Prophet said, "Keep them. They are yours" (Q, R, Sy, Ṭ, W), because they would technically have been spoils of war. The virtue of trusting in God is extolled throughout the Quran (see 14:11–12c). Here it is directly linked to God's set measure for all things. In this specific context, it indicates that observing the waiting period (v. 1) for divorce is part of trusting in God and of observing the measure God has established (R). More generally, it indicates complete trust in the Divine qadar, or "measuring out," as this is considered one of the tenets of faith: "Faith is to believe in God, His angels, His books, His messengers, the Day of Judgment, and al-qadar, the good of it and the evil of it"; regarding God's "measuring out," see 54:49c.

4 It is reported that the Companion Ubayy ibn Kaʿb said to the Prophet, "People say that there remain women regarding whom nothing was mentioned in the Quran, the young and those who are pregnant"; then this verse was revealed (IK, Q, W). As the three courses (see 2:228) for women who no longer menstruate or who have not yet begun to menstruate cannot be determined, they are to wait three months until the divorce is complete. If, however, their spouses have died, they are to wait four months and ten days before they may remarry (see 2:234). But those who are pregnant are to wait until they have delivered before the divorce is considered complete. If you are unsure can be seen as a clarification related to v. 1, meaning, "Expel them not from their houses if you are unsure that the [waiting] period has concluded" (Q). That God appoints ease for those who reverence Him is here understood to mean that, if a couple are mindful of these conditions, God will make it easy for them to reconcile before the divorce is complete (Q). It could also be a general recognition of the difficulties divorce entails, especially during the waiting period when the estranged spouses might continue to have regular contact with one another.

5 This verse is a reaffirmation that the above restrictions regarding the prescribed waiting period are part of the revealed Law. God covers over Whosoever reverences God, He will absolve him of his evil deeds and honor him with reward. (6) Let them dwell where you dwell according to your means, and do not harm them so as to put them in straits. And if they are pregnant, then spend on them until they deliver. Then if they are suckling for you, give them their compensation, and consult together in an honorable way. And if you have difficulty with one another, then another shall suckle for him. (7) Let one who has abundant wealth spend from his abundance. And let one whose provision is straitened spend from that which God has given him. God tasks no soul beyond that which He has given it. God will bring ease after hardship. (8) And how many a town insolently defied the Command of its Lord and His messengers, such that We called it to a severe reckoning and punished it with a terrible punishment! (9) Then did it taste the evil consequences of its affair, and the end evil deeds through good deeds, which wipe away evil deeds (Aj); see 66:8c.

6 During the prescribed waiting period, men are to continue to provide for their wives as they provided for them while married. Some argue that this verse means only that shelter must be provided, while others maintain that the man must also continue to spend for the woman's provision (Q). If the woman is pregnant and the divorce is irrevocable, the man must continue to provide for her until she gives birth and as long as she suckles the child, usually a period of two full years (for the conditions pertaining to suckling, see 2:233). Consult together in an honorable way regarding the care of the child, so that no mother be harmed on account of her child, nor father on account of his child (2:233). Some say that the present verse means that the man must pay for the provisions of the mother and the child, others that he must pay only for the provisions of the child (Q). If they are not able to reach an agreement because either the father withholds payment or the mother refrains from suckling, the mother should not be compelled to do so, and another woman can be chosen to suckle the child (JJ). Providing for the suckling child is said to be the responsibility of husbands, because they are legally obligated to provide for all of their children's needs. Regarding the legal status of "milk relations," see 4:23c.

7 Some interpret this verse to mean that the amount paid by the husband to his former wife depends upon both her needs and his circumstances, while others maintain that the amount the wife must be paid is to be limited to her immediate needs (Q). This verse is also viewed as evidence for the position that the husband is solely responsible for providing provisions for the child whether the couple is married or divorced (Q). The last sentence indicates that if one finds it difficult to meet these obligations, God will ease one's circumstances, either in this life by providing additional means or in the Hereafter by easing one's way into the Garden for striving to observe the Command of God even when it was difficult. Regarding the relationship between hardship and ease, see 94:5–6c.

8–9 Given the extent to which the rulings regarding the treatment of divorced wives outlined in vv. 1–7 and in 2:222–37 differed from those of pre-Islamic times, these verses remind the Muslims of the dire consequences of failing to follow God's Law. The severe reckoning can be seen as a reference to the punishment they receive in this world and the terrible punishment as that of the Hereafter (Q). They tasted the consequences of disbelief (Q), and regretted their actions when regret was no longer of any benefit to them (IK). Similar warnings regarding following God's of its affair was loss. (10) God prepared a severe punishment for them. So reverence God, O possessors of intellect, who have believed. God has certainly sent down unto you a reminder: (11) a Messenger reciting unto you the clear signs of God to bring those who believe and perform righteous deeds out of darkness into light. And whosoever believes in God and works righteousness, He causes him to enter Gardens with rivers running below, to abide therein forever. God has indeed prepared for him a beautiful provision. (12) God it is Who created the seven heavens, and from the earth the like thereof. The Command descends among them, that you may know that God is Powerful over all things and that God has encompassed all things in knowledge.

Command and observing the limits He sets are issued after the revelation of the inheritance verses, which were also controversial for some because of the unprecedented rights they gave to women; see commentary on 4:11–14.

10 Possessors of intellect (2:179, 197, 269; 3:7, 190; 5:100; 12:111; 13:19; 14:52; 38:29, 43; 39:9, 18, 21; 40:54) indicates those who possess true knowledge of the inner essence of things; see 5:100c; 39:9c. A reminder is read by most as a reference to the Quran, but in relation to v. 11 it could also be seen as a reference to the Prophet (IK, Q).

11 Bringing the believers out of darkness into light (cf. 2:257; 5:16; 14:1, 5; 33:43; 57:9) indicates bringing them from disbelief and ignorance to belief and knowledge (IK), a function ascribed to scripture in general in 42:52: Thou knewest not what scripture was, nor faith. But We made it a light whereby We guide whomsoever We will among Our servants (see also 5:16c; 14:1c). Here the phrase can also be understood as a reference to the Prophet bringing people from darkness into light, as in 14:1: [This is] a Book that We have sent down unto thee, that thou mightest bring mankind out of darkness into light, by the leave of their Lord. Regarding God's admitting people into Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c; 3:195; 5:12; 48:5; 64:9.

12 The creation of seven heavens is referred to elsewhere (e.g., 2:29; 17:44; 23:86; 41:12; 67:3; 71:15; 78:12), but this is the only verse to allude to seven earths or lands, which is supported by a ḥadīth: "Whosoever usurps a span of land unjustly, it will encircle his neck on the Day of Resurrection from the seven earths" (Q). When viewed in light of this ḥadīth, this verse is understood to mean seven lands "one upon another" (Mw, Q), just as the seven heavens are described in 67:3 and 71:15. But the seven earths or lands can also be understood as a reference not to seven levels, but to seven lands spread across the earth (Q), hence to the seven continents or climes. In this vein, Ibn ʿAbbās reportedly said regarding this verse, "Were I to tell you of the interpretation of it, you would disbelieve, and your disbelief would be your denial of it" (Ṭ). He is also reported to have said, "Seven lands: in each land there is a prophet like your prophet, and an Adam like Adam, and a Noah like Noah, and an Abraham like Abraham, and a Jesus like Jesus" (IK, Ṭ). In this sense, the Command descends among them can be seen as an allusion to the universality of revelation, as in 16:36: We indeed sent a messenger unto every community.

Forbiddance

Likely from the year 7/629, al-Taḥrīm is a Madinan sūrah, although a minority maintain that only the first nine verses are Madinan and that the last three are Makkan (Āl). It takes its name from the opening verse, in which the Prophet is told not to forbid for himself what God has permitted for him. Along these lines, it is also known as Lima tuḥarrimu, "Why Dost Thou Forbid?" (Āl), and as al-Mutaḥḥaram, "The Forbidden" (al-Suyūṭī, Itqān). Since it directly addresses the Prophet's family situation, it is also known as Sūrat al-Nabī, "The Sūrah of the Prophet" (Āl, Z).

Whereas the first half of the previous sūrah provides details for divorce pertaining to all women, the subject of this sūrah is the relationship between the Prophet and his wives (vv. 1–5). This is followed by injunctions instructing the believers on how to protect themselves and repent (vv. 6, 8), warning the disbelievers of their fate (v. 7), and enjoining the Prophet to strive against those who do not accept the revelation (v. 9). The final verses (vv. 10–12) provide examples of believing and disbelieving women. In providing examples of women whose state of virtue stood in stark contrast to that of their husbands, it demonstrates that everyone, even the wives of the Prophet, is responsible for the state of his or her own soul. In this way it complements Sūrah 60, al-Mumtaḥanah, the last verses of which emphasize the manner in which women made their own pledge with the Prophet.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) O Prophet! Why dost thou forbid that which God has made lawful unto thee, seeking the good pleasure of thy wives? And God is Forgiving, Merciful. (2) God has already ordained for you the absolution of your oaths. And God is your Master. He is the Knower, the Wise. (3) When the Prophet confided a certain matter to one of his wives, but she divulged it, and God showed it to him, he made known part of it and held back part of it. When he informed her of it, she said, "Who informed thee of this?" He replied, "The Knower, the Aware informed me." (4) If you both repent unto God . . . For your hearts did certainly incline, and if you aid one another against him, then truly God, He

1 This verse was reportedly revealed after the Prophet had sworn to his wife Ḥafṣah that he would no longer have intimate relations with his Coptic slave girl, Māriyah. The Prophet had been intimate with Māriyah in Ḥafṣah's apartment on Ḥafṣah's day (the Prophet's wives rotated, each having one day with him in turn). When Ḥafṣah became upset, the Prophet asked her to tell no one of it and then told Māriyah that she was forbidden to him, after which this verse and the following verses were revealed (Q, Sy, Ṭ, W), according to some after a period of twenty-one days (W). According to others, this verse was revealed after the Prophet forbade a certain beverage to himself that God had not forbidden, though it could apply to any instance in which the Prophet might have forbidden something that was permitted to him (Ṭ), an error that all Muslims are counseled to avoid, as in 5:87: O you who believe! Forbid not the good things that God has made lawful unto you (see also 6:140).

2 The absolution for breaking oaths is found in 5:89: the feeding of ten indigent people with the equivalent of that which you feed your own family, or clothing them, or fasting three days if one does not have the means to feed and clothe others. According to some commentators, in this instance the Prophet made expiation for going back on the oath not to be intimate with Māriyah by freeing a slave (JJ). Others maintain that, as God had absolved him of the oath, there was no need for expiation (JJ).

3 She divulged it refers to Ḥafṣah's telling ʿĀʾishah, another of the Prophet's wives, of the Prophet's intimacy with Māriyah in Ḥafṣah's apartment, though the Prophet had requested that Ḥafṣah say nothing of it. When he asked her if she had spoken of the matter, she denied doing so (W). The Prophet then informed Ḥafṣah of some of what she had divulged and passed over some of it out of kindness toward her (JJ, Ṭs), or else God informed the Prophet of some of it and passed over some of it.

4 You both is an address to Ḥafṣah and ʿĀʾishah. The response to the elided conditional phrase if you both repent unto God is understood to be "it will be accepted of both of you" (JJ). Their hearts inclined to the prohibition of Māriyah (JJ), thus to the Prophet's prohibiting what God had made licit. That their hearts inclined is understood by some to mean that they swerved or deviated from the truth (Q, Ṭ). If the two wives were to aid one another in continuing to oppose the Prophet and thus failing to repent, this verse informs them, they would then be opposing the side of God, the believers, and the angels, all of whom assist the Prophet against those who harm him (Ṭ). The righteous among the believers is taken as a reference to ʿUmar and Abū Bakr, who were the fathers of Ḥafṣah and ʿĀʾishah, respectively; is his Protector, as are Gabriel and the righteous among the believers; and the angels support him withal. (5) It may be that if he divorces you, his Lord would give him wives in your stead who are better than you, submitting, believing, devoutly obedient, penitent, worshipping, and given to wayfaring—previously married, and virgins. (6) O you who believe! Shield yourselves and your families from a Fire whose fuel is men and stones, over which are angels, stern and severe, who do not disobey God in what He commands of them and who do what they are commanded. (7) O you who disbelieve! Make no excuses this day! You are only requited for that which you used to do. (8) O you who believe! Repent to the best among the believers (Ṭ, Ṭs, Ṭū); or to the prophets (Ṭ, Ṭs). In Shiite commentaries, it is understood as a reference to ᶜAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib (Qm, Ṭs, Ṭū), and it is reported that the Prophet took ᶜAlī by the hand and said, "O people! This one is the righteous among the believers" (Ṭs).

5 This verse is addressed to the Prophet's wives, chastising them for succumbing to jealousy and forcing the Prophet to forbid what God had permitted. It can also be taken in a broader sense as a reminder to all believers to honor their spouses. Submitting translates muslimāt, indicating submission and thus humility before God (Ṭ). Devoutly obedient (qānit) indicates spiritual and religious obedience and conveys constancy and serenity (see 4:34c). In the Quran, words derived from the root q-n-t relate exclusively to obedience toward and worship of God, not obedience to human beings (cf. 2:116, 238; 3:17, 43; 4:34; 16:120; 33:31, 35; 39:9). Given to wayfaring translates sāʾiḥāt, which in this context would refer to those given to emigrating for the sake of their religion (JJ, Ṭ). From another perspective, it could indicate those who travel the spiritual path. Sāʾiḥāt can also mean "given to fasting," which in this context is interpreted to have a broader meaning, that of preserving one's limbs from any disobedient acts (Iṣ). Although more commentators seem to interpret it to mean "given to fasting," such interpretations may arise from later attempts to limit the roles of women; see 9:112c.

6 Shield yourselves and your families by being obedient and reverent and enjoining obedience and reverence to God (Ṭ). This is the only verse in which believers are told to shield themselves from the Fire; in other verses it is the believers who call upon God to shield them from the punishment of the Fire (see 3:16, 191; 40:7). Here stones likely refers to the idols worshipped by the idolaters, as they were made of stone (JJ) or were in fact stones. The angels referred to here are the guardians of Hell, of whom the Quran says there are nineteen (74:30).

7 This verse is a direct address to the disbelievers as they enter the Fire (JJ). This day thus refers to the Day of Resurrection (Ṭ). You are only requited for that which you used to do (cf. 52:16) indicates that God is just in punishing souls and wrongs no one, as in 45:22: God created the heavens and the earth in truth, and so that every soul may be recompensed for that which it has earned; and they shall not be wronged (see also 27:90; 34:33; 37:39; 83:36). When people see the reality of their deeds on the Day of Resurrection, it is said that they will know the truth and thus not try to make any excuses for their actions, as in 67:10–11.

8 Repent unto God can also mean "turn unto God," indicating turning from sin to obedience to God (Ṭ). Sincere repentance indicates that it is not a mere turning away from sin, but turning with true contrition, so that one never returns to the sin of which one has repented (Ṭ) and resolves not to commit the sin again. It may be translates ᶜasā, which conveys a sense of hope. In line with this verse, a ḥadīth says, "O people! Repent unto your Lord before you die, and draw yourselves nigh unto God with sincere repentance. It may be that your Lord will absolve you of your evil deeds and cause you to enter Gardens with rivers running below—the Day when God will not disgrace the Prophet and those who believe with him, with their light spreading before them and on their right, while they say, "Our Lord, complete our light for us and forgive us. Truly Thou art Powerful over all things." (9) O Prophet! Strive against the disbelievers and the hypocrites, and be harsh with them. Their refuge is Hell. What an evil journey's end! (10) God sets forth as an example for those who disbelieve the wife of Noah and the wife of Lot. They were under two of Our righteous servants; then they betrayed unto Him with righteous deeds before you become preoccupied"; also see 3:193. That God will absolve human beings of their evil deeds is asserted in several verses. In some, as here, such absolution is linked to reverence for God (8:29; 5:65; 65:5); in others it is linked to faith and belief (29:7; 47:2; 48:5; 64:9). In 4:31 absolution from evil deeds is said to be the reward for repenting and then shunning major sins, while in other verses such absolution is linked with specific deeds, such as performing charitable acts in secret (2:271), fighting or being slain in the way of God (3:195), or performing prayer and giving alms (zakāh; 5:12). In general such absolution indicates the manner in which God shields those of faith from the evil consequences of their own actions in both this life and the Hereafter (see 40:9, 45; 42:25): God may absolve them of the worst of that which they have done and render unto them their reward for the best of that which they used to do (39:35; see also 9:121; 16:96; 24:38; 29:7; 46:16). Such absolution is thus linked with God's admitting people into Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c; 3:195; 5:12; 48:5; 64:9.

Regarding their light spreading before them and on their right, see 57:12c. The supplication at the end of the verse is understood as the words uttered by the believers when they see God extinguish the light of the hypocrites (Q, R); see commentary on 57:13–14. According to Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, God completes their light for them, but they continue to call upon God, seeking to draw nearer unto Him (R).

9 This verse is identical to 9:73. In this context, strive against the disbelievers is understood to mean with the sword as well as through preaching and calling them to God (Q), while strive against . . . the hypocrites is understood to mean by applying the legal punishments for their transgressions (Q, Ṭ).

10–12 These last three verses speak to the situation of the Prophet's wives by providing examples of disbelievers from among the wives of previous prophets and examples of the most pious women in the history of the Judeo-Christian-Islamic tradition. They also provide an example for all believers by demonstrating that the righteousness of another does not benefit one who works corruption and the corruption of another does not harm one who is righteous (R).

10 They betrayed them; that is, they both betrayed their husbands. Lot's wife's betrayal of him is alluded to in several verses (7:83; 11:81; 15:60; 27:57; 29:32), but this is the only explicit Quranic reference to Noah's wife's betrayal. Their lives are an example because they demonstrate that marriage to a prophet did not assure salvation; and in the case of Lot's wife it did not protect her from being punished with the other disbelievers when Sodom was destroyed (see 7:83; 11:81; 15:59–60; 26:170–71; 27:57; 29:32; 54:34; cf. Genesis 19:26). Noah's wife is reported to have said to the people that he was a madman (JJ, R), while Lot's wife is reported to have told the people the whereabouts of Lot's guests, whom they sought to molest (JJ, R).

them, and they availed them naught against God. And it was said unto both, "Enter the Fire with those who enter." (11) And God sets forth as an example for those who believe the wife of Pharaoh when she said, "My Lord, build for me a house near unto Thee in the Garden, deliver me from Pharaoh and his deeds, and deliver me from the wrongdoing people," (12) and Mary, the daughter of ᶜImrān, who preserved her chastity. Then We breathed therein of Our Spirit, and she confirmed the Words of her Lord and His Books; and she was among the devoutly obedient.

11 In contrast to the wives of Noah and Lot, who were sinners despite being married to righteous men, Pharaoh's wife Āsiyah was righteous despite being married to the greatest of sinners. Āsiyah is said to be one of four women who were pure of sin regarding whom the Prophet is reported to have said, "The best among the women of the Garden are Khadījah bint Khuwaylid, Fāṭimah bint Muhammad, Maryam bint ᶜImrān, and Āsiyah bint Muzāḥim, the wife of Pharaoh" (IK). According to commentators, Āsiyah was tortured by Pharaoh for believing in Moses, at which time she uttered the words attributed to her in this verse and was taken to Paradise (IK, JJ, R). The Prophet is also reported to have said, "Verily in the Garden God has married me to Mary bint ᶜImrān, the wife of Pharaoh, and the sister of Moses" (Āl).

12 And Mary follows upon the wife of Pharaoh from v. 11, meaning that she is also set forth as an example for those who believe (Āl). For the story of Jesus' mother, Mary, see Sūrah 19. ᶜImrān is the name of Mary's father, who is not named in the Bible but is known in extra-Biblical literature as Joachim (see commentary on 3:33–35). She preserved her chastity (cf. 21:91) is in part a response to the accusations of being unchaste that Mary's people made against her (R); see 19:27–28. Some read Our Spirit here and in 21:91 as a reference to the Angel Gabriel (IK, JJ, Ṭ), while others say Our Spirit refers to a spirit among the spirits God has created, which would here be the spirit of Jesus (Q; for the debates regarding this issue, see 4:171c). Taken most literally, it would refer to the Spirit of God. That she confirmed the Words of her Lord and His Books means that she believed in all previous revelations (R). Regarding devoutly obedient, see 66:5c; 4:34c. Here the last phrase could also mean "she was from the devoutly obedient," thus indicating purity of lineage (Āl).

Sovereignty

al-Mulk

Although there are no definitive accounts as to when al-Mulk was revealed, most consider it to be from the middle of the Makkan period. In the sayings attributed to the Prophet, it is called by the first word, Tabāraka, meaning "Blessed," or by the first few words, Tabāraka al-ladhī bi yadihi 'l-mulk, "Blessed Is He in Whose Hand Lies Sovereignty." It is also known as al-Māniᶜ, meaning "The Shield" or "The Protector," after a famous ḥadīth: "Sūrah Tabāraka is a shield (māniᶜ) from the punishment of the grave." According to some it was also known as al-Munjiyah, "The Savior," after another ḥadīth: "Verily, there is a sūrah in the Quran which contains thirty verses that will intercede on behalf of one who recites it until he is forgiven: Blessed is He in Whose Hand lies sovereignty" (IK, Ṭs). Another ḥadīth states, "There is a sūrah of the Quran which is but thirty verses that will argue on behalf of its companion until it causes him to enter the Garden: Blessed is He in Whose Hand lies sovereignty" (IK).

Based upon such aḥādīth and upon several sayings of the Companions of the Prophet, it is believed that one who recites this sūrah will be spared from trials in both this life and the next. It is also reported that the Prophet said regarding al-Mulk, "I would love for it to be in the heart of every person among my community" (IK, Sy). Consequently, this is one of the best-known and most frequently recited sūrahs of the Quran.

The sūrah begins with an attestation to God's omnipotence and the perfection of creation (vv. 1–4), followed by an assertion of the inability of the jinn to penetrate the heavens (v. 5). The dreadful ends of those who deny God's messengers (vv. 6–11) are contrasted with the final ends of those who fear God (v. 12). God's omnipotence and omniscience is then reasserted through a series of interposed statements and rhetorical questions (vv. 13–24), and the sūrah concludes with a series of questions that the Prophet is told to pose to those who question him regarding the end of time (vv. 25–30).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Blessed is He in Whose Hand lies sovereignty, and He is Powerful over all things, (2) Who created death and life that He may try you as to which of you is most virtuous in deed, and He is the Mighty, the Forgiving, (3) Who created seven heavens one upon another; no disproportion dost thou see in the Merciful's creation. Cast thy sight again; dost thou see any flaw? (4) Then

1 Sovereignty translates mulk, a word closely related to malakūt, which is rendered dominion in 36:83; they derive from the same root, m-l-k, which in verbal form means "to possess," "to control," "to rule," or "to reign." According to some, malakūt refers to God's Lordship over the unseen realm, while mulk refers to God's Lordship over the visible world. The Divine Name Mālik ("Master") also derives from this root, as does the word for "king" (malik) and the most widely used word for "angels" (malāʾikah; sing. malak); for more on these terms and their use in Islamic cosmology, see 36:83c.

2 God's creation of life and death is often understood as His granting existence to what is nonexistent, as in 2:28: How can you disbelieve in God, seeing that you were dead and He gave you life? (IK). That the mention of death precedes life in this verse can be seen as an indication that God has created death for human beings in relation to this world, for every soul shall taste death (3:185; 21:35; 29:57), and life in relation to both this life and the Hereafter (Q). As a ḥadīth states, "God has humbled the son of Adam with death, and has made the world an abode of life, then an abode of death, and made the Hereafter an abode of recompense (jazāʾ), then an abode of eternal abiding (baqāʾ)" (IK, Q, Sy). Regarding the second half of the verse, see 18:7: Surely We made whatsoever is on the earth an adornment for it, that We may try them as to which of them is most virtuous in deed (see also 11:7). That God tries human beings is not considered unjust, for as other verses say, God tasks no soul beyond its capacity (2:286; see also 2:233; 6:152; 7:42; 23:62), and thy Lord wrongs no one (18:49). Trials are considered an aspect of God's Mercy, since they are an integral part of the process of purification. When asked which human beings suffer the greatest trials, the Prophet answered, "The prophets, then those most like them. A person is tested according to the level of his faith. If his faith is firm, his trials increase in severity, and if there is weakness in his faith, he will be tried accordingly." With regard to trials faced by believers, another ḥadīth says, "No fatigue, disease, sorrow, sadness, hurt, or distress befalls a Muslim—even if he be pricked by a thorn—but that God expiates some of his sins thereby." In this sense, affliction can be a blessing for the opportunities it presents; another ḥadīth says, "If God wants to do good to somebody, He afflicts him with trials." Conversely, wealth can be a curse for those who do not manage it properly, as in 9:85: And let not their wealth or their children impress thee. God desires only to punish them thereby in this world, and that their souls should depart while they are disbelievers. Thus one is tried both by affliction, in the face of which one must be patient, and by blessings, for which one must be thankful, recognizing that God is Powerful over all things (v. 1). Several early commentators note the significance of the fact that the verse says most virtuous in deed rather than "most accomplished" or simply "most" (IK), a position that reflects the emphasis upon intention found throughout the Quran and Ḥadīth. As the Prophet says in one of the most famous of aḥādīth, "Deeds are only in accord with their intentions. And every person has only what he intended." It is said that upon reciting this sūrah the Prophet stopped when he reached which of you is most virtuous in deed and said, "The most wary of what God has forbidden and the quickest to obey God" (Āl, Q).

3–4 The heavens can be seen as a reference only to the heavens, the whole of the created cast thy sight twice again; thy sight will return to thee humbled and wearied. (5) Truly We have adorned the lowest heaven with lamps and made them missiles against the satans; and We have prepared for them the punishment of the Blaze. (6) And for those who disbelieve in their Lord is the punishment of Hell. What an evil journey's end! (7) When they are cast therein, they will hear it blaring as it boils over, (8) well-nigh bursting with rage. Whenever a group is cast therein, its keepers ask them, "Did not a warner come unto you?" (9) They say, "Indeed, a warner came unto us, but we denied him and said, 'God did not order, or the universal levels or grades of existence, the last of which serves as a basis for various hierarchical cosmological schemes in some commentaries. Disproportion translates tafāwut, which here indicates something that lacks proportion or balance such that parts of it fail to connect with other parts of it (R, Z); thus some say it has the same meaning as rifts in 50:6: Have they not looked upon the sky above them, how We built it and adorned it, and [how it] has no rifts? The lack of disproportion can be understood as the absence of rifts between the seven heavens or more generally as an indication that there are no gaps in God's creation. As several verses indicate, all things are created in truth, as in 44:38–39: And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in play. We did not create them, save in truth. But most of them know not (see also 6:73; 10:5; 14:19; 15:85; 16:3; 29:44; 30:8; 39:5; 45:22; 46:3). That the eye returns humbled could also mean that an eye that tries to find defect returns "humiliated" or "debased" (IK). This verse is also related to 4:82, which maintains that for one who contemplates the Quran no discrepancy will be found in it.

5 According to a famous saying attributed to Qatādah, one of the foremost commentators from the third generation of Muslim scholars, "The creation of the stars is for three things: decoration of the nearest heaven, missiles to hit the satans, and signs to guide travelers" (IK, Ṭ). The first two functions are mentioned in this verse. It is said that the function of meteors or shooting stars is to bar the satans from listening to the secrets of Heaven, to which they had previously enjoyed access; see 15:16–18; 37:6–10c; 72:8–9c, as well as the introduction to Sūrah 72.

6 This verse can be seen as a general warning against all forms of disbelief. But in relation to the discussion of satans in v. 5, it is said to apply to those who would seek information from fortune-tellers and sorcerers as an alternative to religion. As a ḥadīth says of this practice, "Whosoever comes to a fortune-teller (kāhin) or diviner (ʿarrāf) and considers what he says to be true has disbelieved in what was revealed to Muhammad."

7–8 These verses refer to the hideous sound that Hellfire is said to make as the disbelievers are dragged into its depths. It is similar to the sound described in 25:12: When it sees them from a place far off, they will hear its raging and roaring. Its keepers refers to the angels serving as the gatekeepers of Hell, who are described elsewhere as angels, stern and severe, who do not disobey God in what He commands of them and who do what they are commanded (66:6). They number nineteen in 74:30–31, and the main keeper is identified as Mālik in 43:77–78: And they will call, "O Mālik, let thy Lord put an end to us." He will reply, "You will surely remain. We did indeed bring you the Truth, but most of you were averse to the Truth." Their question to the disbelievers, Did not a warner come unto you? is by way of reproach, for as 35:24 states, There has been no community but that a warner has passed among them.

9 As many verses attest, God promises that none will be punished unless they have been sent a clear warner, part of the test alluded to in v. 2. As 17:15 states, And never do We punish till We have sent a messenger.

send anything down; you are in naught but great error.'" (10) They say, "Had we listened or had we understood, we would not be among the inhabitants of the Blaze." (11) Thus do they admit their sin; so away with the inhabitants of the Blaze! (12) Truly for those who fear their Lord unseen there shall be forgiveness and a great reward. (13) Keep your speech secret or proclaim it; truly He knows what lies within breasts. (14) Does He Who created not know? He is the Subtle, the Aware. (15) He is the One Who made the earth tractable for you; so travel

10–11 On the Day of Judgment, all will see the truth. Those who denied it in this life will thus realize that they had been astray and admit the error of their ways, though it will be of no avail against the punishment of the Fire; as 4:18 says, Repentance is not accepted from those who do evil deeds till, when death confronts one of them, he says, "Truly now I repent," nor from those who die as disbelievers. For those We have prepared a painful punishment. In a similar verse, the disbelievers even bear witness that they deserve Hellfire, saying, "Yea, indeed!" But the Word of punishment has come due for the disbelievers (39:71). The door of repentance is thus open until the moment of death. As a ḥadīth states, "God will accept the repentance of His servant until his death rattle"; see 4:17–18c.

12 Cf. 36:11; 50:33. Some verses indicate that the fear of God is incumbent upon all believers, as in 3:175: So fear them not, but fear Me, if you are believers. To fear God unseen can be interpreted as a reference to worshipping God, Who is unseen, or as a reference to worshipping God in seclusion (IK, Q, Sh, Ṭs). The former interpretation sees one as worshipping God because one fears the punishment, even though one does not see the punishment. The latter implies a deeper level of devotion and reverence in which one fears to displease God because of the depth of one's love for God, and thus refrains from any acts of disobedience both in public and in private. In a famous ḥadīth, one of seven categories of people said to be "shaded by God on the Day wherein there will be no shade other than His shade" is "a person who remembers God while alone and his eyes flow [with tears]" (IK). The great reward refers to Paradise (Q, Sh) and is also taken to imply that the delights of this world become small in the eyes of those who fear God (Bḍ).

13 According to Ibn ʿAbbās, this verse was revealed about the idolaters who would slander the Prophet and say to one another, "Lower your voices, lest Muhammad's God hear you" (Q, W). As God overhears all, the Prophet advised his followers, "Whosoever believes in God and the Last Day, let him speak well or be silent." That God knows what lies within breasts (3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4) indicates that God is aware of the intentions behind all deeds and all inner thoughts. It does not, however, mean that one is accountable for all that one thinks unless that thought is put into action. In this vein, another ḥadīth states, "For my community God passes over that which arises within their souls, so long as they do not speak of it or act upon it."

14 This verse could also be read, "Does He not know whom He has created, though He is the Subtle, the Aware?" (IK, Q). The idea expressed both in this reading and in the translation is further explained by 50:16: We did indeed create man, and We know what his soul whispers to him; and We are nearer to him than his jugular vein. If read as a reference to the disbeliever's ignorance of God, a third reading could be, "Does he not know Who creates, though He is the Subtle, the Aware?" Of the several Divine Names that refer to God's Omniscience, the Aware refers in particular to God's Knowledge of things before they come into existence (Q). In contrast, the Subtle refers to God's Knowledge of the minutest details. The Subtle renders al-Laṭīf, which can also mean "the Kind"; see 42:19c.

15 The beginning of this verse is similar to part of what Noah says to his people in 71:19–20: And God made the earth an open expanse for you, that you may travel spacious paths therein (see the open roads thereof and eat of His provision. And unto Him is the Resurrection. (16) Do you feel secure that He Who is in Heaven will not cause the earth to engulf you while it churns? (17) Or do you feel secure that He Who is in Heaven will not unleash a torrent of stones upon you? Soon shall you know how My warning is. (18) And indeed those before them denied. How, then, was the change I wrought! (19) Have they not considered the birds above them, spreading and folding up [their wings]? None holds them save the Compassionate. Truly He sees all things. (20) Who is it that will be a host for you, who may help you, apart from the Compassionate? The disbelievers are in naught but delusion. (21) Who is it that will provide for you if He withholds His provialso 20:53; 21:31; 43:10). The command to travel or journey upon the earth and reflect upon the nature of the created order is a frequent refrain in the Quran. It is usually mentioned in relation to the transience of life (cf. 3:137; 6:11; 12:109; 16:36; 27:69; 30:9; 30:42; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:10), but is also mentioned in relation to understanding the nature of God's creative power, as in 29:20: Journey upon the earth and observe how He originated creation. Then God shall bring the next genesis into being. Truly God is Powerful over all things. The exhortation to travel or journey is thus an exhortation to reflect and contemplate, so that the heart may open to the truth, as in 22:46: Have they not journeyed upon the earth, that they might have hearts by which to understand or ears by which to hear? Truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind.

16 Cf. 16:45: Do those who have plotted evil deeds feel secure that God will not cause the earth to engulf them, or that the punishment will not come upon them whence they are not aware? (see also 17:68–69). In 28:76–82 and 29:39–40 the story is told of Korah, who possessed great wealth, but was nonetheless engulfed by the earth as a punishment for oppressing the people.

17 Cf. 17:68. This verse is an allusion to the punishment sent upon the people of Lot (see 29:40; 54:34), and upon the masters of the elephant (105:1), who are said to have attempted to destroy the Kaʿbah just forty years before the beginning of Islam; see the introduction to Sūrah 105. The last phrase could also be read "how my warner is," as a reference to the Prophet, meaning that the disbelievers will know his truthfulness and the punishment they deserve for denying him, as did those mentioned in vv. 8–11.

18 How, then, was the change I wrought! (cf. 22:44; 34:45; 35:26) could also be rendered, "How, then, was My reproach!" Both translations indicate that the punishment will be as severe as what befell the generations before; see 22:42–45c.

19 Cf. 16:79: Have they not considered the birds, made subservient, in midair? None holds them save God. Truly in that are signs for a people who believe. In this vein, a ḥadīth states, "Were you to trust in God as He merits, He would provide for you as He provides for the birds; they depart with empty stomachs and return full" (IK).

20 The idolaters of Makkah are said to have claimed that their gods would protect them from the punishments like those mentioned in vv. 17–18 and elsewhere. But as 36:75 says, They cannot help them, though they be a host made ready for them. Satan deluded them into thinking that they would be helped, but he then admits to this delusion on the Day of Judgment, saying, Verily God made you the Promise of truth; and I made you a promise, but I failed you. And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves. I cannot respond to your cries for help; nor can you respond to my cries for help (14:22).

21 This is similar to 16:73: And they worship, apart from God, that which has no power over any provision that may come for them from the heavens sion? Nay, but they persist in insolence and aversion. (22) Is one who walks with his face stooped down more guided, or one who walks upright upon a straight path? (23) Say, "He it is Who brought you into being and endowed you with hearing, sight, and hearts. Little do you give thanks!" (24) Say, "He it is Who multiplied you upon the earth, and unto Him shall you be gathered." (25) And they say, "When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful?" (26) Say, "Knowledge lies with God alone, and I am only a clear warner." (27) And when they see it close at hand, the faces of those who disbelieved shall be stricken, and and the earth, nor are they capable [of such]. That God is the provider of all sustenance is a constant theme of the Quran. Human beings are thus enjoined to recognize that nothing truly belongs to them and to spend in charity from what God has provided them.

22 One who walks with his face stooped down is seen as a metaphor for disbelievers, who do not look at the path ahead, to the right, or to the left in this life (Q, Ṭs) and thus do not consider the full reality of their state; rather, they are focused only upon petty desires and immediate concerns. It is also seen as a reference to the state of disbelievers in the Hereafter; as 25:34 says, they are those who are gathered upon their faces to Hell, their place is worse and they are further astray from the way. In contrast, believers are said to walk upright, so that they see and are not beset by afflictions that would cause them to go astray.

23 Cf. 23:78; 32:9. The gifts of hearing, sight, and heart are mentioned together in several verses, and human beings are exhorted to reflect upon these gifts (see 16:78); in 17:36 it is said that these three gifts will be called to account, meaning that one will be held accountable for their proper or improper use. The ingratitude stems from an illness in human beings' hearts, for truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind (22:46).

24 God has distributed human beings throughout the various regions of the earth and given them different languages, colors, shapes, appearances, and forms (IK). Other verses also call upon human beings to reflect upon the diversity of races and tribes (see 5:48; 49:13). And although God has spread human beings, with their different creeds and colors, throughout the habitable earth, He will gather them all together on a single plain on the Day of Judgment, which is also known as the Day of Gathering (64:9).

26 That knowledge of the end of time lies only with God is mentioned in several Quranic verses (see 7:187; 31:34; 33:63; 41:47; 43:85; 79:42–46) and in Biblical passages such as Mark 13:31–32: "Heaven and earth will pass away, but my words will not pass away. But about that day or hour no one knows, neither the angels in heaven, nor the Son, but only the Father." In this vein, the Prophet is told to say, I am only a clear warner, in several verses (22:49; 29:50; 38:70; 46:9; also see 27:92), while in other verses God addresses the Prophet, Thou art but a warner (13:7; 79:45), and Thou art naught but a warner (35:23).

27 It refers to the Final Hour or to the Day of Judgment. Their faces will be stricken because the evils of that which they have earned will appear unto them, and that which they used to mock will beset them (39:48). That for which you called is the promise of Judgment that they questioned in v. 25 and that they sought to hasten (Ṭ). Several other passages indicate that those who do not believe in the punishment seek to hasten the Judgment; e.g., 42:18: Those who do not believe in it would seek to hasten it (see also 6:57–59; 10:48–51; 26:200–207; 27:71–72; 29:53–54; 46:22–24; 51:12–14). In this vein, it is said that Qatādah related v. 27 to 8:32: And [remember] when they said, "O God, if this be the truth from Thee, rain it shall be said, "This is that for which you called." (28) Say, "Have you considered whether God destroys me and those with me or has mercy upon us? Who will protect the disbelievers from a painful punishment?" (29) Say, "He is the Compassionate; we believe in Him and trust in Him, and you will soon know who is in manifest error." (30) Say, "Have you considered? Were your water to vanish into the ground, then who would bring you flowing water?"

down stones upon us from the sky, or bring us a painful punishment" (Ṭ).

28 The command say at the beginning of each of the last three verses (vv. 28–30) is taken by most as a command to the Prophet. Here it is as if to say, "How is it that you seek to hasten the punishment, when I and those with me will not be destroyed, but none will save you from the punishment?" (Ṭ).

29 This verse is read by the vast majority of commentators as a declaration of faith contrasting the manner in which believers trust in the Compassionate to the manner in which disbelievers trust in the things of this world. The verse can also be understood as an answer to the previous verse, meaning that the only one who can protect the disbelievers is the Compassionate. It is said that when the Judgment comes, the disbelievers will realize that they had been wrong. Of this event 26:96–97 states, They will say, as they dispute with one another therein, "By God, indeed we were in manifest error."

The translation you will soon know follows that of most schools of recitation, sa-taʿlamūn. But in the school of al-Kisāʾī, it is read sa-yaʿlamūn, meaning "soon they will know," in which case what the Prophet is commanded to say stops after the second instance of "Him."

30 Flowing translates maʿīn, which is understood by some to mean "clear" or "sweet" (Ṭ). In many verses, that water is sent down from the sky is used as an allusion to blessings from God (e.g., 35:27; 39:21; 41:39); in others the manner in which God brings forth life through water is cited as a sign for those who believe (e.g., 2:164; 6:99; 7:57; 80:25–30); and 21:30 says, We made every living thing from water. God's removal of water (cf. 56:68–70) can thus be taken as an allusion to God's removing His blessings or the gift of life; for the place of water in the Quran, see also 21:30–31c; 24:45c.

The Pen

al-Qalam

Al-Qalam is generally thought to be from the early Makkan period (JJ). It is reported that the early commentators Ibn ʿAbbās and Qatādah (d. 117/726) maintained that vv. 1–16, 34–47, and 51–52 are Makkan, while vv. 17–33 and 48–50 are Madinan (Āl, Q). It takes its name from the mention of the pen in the first verse.

The first section of the sūrah (vv. 1–10) contrasts the natures of those who believe and those who disbelieve, indicating that many of the disbelievers will not know their true nature until the Day of Resurrection and Judgment. This is followed by a brief passage (vv. 11–16) cautioning the believers not to follow people of base character simply because of their worldly wealth. The third section (vv. 17–34) provides the parable of the owners of the garden, who lost their harvest because of their miserliness. The fourth section (vv. 35–47) returns to the contrast of the believers and the disbelievers, indicating the vacuity of the disbelievers' position through a series of rhetorical questions. This is followed by a brief reference to the Prophet Jonah as an example of one who repented and was forgiven in full (vv. 48–50), a reminder to be wary of those who oppose revelation (v. 51), and an affirmation that the Quran (or the Prophet) is a reminder for all (v. 52).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Nūn. By the pen and that which they inscribe, (2) thou art not, by the blessing of thy Lord, possessed. (3) Truly thine shall be a reward unceasing. (4) And truly thou art of an exalted character. (5) So thou wilt see and they

1 Nūn is the Arabic letter n and is among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaᶜāt) at the beginning of several *sūrah*s, whose meaning is not specified outwardly and, according to many, is known only to God (IK). This is the earliest sūrah in the chronological order of revelation in which the separated letters appear. Nūn is also an Arabic word for "fish"; some commentators thus relate it to an old Arab myth that holds that the earth is upon the back of a mythical fish (Bg, Q, Ṭ, Z).

In light of its cup-shaped form in Arabic script (ن), others say it refers to the "inkwell" from which the pen draws the ink with which it inscribes (Bg, Z). In Islamic metaphysics, the Pen is often taken as a symbol for the Divine Intellect or Logos, through which God brought all things into being. What is "written" by the Pen then means existiation of beings in the created order, and the nūn is seen to symbolize the reservoir that contains all the possibilities that are manifested in creation. In this regard, a famous ḥadīth qudsī states, "The first thing God created was the Pen. Then he said to it, 'Write!' It responded, 'What shall I write?' He said, 'Write the decree (al-qadar) of what will be until the Hour is come.'" (AH, Bg, IK, Q, Ṭ).

Here the nūn is also seen as an allusion to one of the Divine Names, because it points to the n (nūn) at the end of al-Raḥmān ("the Compassionate") or at the beginning of al-Nūr ("the Light") or al-Nāṣir ("the Helper"; Bg, Q). Others see it as a reference to God's helping the believers (naṣr al-muᵓminīn; Bg, Q), a phrase that occurs in 30:47. Some attribute to the Prophet the saying: "Nūn is a tablet of light" (Āl, IK, Q).

The pronoun they in that which they inscribe may be seen as a reference to the angels who record all human deeds (Bg, IK, JJ, Q); see 43:80; 50:17–18c; 80:15–16; 82:10–12; 86:4. According to al-Qurṭubī, pens are of three principal types: the one that God commanded to write all that would be until the Day of Resurrection; those with which the angels record the deeds of human beings (see 18:49c); and those with which human beings write (Q on 96:4–5).

2 The blessing of thy Lord may be a reference to prophethood (Bg), and the verse's assertion that the Prophet is not possessed can be seen as a direct response to the derogatory statement of the disbelievers in 15:6–7: O you unto whom the Reminder has been sent down, truly you are possessed. Why do you not bring us the angels, if you are among the truthful? (Bg, Q).

3 A reward unceasing (cf. 41:8; 84:25; 95:6) indicates a reward that comes directly from God and is never cut off, as opposed to the rewards of this world, whose fleeting nature is discussed in the parable in vv. 17–34. In this context, it is understood as a reference to the reward the Prophet receives for carrying the burden of prophethood (Q).

4 This is among the most famous verses of the Quran. Some interpret exalted character as a descriptor of the religion of Islam (IK, Ṭ), but most associate it with the Prophet himself; his character is said to be exalted because he had no aspiration other than God (Q). The Prophet's wife ᶜĀᵓishah was once asked about the Prophet's character and responded, "Do you not read the Quran?... His character was the Quran" (Āl, Bg, IK, Q, Z). Character translates khuluq, which is closely related to the primary Quranic word for "creation" (khalq). In this vein, it is reported that the Prophet used to pray, "O God, Thou hast beautified my created form (khalqī), beautify my character (khuluqī)." Another ḥadīth states, "I was only sent to perfect the noble traits of character" (Bg, Q). The Prophet is also reported to have enjoined good character traits upon his followers, saying, "The best of you are those who are best in character traits" (Bg), and, "Reverence God wherever you may be; follow a bad deed with a good deed, and it will efface it; and comport with the people with good character" (Q). Regarding the will see (6) which of you is afflicted. (7) Truly thy Lord knows best those who stray from His way, and He knows best those who are rightly guided; (8) so obey not the deniers. (9) They wish that thou might compromise so that they might compromise. (10) So obey not any vile oath-monger— (11) slanderer spreading calumny, (12) hinderer of good, a transgressing sinner, (13) churlish, surly, and ignoble withal— (14) simply because he possesses wealth and children.

importance of good character for the Hereafter, he is reported to have said, "What admits people most into Paradise is beauty of character" (Bg, Q), and "Nothing is placed on the scales of a believer that is weightier than beauty of character; and one who has beauty of character will reach thereby the degree of one who prays and fasts" (Bg, Q). More generally, this verse can be understood to mean that those with beautiful character traits are far from the state of being possessed referred to in verse 2 (Āl).

5–6 When the punishment comes upon the disbelievers, they will see which of the two parties, the believers or the disbelievers, has been tried with possession or madness (Bg, JJ, Z) or which of the two is to be tried (Bg, Z).

7 This verse is repeated with minor variation in 6:117 and 53:30 (see also 28:85). Here it indicates that God knows best which of the two parties is astray and afflicted and which is guided, as both parties claimed.

8 The deniers refers to the Makkan disbelievers who were bidding the Prophet and his followers to follow the religion of their forefathers rather than the religion revealed to the Prophet.

9 Compromise translates the verb dahana, which can mean both "to demean" and "to deny" or "to take something lightly." This verse can be read to mean either that the disbelievers will compromise when the Prophet and his followers compromise or that the disbelievers are already compromising; so they want the believers to compromise too (Z). According to the first reading, it means they want believers to be willing to give up part of their religion, so that they might then give up part of theirs, or that the believers worship their gods for a while and then they worship the believers' God for a while (Bg). According to the second reading, it means that they are disbelievers; so they wish for believers to become disbelievers as well (Bg).

10–16 Most commentators agree that these verses refer to al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah, a leader among the Quraysh and one of the Prophet's staunchest opponents (Z). Others propose that it may refer to his detractors in general, such as Abū Jahl, al-Aswad ibn ʿAbd Yaghūth, and al-Akhnas ibn Sharīq (Z).

10 Vile oath-monger refers to one given to frequent swearing by falsehood (JJ) or one who swears falsely by God's Name (IK). Even in pre-Islamic Arabia it was considered a vice to be immoderate in taking oaths. Regarding the Quranic position on taking oaths, see 5:89c.

11 This verse is said to refer to one who spreads gossip in order to create discord and turn people against one another (Z). Several aḥādīth state that those who spread calumny (namīmah), which can also mean "gossip," will not enter Paradise (IK); regarding the vices of calumny and backbiting, see 49:12c.

12 Hinderer of good refers either to one who is miserly and encourages miserliness or to one who bars the way to Islam (Z).

13 Ignoble translates zanīm, which indicates one who is born illegitimately (Z). It may also be related to the word zanamah, which denotes the fleshy skin hanging below the ears of a goat. As these protuberances serve no apparent function, the word zanīm came to signify something that serves no positive function (Tāj al-ʿarūs).

14 This verse alludes to the Quranic teaching that one should not put stock in worldly wealth and outward appearances, but in those things that reflect the nature of the heart, for the Day of Judgment is the Day when neither wealth nor children avail, save for him who comes to God with a sound heart (26:88–89). For other references to this broad Quranic theme, see 3:10, 14, 116; 8:28; 9:24, 55, 69, 85; 18:39–40, 46; 23:55–56; 34:35–37; 60:3; 63:9; 64:14–15; 71:21. Alternately, vv. 14–15

(15) When Our signs are recited unto him he says, "Fables of those of old." (16) We shall brand him on the snout. (17) Truly We tried them, just as We tried the owners of the garden who vowed that they would harvest its fruit in the morning. (18) And they made no exception. (19) Whereupon a visitation from your Lord came upon it while they slept, (20) such that it became like a garden plucked. (21) Then they called to one another in the morning, (22) "Go early to your tillage if you would harvest." (23) So they set forth while whispering to one another, (24) "Surely no indigent shall come to you therein today." (25) And they set out early, strong in their purpose. (26) Then when they saw it, they said, can be read, "Is it because he possesses wealth and children that when Our signs are read to him he says, 'Fables of those of old'?" (JJ, Z).

15 Cf. 83:13. Referring to the Prophet's revelations as fables of those of old was a common way for the disbelievers to dismiss the message and is repeated in eight other verses (6:25; 8:31; 16:24; 23:83; 25:5; 27:68; 46:17; 83:13).

16 Most commentators take this to be an idiomatic expression meaning, "We will stigmatize him with indelible disgrace" (Iṣ). Some believe that this promise was fulfilled when al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah's nose was cut off at the Battle of Badr (JJ). It could also mean that God will make his true nature apparent to all, so that he cannot hide it, as if he had been branded on the nose (IK, Ṭ), an interpretation that accords with 55:41, the guilty shall be known by their marks.

17–34 Most commentators maintain that these verses were revealed in Madinah and that the story refers to three either Christian or Jewish brothers in Yemen who had inherited a fertile garden from their father. Their father's custom had been to leave some produce behind for the poor whenever he harvested. But when he died, his sons felt that, given the demands of their large family, it would no longer be prudent to leave the produce for the poor and thus set out to harvest the land when no one would know.

18 Made no exception is taken to indicate that they did not say, "If God wills" (Bg, IK, Z) and thus trusted in themselves rather than in God (R). It could also be a reference to the harvest, indicating that they left no portion for the poor (R).

19 Visitation here indicates some form of scourge sent by God.

20 Like a garden plucked translates ka'l-ṣarīm, which can also mean "like the blackness of night" (IK, JJ). The Prophet reportedly said, "Avoid sins of disobedience. Verily, the servant commits sins, and the sustenance which he has is taken from him," and then he recited, Such that it became like a garden plucked (AH, IK).

21–24 These verses represent a violation of ancient Near Eastern custom in which the poor are allowed to glean a share of the harvest and of the Quranic injunction to pay the poor the portion of a harvest that is due immediately: Eat of their fruit when they grow, and pay the due thereof on the day of its harvest (6:141).

25 Strong in their purpose indicates that the brothers were determined or that they overestimated their own abilities, thinking that they could control who would get this produce, though in fact only God determines (JJ).

26 Here we are astray indicates that they thought they had arrived at the wrong place (IK, JJ) or that they recognized the error of their ways. It can also be seen as an allusion to the distinction between the believers and the disbelievers mentioned in vv. 5–7, as those who oppose the Prophet Muhammad believe they are guided, but will eventually come to realize that they were astray. Like the owners of the garden mentioned here, the disbelievers will initially think that there has been some mistake, but will then realize that the recompense they receive on the Day of Judgment is what they had earned.

"Surely, we are astray! (27) Nay! we are deprived!" (28) The most moderate of them said, "Did I not say to you, why do you not glorify?" (29) They said, "Glory be to our Lord! Truly we were wrongdoers." (30) Then they turned to one another, reproaching each other. (31) They said, "Oh, woe unto us! Truly we were rebellious. (32) Perhaps our Lord will give us something better in its stead. Truly we beseech our Lord." (33) Such is the punishment; yet the punishment of the Hereafter is surely greater, if they but knew. (34) Truly for the reverent there shall be Gardens of bliss in the presence of their Lord. (35) Are We then to treat the submitters like the guilty? (36) What ails you? How do you judge? (37) Or do you

27 This verse is similar to 56:67; it reflects the broader application of this story to all manner of harvesting, as in 56:63–66: Have you considered what you reap? Is it you who sow it or are We the sowers? Had We willed, We would have turned it to chaff, such that you would remain bitterly jesting, [saying] "Truly we have suffered loss." In both instances, the verse could also be rendered, "Nay! We are rendered destitute."

28 The most moderate could also be taken to indicate the most equitable or most just among them (IK). Why do you not glorify? means, "Why do you not thank God and attribute these blessings to Him rather than to yourselves?"

29 They were wrongdoers for preventing the poor from receiving their due (JJ).

30 The owners of the garden reproached one another for their failure to help the poor (IK). Such mutual recriminations are part of the torment that afflicts wrongdoers in both this life and the next. In several Quranic passages, wrongdoers attempt to blame Satan, their forefathers, and even God for their ignorance or misguidance.

31–32 Woe unto us translates waylanā. Wayl is an exclamation of spiritual regret found elsewhere in the Quran (see 2:79c; 18:49; 21:14, 47, 97; 25:28; 36:52; 37:20), often when the certainty of Divine Punishment is realized. Having realized the error of their ways and repented, they then became aware that God is able to provide them with something better than anything they could have produced with their own hands. It is reported that they were indeed given a better garden in place of the one that they had lost (Bg, IK, JJ), which can be understood as a reference to a garden in this world or as an allusion to the Garden in the Hereafter.

33 Just as the owners of the garden were punished for failing to give some portion of their harvest to the poor, so too will the disbelievers be punished for their miserliness. That the punishment of the Hereafter is surely greater (cf. 39:26) is a reminder to the disbelievers that what befalls them in the Hereafter is greater than the disgrace they will encounter in this life.

34 Gardens of bliss (naʿīm) indicates that the enjoyment of blessings (tanaʿʿum) is pure and unadulterated unlike the blessings garnered from the gardens of this world (Q, R). It is reported that when v. 34 was revealed, the disbelievers boasted to the Muslims that the favors they enjoyed in this world would continue in the next (Q, R). V. 35 was then revealed as a direct response.

35–36 Submitters translates muslimīn ("Muslims") and is most likely the first use of the word "Muslim" in the chronological order of revelation. This verse is similar to 38:28: Or shall We make those who believe and perform righteous deeds like those who work corruption upon the earth? Or shall We make the reverent like the profligate? The rhetorical question in both verses reflects the one posed and answered in 32:18: Is one who believes like one who is iniquitous? They are not equal. Like v. 14, such verses reflect a broader Quranic theme regarding the differences between outward appearances and inward realities, which many human beings are unable to discern, as they judge by human standards instead of Divine principles. Other verses speak of the differences between the blind and those who see, as in 35:19: Not equal are have a book wherein you learn (38) that you shall have therein whatsoever you choose? (39) Or do you have oaths binding upon Us until the Day of Resurrection that you shall have whatever you ordain? (40) Ask them which of them shall vouch for that. (41) Or do they have partners? Then let them bring their partners if they are truthful. (42) On the Day when the shank is laid bare and the blind and the seeing; and 40:58: And the blind and the seer are not equal; nor are those who believe and perform righteous deeds and the evildoer. And in other verses, the comparison is related to knowledge: Are those who know and those who do not know equal? Only possessors of intellect reflect (39:9).

37–38 This verse asks, "Do they have a revealed scripture that they are able to study and use as a source of judgment?" (IK). This challenge is similar to that posed in 37:156–57, where the disbelievers are challenged regarding their belief in deities as the offspring of God: Or have you a manifest authority? Bring your Book, then, if you are truthful (cf. 34:44; 35:40; 43:21; 46:4). V. 37 could be read with a stop before v. 38. In which case the text would read, "Or do you have a book wherein you learn? Truly in it you find whatsoever you choose." (Q).

Therein means in the Hereafter or, more specifically, Paradise. This is an indication that, even among those who have a book from God, there are some who read it to find whatever judgment they wish to find rather than the rulings of God, as in 2:78: And among them are the illiterate who know nothing of the Book but hearsay, and they only conjecture (see also 5:13c). It also implies that in choosing to judge by their laws rather than God's laws, they have chosen the punishment of the Hereafter, as in 2:85: Do you, then, believe in part of the Book and disbelieve in part? And what is the recompense of those who do so but disgrace in the life of this world? And on the Day of Resurrection they shall be consigned to the most terrible punishment. And God is not heedless of what you do.

39 This verse asks, "Do you have a promise from God that things shall be as you wish and desire, so that you can reject the revelation of the Quran and the prophethood of Muhammad?" (see also 54:43).

40 Vouch for means "say they have received," and what the disbelievers say they have received is thought to be either a revelation as implied in vv. 37–38, a promise from God as implied in v. 39, or a reward better than that of the believers (JJ).

41 Partners may imply idols and other deities that they ascribe as partners to God or partners who will guarantee their claim (JJ). It may also indicate wise people (ʿuqalāʾ) among them who they believe are able to substantiate their claims (R, Z). In 7:195, which was most likely revealed after this verse, the Prophet is enjoined to make a more direct challenge to the disbelievers: Say, "Call upon your partners, then scheme against me, and grant me no respite." In this same vein, 28:64 says, It will be said, "Call upon your partners." So they will call upon them, but they will not answer them. And they will see the punishment—if only they had been rightly guided!

42 The shank is laid bare is an idiomatic expression indicating something very serious and severe (Q, Sh). When a person wearing traditional Arab clothing engages in a strenuous endeavor (and sometimes in battle), he begins by rolling up his garment in such a fashion that his shank is exposed; hence the idiomatic Arabic phrase, "The war broke out upon the shank," meaning "The war broke out with vehemence" (JJ, Sh). Some exegetes say that in this verse it is God Who exposes His own Shank to signal the beginning of the judgment process. In this vein, a variant reading is "We lay bare the shank" (nakshifu ʿan sāq), meaning God (Q). Others say the shank is laid bare refers to the secrets that will be unveiled. In relation to this verse, a ḥadīth states, "God will lay bare His Shank and then the believers, men and women, will prostrate before Him; and there will remain those who in this world used to prostrate themselves only in order to be seen and heard by others. Such a one will try to prostrate, but his back will be they are called to prostrate, yet are not able, (43) their eyes humbled, abasement overcoming them; for they had indeed been called to prostrate while they were yet sound. (44) So leave Me with those who deny this discourse. We shall lead them on little by little, whence they know not. (45) And I shall grant them respite; truly My scheme is firm. (46) Or dost thou ask a reward of them, such that they are burdened with debt? (47) Or do they possess the Unseen, such that they write it down? (48) So be patient with thy Lord's Judgment and be not like the transformed into a stiff plate" (Āl, IK). In a third variant, this verse is read, "It lays bare the shank" (takshifu ʿan sāq), meaning that the Resurrection exposes great severities (Q).

43 Cf. 70:44. Some Arabs had objected that the position required for prostration, on one's knees with one's forehead on the ground, was humiliating, but in the Hereafter the disbelievers will find much greater humiliation and be unable to prostrate, as mentioned in v. 42. Some interpret the references to prostration in both vv. 42–43 as references to prostrating for prayer in this world, while others understand v. 42 as a reference to prostration on the Day of Judgment and v. 43 as a reference to those who did not heed the call to prostration, meaning to prayer, in this world (Q, Sh). According to the latter interpretation the disbelievers are not able to prostrate when they are called on the Day of Judgment (v. 42) because they did not prostrate when called during the life of this world (v. 43; Sh).

44 This discourse indicates the Quran (JJ, Q). The implication is that the deniers' punishment should be left to God. We shall lead them on little by little, whence they know not (cf. 7:182–83) indicates that they fall gradually into deception and delusion, continuing to commit even greater sins because they think their worldly success is an indication of favor with God. This theme is found in several other passages, most notably 23:54–56: So leave them in their heedlessness for a time. Do they reckon that, [on account of] the wealth and the children that We have provided them, We hasten unto good for them? Nay, but they are unaware! (see also 6:44). According to a ḥadīth, the Prophet said, "God grants the wrongdoer respite, but when He seizes him, there is no escape." Then he recited: Such is the seizing of thy Lord when He seizes the towns while they are doing wrong. Surely His seizing is painful, severe (11:102; IK).

45 Cf. 7:183. From a Quranic perspective, God grants respite to the disbelievers and thus they suppose that they have avoided or forestalled Divine Punishment; yet in fact they are moving little by little toward a gruesome fate, and if they do not repent, they will commit more sins for which they will be taken to account. This is stated most directly in 3:178: And let not those who disbelieve suppose that the respite We grant them is good for them. We only grant them respite that they may increase in sin, and theirs shall be a humiliating punishment (see 71:4c; 35:45c).

46–47 These verses are repeated in 52:40–41. See also 23:72: Dost thou ask any recompense of them? For thy Lord's recompense is better, and He is the best of providers. The rhetorical question in v. 46 is answered by the Quran itself in 12:104: And thou askest of them no reward for it; it is naught but a reminder for the worlds. V. 47 is most likely the first mention of the Unseen in the chronological order of revelation; regarding the Unseen, see 2:3c. Here the disbelievers are asked whether they have direct access to the Preserved Tablet (85:22), which would make what they say of equal status to the revelation of the Quran (JJ, Sh). This line of questioning is similar to that in 52:37–38: Do they possess the treasuries of your Lord? Or are they in control? Or do they have a ladder whereby they listen? Then let their listener bring a clear warrant. This verse reflects the broader Quranic theme of humanity's illusions of self-sufficiency vis-à-vis the Divine, as in 96:6–7: Nay, truly man is rebellious in that he considers himself beyond need.

48–50 These verses refer to the prophet Jonah, who is said to have fled from the task entrusted to him by God (37:140), but to have repented companion of the fish, who cried out while choking with anguish. (49) Had not the blessing from his Lord reached him, he would surely have been cast upon the barren shore still blameworthy. (50) But his Lord chose him and made him among the righteous. (51) Indeed, those who disbelieve would well-nigh smite thee down with their glances when they hear the Reminder, saying, "Surely, he is possessed." (52) Yet it is naught but a reminder for the worlds.

and been forgiven (cf. 21:87–88; 37:139–48). Still blameworthy indicates that, had not the blessing from his Lord reached him, he would have died in a state of sin. His Lord chose him for prophethood and made him among the righteous, meaning the prophets (JJ). For the Quranic account of Jonah, see 37:139–48.

51 It is said that the Quraysh were trying to attack the Prophet through the use of the evil eye, but that this verse was revealed as a means of protection (Q). According to one report, "There was a man among the Arabs who used to abstain from food for two or three days and then raise part of his tent as the cattle passed by and say, 'There are no grazing camels or sheep today better than these,' and the cattle would not proceed far before some of them would fall dead. The disbelievers asked this man to give the evil eye to the Messenger of God, but God protected His Prophet and revealed this verse" (Q, W). Although some attribute the evil eye, which afflicts people with misfortune through envy and jealousy, to legend, the Prophet is reported to have said, "Seek refuge in God, for the [evil] eye is real" (IK). In this vein, he enjoined his Companions, "If one of you sees something of his brother, or himself, or his wealth that he admires, then glorify God, for the [evil] eye is real" (IK). In general the last two sūrahs of the Quran, known as "The Two Protectors" (al-muʿawwidhatān), are used by Muslims to this day for protection from many evils, including the evil eye and the casting of spells.

52 A reminder refers to the Quran, as in 16:44: And We have sent down the Reminder unto thee that thou mightest clarify for mankind that which has been sent down unto them, that haply they may reflect (see also 15:9). To remind people of God is considered a primary function of all revelation; hence the Torah is also referred to as a reminder in 40:54. Alternately, this verse could be interpreted as a reference to the Prophet and translated, "He is naught but a reminder for the worlds." The Prophet is referred to directly as a reminder in 65:10–11.

The Undeniable Reality

al-Ḥāqqah

A late Makkan sūrah, al-Ḥāqqah is generally believed to have been revealed shortly after Sūrah 67, al-Mulk. It takes its name from the mention of the Undeniable Reality in the first three verses, a descriptive name for the Day of Judgment. This sūrah can be seen as connected to the previous sūrah both because the later verses provide a more complete response to the charge that the Prophet was possessed (68:2, 51) and because it provides a more complete description of the Day of Resurrection and Judgment, to which allusion is made throughout the previous sūrah.

The sūrah begins with a warning to avoid the fate of those who had denied religion before, using both Arabian tribes and Old Testament references as examples (vv. 1–12). The next section (vv. 13–17) describes some aspects of the Day of Judgment, followed by a contrast between those who receive the book of their deeds in the right hand and those who receive it in the left hand (vv. 18–37). As often happens in the Quran, this contrast between those who are believed to be destined for Heaven and those who are believed to be destined for Hell is followed by a reaffirmation of the revealed nature of the Quran (vv. 38–52).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) The Undeniable Reality! (2) What is the Undeniable Reality? (3) And what shall apprise thee of the Undeniable Reality? (4) Thamūd and ᶜĀd denied the calamity. (5) As for Thamūd, they were destroyed by the overwhelming. (6) And as for ᶜĀd, they were destroyed by a howling, raging wind. (7) He imposed it upon them for seven nights and eight days consecutively, so that thou might see the people felled as if they were hollowed palm trunks. (8) So dost thou see

1–3 Undeniable Reality translates ḥāqqah, which is an emphatic form of ḥaqq, meaning "truth" or "reality." In this context ḥāqqah conveys the sense of the overwhelming and inevitable reality or truth that none can avoid. All commentators agree that the Undeniable Reality is a reference to the Day of Resurrection and Judgment, but they differ as to which aspect of that Day it refers (R). Some say it indicates that all that was rejected by disbelievers in this life will be realized and made evident (JJ) or that everyone will see the true nature of their deeds, as in 67:11: Thus do they admit their sin. The repetition of the question in vv. 2–3, which is similar to that in 101:2–3, is meant to emphasize that it is beyond mere rational comprehension.

4 What is denied is the Day of Judgment. For the meaning of the calamity, see 101:1–3c. The triple affirmation of the Undeniable Reality followed by the mention of the pre-Islamic Arabian tribes ᶜĀd and Thamūd and what befell them as a consequence of rejecting their prophets serves as an admonition for the disbelievers of Makkah, to whom the stories of these tribes would have been familiar. For the story of the tribe of Thamūd, who rejected the Prophet Ṣāliḥ, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31. For the story of the tribe of ᶜĀd, whose prosperity led to their decadence and who rejected the Prophet Hūd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16.

5 Overwhelming translates ṭāghiyah, which implies something that reaches the utmost severity, and can be taken to indicate one of the calamities that afflicted Thamūd: a cry (11:67; 54:31), an earthquake (7:78), or a thunderbolt (41:13; 51:44). It could also mean "rebellion" or "upheaval" (ṭughyān; R). The reference to some form of calamity indicates the manner in which the people of Thamūd were destroyed, while the reference to "rebellion" indicates that they were destroyed by their own sinfulness, though the two are not mutually exclusive. Finally, ṭāghiyah could mean "those who overwhelmed or oppressed," indicating that the tribe of Thamūd was destroyed because they allowed themselves to be persuaded, or "overwhelmed," by a powerful minority or a single individual who enjoined them to hamstring the she-camel of God (91:13) and leave her for dead (see 54:23–30; R).

6 Howling translates ṣarṣar, which indicates either a wind that makes a severe noise or a wind so cold that it feels as if it burns (R). In this context, some say that it pierced through to their hearts (IK). Raging translates ᶜātiyah, which indicates both that it overcame the people in such a manner that they could find no cover and that it was the utmost in strength and severity (R). The tribe of ᶜĀd is also reported to have been destroyed by a howling wind in 41:16 and 54:19 and by the barren wind in 51:41.

7–8 Consecutively translates ḥusūman, which most likely indicates "seven days and eight nights in a row," but could also indicate one calamity following after another. Ḥusūm derives from the verb ḥasama, meaning "to sever." Thus it is also interpreted to mean a wind that severs all good and demolishes all blessings (R). The people of ᶜĀd are also compared to felled palm trees in 54:20, where the howling wind is said to tear out people as if they were uprooted palm trunks.

any remnant of them? (9) And Pharaoh and those before him, and those subverted brought iniquity. (10) They disobeyed the messenger of their Lord, and He seized them with a devastating blow. (11) Truly when the waters overflowed, We carried you upon the ship, (12) that We might make it a reminder for you, and that attentive ears might take heed. (13) Then when a single blast is blown in the trumpet (14) and the earth and mountains are borne away and ground up in a single grinding, (15) on that Day the Event shall befall, (16) the sky shall be rent asunder; for that Day it shall be frail. (17) And the angels shall be at its sides;

9–10 These verses mark a shift from the discussion of the afflictions that befell the disbelievers from pre-Islamic Arabian tribes to those who disbelieved in prophets of the Judeo-Christian tradition. Those before him indicates the generations before Pharaoh; if read with a different voweling (wa man qibalahu), however, it could be translated "those who were with him," meaning those who followed Pharaoh (IK, R). Those subverted is most likely an allusion to the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, to whom Lot had been sent as a messenger (R, Ṭ, Z); see 7:80–84; 11:77–83. The messenger of their Lord could refer to Moses, Lot, or both (R). In this context, some take messenger (rasūl) to mean "message" (risālah; Q), in which case the verse may refer to any of the disbelieving peoples mentioned in this sūrah. Devastating translates rābiyah, which indicates increase, suggesting either a punishment that surpasses that of all others (Q, R) or one that is devastating in this world but becomes more severe in the Hereafter, as with those who disbelieved in Noah: They were drowned, then made to enter a Fire (71:25; R).

11–12 These verses are taken as an allusion to Noah's Ark, regarding which, see 7:64c. We carried you means We carried your forefathers while you were still in their loins (JJ, Q, R), as in 36:41: And a sign unto them is that We carried their progeny in the full-laden ark (IK). The it in make it a reminder in v. 12 can be taken as a reference to the ship in v. 11 or to the events of the Day of Resurrection and Judgment that this sūrah describes. V. 12 is similar to 50:37: Truly in that is a reminder for whosoever has a heart, or gives ear as witness. According to one account, the Prophet said to ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, "God has commanded me to draw you closer to me and not exclude you, and that I teach you so that you understand; and God has taken it upon Himself that you understand," and then this verse was revealed (W). According to a more widespread account, when this verse was revealed, the Prophet said, "I asked my Lord that He make it the ear of ʿAlī," meaning make ʿAlī's ear one that takes heed; and ʿAlī is reported to have said, "I never heard anything from the Messenger of God but that I remembered it" (AH, IK, Q, R, Ṭ).

13 Here the single blast of the trumpet is understood by most commentators to be the first blast blown by the Archangel Seraphiel (Isrāfīl), which will herald the end of the world (Bḍ, Q, R, Ṭ), and by some to be the second blast, which will herald the Day of Judgment and Resurrection (IK, JJ; see also 6:73; 18:99; 20:102; 23:101; 27:87; 36:51; 39:68; 50:20; 74:8; 78:18). Regarding the two trumpet blasts, see 39:68c; 78:18c.

14 Several verses indicate that the mountains will be dispatched on the Day of Judgment, as in 27:88: And thou seest the mountains that thou dost suppose are solid, pass away like clouds—the work of God, Who perfects all things; see also 18:47; 52:10; 70:8–9; 73:14; 78:20; 81:3; 89:21; 101:5.

15 The Event is the end of the world, which leads to the Day of Resurrection; see 56:1–2c.

16 The sky shall be rent asunder is repeated in 55:37; 73:18; 84:1; see also 82:1; 25:25; and 42:5, which refers to the heavens being rent asunder. This phrase refers to the sky, the heavens, or both. The sky being opened as if it were gates (78:19) is considered one of the marks of the Day of Judgment.

17 At its sides could also mean "at its ends." Based upon several aḥādīth, most take eight as a reference to eight angels who carry the Throne (IK, Ṭ; cf. 40:7); others say it could mean eight or eight thousand and could refer to individuals or that Day eight shall carry the Throne of thy Lord above them. (18) That Day you shall be exposed; no secret of yours shall be hidden. (19) As for one who is given his book in his right hand, he will say, "Here, read my book. (20) Truly I knew for certain that I would meet my reckoning." (21) So he shall enjoy a life contenting, (22) in a lofty Garden (23) with low-hanging clusters. (24) Eat and drink in enjoyment for that which you did in the past in days gone by. (25) And as for one who is given his book in his left hand, he will say, "Would that I had not rows (R, Z). According to a ḥadīth, "Today those carrying the throne are four, but when the Day of Resurrection comes, God supports them with four more; so they will be eight" (Bḍ, Q, R, Sy). The number eight has a symbolic value in Islamic geometry, as the octagon forms the transition from the square, which is seen to represent the earth, to the circle of the dome, which represents Heaven. In this sense, it is significant that this passage moves progressively from the lowest level, earth in v. 14, to the highest level, the Heaven of the archangels, in v. 17.

18 You shall be exposed translates tuʿraḍūn, which could also be rendered "you shall be brought forth," as in 11:18: And who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God? It is they who will be brought before their Lord (yuʿraḍūna ʿalā rabbihim). In this vein, a ḥadīth states, "The people are brought forth on the Day of Resurrection for three arraignments (ʿarḍāt): during the first two arraignments, they will argue and make excuses; at the third, the scrolls will be cast into their hands; so some will take with their right hand and others will take with their left" (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). No secret of yours shall be hidden indicates either that nothing is hidden from God, as in 40:16, the Day when they come forth with naught concerning them hidden from God, or that the inner states and thoughts of human beings will now be known, and the result will be that the believers will rejoice and the disbelievers will grieve (R). This phrase can also be translated, "None among you shall be hidden" (Q), meaning that no human being can evade God's Judgment.

19–29 For the symbolic distinction between right and left, see 56:8–9c; for the meaning of the book presented on the Day of Judgment in which one's deeds are recorded, see 17:71; 18:49; 84:7. Also see 56:27, 38, where the righteous are referred to as the companions of the right.

19–20 Those who receive their book in the right hand have spent their life in this world conscious that the Day of Judgment would come and have prepared for it accordingly. When asked, "Who are the most intelligent of believers?" the Prophet replied, "The most frequent in recalling death, and the best prepared for what follows it; they are the most intelligent." Here is in the second person plural, indicating that his words are addressed to a group. In other readings, it is the second person singular (Q). I knew for certain translates ẓanantu, a word that in some contexts indicates doubt. If read in this manner, the verse would indicate that one was not entirely certain of the final outcome, but nonetheless followed the commands of God and the Prophet and was rewarded accordingly.

21 This verse is repeated in 101:7; regarding contentment, see 89:28c.

22–23 That the clusters are low-hanging indicates that they are readily accessible and no one will be turned away from them (Ṭ). Regarding the clusters of the Garden, a ḥadīth states, "Verily I saw the Garden and came upon a cluster of grapes. Had I taken it, you would have eaten of it so long as the world remained." Also see 55:54, which speaks of fruits near at hand, and 76:14, which says of the Garden: Its shade shall be close above them, and its clusters shall be made to hang low.

24 That which you did in the past indicates the good deeds one did while in the life of this world, as in 52:19 and 77:43: Eat and drink in enjoyment for that which you used to do. The phrase days gone by translates al-ayyām al-khāliyah, which can also mean "empty days," in which case it is interpreted as a reference to days of fasting (R, Sy).

been given my book. (26) And did not know of my reckoning. (27) Would that it were the final end. (28) My wealth availed me not. (29) My power has passed from me." (30) Take him and shackle him. (31) Then cast him in Hellfire. (32) Then put him in a chain whose length is seventy cubits. (33) Truly he did not believe in God the Magnificent, (34) and did not urge feeding the indigent. (35) So today

25–26 Those given the book in the left hand will be cast into Hell for their deeds. About receiving this record, the Quran also says, but as for one who is given his book from behind his back, he will cry out for destruction, and will enter a Blaze (84:10–12). To reconcile v. 25 and 84:10, commentators say that the left hand will be tied behind the back (IK, Q, Ṭs, Z on 84:10–12). Would that I had not been given may imply a desire to avoid punishment altogether; or it may indicate that the shame at witnessing one's deeds is worse than the pain of the Fire, and that it would be preferable to be cast into the Fire without being forced to endure the shame of judgment and reckoning (R).

27 This verse is understood to mean, "Would that death had been the final end, and there had been no Resurrection" (Q, R).

28 The negative particle mā in this verse could also be understood as an interrogative particle, in which case the verse is understood as a rhetorical question, "What has my wealth availed me?" Both translations echo the broader Quranic theme that the things that provide advantages in this world are usually of no avail in the next, as in 18:46: Wealth and children are the adornment of the life of this world, but that which endures—righteous deeds—are better in reward with thy Lord, and better [as a source of] hope.

29 My power translates sulṭāniyah, which indicates authority and warrant; that it has passed means that those who receive the book in their left hand no longer have any control over their own destiny and will regret all that they neglected to do to prepare for the Hereafter. Here and in other verses, sulṭān also connotes "argument" or "proof" (ḥujjah; Q, R, Ṭ), meaning that they no longer have any capacity to argue against the reality of the Resurrection or even to argue for themselves, as the true reality of how they lived their life will be clear when their very limbs testify against them on the Day of Judgment and Reckoning (see 24:24; 36:65; 41:20) and they are forced to admit their sin (see 67:10–11).

30–31 These verses are a command to the angels who govern Hell (Q, Ṭ). Regarding the shackles that will be placed upon the disbelievers and made to course through their bodies in the Hereafter, see 36:8c.

32 This verse is most likely a reference to the chain of disbelievers who are shackled to one another, as in 14:49: On that Day thou wilt see the guilty bound together in fetters. In classical Arabic, seventy is used metonymically to denote "many." Here it implies a large number known only to God (R, Ṭ). This chain is said to go directly through one's body (Bg, IK; R).

33–34 These verses indicate the corruption of intellect (v. 33) and action (v. 34; R) and not giving God (v. 33) and human beings (v. 34) their due (IK). V. 34 and 89:18, Nor urge you the feeding of the indigent, are related to the objection posed by the Quraysh in 36:47: Are we to feed those whom, if God willed, He would feed? You are in naught but manifest error. Both imply that one is not only to give charity oneself, but also to urge others to give charity and thus encourage social justice on a broader scale. See also 107:3c.

35 Though all human beings stand together on the same plain for the Reckoning (see 18:47; 20:106; 79:14), the Quran also says that every human being shall come unto Us alone (19:80), indicating that the experience of the Reckoning is a solitary one. Everyone will be too consumed with his or her own state to ask about that of another, as in 70:10: And no loyal friend shall ask about a loyal friend, and 80:37: For every man that Day his affair shall suffice him. This will, however, be all the more severe for the disbelievers, who are said to have no one upon whom they can rely, since the folly of everything upon which they had relied is now exposed and all recourse will be cut off from them (2:166); thus 40:18 reads, The wrongdoers he has no loyal friend here, (36) nor food, save filth, (37) which none eat, save the iniquitous. (38) So I swear by what you see (39) and by what you see not, (40) truly it is the speech of a noble messenger, (41) and not the speech of a poet. Little do you believe! (42) Nor is it the speech of a soothsayer. Little do you reflect! (43) It is a revelation from the Lord of the worlds. (44) Had he ascribed any statements to Us, (45) We would have taken him by the right hand. (46) Then We would have severed his life vein. (47) And none among you could have shielded him from it.

shall have no loyal friend; see commentary on 70:10–14.

36–37 Filth translates ghislīn, which appears in the Quran only this once and has received many different interpretations. Some commentators say it is the worst food endured while in the Fire (IK); others see it as a reference to the oozing pus or vile excretions that the denizens of Hell are said to eat in 14:16 (JJ).

38–39 I swear translates lā uqsimu, which could also be rendered, "Nay, I swear" (R). By what you see and by what you see not refer, respectively, to what people witness and the mysteries that remain unseen (IK), that is, this world and the Hereafter (R).

40 This same verse is repeated in 81:19. Many commentators see both instances as references to the Archangel Gabriel, while others see both as references to the Prophet Muhammad. Others argue that in this instance, noble messenger most likely refers to the Prophet Muhammad, because the following verses (vv. 41–42) refute those who say that the Prophet was a poet, in the sense that pre-Islamic Arabs understood the term, or who say that he was a soothsayer. They then maintain that in 81:19 noble messenger most likely refers to the Archangel Gabriel, because 81:25 refutes those who say the revelation was received from a satan or a jinn: Nor is it the speech of a satan outcast (IK, R).

41–42 Little do you reflect (cf. 7:3; 27:62; 40:58) could also mean, "Little do you remember," in which case it is understood by some as a reference to the fact that the disbelievers remember only some of the Prophet's positive qualities, such as good deeds, kindness toward kin, and abstinence, but not enough that it would benefit them, as they still did not acknowledge his prophethood (JJ). In both verses, little can also be taken to mean "not at all," as in Arabic one can say, "You visit us so little," and it means, "You do not visit us at all." It could also be interpreted to mean that a little bit of belief or reflection enters the hearts of those who oppose the Prophet, but that it leaves quickly (R). In other canonical readings of the text, you believe (tu'minūn) and you reflect (tadhdhakkarūn) are read in the third person plural, "they believe" (yu'minūn) and "they reflect" (yadhdhakkarūn; Q).

43 This verse is repeated in 56:80. In both instances, it is a rebuke to those who say that the Quran is fables of those of old (6:25; 8:31; 16:24; 23:83; 25:5; 27:68; 68:15; 83:13) or that it is the speech of a poet (v. 41) or the speech of a soothsayer (v. 42).

44 This verse maintains that had the Prophet Muhammad fabricated the Quran, he would suffer the same fate as anyone else who falsely attributed words to God. Several Quranic passages condemn any who would dare to make such an attribution, as in 2:79: So woe unto those who write the book with their hands; then say, "This is from God," that they may sell it for a paltry price. So woe unto them for what their hands have written and woe unto them for what they earn. From a Quranic perspective, to fabricate lies against God is among the greatest of sins, as in 6:93: Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God, or says, "It has been revealed unto me," though naught has been revealed unto him, and one who says, "I will send down the like of what God has sent down"? (see also 3:94; 6:21–24, 144; 7:37; 10:17; 11:18; 18:15; 29:68; 61:7c).

45 Taken him by the right hand indicates that God would have removed all power from him (R).

46–47 These verses indicate that none can be absolved from fabricating lies against God (23:38), including prophets, and that God could take their lives in an instant.

(48) Truly it is a reminder for the reverent. (49) And truly We know that among you are those who deny. (50) It is a source of regret indeed for the disbelievers. (51) It is indeed the truth of certainty. (52) So glorify the Name of thy Lord, the Magnificent.

48 Here most understand it as a reference to the Quran, discussed in vv. 40–43, 50–52 (Bḍ, IK, JJ, Q, Ṭ). But it can also be understood as a reference to the Day of Resurrection and Judgment discussed in the preceding verses. The reference to the Quran as a reminder (tadhkirah) is more in line with other Quranic verses, such as 20:2–3: We did not send down the Quran unto thee that thou shouldst be distressed, but only as a reminder unto one who fears [God] (also see, e.g., 43:44; 74:49–54; 80:11). In this vein, 11:114 says of the Quran: This is a reminder for those who remember. In the present verse, reminder renders tadhkirah, which can also indicate "an admonition."

49 Most commentators appear to understand among you as a reference to the disbelievers among the Makkans, though others propose that it is addressed to Muslims in general, meaning that some of them will disbelieve in the Quran (Z). Al-Rāzī remarks that those who stay on guard against excessive love for this world will be reminded or admonished by the Quran and benefit from it, but that those who incline to the world will deny the Quran and not draw near to it.

50–51 Most commentators see both of these verses as references to the Quran (JJ, Q, R). According to others, v. 50 first refers to the Day of Judgment and v. 51 refers to the Quran (Sy); still others see the first verse as a reference to the disbelievers' denial of the Quran (R). The Quran can be seen as a source of regret indeed for the disbelievers since, as a ḥadīth states, "The Quran is a proof, either for you or against you." In this vein, 17:82 states, We send down of the Quran that which is a cure and a mercy for the believers. And it increases the wrongdoers in naught but loss.

Al-Qurṭubī writes, "The Quran is a source of regret for the disbelievers on the Day of Resurrection when they see the reward of those who believe in it . . . and it is their source of regret in this world when despite their opposition to it, they are not able to answer the challenge to bring a sūrah like it" (2:23; cf. 10:38).

51–52 See commentary on the similar verses 56:95–96. V. 52 could also be rendered, "So glorify with (or through) the Name of thy Lord."

The Ascending Ways

al-Maᶜārij

Taking its name from the ascending ways mentioned in v. 3, al-Maᶜārij is from the middle Makkan period. It is also known as al-Mawāqiᶜ, which in this context indicates "Those Matters That Are Impending," as taken from the reference to an impending punishment in v. 1. Another of its titles is Saʾala, "Someone Asked," which is taken from the first word of the sūrah. Some say it was revealed immediately after the preceding sūrah and can be seen as continuing the description of the Resurrection and the Fire in 69:18–37 (Āl).

The sūrah begins with a rebuke to those who ask mockingly about or even seek to hasten the Day of Judgment (vv. 1–7), followed by a description of that Day and how it will appear to those who did not believe in it and prepare for it (vv. 8–18). This is followed by three famous verses that speak of the anxious and fretful nature of human beings (vv. 19–21). The next passage describes how one can overcome this nature, listing eight responsibilities of being a Muslim (vv. 22–35). The final section (vv. 36–44) then speaks of those who reject these responsibilities and continue to deride the Prophet, having no real understanding of the message with which he was sent.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) A questioner asked about an impending punishment (2) upon the disbelievers which none can avert, (3) from God, Lord of the ascending ways. (4) Unto Him ascend the angels and the Spirit on a day whose measure is fifty thousand years. (5) So be patient with beautiful patience. (6) Truly they see it

1–2 The translation of v. 1 is based upon reading the preposition bi to mean about rather than "for," meaning that someone asked the Prophet who would be punished and when (Q, Ṭ). Many commentators, however, read the verse "a supplicator supplicated for" or "a petitioner petitioned for." In this sense, the verse would be similar to 22:47: They bid thee to hasten the punishment, which is said to have been revealed with regard to a certain al-Naḍr ibn al-Ḥārith, who said, O God, if this be the truth from Thee, rain down stones upon us from the sky, or bring us a painful punishment (8:32; IK, JJ, Q); regarding those who seek to hasten the punishment, see 10:50–51; 16:1; 26:204–7; 29:53–54; 34:30; 37:176–77; 42:18; 51:14, 59. In seeking to hasten punishment, al-Naḍr ibn al-Ḥārith is believed to have supplicated against himself and to have unknowingly requested the punishment he received at the Battle of Badr (2/624), when he was killed in captivity (W, Z). According to others, the verse was revealed in response to another of the Prophet's adversaries among the Quraysh, Abū Jahl (Q).

3 Ascending ways is understood to be the paths by which one ascends to Heaven (IK), and the verse indicates that none but God can determine who may or may not ascend. Ascending ways can also represent the degrees of favor and blessing that God bestows upon human beings (Q).

4 Most commentators interpret the Spirit as a reference to the Archangel Gabriel (IK, Q, Ṭ), who is referred to as the Trustworthy Spirit in 26:193. It may also refer to another angel or to the spirit of a dead person when the spirit is taken from the body (Q); regarding the many different interpretations of "spirit" (rūḥ), see 78:38c. A day whose measure is fifty thousand years is understood to be the Day of Resurrection, which will be as fifty thousand years for the disbelievers (IK, Q). When asked about the length of the Day of Resurrection, the Prophet is reported to have said, "He will lighten it for the believer so that it seems to him like less time than it took for him to perform the obligatory prayer in the life of this world" (IK, Q, Sy). Others say that fifty thousand refers to the distance between Heaven and earth (Q). The disparity between time in the Divine or spiritual realm and time in this world is indicated in several places in the Quran (see, e.g., 22:47; 32:5; 97:3).

5 This verse, which echoes the words of the prophet Jacob, Beautiful patience! (12:18, 83), is addressed to the Prophet Muhammad, enjoining him to be patient with those who ask questions such as the one posed in vv. 1–4 (Aj), though it can also be seen as an exhortation to all believers to be patient when confronted with the disbelief of others or even as a response to the questioners who would seek to hasten the coming of the Hour. According to some commentators, the instruction to be patient with disbelievers was abrogated by later verses that instructed the Muslims to fight (JJ, Q), while others maintain that the command to be patient holds at all times in all situations (Ṭ) or that this verse is definitive (muḥkam) at all times and therefore is not abrogated (Aj). For the majority of scholars, abrogation only applies to specific legal rulings, not general principles; see 2:106c.

6 It refers to the Hour, the Day of Judgment, or the punishment. Far off indicates that the disbelievers think it is impossible (Aj) or far away enough that they need not be concerned about it.

as far off, (7) but We see it as nigh. (8) On a day when the sky is as molten lead, (9) and the mountains are as carded wool, (10) and no loyal friend shall ask about a loyal friend, (11) [though] they will be made to see them. The guilty would wish to ransom himself from the punishment of that Day at the price of his children, (12) his spouse, and his brother, (13) his kin who had sheltered him, (14) and all who are on the earth, that it might save him. (15) Nay, but it is a churning fire, (16) ripping away the scalp, (17) calling to those who turned their backs and fled, (18) who

7 We is taken by most commentators to indicate God speaking in the first-person plural (Ṭ), while others allow that it could indicate the believers (IK), who fear the Day of Judgment as if it were at hand.

8 Molten lead translates muhl, which some understand as referring to the dirty residue of boiled oil (IK, Ṭ), or oozing blood, or pus (Q). Elsewhere the food that sinners are given to eat in Hell is said to be like molten lead boiling in their bellies (44:45).

9 This verse is repeated in 101:5. Elsewhere it is said that the mountains are scattered (77:10), for the Day of Judgment is a day when the mountains will be like heaps of shifting sand (73:14); for other verses that speak of the crumbling of mountains, see 18:47; 19:90; 20:105–6; 27:88; 52:10; 81:3.

10–11 The Day of Judgment and the Resurrection will be so overwhelming that people will have no concern for anyone except themselves, even for their most loyal companions in earthly life, as in 80:37: For every man that Day his affair shall suffice him (Q, Ṭ); see also 23:101; 31:33; 35:18. They will be made to see them is taken to mean that, although they will ask about no one else, all human beings will see one another (Ṭ). It may also mean that God shows the believers the state of the disbelievers (Ṭ) or that God shows the angels the states of all human beings (Q).

11–14 That the guilty, or elsewhere those who work evil (39:47), will seek to ransom themselves on the Day of Judgment is stated in several verses. Although this pericope provides a particularly visceral image, in which one seeks to ransom himself with all that is most dear, other verses declare, An earth full of gold would not be accepted from any one of them, were he to offer it in ransom (3:91); and Were they to possess all that is on the earth and the like of it besides, they would seek to ransom themselves thereby (13:18); see also 2:48, 123; 10:54; 57:15. Kin (faṣīlah) in v. 13 may also denote one's tribe (IK, Ṭ) or more specifically one's mother (IK, Q).

15 Nay denies the possibility of ransom mentioned in the previous verses. Alternately, the verse could be translated, "Truly it is a churning fire" (Q). Churning fire translates laẓā, which is considered one of the names of Hell because it churns its flames (talaẓẓā; JJ).

16 Ripping away the scalp means burning away the scalp completely (IK, Ṭ), burning away all of one's skin (Ṭ), or burning away everything except one part, which is variously identified as the bones, fingertips, or the facial features, among body parts (IK). It is also taken by Ḥasan al-Baṣrī to mean that the entire body will be burned away and only the heart will remain, and it will cry out (IK, Ṭ).

17 The Fire will summon those who are destined for it, because during the life of this world they turned away from obedience to God and fled from belief in God's books and God's messengers or from the truth (Ṭ). Then the Fire will pick out those who turned their backs and fled from the truth in the life of this world (IK).

18 For a similar verse see 104:1–2: Woe unto every slandering backbiter who amasses wealth and tallies it. Both passages point to those who refuse to pay the obligatory alms (zakāh). The punishment for hoarding is described most vividly in 9:34–35: [As for] those who hoard gold and silver and spend it not in the way of God, give them tidings of a painful punishment, on the Day when it will be heated in the Fire of Hell, and their foreheads, their sides, and their backs will be branded amassed and hoarded. (19) Truly man was created anxious; (20) when evil befalls him, fretful; (21) and when good befalls him, begrudging, (22) save those who perform prayer, (23) who are constant in their prayers, (24) and in whose wealth is an acknowledged due (25) for the beggar and the deprived, (26) those who affirm the Day of Judgment, (27) and who are wary of the punishment of their Lord—with it. "This is what you hoarded up for yourselves; so taste that which you hoarded."

19–21 The message in these verses is similar to that of 41:49–51: Man wearies not of supplicating for good, and if evil befalls him, he is despondent, despairing. And if We make him taste some mercy from Us after hardship has befallen him, surely he will say, "This is mine; I think not that the Hour will come. If I am returned unto my Lord, surely with Him shall I have that which is most beautiful."... And when We bless man, he turns away and withdraws. Yet when evil befalls him, he is full of prolonged supplication. In both instances, man (insān) refers to human beings in general or, according to some, disbelievers in particular (Q, Ṭ).

19 This verse is similar to 21:37, Man was created of haste, and 17:11, Man is ever hasty. Each of these verses can be taken to refer to all human beings, though some interpret them as describing disbelievers in particular (Q, R). In this sūrah, the exception save those who perform prayer (v. 22) suggests that the broader interpretation is intended (R, Z). Anxious translates halūᶜ, which denotes greed and covetousness combined with severe anxiety (Q).

20–21 In this context evil and good can be understood as any form of misfortune or good fortune, respectively, or more specifically illness and poverty, on the one hand, and health and wealth, on the other (R). Fretful translates jazūᶜ, which indicates both distress regarding one's misfortune and a lack of forbearance. It is thus the opposite of the patience and forbearance enjoined in v. 5. According to al-Rāzī, to overcome the fret and anxiety described in vv. 19–20, one should realize that the circumstances that give rise to them are from God and be content with them, as one must be content with all that comes from God. Then when health and wealth are present, they should be expended for the sake of seeking gain in the Hereafter rather than gain in this life. Those characterized by the eight qualities mentioned in the following verses (vv. 22–35) are then not subject to the blameworthy state mentioned in these verses (R). Those are begrudging who, when provided with wealth, fail to acknowledge the right that God and others have to it and thus fail to expend any of it in charity (IK, JJ).

22–35 Similar to 23:1–11, which adds and who turn away from idle talk (23:3) to the list, this pericope is among the most thorough in listing the moral and ritual responsibilities of Islam; see also 33:35.

22–23 The first of the ritual responsibilities of Islam is prayer. These verses can be taken to mean those who perform the rites as prescribed without neglecting any aspect, as in v. 34, those who are mindful of their prayers, or simply as those who pray all five daily prayers (Ṭ). It may also indicate those who maintain the prayer of the heart at all times (Aj).

24–25 These verses are repeated almost verbatim in 51:19. The second responsibility for Muslims is recognizing the rights of the other in regard to one's wealth. An acknowledged due refers to the obligatory alms (zakāh) rather than supererogatory charity (ṣadaqah; Q, R, Ṭ), though some maintain that it indicates charitable giving beyond the obligatory alms as well (R, Ṭ). The beggar refers to those who request, while the deprived may refer to those who have need but do not ask (R); for other meanings of the deprived, see 51:19c. For a list of those who have an acknowledged due, or the right, to a share of one's wealth, see 2:177.

26 The third responsibility is belief in the Resurrection and the weighing of deeds and therefore leading a life focused on the Hereafter rather than this world.

27–28 To be wary of the punishment could be considered an extension of the third responsibility or as a fourth responsibility, since, in addition to believing in the Day of Judgment and what is to

(28) truly there is no security from the punishment of their Lord, (29) those who guard their private parts, (30) save from their spouses or those whom their right hands possess, for then they are not blameworthy; (31) but whosoever seeks beyond that, they are the transgressors; (32) those who abide by their trusts and their pact, (33) who uphold their testimony, (34) and who are mindful of their prayers, (35) those shall be in Gardens, honored. (36) So how is it that those who follow, believers must also fear the consequences of neglecting duties or committing acts of disobedience, as in 67:12: Truly for those who fear their Lord unseen there shall be forgiveness and a great reward (see also 13:21; 16:50; 21:49; 39:23; 98:8). There is no security from the punishment, because it is inescapable (25:65).

29–31 The fifth responsibility is refraining from illicit sexual activity. These three verses are repeated verbatim in 23:5–7. For a more extensive discussion of what it means to guard one's private parts, see commentary on 24:30–31. According to a ḥadīth, "Whosoever is able to guarantee what is between his jawbones and what is between his legs, I will guarantee him Paradise." Another ḥadīth cites the spread of illicit sexual intercourse as one of the signs of the end of time. Whom their right hands possess refers to slave women with whom one has sexual relations; see 4:3c; 4:25c.

32–33 The sixth responsibility is to remain true to one's commitments, both in relation to God, with whom all of humanity is said to have made an initial pretemporal covenant or pact (see 7:172c), and with people (see also 23:8), thus in both religion and the affairs of this world (JJ). The seventh responsibility, which follows from maintaining trusts, is to testify to God's Oneness and to the other articles of faith (Q), though some say this verse indicates testifying to God's edicts and remaining true to them (R). It can also be related to testifying to the truth in all matters, even if it is against one's kin, as in 6:152: And when you speak, be just, even if it be [against] a kinsman. This issue is addressed more fully in 2:283 and 4:135. According to a ḥadīth, "The signs of the hypocrite are three: when he speaks he lies; when he makes a promise, he breaks [it]; and when he is entrusted, he betrays" (IK).

34 The eighth responsibility is to be among those who are mindful of their prayers (cf. 6:92; 23:9), which is interpreted to mean those who are careful to pray at the right time and to maintain all of the necessary and recommended aspects of prayer (IK), including being mindful and present when praying. The manner in which this extended pericope on the responsibilities of Islam begins with prayer in vv. 22–23 and ends with prayer in this verse indicates the centrality of prayer to all other religious acts. In this vein the Prophet said, "Establish [the prayer] and do not fall short. And know that the best of your deeds is prayer" (IK on 23:2). He is also reported to have found great solace in prayer, saying, "My comfort is in prayer." In warning of the consequences of failing to pray, he is reported to have said, "The first thing for which one will be taken to account is prayer," meaning for failing to pray. From one perspective, those who are constant in their prayers (v. 23) refers to those who always observe the appointed times for prayer, while those who are mindful of their prayers indicates those who remain focused upon every aspect of prayer, from correct time and direction, to the prescribed purification procedures and location, to the proper attitude (being completely present in prayer by ridding the heart of all distractions and avoiding any acts of disobedience; R on 70:23). Elsewhere the Quran enjoins, Be mindful of your prayers (2:238).

35 This promise is similar to that given at the end of the almost identical pericope in 23:10–11: It is they who are the heirs, who shall inherit Paradise, abiding therein.

36–38 It is reported that these verses were revealed in relation to the disbelievers who gathered around the Prophet to listen to him, but derived no benefit from it. Instead, they would deny him and mock him, saying, "If these were to enter Paradise, we would certainly enter it before them, and we will have more wealth therein than they would ever have" (R, W). Others say that these disbelieve scramble toward thee (37) from the right and from the left in droves? (38) Does every man among them desire to be admitted into a Garden of bliss? (39) Nay! Truly We created them from that which they know. (40) So I swear by the Lord of the easts and the wests that We are able (41) to replace [them] with what is better than they; and none outstrips Us. (42) So leave them to indulge in idle talk and play until they meet the Day that they are promised, (43) a day when they come forth from their graves, hastening as if racing to a goal, (44) their eyes humbled, abasement overcoming them. That is the Day they have been promised.

verses refer to a group of hypocrites who would mock the Prophet (Q, R).

39 Nay! is meant as a negation of the disbelievers' expectation that they will enter the Garden (v. 38). That which they know refers to the dust and then the drop (35:11) from which God created human beings, of which 77:20 says, Did We not create you from a base fluid? (see also 86:5–7). In this context the reference to the mean substance from which human beings were created indicates that mere existence, which in and of itself is nothing without God, is not enough to merit the rewards of which God and His Prophet speak, as people cannot expect to enter the Garden without being reverent (JJ) or following the responsibilities outlined in vv. 22–34.

40 The easts, translating mashāriq, could also mean "the places from which the sun rises," as the rising of the sun, shurūq, derives from the same root, sh-r-q, as "east," mashriq. The wests, translating maghārib, could also mean "the places in which the sun sets," as the setting of the sun, ghurūb, derives from the same root, gh-r-b, as "west," maghrib. So the verse could be read as a reference to the sun, the moon, and the planets, as each has a different place where it sets and rises. If limited to the sun, this verse can also be understood as a reference to the succession of points on the horizon where the sun rises and where it sets throughout the year and thus to the whole of the horizon. Some also say that it refers to both the sun and the moon (T). It could also mean what is east of every location and what is west of every location and thus to the whole of the known world; see also 55:17c.

41 This verse means either that God is able to give them new bodies in the Hereafter (IK) or that He can replace them with another people in this world (T), as in 47:38: And if you turn away, He will cause a people other than you to take your place, and they will not be the likes of you; see also 5:54; 36:81–82; 46:33; 56:60–61.

42 This verse is repeated verbatim in 43:83, and both are reflected in the injunction of 6:91: Say, "Allāh," then leave them to play at their vain discourse. Elsewhere those who indulge in idle talk or vain discourse are said to be in the Fire (52:11–13; 74:45–46). In general the missteps of the tongue are considered to be among those deeds that lead most quickly to the Fire; thus 50:18 warns, No word does he utter without a ready watcher beside him, and the Prophet advises, "Let whosoever believes in God and in the Last Day either speak well or be silent." According to some commentators, the injunction to leave those who derided the Prophet to their own devices was abrogated by 9:5 (Q), though most commentators do not maintain that it is abrogated.

43 The Day of Resurrection is when the earth is stretched out, and casts forth what is in it, emptying itself (84:3–4; see also 99:2), and people are ripped from their graves unawares: with their eyes humbled they emerge from the graves as if they were scattered locusts (54:7; see also 101:4).

44 Abasement and humiliation are commonly referred to as the consequences of disbelief: Truly those who oppose God and His Messenger shall be abased, just as those before them were abased (58:5; see also 58:20). Their eyes humbled, abasement overcoming them (cf. 68:43) thus indicates their utter shame in the Hereafter, as in 10:27: And as for those who commit evil deeds, the recompense of an evil is one like it, and abasement shall overcome them.

Noah

Nūḥ

Nūḥ is most likely from the middle Makkan period. It is one of four *sūrah*s named after an Old Testament prophet; the others are Yūnus, "Jonah," Yūsuf, "Joseph," and Ibrāhīm, "Abraham." Although it takes the name of Noah, this sūrah does not tell his entire story. Other aspects of the story can be found in 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 11:25–48; 21:76–77; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; 29:14–15; 37:75–82; 54:9–15. Nonetheless, a complete chronicle cannot be patched together from these various fragments, since the function of Quranic accounts of the prophets and sacred history is not to provide a historical record, but to provide guidance, as stated in 11:120: All that We recount unto thee of the stories of the messengers is that whereby We make firm thine heart. And herein there has come unto thee the truth, and an exhortation and a reminder for the believers.

Although the Biblical account provides details about the construction of the Ark (Genesis 6:12–16) and Noah's life after the flood (Genesis 9), the Quran focuses almost entirely upon Noah's function as a warner who called his people to guidance and their subsequent rejection of him. The flood with which God punishes those who opposed Noah is mentioned or alluded to in most of the accounts, but it receives no more than one line in any of them. This indicates that God's Punishment is not the focus of the Quranic account; instead, like accounts of other prophets, such as Abraham and Jesus, the Quranic account of Noah emphasizes God's Mercy and Guidance. Despite the fact that Noah's people refuse to respond to repeated calls to follow God, God continues to grant them respite and does not send the flood until they have completely rejected his calls. In this respect, the story can be seen both as a call to those who opposed the Prophet Muhammad to let them know that God's Mercy remains open to them, but that they will perish if they do not avail themselves of the guidance He has sent, and as a reminder to the Prophet Muhammad that messengers before him, such as Noah and Lot, have met with even greater defiance than he encountered.

Along with Abraham, Moses, and Jesus, Noah is considered one of the resolute among the messengers (46:35), who are presented to the Prophet Muhammad as examples to follow and among whose ranks Muslims consider Muhammad to be. According to some, Noah was the first messenger sent by God (those before him are considered prophets rather than messengers; for this distinction see the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions"), and he was sent, like Muhammad, to the entire world, rather than to a specific people (Q).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Truly We sent Noah to his people, "Warn thy people before a painful punishment comes upon them." (2) He said, "O my people! I am a clear warner unto you, (3) that you may worship God, reverence Him, and obey me, (4) that He may forgive you some of your sins and grant you reprieve until a term appointed. Truly when the term of God comes, it will not be delayed, if you but

1 The command given to Noah to warn his people is similar to that given to the Prophet Muhammad in 7:2; 14:44; 21:45; 26:14; 40:18. Noah also warns his people of the punishment in 7:59; 11:26, 39.

2 Just as Noah is commanded to declare, I am a clear warner unto you (cf. 11:25; 26:115), so too is Muhammad enjoined to say, I am only a clear warner (38:70; see also 15:89; 22:49; 29:50; 46:9; 67:26, as well as 51:49–50, the ambiguity of which allows it to be taken as a reference to either Noah or the Prophet Muhammad). Muhammad is also referred to as a clear warner in 7:184. All prophets are sent as bearers of glad tidings and as warners (2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56), and every human collectivity is said to have been sent a warner, as in 26:208: And never did We destroy a town save that it had warners.

3 Al-Rāzī observes that the three duties to which Noah calls his people—worship of God, reverence for God, and following God's messenger—can be seen as comprising all of religion. This verse is similar to Noah's call to his people in 23:23: O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Will you not be reverent?

4 Some of your sins could also be rendered "your sins," implying all sins and thus indicating the manner in which embracing religion and following one of God's messengers can expunge all previous sins (JJ). Grant you reprieve until a term appointed (cf. 14:10; 16:61; 35:45) means that they are given ample time to repent for their sins. Elsewhere, presumably some time after his people had rejected this initial offer, Noah is reported to have said, O my people! If my presence is grievous to you, and [so too] my reminding of the signs of God, then in God do I trust. So decide on your plan, you and your partners, then let there be no doubt concerning your plan, but carry it out against me, and grant no respite! (10:71). Until a term appointed may refer to the death of an individual, the moment when punishment comes in this world, the end of time, or the Day of Judgment. Regarding the end that every human collectivity will eventually meet, as does Noah's, the Quran says, For every community there is a term appointed. When their term comes, knew." (5) He said, "My Lord, I have called my people day and night. (6) Yet my calling has not increased them in aught but flight. (7) Truly whenever I call them, that Thou mayest forgive them, they put their fingers in their ears, cover themselves with their garments, persist, and wax most arrogant. (8) Then I called them openly. (9) Then I proclaimed to them and confided to them in secret. (10) I said, 'Seek forgiveness of your Lord! Truly He is Forgiving. (11) He will send the sky upon you with abundant rains, (12) support you with wealth and sons, and make for you gardens and rivers. (13) What ails you that you hope not for God with dignity, (14) seeing that He has they shall not delay it by a single hour, nor shall they advance it (7:34; 10:49; see also 16:61; 23:43; 34:30).

5 Noah called his people day and night, that is, continuously without interruption (JJ). Day can also be seen as an allusion to calling them openly, and night to calling them privately (Q). Noah is said to have been the most steadfast of God's messengers; he began his prophethood at the age of forty and continued until he was a thousand years, less fifty (29:14), even though he had few followers.

6 The reaction of Noah's people to his call is similar to that attributed to the pagan Arabs in 17:41: And We have indeed varied [Our signs] in this Quran, that they might reflect, though it increased them in naught but aversion. For other passages where the call of God's messengers increases disbelievers' opposition and other negative reactions, see 9:125; 25:60; 35:39, 42.

7 Putting their fingers in their ears indicates that the people are averse to hearing God's message; covering themselves with their garments shows that they do not wish to see God's signs; and waxing arrogant implies that their hearts are closed; in a Quranic context, hearing, sight, and hearts are the three faculties that are either open or closed to revelation; see 2:7; 6:25, 46; 7:100, 179; 16:108; 17:46; 18:57; 22:46; 41:5; 46:26.

8–9 These verses indicate that Noah called to his people in many different ways, but they remained defiant. Many commentators take this to mean that Noah became ever more emphatic, first calling them in private, then openly, and then combining the two (Q, R, Z), a pattern also followed by the Prophet Muhammad, who, according to most accounts, did not preach publicly until three years after receiving the first revelation.

10–20 The promise given by Noah to his people in these verses is similar to that given by the Prophet Muhammad to his people in 61:10–14.

10–11 Noah's words repeat a portion of those of the Arab prophet Hūd in 11:52. The sky is often used as a metonym for "rain," which in a desert environment is synonymous with great blessing, even with the gift of life itself. Abundance translates midrār, which indicates something that is sent again and again. Most interpret it as an indication of rain. But when viewed in relation to other verses, it can be taken as a reference to all manner of Divine Blessings, both material and spiritual, promised to the disbelievers elsewhere on the condition that they reverence God: Had the people of the towns believed and been reverent, We would surely have opened unto them blessings from Heaven and earth (7:96); and to the Jews and Christians if they observe their scripture: Had they observed the Torah and the Gospel and that which was sent down unto them from their Lord, they would surely have received nourishment from above them and from beneath their feet (5:66).

13 This verse means, "How is it that you do not hope that God will honor you and magnify you [Q, R, Z] in this life, in the Hereafter, or both?" Some commentators read this to mean, "How is it that you do not fear God with dignity?" (Āl, Ṭs).

14–18 These verses allude to all stages of human existence, which are cited as proof of God's created you in stages? (15) Have you not considered how God created the seven heavens one upon another, (16) and made the moon a light therein and made the sun a lamp? (17) And God made you grow forth from the earth like plants. (18) Then He will cause you to return to it and bring you forth again. (19) And God made the earth an open expanse for you, (20) that you may travel spacious paths therein.'" (21) Noah said, "My Lord, they disobeyed me and followed those whose wealth and children increase them in naught but loss." (22) And Power, as in 22:5: We created you from dust, then from a drop, then from a blood clot, then from a lump of flesh, formed and unformed, that We may make clear for you. And We cause what We will to remain in the wombs for a term appointed. Then We bring you forth as an infant, then that you may reach maturity (see also 23:12–15).

15 For the creation of the seven heavens one upon another, see 67:3–4c.

16 The mention of the moon and the sun alludes to the means of guidance that God has provided, as in 10:5: He it is Who made the sun a radiance, and the moon a light, and determined for it stations, that you might know the number of years and the reckoning [of time]. God did not create these, save in truth. He expounds the signs for a people who know. V. 16 could be read with "and that He" at the beginning with vv. 17 and 19, also beginning with "and that," and thus as a continuation of the rhetorical question begun in v. 15.

17 Like plants can mean "as growing things." On the one hand, this alludes to the creation of human beings from dust, as in 3:59: Truly the likeness of Jesus in the Sight of God is that of Adam; He created him from dust, then said to him, 'Be!' and he was (R). On the other hand, it alludes to the manner in which all things are thought to emerge from a single source, God. Though the "growing things" are diverse, they remain attached to the one ontological Source, and Its substance is also within them.

18 When v. 14 is read as referring only to the stages of existence during this life, this verse would complete it by continuing to the stages of death and resurrection, as in 2:28: How can you disbelieve in God, seeing that you were dead and He gave you life; then He causes you to die; then He gives you life; then unto Him shall you be returned?

19–20 Elsewhere God is described as the One Who made the earth a cradle for you, and threaded paths for you therein (20:53). Like v. 16, which alludes to the guidance God provides through the sun and the moon, spacious paths indicates other means of guidance that God has provided (see also 21:31; 43:10).

21 Those whom the people followed are said to have been the notables among them (JJ), who elsewhere dissuade them from following Noah by saying, This is only a human being like yourselves, desiring to set himself above you. And had God willed, He would have sent down angels. We heard not of this from our fathers of old. He is but a man possessed. So wait concerning him, for a time (23:24–25; see also 11:27). The criticism of Noah's people for following their notables because of their wealth and children is similar to the manner in which the Muslims are admonished in 9:55 and 9:85: And let not their wealth or their children impress thee. God desires but to punish them thereby in this world, and that their souls should depart while they are disbelievers (cf. 68:10–14). The relativity of the benefits that derive from wealth and children in this world is a recurring Quranic theme; see 34:35–37c; 64:15c.

22 Elsewhere it is said that the people threatened to stone Noah; see 26:116. According to the Prophet's cousin Ibn ʿAbbās, when Noah preached to his people, they would beat him until he passed out, wrap him in a blanket, and throw him in his house, leaving him for dead. When he awoke, he would again go out to preach to them.

they devised a mighty plot, (23) saying, "Do not leave your gods; do not leave Wadd or Suwāᶜ, or Yagūth, Yaᶜūq, or Nasr." (24) Many indeed have they led astray; and it increases the wrongdoers in naught but error. (25) Because of their iniquities they were drowned, then made to enter a Fire. And then they found no helpers for themselves apart from God. (26) Noah said, "My Lord, leave not a single disbeliever to dwell upon the earth. (27) Truly if Thou leavest them, they will mislead Thy servants and will beget naught but disbelieving profligates. (28) My Lord, forgive me and my parents, and whosoever enters my house as a believer, and the believing men and the believing women, and do not increase the wrongdoers in aught but ruin."

23 The mention of the names of the idols draws an implicit parallel to the idols of the Makkans, al-Lāt, al-ᶜUzzā, and Manāt, mentioned in 53:19–20 and said to be naught but names that they have named (53:23). According to a ḥadīth, the gods mentioned here were originally heroes who lived before Noah and had many followers. After their deaths, statues were built to commemorate them, but later generations took the statues as gods (IK); different tribes came to worship different gods based on the particular shapes of the carved statues (Z). Wadd was said to be in the form of a man; Suwāᶜ, a beautiful woman; Yagūth, a bull or sometimes a lion; Yaᶜūq, a horse; and Nasr, an eagle or sometimes another bird of prey (Z).

24 As the practice of idol worship persisted for many generations, the worship of idols continued to lead people astray up to the time when the Quran was revealed. It can refer to either disobeying Noah (Z) or leading others astray.

25 The punishment suffered by those who opposed Noah is both of this world, they were drowned, and of the Hereafter, then made to enter a Fire.

26–27 These are Noah's harshest words in any of the Quranic accounts. Elsewhere he is commanded not to plead for the disbelievers to be saved: And address Me not concerning those who did wrong; surely they shall be drowned (23:27). V. 26 is the only verse in the many verses pertaining to the story of Noah to imply that the flood was a universal event, similar to Genesis 6:17: "I am going to bring a flood of waters on the earth, to destroy from under heaven all flesh in which is the breath of life; everything that is on the earth shall die." All other Quranic discussions of the flood imply that it is specific and localized. In 7:64 and 10:73 the drowned are those who denied Our signs, in 11:37 and 23:27 they are those who did wrong, and in 21:77 they are an evil people. In this manner the Quranic account seems to be more isolated than that of Genesis 6:5–7: "The Lord saw that the wickedness of humankind was great in earth, and that every inclination of the thoughts of their hearts was only evil continually. And the Lord was sorry that he had created human beings on the earth, and it grieved him to his heart. So the Lord said, 'I will blot out from the earth the human beings I have created—people together with animals and creeping things and birds of the air, for I am sorry that I have made them' " (see also Genesis 7:4, 20).

28 Noah's parents were reported to have been among the believers (JJ). In 21:76 God states, We answered him and saved him and his family from great distress. Nonetheless, his son was drowned, and in response to Noah's supplication on his behalf God says to Noah: Truly he is not from thy family; surely such conduct was not righteous (11:46). Though there is no mention of the Ark in this sūrah, it is mentioned by name in 7:64; 10:73; 36:41, discussed at length in 11:37–44, and referred to as the ship in 29:15 and as a thing of planks and nails in 54:13. The lack of any mention of the Ark in this sūrah may be seen to underline the severity of this particular account, since it does not emphasize the salvation provided by God in the way that other accounts do.

The Jinn

al-Jinn

Al-Jinn is a late Makkan sūrah that takes its name from the mention of jinn in the first verse and the report about a group of jinn who heard the Prophet's recitation of the Quran, recognized it as Divine Revelation, and embraced Islam. This sūrah's response to the travails of the last Messenger (rasūl) sent to humanity, Muhammad, connects it to the previous sūrah, which tells of the travails of Noah, widely regarded as the first messenger (Āl), although he had been preceded by other prophets (anbiyāʾ), who are thought to have had a less universal function, such as Adam. Some commentators also see a connection between the mention of the abundant rains promised to Noah's people in 71:11 and the abundant water promised to the Quraysh in 72:16 (Āl, Sy).

This sūrah is said to have been revealed at a time of great difficulty for the Prophet, in the year 619, when he had lost the protection of his uncle Abū Ṭālib and was vulnerable to those in Makkah who opposed his mission. At that time, the Prophet traveled to the nearby town of Ṭāʾif seeking support from its leaders, but they reviled him and set a mob upon him. The Prophet and Zayd ibn Ḥārithah (d. 8/629), who had traveled with him, sought refuge in an orchard, where the Prophet prayed to God for support. There he met Salmān al-Fārsī, an originally Zoroastrian slave from Persia, who helped him escape and later became one of his closest Companions. While traveling in the desert, still searching for a protector, the Prophet stood for prayer at Nakhlah. Some say that he was reciting al-Raḥmān (Sūrah 55), when a group of seven or nine jinn came upon him and stopped to listen; enraptured, they repented and embraced Islam. In light of this account, this sūrah is seen as a gift of solace from God, letting the Prophet know that, despite his trials, the message continued to be heard and his mission continued to spread.

According to another account, al-Jinn was revealed at a time when the jinn were distraught that they were no longer able to intercept messages from Heaven. After consulting among themselves, the jinn realized that obstacles to their receiving messages could only have resulted from a momentous event, so they searched the globe. A group of them came upon the Prophet while he was leading his Companions in the morning prayer. When they heard the Quran, they listened to it attentively and said, "This is what has caused obstacles between us and the reports from Heaven." They went back to their people and said, "O our people, we have heard a marvelous Quran which directs us to the right path; we affirm our faith in it, and we would never associate anyone with our Lord." Then God revealed this sūrah.

To contextualize this account and the place of the jinn, one must consider the nature of the spiritual cosmology of the Quran. In Islamic cosmology, there is something both literal and symbolic about the heavens and the earth. God is not literally physically "above and beyond" the heavens; yet "up" is the reality in physical space that best symbolizes and communicates the meaning of "toward God." In this sense, the heavens represent both higher physical levels and higher ontological planes. The jinn, as psychic beings unseen to most human beings, occupy an intermediate state between the material realm of our physical experiences and the angelic and spiritual realms. Nonetheless, they are also on the earth and, according to some, occupied the earth before human beings. As witnesses to the cosmic order in ways to which most human beings are denied access, the jinn are said to have the ability to "eavesdrop" on angelic communications, inform people of what is to come, and grant special powers. It should be noted, however, that in Islamic spirituality knowledge that comes from the jinn carries no spiritual value, and the spiritual masters have always made a distinction between the forms of knowledge of the Unseen that are tantamount to magic and those that result from what is believed to be a Divine or angelic inspiration. Differentiating between these different kinds of "inspiration" is in fact an important traditional science.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Say, "It was revealed unto me that a group of jinn listened, and said, 'Truly we have heard a wondrous Quran (2) that guides to sound judgment; so we believe in it and will ascribe none as partner unto our Lord. (3) And He—exalted be the Majesty of our Lord—has neither consort nor child. (4) Truly the fool among us has uttered outrages against God, (5) though we had thought that mankind and jinn would not utter lies regarding God.' (6) Indeed, individuals among mankind did seek refuge with individuals among the jinn, and so increased them in oppression. (7) They thought, as did you, that God would

1 The jinn listened to the Prophet's recitation of the Quran (JJ). Their response, the speech that begins here, in which they marvel at the Quran and affirm it (v. 2), is said to have been addressed to their own community of jinn upon their return (JJ). This event is also said to be the one referred to in 46:29–32. A wondrous Quran could also be rendered "an amazing Quran," which is understood as a reference to an unparalleled eloquence that amazed the jinn (Bg), as it did human beings.

2 Sound judgment translates rushd, which can also mean "the right path," as it denotes a way that is free of turns and bends and thus without ambiguity. Spiritually, it can be understood to mean a way of life that is free of iniquities.

3–13 Each of these verses begins with the same particle, which can be read in one of two ways: if read anna, each verse would follow upon it was revealed unto me that (v. 1) and represent the words of the Prophet; if read inna, each verse would follow upon a group of jinn listened, and said and relate the words that the jinn are reported to have said to their own kind after hearing the Quran (Bg, Q). The latter interpretation is favored here and has thus been followed in the translation.

3 This is one of many verses where the Quran criticizes the idea that God has sons or daughters (see also 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149, 153; 39:4; 43:16, 81–82; 52:39). It is similar to 6:100 and 37:158, both of which criticize human beings who identified jinn as sons and daughters of God. Elsewhere it is said that some human beings worship jinn, as in 34:41: They will reply, "Glory be to Thee! Thou art our Protector, apart from them!" Nay, they worshipped jinn, most of them believing in them.

4 The fool among us refers to Satan (Bg, IK), who is said by some to have been originally one of the jinn (see 27:39). Fool could also be taken to mean "the impudent" or "the insolent."

5 According to this verse, until the jinn heard the Quran, they had believed the assertions made by men and other jinn that God had a consort and offspring, because they did not believe that anyone would tell such egregious lies (Bg, R), thus indicating that they had only fallen into such ignorance out of blind adherence (taqlīd) and that they now renounced that belief (R).

6 In pre-Islamic Arabia it was a common custom for people to seek protection from the jinn when they were traveling in the desert (IK, R). But doing so reportedly increased the false opinion that the jinn had of themselves and thus led them to further misguide and oppress. Here oppression translates rahaq, which indicates a combination of sin, evil, transgression, and oppression (Bg).

7 The failure of the Arabs to believe in Resurrection is a matter with which the Quran and the Prophetic aḥādith are particularly concerned, as even some who confirmed the Oneness of God, still denied Resurrection; see 31:25–26c; 43:87c.

resurrect no one. (8) 'We reached out to Heaven and found it filled with mighty sentries and flaming stars. (9) We used to sit in places thereof to listen, but whosoever listens now finds a flaming star lying in wait for him. (10) We know not whether evil is desired for those upon the earth, or whether their Lord desires guidance for them. (11) Some among us are righteous, and some among us are otherwise; we are on paths divided. (12) We knew for certain that we could

8–9 According to several aḥādīth, these verses, along with 15:16–18 and 67:5, refer to the role that jinn are said to have played in facilitating fortune-tellers and sorcerers. As subtle beings, jinn are said to have more direct access to other realms of existence than do human beings, who are more closely bound to the form and matter of this world. And it is believed that jinn employ such powers to "eavesdrop" on angels, but that they then deceive human beings, leading them astray with half-truths. Regarding this matter, a ḥadīth states, "Some people asked the Messenger of God about the fortune-tellers. He said, 'They are nothing.' They said, 'O Messenger of God, sometimes they tell us of a thing that turns out to be true.' The Messenger of God replied, 'A jinn snatches that true word and pours it into the ear of his friend, but then mixes a hundred lies with it.' " It is said that after the Prophet Muhammad began receiving revelations, the jinn ceased to be able to access true words from Heaven (see the introduction to the sūrah). Angels were then established as sentries to bar their access, and meteors were the means by which God repelled them. Regarding the transmission of such messages and the inability of the jinn to "eavesdrop" on the angels, another ḥadīth states, "As we were sitting during the night with the Messenger of God, a shooting meteor gave a dazzling light. The Messenger of God said, 'What did you say in the pre-Islamic days when there was such a shot?' They said, 'God and His Messenger know best, but we used to say that that very night a great man had been born and a great man had died.' Whereupon the Messenger of God said, 'These [meteors] are shot neither at the death of anyone nor on the birth of anyone. God issues a command when He decides to do a thing. Then [the angels] supporting the Throne sing His Glory; then sing the inhabitants of Heaven who are near to them until this Glory of God reaches those who are in the Heaven of this world. Then those who are near the supporters of the Throne ask these supporters of the Throne, "What has your Lord said?" And they inform them of what He says. Then the dwellers of Heaven seek information from them until this information reaches the Heaven of this world. In this process of transmission [the jinn snatches] what he manages to overhear and carries it to his friends. And when the angels see the jinn, they attack them with meteors. If they narrate only what they manage to snatch, that is correct, but they combine it with lies and make additions to it.' "

10 Here the jinn admit that they cannot listen to God's secret converse and have no knowledge of the Unseen, which indicates that the advice of fortune-tellers and soothsayers, both of whom claimed to receive their wisdom from the jinn, is ultimately not founded upon real knowledge; rather, the jinn seek to inspire each other with flowery discourse in order to deceive (6:112).

11 Some jinn are believers and others disbelievers (Bg, Ṭ), thus indicating that jinn are just like human beings in relation to God and that there is therefore no basis for the exalted status that some human beings attribute to them. In this vein, 51:56 states, I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me.

12 The pre-Islamic Arabs were given to calling upon jinn and idols for help. Some thus thought that they could thwart or evade God, to Whom the Prophet was calling them. But here the jinn are made to say that they themselves cannot thwart God, with the implication that they cannot assist anyone else in doing so either. The idea that one can thwart God or His signs is never thwart God on earth; nor could we ever thwart Him by fleeing. (13) And when we heard the guidance, we believed in it, for whosoever believes in his Lord shall fear neither detraction nor oppression. (14) Some among us submit and some among us are unjust; those who submit seek guidance; (15) and as for the unjust, they are kindling for Hell.'" (16) And [say], "[It was revealed unto me] that if they hold firm to the path, We shall give them abundant water, (17) that criticized in over a dozen verses (6:134; 8:59; 9:2–3; 10:53; 11:19–20, 33; 16:46; 22:51; 24:57; 29:22; 34:5, 38; 39:51; 42:31; 46:32), since from a Quranic perspective naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God (35:44; see also 52:8).

13 Here the guidance refers to the Quran (Bg, JJ, Q, R), which is referred to as such in several verses (see 2:2, 97; 3:138; 6:157; 7:52, 203; 10:57; 12:111; 16:64, 89; 27:2, 77; 41:44). The Torah and the Gospel are similarly referred to as "guidance" (see, e.g., 3:3–4; 5:46; 40:53–54c); and "The Guide" (al-hudā) is one of the names of the Quran. That believers shall fear neither detraction nor oppression is understood to mean that the good deeds they perform will not decrease and their evil deeds will not increase (IK, Ṭ).

14–15 These are the only two verses where qāsiṭ is used to describe the disbelievers. Here translated unjust, it indicates those who have deviated from the right course and is thus the direct opposite of those who seek guidance. Qāsiṭ derives from the same root (q-s-ṭ) as muqsiṭ and qisṭ, meaning "just" and "justice," respectively. Al-Qurṭubī explains that the qāsiṭ is one who "turns away from the truth" and the muqsiṭ is one who "turns toward the truth." The idea that the jinn are also liable to punishment in Hellfire is stated most emphatically in God's declaration: I shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together (11:119; 32:13).

16 Although the preceding verses clearly refer to the jinn, this verse can be seen as a reference to either the jinn (R) or the Quraysh (Bg). According to many commentators, this verse refers to a seven-year drought that would be relieved, were the disbelievers to accept Muhammad as a messenger of God (Bg). Abundant water can be seen as an allusion to Divine Provision (rizq; Bg, IK, Q, R), all manner of benefit and good, (Bg, R), a life of ease and abundance (Bg, Ṭ), or Paradise, which is often described as having Gardens with rivers running below (see 2:25c; 3:195; 5:12; 48:5; 64:9; R). Conversely, this verse can be understood as a reference to the wealth and provision by which God allows those who are astray to continue fooling themselves, going further astray "little by little" (cf. 7:182; 68:44; Ṭ).

17 When v. 16 is viewed in a positive manner, as a reference to those who hold firm to the path of Islam, this verse refers to the manner in which belief must be manifested by dealing properly with those things over which God has appointed human beings as trustees (see 57:7), for example, by paying the necessary alms tax on wealth and spending it in the way of God (2:195, 261–62; 8:60; 47:38; 57:10). But if v. 16 is viewed in a negative manner, as a reference to those who hold firm to the path of disbelief or opposition, this verse indicates that God allows disbelievers to fall further into deception and delusion, continuing to commit even greater sins because they think that wealth and apparent success in this world demonstrate their favor with God. But from an Islamic perspective, the wealth of this world can in fact result from the exact opposite of Divine Favor, as in 6:44: So when they forgot about that whereof they had been reminded, We opened unto them the gates of all things, till, as they exulted in what they were given, We seized them suddenly, whereupon they came to despair; and in 15:3: Leave them to eat and enjoy themselves and to be beguiled by hopes, for soon they will know (see also 7:182–83; 16:55; 23:54–56; 68:44). The remembrance can refer to the Quran (Aj, Ṭ), being a servant of God (Aj, R), testifying to the Oneness of God (Aj), or simply remembering God and His message. A grievous punishment is literally "an ascending punishment," said to be ascending because it only increases in severity (Bg) or because there is no relief from it (Ṭ).

We may try them therewith, and whosoever turns away from the remembrance of his Lord, He leads him to a grievous punishment, (18) and that places of worship are for God; so do not call upon another alongside God, (19) and that when the servant of God rises to call upon Him, they well-nigh swarm upon him." (20) Say, "I call only upon my Lord, and I ascribe none as a partner unto Him." (21) Say, "I have no power over what harm or guidance may come to you." (22) Say, "None will protect me from God, and I shall never find refuge apart from Him (23) if I do not convey from God and His messages. And whosoever disobeys

18 Places of worship translates masājid, the plural form of both masjid (place of prostration) and misjad (instrument of prostration; Bg). Masjid is the standard word used by Muslims for "mosque," from which this English word derives, and is translated as such in most of its occurrences, but here is taken as a reference to all houses of worship for all religions (Bg) or to the whole of the earth (Bg, Q, Ṭ) in accordance with a famous saying of the Prophet: "The earth has been made a place of prostration (masjid) for me, and has been purified" (Q). If taken as the plural for misjad, it refers to the seven parts of the body that should all touch the ground in the formal prostration position for Muslim prayer: the forehead, the hands, the feet, and the knees (Bg).

19 The servant of God (ʿabd Allāh) is one of the seven names by which the Prophet is called in the Quran (see 73:1–2c) and one of the most common names by which the Prophet is known in the Islamic tradition. To be the servant of God is one of the highest spiritual stations, as it represents complete surrender to God. Overall, this verse can be taken as a reference to the jinn, who were amazed at the Quran and nearly piled upon one another to hear it (Bg, Ṭ). Or it can be seen as a reference to the jinn reporting to their own companions how amazed they were to see the devotion of the Prophet's Companions (Bg). Finally, it can be seen as a reference to the disbelievers among the Quraysh and among the jinn who would put obstacles in the Prophet's way and press in upon him when he prayed at the Kaʿbah (Bg). The verses before this verse support the interpretation of it as a reference to the jinn, while those after it support its interpretation as a reference to the disbelievers among the Quraysh.

20 I call only upon my Lord is a response to the objections of the Quraysh, who accused the Prophet of infringing upon the people and demanded that he abandon the message he was preaching (Q, R).

21–22 Here the Prophet is being told to deny that he has any power beyond that of delivering God's message faithfully, a frequent Quranic theme (see 67:26c). Given the tendency of the Arabs toward idol worship, this theme recurs throughout the Quran, as in 3:79–80: It is not for any human being, God having given him the Book, judgment, and prophethood, to then say to the people, "Be servants of me instead of God." Rather, "Be sages, from having taught the Book and from having studied." And he would not command you to take the angels and the prophets as lords. Would he command you to disbelief after your having been submitters?

23 If I do not convey from God and His messages could have two different grammatical functions. In this translation, if . . . not renders illā as a contraction of in lā (R, Ṭ), meaning, "None will protect me from God if I do not convey His messages" (Ṭ), or "If I do not convey . . . I shall never find refuge" (R). Illā could also be read as a clause of exception related to v. 21 (R, Ṭ, Z), meaning, "I have no power over you . . . except to convey to you what God has commanded me to convey from God and His messages" (Ṭ), or "I have no power over what harm or guidance may come to you (v. 21), only to convey from God" (Q, R). It could also be understood as a clause of exception related to the last phrase of v. 22, meaning, "I shall never find refuge apart from Him, save in conveying from God and His messages" (Q, R).

God and His Messenger, his shall be the Fire of Hell, abiding therein forever, (24) such that when they see what they are promised, they will know who is weaker in helpers and fewer in number." (25) Say, "I know not whether that which you are promised is nigh or whether my Lord has appointed a term for it; (26) Knower of the Unseen, He does not disclose His Unseen to anyone, (27) save to the one whom He approves as a messenger. Then He dispatches before him and behind him a guard, (28) that He may know that they have indeed conveyed the messages of their Lord. And He encompasses whatsoever is with them and keeps a numbered count of all things."

24 What they are promised refers to either the Day of Judgment (Bg), which is referred to elsewhere as the Day that they are promised (43:83; 51:60; 70:42), or the punishment (Bg), or both. Some also understand it as a reference to the Battle of Badr (JJ). This verse is similar to 19:75: Whosoever is in error, the Compassionate will extend his term till, when they see that which they have been promised, be it the punishment or the Hour, they will know whose position is worse, and whose host is weaker (see also 25:42). For this reason the Day of Judgment is also known as the Day of Division (37:21; 44:40; 77:13–14, 38; 78:17), since when the ambiguities of this world are cast aside, the distinction between truth and falsehood becomes clear to all.

25 In both the present verse and 21:109, that which you are promised refers to the Day of Judgment (IK), the punishment the disbelievers will receive, or both. Both verses can be read as a response to the question posed by disbelievers in other verses: When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25); see 36:48c.

26–27 Elsewhere God is referred to as Knower of the Unseen and the seen (6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 32:6; 39:46; 59:22; 62:8; 64:18), usually taken to mean that He has knowledge of this world, the Hereafter, and all that exists on all levels of reality. V. 26 and 34:3 are the only verses in which God is referred to simply as Knower of the Unseen. In this context, the Unseen can be taken as a reference to all that is unseen, to that which you are promised from the previous verse (R), or to revelation (Ṭ). The reference to God's disclosing His Unseen indicates the manner in which God teaches the prophets revelation (Ṭ). The caveat that God only reveals to the one whom He approves reaffirms the denunciation of sorcerers and fortune-tellers in vv. 8–9 (R). Some also take it as refutation of the possibility that miracles could be performed by anyone other than prophets (Z), though Sunnis and Shiites generally accept the reality of "lesser miracles," which are known as karāmāt, while miracles performed by prophets are known as muʿjizāt, or "evidentiary miracles." The guards are angels who ensure that none of the jinn who attempt to gain knowledge of the Unseen hear the revelation before it reaches the prophet for whom it is intended (Ṭ); they are said to be four in number (IK).

28 As translated, this verse indicates that God sends the angels, so that God Himself may know that the prophets have conveyed the messages with which He sent them (JJ). But it can also be rendered "that he may know," indicating that it is for the Messenger to know that the angels have conveyed the messages to the prophets (Bg, Q, Ṭ), or else to know that the angels have received the message (Ṭ). In this latter sense, it may refer to the particular covenant that God makes with the prophets in 3:81 and 33:7, that they will confirm or bear witness to the revelations sent to one another. That He may know translates li-yaʿlama, which could also be read li-yuʿlima, meaning "that He may inform," thus indicating that God dispatches the angels as guards to inform the people that the prophets have indeed conveyed the messages of their Lord (Bg, Q).

The Enwrapped One

al-Muzzammil

Al-Muzzammil is among the earliest Makkan *sūrah*s. Many commentators maintain that v. 20 was revealed about one year later than the remainder of the sūrah (Āl, IK), while others believe that v. 20 is from the Madinan period (Āl, JJ). In either case, all of the verses except v. 20 are said to have been revealed immediately after the first five verses of Sūrah 74, al-Muddaththir. This sūrah takes its name from God's addressing the Prophet as thou enwrapped (al-Muzzammil) in the first verse.

The main theme is the injunction to perform night vigil (tahajjud), which was made obligatory before the five daily prayers had been established (Āl); however, the modification of the injunction to perform night vigil in the last verse made it henceforth voluntary. The direct address to the Prophet, which tells him of the weighty Word (v. 5) of revelation, follows upon the mention of the messengers in the last verses of the previous sūrah (Āl), all of whom received a weighty Word in one form or another.

The first section (vv. 1–9) establishes the supremacy of night vigil and the obligation to perform it, and the second section (vv. 10–14) counsels the Prophet not to worry about those who do not heed the revelation. The third section (vv. 15–19) shifts the address to those who deny the Prophet, likening Muhammad to Moses, and alludes to the apocalyptic inversions (see *Sūrah*s 81 and 82) that will occur on the Day of Judgment. The last verse then removes the obligation of night vigil imposed in the first section, although it enjoins prayer and paying alms.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) O thou enwrapped! (2) Stand vigil at night, save a little, (3) half of it or reduce it a little, (4) or add to it; and recite the Quran in a measured pace. (5) Truly We shall soon cast upon thee a weighty Word. (6) Truly the vigil of

1–2 Enwrapped refers to the Prophet's wrapping himself in his cloak after the first revelation; see the introduction to Sūrah 96. According to ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, thou enwrapped (al-Muzzammil) is one of the seven names by which the Prophet said he was called in the Quran; the others are Muhammad (3:144; 33:40; 47:2; 48:29), Aḥmad (61:6), Ṭā Hā (20:1), Yā Sīn (36:1), thou who art covered (al-Muddaththir; 74:1), and servant of God (ʿAbd Allāh; 72:19; IA, Q). Thou enwrapped is understood by most as a reference to the Prophet's wrapping himself in his cloak in awe of the new revelation that had come upon him (see 74:1c). But in the context of this sūrah, it can also be seen as an injunction from God to throw off one's bedding and stand in prayer, as in 17:78–79, as if God were calling, "O thou who art sleeping" (IK).

Before the five daily prayers were revealed, night vigil was the common practice of the Prophet and his small group of followers, who would reportedly stand in prayer until their feet swelled. The practice was then eased in v. 20 and was made explicitly supererogatory in 17:79: And keep vigil in prayer for part of the night, as a supererogatory act for thee. Regarding the benefits of night vigil, a famous ḥadīth says, "Every night during the last third of the night, our Lord descends to the Heaven of this earth and says, 'Who calls upon Me that I might answer him? Who asks of Me that I might give to him? Who seeks My Forgiveness that I might forgive him?' " Night vigil is also a supererogatory practice that the Quran attributes to the upright among the People of the Book: Among the People of the Book is an upright community who recite God's signs in the watches of the night, while they prostrate (3:113); for other references to night vigil see 11:114; 21:20; 20:130; 25:63–64; 50:40; 52:49; 73:6, 20; 76:26.

3–4 These are the first verses in the chronological order of revelation to explicitly enjoin reciting the Quran as a form of worship, an injunction that appears frequently (e.g., 18:27; 27:92; 29:45). The command to recite the Quran in a measured pace can be seen as an injunction for all Muslims or as one that applies specifically to the Prophet, indicating that he is to deliver the revelation to others in a measured pace. In this way the Prophet's manner of recitation reflects the manner that God ascribes to Himself in 25:32: And We have recited it unto thee in a measured pace. Regarding the Prophet's manner of recitation, his wife Umm Salamah is reported to have said, "He used to divide his recitation verse by verse" (IK), meaning that he would pause at the end of each verse.

The Prophet enjoined his followers to recite the Quran, saying, "Adorn the Quran with your voices" (IK), and "Whosoever does not chant the Quran is not one of us" (IK). Many aḥādīth speak of the benefits of reciting the Quran, among them, "Whosoever recites the Quran fluently is with the honorable and obedient scribes [i.e., the angels], and whosoever recites it with difficulty shall receive a double reward"; "Never does a group gather in one of the houses of God, reciting the Book of God and contemplating it, but that peace descends upon them, mercy surrounds them, the angels encircle them, and God remembers them in His gathering." Regarding the different levels of recitation, a famous ḥadīth states, "The believer who recites the Quran is like a citrus fruit; its fragrance is pleasing and its taste is sweet. The believer who does not recite the Quran is like a dried date; it has no fragrance, but its taste is sweet. The hypocrite who recites the Quran is like basil; its fragrance is sweet, but its taste is bitter. The hypocrite who does not recite the Quran is like bitter apple [colocynth]: it has no fragrance and its taste is bitter."

5 A weighty Word refers to the Quran itself. The Word of God is said to be weighty both in the

the night is firmest in tread and most upright for speech. (7) For truly by day thou hast lengthy affairs. (8) So remember the Name of thy Lord and devote thyself to Him with complete devotion— (9) Lord of the East and the West, there is no god but He, so take Him as a guardian. (10) Bear patiently that which they say and take leave of them in a beautiful manner. (11) Leave to Me the deniers living in luxury, and be gentle with them for a while. (12) Truly with obligations that it entails for the Prophet and his followers (IK, Sy) and in the weight of good that will be placed in the scales on the Day of Judgment for one who follows it and recites it (Sy). According to several accounts, the weight of the Quran was not merely figurative. The Prophet's wife ʿĀʾishah reported that the Prophet would perspire when the revelation came upon him, even on a cold day (IK). On another occasion she said, "When the revelation came upon the Prophet while he was on his mount, it was like a blow to the camel's neck" (IK).

6 Vigil of the night translates nāshiʾat al-layl, which literally means "rising at night" (Ṭ). In this sense, it could also refer to the ascension of the spirit or the heart. That night vigil is firmest in tread means that it leaves the strongest impression on the heart (Ṭs) and is most conducive to establishing harmony between the hearing and the heart for the purpose of comprehending the Quran (JJ). It can also be understood to mean "firmer in tread," meaning that the night is better than the day for vigil, recitation, and memorization of the Quran (Ṭ). Others understand the verse to mean, "The one who rises at night" (Ṭ), meaning one who prays at night. Tread translates waṭʾ, which in variant readings is read wiṭāʾ, meaning "agreement," "cooperation," or "congruence." This is understood to mean that night is the best time for realizing agreement, cooperation, and congruence between the heart, ear, and tongue (Ṭ). That night is most upright for speech means that it is the best time for recitation of the Quran (Q, Ṭ).

7 Lengthy affairs refers to the responsibilities that prevent one from having time for extensive devotions during the day (JJ) or to God's granting an extensive expanse of time for worldly matters, thus implying the responsibility to devote a part of the night to prayer (IK).

8 Once believers have finished with their affairs, they should devote themselves to God, as in 94:7: So when thou art free, exert thyself (IK). Some say the command remember the Name of thy Lord means to recite the basmalah (In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful), at the beginning of Quranic recitation (JJ), while others see it as an exhortation to remember God at every moment of every day (Aj), since the remembrance of God is surely greater (29:45). Devote translates tabattal, which literally means "to sever" or "to cut off." It is thus interpreted to mean cutting oneself off from everything other than the remembrance of God (Aj).

9 God is also referred to as Lord of the East and the West in 26:28; see also 2:115, 142; 37:5; 55:17; 70:40. One is to take Him as a guardian because only God suffices as a Guardian (4:81, 132, 171; 33:3, 48; see also 17:65), indicating that in the end one can only entrust one's affairs to God.

10 This is similar to other verses that counsel the Prophet to be patient (e.g., 16:127; 20:130; 38:17; 46:35; 50:39; 52:48; 70:5; 86:17). If at the time of this revelation the Prophet had not yet begun to preach publicly, as most commentators maintain, it most likely refers only to the few individuals whom he had approached in private. Take leave of them in a beautiful manner indicates taking leave for the sake of God (Ṭ).

11–12 Leave to Me the deniers (cf. 68:44; 74:11) indicates that it is not for the Prophet to be concerned about those who do not accept God's message once he has delivered it to them, as God will deal with them properly in time. Be gentle with them for a while is a command to grant them respite, indicating both that they should be granted the opportunity to embrace Islam and follow the Prophet and that, if they do not, God will soon requite them for their disbelief, both in Us are fetters and Hellfire, (13) food that chokes and a painful punishment— (14) on a day when the earth and the mountains shake, and the mountains will be like heaps of shifting sand. (15) We have indeed sent you a messenger as a witness concerning you, just as We sent unto Pharaoh a messenger. (16) But Pharaoh disobeyed the messenger, so We seized him with a torrential seizing. (17) So if you disbelieve, how will you guard against a day that would make children gray-haired? (18) The sky shall be rent asunder thereon. His Promise shall be fulfilled. (19) Truly this is a reminder; so let him who will, take a way unto his

this life, through the victory of the Muslims over the Quraysh, and in the Hereafter with fetters and Hellfire. It could also indicate that they should be allowed to continue in their ways, as they will be requited for their deeds in the end, as in 31:24: We grant them enjoyment a little, then We compel them toward a grave punishment (IK).

13 Food that chokes may refer to any of the forms of vile and unpleasant food that are provided for the people of Hellfire, including the tree of Zaqqūm (44:43; cf. 37:62; 56:52), a vile thorn (88:6), filth, which none eat, save the iniquitous (69:36–37), and thorns of fire, which can be neither vomited nor ingested (JJ), or else to all of them collectively.

14 That the earth and the mountains will shake and be destroyed on the Day of Judgment is one of the apocalyptic inversions mentioned in several verses, such as 69:14, where the earth and mountains are borne away and ground up in a single grinding, and 70:9 and 101:5, where the mountains are likened to carded wool (see also 18:47; 52:10; 56:5–6; 81:3); see 56:5–6c.

15–16 In this verse, the pronoun you may refer to the disbelievers (Āl), the people of Makkah (JJ), or humanity in general. That the Messenger is sent as a witness concerning you indicates that he will bear witness concerning human beings, either for them or against them on the Day of Judgment (Ṭ). It can also be understood to mean "as a witness against you," meaning that he will bear witness to their disbelief and opposition on the Day of Resurrection (Aj, Āl, Bḍ, Z). That Muhammad is likened to Moses implies that the Quraysh are likened to Pharaoh's people, thus indicating that they will suffer the same fate (IK). Given the early date of this sūrah, this reference also shows that the pre-Islamic Arabs were familiar with the story of Moses and Pharaoh or at least its general outline. A torrential seizing indicates one that is severe or evil (Ṭ); elsewhere it is said of Pharaoh and his people that God seized them with a devastating blow (69:10), and such is the seizing of thy Lord when He seizes the towns while they are doing wrong. Surely His seizing is painful, severe (11:102).

17 This verse could also be read, "How will you reverence on a day that would make children gray-haired?" (R, Z), indicating that those who disbelieve will not have the opportunity to turn their hearts from disobedience to reverence on the Day of Resurrection. The hair of children turns gray from fear and awe (Ṭ), indicating that the events of this day would make the young old. This is an example of apocalyptic inversion (see *sūrah*s 81 and 82), in which the order of this world is inverted on the Day of Resurrection. Here the inversion relates to the human order, as children's hair turning gray implies the loss of the strength and vitality associated with youth, while in the next verse, the inversion applies to the created order in general.

18 That the sky or Heaven shall be rent asunder is repeated in 42:5; 55:37; 69:16; 84:1, though the Arabic in each case is slightly different; also see 25:25; 82:1.

19 This verse is repeated in 76:29. The Quranic message is referred to in these verses and elsewhere as a reminder, indicating that it is available to provide guidance for all those willing to reflect (IK, R). In this verse, reminder translates tadhkirah, which can also mean "admonition" (Āl, Ṭ). This refers to either the Quran as a whole (Ṭ) or this particular sūrah (IK, R). So let him who will indicates human beings who choose the path of faith in God and obedience to Him (Ṭ). The phrase

Lord. (20) Truly thy Lord knows that thou dost stand vigil well-nigh two-thirds of the night, or a half of it, or a third of it, as do a group of those who are with thee; and God measures out the night and the day. He knows that you will not keep count of it and has relented unto you; so recite that which is easy for you of the Quran. He knows that among you will be some who are ill, others traveling upon the earth seeking God's Bounty, and others fighting in the way of God. So recite that which is easy of it, perform the prayer, give the alms, and lend unto God a goodly loan—whatever good you send forth for your souls, you will find it with God better and greater in reward. And seek God's Forgiveness. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.

could also be interpreted with God as the subject of the verb will, meaning, "So let whomsoever He wills, take a way," since you do not will but that God wills (76:30; IK). When read in the context of this sūrah, take a way unto his Lord can be seen as a reference to the practices it enjoins, that is, night vigil (tahajjud) and Quranic recitation.

20 The form of night vigil mentioned in the first sentence relates to that enjoined in vv. 1–8 (JJ). Most likely revealed some twelve months after those verses, the present verse revoked the obligatory status of the night vigil and made it voluntary (Ṭ). A group of those who are with thee refers to the small group of Companions who emulated the Prophet's practice at that time, standing in prayer until their feet were swollen (JJ, Ṭ). After the first sentence, this verse changes from addressing the Prophet in the second-person singular to addressing the Prophet and his Companions in the second-person plural. You will not keep count of it indicates that the Prophet's Companions would not all be able to perform the obligation in full (Ṭ). Therefore, He has relented unto you by lessening the requirement to stand in vigil and allowing them to recite as much of the Quran as is easy for them in prayer (JJ, Ṭ). According to some, those who know the Quran should still recite a minimum of fifty or one hundred verses (Ṭ), or even just five (IK).

For those who are sick, traveling, or fighting, performing the night vigil is difficult, so they need only perform that which is easy of it, that is, whatever is not too taxing. The mention of fighting in this verse has caused some to surmise that it is from the Madinan period, as fighting did not begin until then. Others see it as foreshadowing the travails that the early Muslim community would face (IK). Perform the prayer refers to the obligatory daily prayers (Ṭ). This verse contains the first mention of alms (zakāh) in the chronological order of revelation. Some interpret it as a reference to the obligatory alms (zakāh; Ṭ), but since the specific form of zakāh was not institutionalized at this time, it may refer to charity in general. Some say that the requirement to pay alms was established during the Makkan period, but that the specifics were not established until the Madinan period (IK); for an explanation of zakāh, see 23:4c. To lend unto God a goodly loan (2:245; 5:12; 57:11, 18; 64:17) indicates expending effort and wealth for the cause of religion; see 57:11c; 57:18c. Here and in 5:12 lending a goodly loan is connected with the duties of prayer and almsgiving. Whatever good you send forth for your souls refers to all good deeds performed by believers in this life (Ṭ); see 5:80; 75:13c; 82:5c. You will find it with God better and greater in reward indicates that what one spends in the way of God in this life is better than what one keeps for oneself or leaves behind as an inheritance (IK). It also alludes to the manner in which good deeds are increased in the Hereafter, as in 2:261: The parable of those who spend their wealth in the way of God is that of a grain that grows seven ears, in every ear a hundred grains. And God multiplies for whomsoever He will (see also 2:245, 4:40; 6:160; 10:26; 64:17).

The Covered One

al-Muddaththir

Among the earliest Makkan sūrahs, al-Muddaththir is, according to some commentators, Makkan in its entirety (Bg), but others maintain that the last section (vv. 31–56) is from the Madinan period (Āl). It is closely connected to the previous sūrah, as both are said to respond to the Prophet's covering himself when the experience of the revelation began. Whereas the first verses of Sūrah 73 instruct the Prophet regarding the practices that he and his Companions must follow, this sūrah focuses more upon his function as a warner to those who do not as yet follow him.

Although most commentators agree that 96:1–5 constitutes the first revelation of the Quran, according to an account from one of the Companions, Yaḥyā ibn Abī Kathīr, the first five verses of this sūrah constitute the first revelation. Ibn Abī Kathīr asked Abū Salamah ibn ʿAbd al-Raḥmān what the first sūrah of the Quran to be revealed was, and Abū Salamah replied, "O thou who art covered." Ibn Abī Kathīr then said to him, "They say it was, Recite in the Name of thy Lord Who created! [96:1]." Upon hearing that, Abū Salamah said, "I asked Jābir ibn ʿAbd Allāh about that, saying the same as you have said, whereupon he said, 'I will not tell you except what the Messenger of God had told us. The Messenger of God said, "I passed a month at Mt. Ḥirāʾ, and when my stay came to an end, I came down. While I was walking, I heard a voice from the sky. I looked up toward the sky, and behold! I saw the same angel who came to me in the cave of Ḥirāʾ, sitting on a stool between the sky and the earth. I was so terrified by him that I fell down on the ground. Then I went to my wife and said, 'Cover me! Cover me!' They covered me, and then God revealed [74:1–5]"'" (Bg, W).

Ibn Kathīr proposes that the reference to "the same angel who came to me in the cave of Ḥirāʾ'" indicates that this narration pertains to the second experience of the revelation, thus making the first five verses of this sūrah the first revelation after 96:1–5. Others propose that this account provides the first command to warn, thus to go forth as a Messenger, while 96:1–5 marks the beginning of the revelation as a whole (Āl).

After the opening exhortation to the Prophet in vv. 1–7, vv. 8–10 warn of the Day of Judgment, serving as the segue into a polemic against those who deny the prophethood of Muhammad (vv. 11–25) and an allusion to the punishment they will encounter in the Hereafter (vv. 26–31).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) O thou who art covered, (2) arise and warn! (3) Thy Lord magnify! (4) Thy garments purify! (5) And defilement shun! (6) Grant not favor, seeking gain! (7) And for the sake of thy Lord be patient. (8) For when the trumpet is blown, (9) that Day shall be a difficult day (10) for the disbelievers, not of ease.

1 Like 73:1, this verse refers to the Prophet's enfolding himself in a cloak (dithār) when he first experienced the revelation. As with thou enwrapped (73:1), thou who art covered is taken as one of seven names by which the Prophet is called in the Quran; see 73:1–2c.

2 Arise and warn indicates that this is the first call to the Prophet to deliver the new revelation, to propagate the prophetic message, while 96:1–5 is seen as the first call to prophethood (IK). From a spiritual perspective, vv. 1–2 can be understood as a call to all human beings to remove what separates them from God, arise through God, and drop everything other than God (My).

4 This verse can refer to the purification of both one's garments and one's character and heart before prayer (Bg, IK). In Arabic, to say that one's garments are pure is to imply that one "is free from faults and vices" (Z). Regarding ritual purification, the Prophet said, "Whosoever performs ablution, and does so in a beautiful way, his sins shall leave his body, and will even leave from under his fingernails." In another account, the Prophet said, "When a person washes his face, the sins of his eyes will be washed away, and when he washes his hands, the sins of what his hands have done will be washed away; and when he washes his feet, the sins of where he walked will be washed away, and with the last drop of water, he will be free of sin." Some also take this verse as a command to shorten one's garments rather than wearing them in the ostentatious manner of the pre-Islamic Arabs in which the hems would drag on the ground (JJ).

5 Defilement translates rujz, which is also understood to mean "idols" (Bg, JJ) or misdeeds (Bg), both indicating that one must shun all that would lead to punishment (Bd, Bg).

6 Similar to 92:18–21, this verse indicates that charity should be given freely for the sake of God, not to curry favor or seek material gain. It can be seen as a general command for all believers or as a particular command for the Prophet (Bg, JJ).

7 This verse can mean either that the Prophet should be patient in implementing and following the commands of God or that he should bear patiently the harm that he would receive from his opponents, since God's religion will ultimately prevail (Bg). Viewed in the context of the following verse, it may also mean that one must bear patiently the trials of the Day of Judgment (Bd).

8 The blowing of the trumpet on the Day of Judgment is mentioned in several verses (see 6:73; 18:99; 20:102; 23:101; 27:87; 36:51; 39:68c; 50:20; 69:13; 78:18c). Here it is understood as a reference to the second trumpet blown by the Archangel Raphael (Bg), which heralds the gathering of all humanity on a single open, barren plain for judgment (see 18:47; 20:106; 79:14).

9–10 Those who disbelieve shall find no respite or reprieve on the Day of Resurrection. This may be the first occurrence of kāfir, or "disbeliever," in the chronological order of revelation.

(11) Leave Me alone with the one whom I created, (12) and to whom I gave vast wealth, (13) and sons at his side, (14) and made smooth the way for him. (15) Yet he desires that I give more. (16) Nay! Truly he sets himself against Our signs. (17) I shall constrain him to endure a steep ascent. (18) Truly he reflected and determined. (19) May he perish for how he determined; (20) then may he perish for how

Only in later revelations did kāfir come to be juxtaposed to mu'min, or "believer." In earlier revelations it is juxtaposed to gratitude. Kāfir must thus be understood not simply as a disbeliever, but rather in the more literal sense as "one who covers over," implying that one covers over the truth by denying it and that this is the root of both disbelief and ingratitude.

11–25 These verses are believed to refer to al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah, a staunch opponent of the Prophet in Makkah. Ibn ʿAbbās related that al-Walīd went to the Prophet, who recited the Quran to him, and his heart seemed to soften to it. News of this reached Abū Jahl, another of the leaders of the Quraysh; so he said to al-Walīd, "O uncle, your clan wants to collect money to give to you, for you went to Muhammad and exposed yourself to his message." He said, "The Quraysh know well that I am among their wealthiest." Abū Jahl said, "Then say something about him that will let your people know you condemn and dislike him." He said, "What shall I say? By God, there is not a man among you who is more knowledgeable about poetry and its composition than I. By God, what he says does not resemble any poetry. By God, the speech he utters is sweet and graceful, fruitful at the top, copious at the bottom; it has the upper hand, and nothing has the upper hand over it. But let me think about what I shall say about it." Then he said, "This is naught but sorcery handed down [v. 24], which he has simply learned from others." Then God revealed Leave Me alone with the one whom I created and the verses that follow it (W).

11 Alone refers either to God, thus emphasizing His Uniqueness as Creator, or to the human being, who begins and ends life alone before God (see 6:94; 19:80, 95). Alone translates waḥīd, which is also said to be one of the epithets by which al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah was known (Bg).

12–15 These verses are said to refer specifically to the great fortune that God had bestowed upon al-Walīd, who was among the wealthiest men in Makkah; he had either seven or ten sons and was also considered among the most learned and eloquent of the Quraysh. These verses can, however, also be taken in a general sense as a reference to the human tendency to want ever more, as in a well-known ḥadīth, "If the son of Adam had a valley of gold, he would wish for it to be two valleys" (IK, Q); see sūrah 102; 102:1c.

16 In the context of the story of al-Walīd, this verse suggests that, due to his opposition to the Prophet, God would cut off the blessings He had bestowed upon him (Bg). Our signs means the verses of the Quran (JJ); all the proofs of God, such as the revealed books and the prophets (Ṭ); or the blessings provided by God (Āl, IK).

17 This verse means that al-Walīd will be burdened with a severe punishment that continues to increase (Ṭ), or one from which there is no respite (Bg, Ṭ). Steep ascent translates ṣuʿūd, which is also said to be the name of a mountain of fire in Hell that al-Walīd will be made to ascend and fall from forever (Bg, JJ, Ṭ).

18 It is reported that al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah called together all of the leaders of the Quraysh and asked them about the Prophet. After reflecting upon the Prophet's nature and the Quran, al-Walīd determined that, as he was not possessed, a fortune-teller (kāhin), a poet, or a liar, he must then be a sorcerer (sāḥir; Bg, Q).

19–20 Perish translates qutila, which literally means "slain," indicating that, though he was still alive, al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah had been "spiritually slain." Qutila is thus glossed as "accursed" or "punished" (Bg, JJ). The verse can also be read as a reference to the fact that al-Walīd determined his own fate by the manner in which he sought to determine the nature of the Prophet, and the repetition can be seen as emphasis (Bg) or to mean that he determined! (21) Then he beheld. (22) Then he frowned and scowled. (23) Then he turned his back, and waxed arrogant, (24) and said, "This is naught but sorcery handed down; (25) this is naught but the speech of a human being." (26) I shall cast him into Saqar. (27) And what will apprise thee of Saqar? (28) It spares not, nor leaves behind. (29) It scorches the skin! (30) Over it are nineteen. (31) And We have appointed none but angels as wardens of the Fire; and We have not ap-al-Walīd would be punished, perish, or be slain in both this life and the next.

21–22 These verses tell of al-Walīd's reaction to the Quran. That he beheld may allude to his having had the intelligence to discern its nature, but to have nonetheless frowned and scowled, searching for a way to deny it. Others take beheld as a reference to his looking at the faces of the leaders of the Quraysh while searching for a way to refute the Quran (JJ).

23 Al-Walīd turned his back, that is, on faith and the verification of the Quran (Ṭ). Waxed arrogant translates istakbara, which when combined with the preposition "from" (ʿan) means "disdained" or "scorned." Although the preposition does not occur here, many consider it to be implied, thus meaning, "He disdained to confirm the truth" (Ṭ), or he scorned the Prophet (JJ).

24 Discounting the other possible ways to denigrate the Prophet and the Quran, al-Walīd decided upon sorcery (siḥr) as his final "determination." Elsewhere those who opposed Muhammad and other prophets say of the various revelations, This is naught but manifest sorcery (see 5:110; 6:7; 11:7; 34:43; 37:15).

25 Naught but the speech of a human being means it is not from God. See also 16:103, where the accusation against the Prophet is that he has merely been taught by a human being (JJ). Alternately, this verse can be understood to echo the contention of the disbelievers that, were God to send a messenger, he would have sent an angel, as in 25:7: And they say, "What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him?" (cf. 6:8–9, 50; 11:12; 14:10–11; 17:94–95; 23:24; 33–34, 38, 47; 26:154, 186; 36:15; 54:24; 64:6c).

26–28 According to some Saqar is one of the names of Hell (Bg, Ṭ); according to others, the name of one of the gates of Hell (Ṭ). Some say it has no derivation, while others say it derives from saqarathu al-shams, meaning, "the sun melted or scorched it" (Tāj al-ʿarūs). Spares not, nor leaves behind indicates that it spares no one by leaving them alive, nor does it leave anyone behind dead (Bg, Ṭ; see also 87:12–13), since all are burned and then restored, only to be burned again (Bg; see 4:56); or it means that it leaves nothing of the bones, skin, and blood; it burns them all (Q).

29 Scorching indicates that it burns the skin until it becomes black (Bg, Ṭ). Scorching translates lawwāḥah, which can also indicate something that makes clear, indicating that Saqar is made clear to human beings, as in 26:91: And Hellfire will become apparent to the errant (Bg, Q; see also 79:36).

30 Most exegetes interpret this verse as an allusion to nineteen angels who are the keepers of Hell. The angels of punishment are called al-zabāniyah (96:18), and their king is named Mālik (43:77). Nineteen is one of several numbers occurring in the Quran with symbolic numerological significance. Some of the factors taken to indicate its importance are: the number of letters in the basmalah is nineteen; the number of words in what is most commonly held to be the first revelation, 96:1–5, is nineteen; the number of words in what is most commonly held to be the last revelation, Sūrah 110, is nineteen; in the science of the numerical symbolism of the letters, known as al-jafr, where each letter is assigned a numerical value, the numerological value of the Divine Name al-Wāḥid (the One), is nineteen; and the total number of sūrahs in the Quran is 114, which is 19 multiplied by 6.

31 Upon hearing that there were only nineteen over it, Abū Jahl, one of the leaders of the Quraysh, is reported to have boasted that there would be no problem in overcoming them; so pointed their number save as a trial for those who disbelieve, to grant certainty to those who have been given the Book and increase in faith those who believe; and that those who were given the Book and the believers will not doubt; and that those in whose hearts is a disease and the disbelievers will say, "What does God desire by this as a parable?" Thus does God lead astray whomsoever He will and guide whomsoever He will. And none knows the hosts of thy Lord but He. It is but a reminder unto mankind. (32) Nay! By the moon, (33) by the night as it withdraws, (34) and by the morning as it brightens, (35) truly it is one of the greatest, (36) as a warner unto mankind, (37) for those of you who wish to go forth or stay behind. (38) Every soul is held in pledge for what it has earned, this verse clarifies that they are angels, not human beings (Bg, Q, Ṭ). God appoints their number as a trial, meaning either that they are something that will lead some people astray when they ask why there are nineteen (JJ) or that they are a source of punishment in the Hereafter (Q). In contrast, the believers and the People of the Book are said to increase in faith and certainty. That the appointment of the nineteen is to grant certainty to those who have been given the Book is understood by most to mean that nineteen was also the number known to the Jews and Christians; therefore, the similar enumeration in the Quran should give them greater certainty in the prophethood of Muhammad (Bg, IK, Q, Ṭ). Those in whose hearts is a disease indicates those who have hypocrisy in their hearts (Q, Ṭ; see 2:8–11; 5:52; 24:47–50; 33:12, 60; 47:20, 29) or those who opposed the Prophet (Q). The disbelievers' question, What does God desire by this? likely refers to the meaning behind this particular number, nineteen (Q, Ṭ). In this context, God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will (cf. 13:27; 29:21; 35:8) indicates the manner in which the questions posed by revelation lead some to certainty and faith and others to greater disbelief. None knows the hosts means that none knows their true number (Q, Ṭ), for although the guards are nineteen, they are only the leaders. Their full numbers are alluded to in a ḥadīth: "Hell will be brought on that Day [the Day of Judgment] with seventy thousand bridles, every bridle being held by seventy thousand angels" (Q). It is but a reminder most likely refers to the hosts of thy Lord, but may instead refer to Saqar or the Quran (Q). If taken as a reference to Saqar, reminder (dhikrā) could be rendered "admonition" (Q).

32–34 Nay! expresses a rejection of those who suppose that they can know the number of God's hosts or that they can overcome them (Āl, Ṭ). This is one of several passages in which an oath is taken on the moon (cf. 84:18; 91:2) and on the alternation of night and day (see also 81:17–18; 84:16–17; 89:1–4; 91:1–4; 92:1–2; 93:1–2).

35 Here it refers to Saqar (Q, Ṭ), meaning that Saqar is one of the greatest calamities (JJ). Some understand the assertion that it is only one of the calamities to mean that such calamities will be endless (Āl). It could also refer to the disbelievers' denial of the prophethood of Muhammad, meaning that such denial is one of the greatest sins (Q).

36 According to some exegetes, v. 36 may be a distant adverbial clause that continues the command in vv. 1–2, meaning, "O thou who art covered, arise and warn . . . as a warner to man" (Q). Most, however, view it in relation to the previous verse, indicating that the gravity of Saqar should serve as a warner (Q, Ṭ). In this context, warner may also be viewed as an Attribute of God or a reference to the Quran (Q).

37 To go forth means to proceed in faith, goodness, and obedience, while stay behind means to remain in disbelief, evil, and disobedience (Q, Ṭ).

38 Cf. 52:21. This verse means that the good and evil deeds that a soul has committed bind it to a particular end, since God attends to every soul in accordance with what it has earned (13:33).

(39) save the companions of the right, (40) in Gardens, questioning one another (41) about the guilty, (42) "What led you into Saqar?" (43) They say, "We were not among those who prayed, (44) nor did we feed the indigent, (45) and we engaged in vain discourse with those who do the same, (46) and we denied the Day of Judgment, (47) until certainty came upon us." (48) Thus the intercession of the intercessors will avail them not. (49) So what ails them that they turn away from the Reminder, (50) as if they were frightened asses (51) fleeing from a lion? (52) Rather, every man among them desires to be given pages unfolded.

39 This is most likely the first use of the term companions of the right (56:8, 27, 38, 90–91; 90:18; see 56:8–9c) in the chronological order of revelation. According to most commentators, it means those of faith and piety (Q), though in this context some take it as a reference to the children of Muslims or to the angels (Ṭ). The fifth Shiite Imam, Muhammad al-Bāqir (d. 114/733), is reported to have said, "We and our partisans are the companions of the right. All who oppose the People of the [Prophet's] House are those who are held in pledge" (Q). Vv. 38–39 together are understood to mean that the companions of the right will not be subject to punishment, because God will forgive their sins (Q, Ṭ).

40–42 The companions of the right are said to question one another about the predicament of their fellow believers who had failed to act in accord with the revelation (JJ). Others interpret questioning one another to simply mean "questioning," indicating that they speak directly to the sinners (Q, Ṭ). This would then be one of several passages to indicate that in the Hereafter those in the Garden and those in the Fire are, at least on occasion, able to communicate with one another (see also 7:44–50; 57:13–15).

43–44 In general these verses are understood to indicate those who failed to follow the Commands of God (Q, Ṭ). But one Shiite interpretation of v. 43 would be, "and we were not among the followers of the leaders (a'immah)," alluding to the failure to follow the Shiite Imams (Qm).

45 Literally, this verse reads "and we plunged with those who plunged." However, as employed in the Quran the verb khāḍa ("to plunge") implies khāḍa fi'l-ḥadīth ("plunged into discourse") or khāḍa fi'l-bāṭil ("plunged into vanity or falsehood"); cf. 6:91; 9:69; 52:12; 70:42. This verse thus indicates that they partook of the vanities of this world and went astray (Q, Ṭ); it could also mean that they associated with those whom God cursed for calling the Prophet a sorcerer (Q).

47 The guilty committed all the errors mentioned in vv. 43–46 until certainty—that is, death—came upon them (Q, Ṭ). As al-Kāshānī writes, "That is death, then we saw with our eyes that which we had denied."

48 Although some Muslims wish to limit the ability to intercede to prophets, many Sunni scholars maintain that angels and even righteous (al-ṣiddiqūn) believers can intercede on behalf of believers, while Shiite scholars always include the Shiite Imams among those to whom God grants the ability to intercede. The most widespread opinion is that intercession through prophets, angels, and saints is available for those who believe in God, but have been punished for some of their sins (Q); however, there can be no intercession for disbelievers. This verse would thus indicate that those whom the companions of the right question in v. 42 are the disbelievers. Regarding the question of intercession, see 10:3; 19:87; 20:109; 21:28; 34:23; 2:48c; 2:255c.

49–50 Here the Reminder is a reference to the Quran (Q, Ṭ), from which people turn away either by denying it or by not acting in accord with it (Q).

51 Lion translates qaswarah, an enigmatic word that is also interpreted to mean "hunting spears," "arrows," or "hunters" (Q, Ṭ).

52 Each man wants a revelation that is addressed directly to him (Q, Ṭ), as in 2:118: Why does God not speak to us, nor a sign come to us? (see also 17:90–93c). It is also reported that some of the Quraysh objected by saying that, if Muhammad were truly a Messenger of God, he could bring a book that would give each of them exemption and protection from the Fire (Q, Ṭ).

(53) Nay! But they fear not the Hereafter. (54) Yea! Truly it is a reminder. (55) So let whosoever will, remember it. (56) And they remember not, save as God wills. He is most worthy of reverence and most worthy of granting forgiveness.

53–54 In both verses nay, translating the emphatic particle kallā, could also be rendered "truly" or "indeed," an alternative that fits v. 54 better than v. 53 (Q). In the recitation of Ibn ʿĀmir, they fear not is read, "you fear not," as a warning to the reader or listener.

Reminder refers to the Quran (Ṭ). In this context, it is a reminder indicates that revelation does not provide a list of proofs of the kind that the Prophet's detractors request when they ask for pages unfolded for each of them in v. 52. Rather, as a reminder, the revelation reawakens the knowledge of God and of the covenant with Him (see 7:172c) that all human beings bear in their primordial nature (30:30).

55 As rendered, this verse refers to remembering, particularly in the sense of acting in accord with the Word of God in the Quran. It could also be read as referring to the remembrance of God: "So let him who will, remember Him."

56 That they remember implies that they act in accord with the revelation. In this vein, God's willing that they remember refers back to v. 31: Thus does God lead astray whomsoever He will and guide whomsoever He will. When v. 55 is read as a reference to the remembrance of God, this verse indicates that individuals cannot remember God unless God remembers them. Regarding the last sentence of this verse, the Prophet is reported to have said, "God says, 'I am most worthy of being reverenced. So none other shall be made a God with Me. And whosoever fears to do so, it is befitting that I forgive him' " (Aj, Q).

According to the recitation of Nāfiʿ, this verse could also be read, "you remember not," in which case it is an address to the readers or listeners.

The Resurrection

al-Qiyāmah

Al-Qiyāmah is an early Makkan sūrah that takes its name from God's swearing by the Resurrection in the first verse and the focus upon the Resurrection throughout. It is also known as Lā uqsimu, meaning "I Swear," the phrase with which the first and second verses begin (Āl). The sūrah begins with two oaths (vv. 1–2), the second of which is subject to much interpretation. It then rebukes those who deny the Day of Resurrection and speaks of its signs (vv. 3–15). This is followed by a famous passage (vv. 16–19) that counsels the Prophet to receive the revelation with patience. The next section (vv. 20–36) contrasts the final ends of believers and disbelievers and speaks of the inevitability of death followed by another rebuke for those who deny the truth. The sūrah concludes by invoking the stages of life as evidence of God's Omnipotence and of His ability to resurrect the dead (vv. 36–40).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) I swear by the Day of Resurrection. (2) And I swear by the blaming soul. (3) Does man suppose that We shall not gather his bones? (4) Nay! But We are able to fashion even his fingers and toes. (5) But man desires to defile what lies before

1–2 Both verses begin with the particle lā, which usually indicates negation, but can also indicate an emphatic expression when taking an oath. Hence v. 2 is interpreted by some commentators to mean, "I do not swear by the blaming soul" (Aj, Sh), though the translation given reflects the predominant interpretation of lā as an emphatic particle. The blaming soul is considered the middle state of the human soul in the process of spiritual growth, between the soul that commands to evil (12:53) and the soul at peace (89:27); see 12:53c; 89:27c. It is called the blaming soul because it recognizes the shortcomings of the lower concupiscent soul and chastises it in order to transform it into the soul at peace, which returns unto the Lord content, contenting (89:28); see 89:27–30c. Every soul is believed to be capable of recognizing its shortcomings, as expressed in a ḥadīth, "There is no pious or profligate soul but that it blames itself on the Day of Resurrection; if it has done good, it says, 'How did I not do more!' And if it has done evil, it says, 'Would that I had desisted!'" (Aj). Here, then, God swears by the reverent, God-fearing soul that blames itself for falling short, although it strives for obedience (Aj); a minority say, however, that it refers only to the soul of the disbeliever, which blames itself in the Hereafter (Sh). The blaming soul and the Day of Resurrection can thus be seen as intimately connected, not only by the role the quoted ḥadīth ascribes to the blaming soul on the Day of Resurrection, but also because both expose one's faults—just as one is called to account for all of one's lapses and shortcomings on the Day of Resurrection, so too does the blaming soul call one to account for them throughout the life of this world. Ḥasan al-Baṣrī thus equates the blaming soul with the scrupulous soul that continually asks what it desires by its own actions (IK, Q, Sh). A minority suggest that "blaming" (lawwāmah) is related to talawwum, meaning "constantly shifting," and indicates the fickle and capricious nature of the soul, which is happy, then sad, obedient, then disobedient, reverent, then heedless (Ibn Qayyim al-Jawziyyah, al-Rūḥ, 262).

3 This verse is said to have been revealed with regard to one ʿAdī ibn Rabīʿah, who said to the Prophet, "Tell me about the Day of Resurrection. When will it be? How will it be?" The Prophet answered his questions. Then ʿAdī said, "If I were to see that Day with my own eyes, I would not attest to you, O Muhammad, as being true, nor would I believe in you. Can God really gather these bones?" (Aj, W). In this context, man is thus understood to mean those human beings who disbelieve and deny the Resurrection (Aj, JJ).

4 This verse is said to mean, "We are able to create him again precisely as We created him the first time"; see 36:78–79c; 17:49–51c.

5 This verse may also refer to those who deny the Hereafter that lies before them and thus "sully" or defile it (R). Defile translates yafjur, which also means "to waste." Although human beings have been warned of the Hereafter and all that it entails, they continue to waste the opportunity to purify their souls, meaning that they continue to ignore the admonitions of the blaming soul (v. 2) and to follow their own caprice. According to al-Qushayrī this applies to those who intend to prepare for the Hereafter but do not: "One continues to lapse and delays repentance, saying, 'I will repent later.' Then him, (6) asking, "When is the Day of Resurrection?" (7) Then when the eyes are dazzled, (8) and the moon is eclipsed, (9) and the sun and the moon are brought together— (10) that Day man will say, "Where is the escape?" (11) Nay! But there shall be no refuge. (12) Unto your Lord that Day is the dwelling place. (13) Man shall be informed that Day of that which he has sent forth and of that which he has left behind. (14) Indeed, man shall be a testimony against himself, (15) though he prof-he dies having not repented. It is said that he resolves not to continue accumulating acts of disobedience, turning over a new leaf in the time he has left. Yet, despite this, he does not immediately untie the knot of persistence from his heart. Thus his repentance is not true, for among the conditions of repentance is the resolution to not return to the like of what one had done. So if one still finds within one's heart a sweetness in lapsing and one contemplates returning to its like, then one's regret is not true" (Qu; Aj cites this same passage, but with some slight variations).

6 Although this verse repeats one of the questions posed by ʿAdī ibn Rabīʾah (see 75:3c), the question and variations upon it are repeated throughout the Qurʾān (see, e.g., 10:48; 34:29–30; 51:12; 67:25). In general it is not posed in a spirit of inquiry, but in one of derision, mockery, and denial (JJ).

7 Similar to their glance returning not to them in 14:43, the present verse indicates that, due to the terror of the Day of Judgment, the disbelievers will not be able to focus on anything (IK). Others interpret this verse to mean that they are amazed to see some of the things that they had denied (JJ).

8–9 These verses indicate that the sun and moon will be enfolded or rolled up (IK, Ṭ), as in 81:1–2.

10–11 One of several passages to make clear that for those who disbelieve there is no escape or refuge once the Hour comes; see also 18:53, 58; 34:51; 38:3; 41:48; 42:35, 47.

12 This verse indicates that on the Day of Judgment it is God alone who chooses the final destination in which each soul will reside or that God is one's final end (Ṭ).

13 Cf. 82:5. That which he has sent forth refers either to all of the deeds that individuals have performed (see 18:49; IK) or only to the good deeds performed in this life that will testify for them and for which they will receive reward in the Hereafter. That which he has left behind refers either to the good deeds that were not performed in this life or to the good deeds that continue to bear fruit. Regarding the latter interpretation, a famous ḥadīth states, "Whosoever establishes a beautiful custom (sunnah ḥasanah) in Islam that is practiced by those who come after him, on the Day of Resurrection he will receive the reward thereof [i.e., for his own good deed] and a reward like unto that of those who practiced it after him, without its detracting from their reward in any way. And whosoever establishes a bad custom (sunnah sayyiʾah) in Islam bears its burden and the burden of those who practice it, without its detracting from their burdens in any way" (AḤ, IK on 36:12, Aj); regarding the nature of what is left behind, also see 36:12c.

14–15 These verses can be taken as a reference to the blaming soul (v. 2), which in effect testifies against every bad deed. In this vein, 17:14 says, On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you (see also 6:130; 7:37). Elsewhere their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do (41:20; see also 24:24; 36:65). Though he proffer his excuses indicates that even when disbelievers speak to defend themselves, they bear witness against themselves (IK, Ṭ) or that none of their false excuses will be accepted (IK, Ṭ). Elsewhere the Day of Judgment is described as The Day when the wrongdoers will not benefit from their excuses (40:52).

fer his excuses. (16) Move not thy tongue therewith to hasten it. (17) Surely it is for Us to gather it and to recite it. (18) So when We recite it, follow its recitation. (19) Then surely it is for Us to explain it. (20) Nay! But you love the ephemeral, (21) and forsake the Hereafter. (22) Faces that Day shall be radiant, 16–18 These verses address the Prophet, encouraging him to wait patiently for the continuation of the revelation, as in 20:114: Be not in haste with the Quran before its revelation is completed for thee, but say, "My Lord! Increase me in knowledge!" Both passages are understood as references to the Prophet's fear of forgetting the verses of revelation, which led him to repeat quickly everything that had been revealed to him, even while the revelation was coming down. Ibn ʿAbbās is reported to have said, "The Messenger of God used to bear the revelation with great trouble and used to move his lips [quickly] with the revelation. . . . So God revealed [75:16–17], meaning that God will make him remember the portion of the Quran that was revealed at that time by heart and recite it." Then Ibn ʿAbbās said, "So when We recite it, follow its recitation means listen to it and be silent. Then surely it is for Us to explain it [v. 19] means that it is [for God] to make you recite it. Afterwards, the Messenger of God used to listen to Gabriel whenever he came and after his departure he used to recite it as Gabriel had recited it" (IK, Q). It is for Us to gather it thus indicates that God will gather it within the Prophet's breast, ensuring that he remembers it correctly (IK). These verses can also be taken as an admonition to those who wish to understand the Quran to first read and reflect upon all of its teachings rather than drawing hasty conclusions.

19 This verse means that after the Prophet memorizes and recites the Quran, God will explain it to him, clarify it, and inspire him to know its meaning according to what God intended and legislated (IK).

20–21 These verses transition from the second-person singular, in which the Prophet is addressed, to the second-person plural, addressing humanity in general. An almost identical verse is 76:27; see 76:27c. According to some other schools of recitation, you can be read in the third person plural, "But they love the ephemeral, and forsake the Hereafter."

22–25 The contrast between the faces of the believers and those of the disbelievers in this passage is similar to that in 3:106; 80:38–41; 88:2–10.

22–23 Most commentators take the assertion that believers will be gazing upon their Lord as a reference to the literal vision of God in the Hereafter (JJ), attested in many aḥādīth, among them, "Truly, you all will see your Lord with your own eyes" (IK, Q). When questioned by his Companions about the way in which people might see God, the Prophet said, "Are you harmed by seeing the sun and the moon when there are no clouds beneath them?" When his Companions replied, "No," the Prophet said, "You shall see your Lord in that manner" (IK). In a similar account, he said, "Truly, you will see your Lord just as you see this moon!" (IK, Q). The "vision of God" to which these aḥādīth attest is taken by many as a matter of belief that no one can deny (IK), but a minority argue that this verse should be interpreted in light of 6:103, Sight comprehends Him not, when 6:103 is seen as definitive (muḥkam) and 75:23 as symbolic (mutashābih; Z; see 3:7c), thus indicating that the vision of God is not in fact attainable or that it is only metaphorical. According to some, the vision of God, which also means direct knowledge of God, is the highest Paradise. In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, "When the people of the Garden enter the Garden, God says, 'Do you desire that I increase you in anything?' They say, 'Didst Thou not brighten our faces? Didst Thou not admit us to the Garden and save us from the Fire?' " Then the Prophet said, "Then God removes the veil, and they are given nothing more beloved to them than gazing upon their Lord" (Ā, IK). In this vein, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, "The reward for deeds is Paradise, and the reward for the realization of God's Oneness (tawḥīd) is the vision of God" (ST). In relating this realization to love,

(23) gazing upon their Lord. (24) And faces that Day shall be scowling, (25) knowing that a spine-crushing calamity will befall them. (26) Nay! But when it reaches the collarbones, (27) and it is said, "Who will [make him] ascend?" (28) And he knows for certain that it is the parting; (29) and the shank is intertwined with the shank. (30) Unto thy Lord that Day is the driving.

al-Tustarī is also reported to have said, "Whosoever has been slain by his love [for God], his recompense will be the vision of Him." While many take this verse and the aḥādīth cited above as a reference to the vision of God on the Day of Resurrection, in Paradise, or both, others maintain that for those of high spiritual attainment the vision of God can be achieved in both this life and the Hereafter (Aj). Yet it is not attainable save by gaining God's love and intimacy, which themselves can only be attained through knowledge (maʿrifah). Such love and knowledge can in turn only be attained by constantly reflecting upon God and remembering Him, which requires that the love of this world be erased from the heart (Aj). For those who can achieve this state, "they are immersed in witnessing His Beauty, and thus veiled to all that is other than Him" (Aj).

24–25 In Quranic usage, the face is often taken to indicate the true nature, or the essence, of someone. For similar descriptions of the faces of the disbelievers, see 3:106; 10:27; 27:90; 80:40–42; 88:2–7. Regarding the Face of God and the symbolism of "face" in general, see 28:88c; 55:26–27c.

26 Nay translates the emphatic particle kallā, which can also be read in the affirmative, meaning "truly" or "indeed." It refers to the soul, and its reaching the collarbones refers to the moment of death when the soul is about to leave the body (see also 56:83). When kallā is read in the negative, the verse indicates that at the moment of death one will be informed of the truth and will not be able to deny it. When kallā is read in the affirmative, the verse indicates there is no doubt that the soul will leave the body (IK).

27–28 These verses could be taken as a reference to the rising of the soul and thus to the angels of mercy or the angels of punishment that will remove the spirit from the body (Āl, Ṭ), as in 6:61–62: He sends guardians over you, till, when death comes unto one of you, our messengers (i.e., angels) take him, and they neglect not their duty. Then they are returned unto God, their true Master. Some maintain that v. 27 communicates the words of the angels of death meaning, "Who is it that will make him ascend?" (Z)—the angels of mercy in the case of believers or the angels of punishment in the case of disbelievers (Q). Alternately, they may be seen as referring to the body, thus mirroring the words of those around a dying person who say, "Who will cure him?" (IK, Q, Ṭ). In v. 28, the parting refers to the parting from all the things of this world (Ṭ) or the parting of the spirit from the body (Āl).

29 This verse has several interpretations: that one shank will be intertwined with the other when one is wrapped in one's funeral shroud (Āl, IK, JJ, Ṭ, Z); that the severity of entering the Hereafter is intertwined with the severity of leaving the life of this world (Āl, JJ, Ṭ, Z); that the last of the days of this world are intertwined with the first of the days of the next (IK, Ṭ); that the state of death is intertwined with the state of life; or that human beings are intertwined with one another so that people cannot move their own legs. For the idiomatic use of shank, see 68:42c.

30 According to some commentators, this verse refers to either the manner in which God drives the soul from the body at the moment of death or the manner in which God drives the soul toward the Final Judgment (JJ). Others say that it is a challenge, meaning, "Who will heal him?" (Q, Ṭ). Still others say that it indicates the return of the body to the earth, as in a ḥadīth qudsī where God is reported to say, "Return My servants to the earth, for verily, I have created them from it, I return them into it, and from it will I bring them forth another time" (IK).

(31) For he neither confirmed nor prayed, (32) but he denied and turned away, (33) then went to his people swaggering. (34) So nearer to you! And nearer! (35) Then nearer to you! And nearer! (36) Does man suppose that he will be left aimless? (37) Was he not a drop of semen emitted? (38) Then he was a blood clot; whereupon He created, then fashioned, (39) and made from him the pair, male and female. (40) Is not such a one able to give life to the dead?

31–32 He refers to Abū Jahl or ʿAdī ibn Rabīʿah (see 75:3c; Q). He did not confirm the revelation and the prophethood of Muhammad. Alternatively, "confirmed" (ṣaddaqa) can be understood to mean that he did not give charity (ṣaddaqa mālahū; Q, Z).

33 This verse is similar to 83:30–32, which says of those who would mock the Prophet: And when they passed them, they would wink at one another. And when they returned to their people, they would return blithely. And when they saw them, they said, "Truly these are astray!" (also see 2:14; 84:13–14).

34–35 These verses mean, "That to which you are averse is now nearer to you" (JJ), or the punishment is now nearer (Iṣ). According to some commentators, vv. 34–35 could also be rendered, "So woe to you! And woe! Then woe to you! And woe!" (Ṭs, Z). This is then interpreted by some as a direct address to Abū Jahl, one of the Prophet's staunchest adversaries, meaning, " 'Woe to you' for what you will witness on the Day of Badr [when Abū Jahl was slain in battle by the Muslims]. 'And woe' to you in the grave. 'Then woe to you' on the Day of Resurrection. 'And woe' to you in the Fire" (Ṭs). It can also be taken as a more general address to all those who disbelieve and swagger in arrogance (IK).

36 This verse asks, "Do people suppose that they would be left to their own devices without being obligated to follow a revealed religion and without being held accountable?" (JJ). Left aimless could also be understood to mean "neglected," in which case it refers to those who doubt they will be resurrected (IK).

37–40 This is one of several passages that cite the phases of life from gestation to adulthood as proof of God's Omnipotence and especially of His ability to resurrect; see also 18:37; 22:5–6c; 23:13–16; 35:11; 40:67; 76:2; 80:18–22. It is reported that when the Prophet recited, Is not such a one able to give life to the dead? he would say "Yea!" (JJ) and that he counseled others to do the same.

Man

al-Insān

According to most scholars, al-Insān was revealed in Madinah (Q), although some maintain that all but v. 24 were revealed in Madinah (Bg, Ṭs), and others maintain that vv. 23–31 were revealed in Makkah (Q, Ṭs). A minority maintain that the entire sūrah was revealed in Makkah (Aj, Ṭs). The sūrah takes its title from the mention of man in the first verse. It is also commonly called, after its first two words, Hal atā, "Has There Not Come," and is sometimes known as al-Dahr, "Endless Time." Another name is al-Abrār, "The Pious," for its discussion of the rewards due to the pious in vv. 5–22. It is reported that the Prophet would often recite this sūrah along with Sūrah 32, al-Sajdah, during the early morning prayer (fajr) on Friday (IK).

According to most Shiite and some Sunni sources, vv. 5–22 were revealed in relation to the family of the Prophet: ᶜAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, Fāṭimah, Ḥasan, and Ḥusayn. The account related with slight variation by al-Ṭabrisī, al-Qurṭubī, al-Ālūsī, and others is that ᶜAli's sons Ḥasan and Ḥusayn were sick, and the Prophet and a group of followers came to visit them. They suggested that ᶜAlī make a vow to God in supplicating for their recovery. So ᶜAlī, Fāṭimah, and Fizzah, their house helper, vowed that if Ḥasan and Ḥusayn recovered, they would fast for three days (according to some, Ḥasan and Ḥusayn made the same vow). After a short while both of them recovered.

Therefore, the family fasted the first day. As they were in dire need of food, ᶜAlī borrowed some barley with which they would break the fast, and Fāṭimah ground one-third of it into flour and baked some bread. When they were preparing to break their fast that evening, an indigent person came to their door and said, "Peace be upon you, the Household of Muhammad. I am a needy Muslim; please give me some food. May God bestow upon you, in kind, from Divine Sustenance." All of them gave him their share. That night, they had only water. The following day they fasted again. Then an orphan came to the door. Once more, they forfeited their bread and ate nothing, only drinking water. The third day, they fasted again. This time a captive came to their house, and they repeated their charity.

On the fourth day, ʿAlī took Ḥasan and Ḥusayn with him to see the Prophet. When the Prophet observed them trembling with hunger, he said, "It grieves me to see you in this condition." Then he stood up and walked with them. When he arrived at their home, he found Fāṭimah praying. Her stomach was sunk into her backbone, and her eyes had become sunken too. The Prophet was greatly affected. At this moment Gabriel descended and said, "O Muhammad, receive this sūrah. God congratulates you for having such a family." And then Gabriel recited this sūrah.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Has there come upon man a span of time in which he was a thing unremembered? (2) Truly We created man from a drop of mixed fluid that We may test him, and We endowed him with hearing and seeing. (3) Truly We guided him upon the way, be he grateful or ungrateful. (4) We have surely prepared for the disbelievers chains, shackles, and a blazing flame. (5) Truly the

1 In both vv. 1 and 2, man (insān) refers to Adam, all of humanity (R), or both. As translated, the verse should be taken as a rhetorical question, either indicating that there has never been a time when human beings were not known to God (Qu) or emphasizing that there was indeed a time when man was a thing unknown, meaning nonexistent. The verse could also be translated, "There has come upon man," which is taken by most as a reference to the time when Adam was not yet fully formed (JJ, Q, R, Ṭs) or more generally to the time when humanity had not yet come into existence (R).

2 A drop of mixed fluid (cf. 16:4; 18:37; 22:5; 35:11; 36:77; 40:67; 53:46; 75:37; 80:19) refers to the mixing of the male and female fluids (IK). This is one of several verses that remind human beings of the base origins of their physical nature; see also 86:6–7c. That We may test him could also be read as a new sentence: "We will test him" (JJ). The gifts of hearing and sight are part of the test, as they may be used for obedience or disobedience (IK); those who do not use them properly have eyes with which they see not, and they have ears with which they hear not (7:179; also see 7:198; 10:43). In this vein, the verse may also indicate that the physical nature, that which comes from a drop of mixed fluid, is created for the purpose of being tested and tried. Regarding the manner in which human beings are tested, see commentary on 29:2–3; 67:2.

3 This verse is similar to 90:8–10: Did We not make for him two eyes, a tongue, and two lips, and guide him upon the two highways? (R). Both passages indicate that God provides guidance for those who have eyes to see and ears to hear, and that each person is thus responsible for the state of his or her own soul. The guidance provided by God could be through the human intellect (R), the messengers that God sends (JJ), or the many signs in revelation, in the created order, and within the human being; see 41:53c. Grateful or ungrateful indicates being either happy or wretched (IK), or a believer or a disbeliever, as in 18:29: It is the truth from your Lord! So whosoever will, let him believe, and whosoever will, let him disbelieve.

4–5 These two verses express the disparate ends of those who are grateful (v. 5) and those who are ungrateful (v. 4) for the guidance God has provided. Regarding the chains and shackles that pious drink of a cup mixed with camphor, (6) a fountain whereof drink the servants of God, while they make it gush forth abundantly. (7) They fulfill their vows and fear a day whose evil is widespread, (8) and give food, despite loving it, to the indigent, the orphan, and the captive: (9) "We feed you only for the will be placed upon the disbelievers in the Hereafter, see 40:70–72c.

5–22 These verses are said to have been revealed about the family of the Prophet; see the introduction to this sūrah.

5–6 The pious translates al-abrār (sing. barr), which indicates something that is broad, ample, and expansive, thus connoting beneficence, magnanimity, and associated virtues. Regarding the meaning of the pious and piety (birr), see 2:44c. Birr can also be attributed to God, as in 52:28, Truly He is the Righteous (al-Barr), the Merciful, and as when one says, Allāhu yabarru biʿibādihi, meaning, "God is righteous unto His servant." Here cup refers to what the cup contains, the paradisal wine (JJ); see also 37:45–47; 78:34c. In medieval times, camphor was used widely for sweet and savory dishes. It is also thought to have cooling properties. According to some, this is the same wine whose seal is musk (83:26; Ṭ). That they make it gush forth abundantly indicates that the servants of God are able to partake of it as they will and that it flows wherever they wish (IK, R, Ṭ). From one perspective, while the pious drink of a cup mixed with camphor, the servants of God drink directly from a fountain that is pure and unmixed. Interpreted as a spiritual symbol, those who drink what is mixed are lovers of the Divine Attributes, while the pure spring is for lovers of the Divine Essence, whose love endures no matter which Attribute of God they experience (K).

7 In the context of the occasion of revelation provided in the sūrah introduction, fulfill their vows refers to the perseverance of ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib and his family in continuing to fulfill their vow to fast three days even in the face of great hunger. Others interpret it as a reference to fulfilling the covenant made with God before the creation of the world (see 7:172c; K) or to being obedient toward God and fulfilling the obligations of religion (Ṭ).

8 Despite loving it can also be interpreted to mean "out of love for Him." Together the two interpretations indicate the manner in which this world is transcended by overcoming love for it and focusing love entirely upon God. In this vein, 3:92 states, You will never attain piety till you spend from that which you love. And whatever you spend, truly God knows it.

Regarding the feeding of orphans, see 2:83, 177, 215; 4:2–3, 8–10, 127; 6:152. According to a ḥadīth, "The indigent is not one who goes among the people asking them for a mouthful or two or a date or two; rather, the indigent is one who has not enough to satisfy his needs and whose condition is not known to others, that others may give him charity, and who does not beg of people." The captive refers to prisoners of war (IK, Ṭ). At this time, the Muslims did not have prisons in which to keep captives from among their adversaries. The Prophet thus distributed the captives among the Muslims of Madinah and instructed them to care for the captives. As resources were scarce for many in Madinah, some of them could not feed the captives who had been entrusted to their care and some of the captives were free to seek food from other sources. This verse thus encourages charity toward those non-Muslims, even those who may have opposed the Muslims (see also 2:271; 60:8).

9 The words spoken by the pious in vv. 9–10 are most likely said to themselves, but can also be understood as said out loud to those whom they feed. In Arabic "face" is understood as a reference to the true nature of a thing. The Face of God is thus seen as a reference to the Divine Essence or to the Divine Essence, Attributes, and Qualities (K), or that aspect of the Divine Reality that is turned to creation. To perform charitable acts for the Face of God indicates seeking only to please God out of love for God, rather than seeking a reward for oneself (K; for a discussion of the Face of God, see 28:88c; 55:26–27c). Others, however, maintain that there is a juxtaposition in these verses, indicating that they do seek recompense from God, but not from anyone other than God (IK), as in 2:272: Whatever good you spend, it is for yourselves, Face of God. We desire from you no recompense or thanks. (10) Truly we fear from our Lord a grim, calamitous day." (11) So God has shielded them from the evil of that Day, bestowed upon them radiance and joy, (12) and rewarded them, for having been patient, with a Garden and with silk. (13) Therein they recline upon couches, seeing neither sun nor bitter cold. (14) Its shade shall be close above them, and its clusters shall be made to hang low. (15) And vessels of silver and goblets of crystal are brought round for them— (16) silvern crystal that they have measured out with due measure. (17) Therein they are given to drink of a cup mixed with ginger, (18) a spring therein named Salsabīl.

when you spend only seeking the Face of God (see also 30:38–39).

10 Grim translates ʿabūs, which literally means "frowning," and is understood to mean that the severity of this day causes the disbelievers to frown (Āl, Q). Calamitous translates qamṭarīr, which is interpreted to mean "long" (Āl, Q) and is also understood by many to indicate a more severe state of frowning than ʿabūs or to indicate that it enfolds evil upon evil (Āl).

11 According to some, radiance is what appears on the faces of the pious, while joy is in their hearts, as in 80:38–39: Faces that Day shall be shining, radiant, laughing, joyous (IK).

12 That human beings are rewarded for patience and constancy is a central Quranic theme. In this life, God provides signs for all who are patient, thankful (31:31; 34:19; 42:33) and God is with the patient (2:153, 249; 8:46), while in the Hereafter those who are patient shall be paid their reward in full without reckoning (39:10) and none shall receive it save the patient (28:80); see also 2:177; 3:120, 125; 11:11, 49, 115; 12:90; 13:22; 16:96; 29:59; 41:34–35. It is also reported that the angels greet the inhabitants of the Garden saying, Peace be upon you because you were patient (13:24; see also 25:75; 28:54).

13 Bitter cold translates zamharīr, which is understood to mean a cold icy wind and can also mean "the moon," thus meaning that the Garden will be bright without any sun or moon (JJ). In either understanding, there is an allusion to the temperate state of Paradise, where extremes are not felt on either end, as opposed to Hell, where there is both bitter cold and scorching heat. When zamharīr is understood as the moon, there is also an allusion to an eternal twilight or shade, in which everything radiates with a subtle beauty like that just after sunset or just before sunrise. Many also understand zamharīr to be a special state where sinful descendants of the Prophet, who are vouchsafed to be saved from the fires of Hell, will go in the Hereafter.

14 For the connotations of the Quranic use of shade, see 56:30c. Regarding the clusters of the Garden (see also 55:54; 69:23), it is reported that when the Prophet was upon his deathbed, he said to his Companions, "Verily, I saw the Garden and came upon a cluster of grapes. Had I taken it, you would have eaten of it so long as the world remained."

15–16 The goblets are made of silver that is transparent like crystal (JJ). Measured out with due measure (cf. 25:2) indicates that individuals will have measured for them exactly what each requires, neither more nor less (JJ).

17 Ginger, which translates zanjabīl, can be taken as a reference to the tuber that was considered a delicacy by the Arabs (Bḍ) and was used as both a medicine and a spice, though it is said that the ginger of Paradise does not resemble that of this world (Sh). Zanjabīl can also be understood as a proper name for one of the springs of Paradise from which drink those brought nigh (see 83:25–28; Sh).

18 According to some, in this context named means "described" (Ṭ). The precise meaning of Salsabīl is debated. While some understand it as a proper name, others take it to mean that the water flows well (Iṣ, Ṭ) or is easy to swallow and

(19) Immortal youths wait upon them; when thou seest them, thou wouldst think them scattered pearls. (20) And when thou lookest thither, thou wilt see bliss and a great kingdom. (21) Upon them are garments of fine green silk and rich brocade. They are adorned with silvern bracelets, and their Lord shall give them to drink of a drink most pure. (22) Truly this is a reward for you, and your endeavoring is held in gratitude. (23) Truly We have sent down the Quran upon thee as a revelation. (24) So be patient with thy Lord's judgment and obey neither sinner nor disbeliever among them. (25) And invoke the Name of thy Lord morning and evening, (26) prostrate unto Him during the night, and glorify refreshing for the throat (K). Still others say that Salsabīl is a contraction of sal ("seek" or "request") and sabīl ("a way"), thus meaning "seek a way [to the Garden]" (Iṣ, R).

19 Immortal translates mukhalladūn, which can also mean "those who wear earrings"; see also 56:17. The youths will appear as scattered pearls because of their beauty and nobility (Ṭ).

20 A great kingdom is said to indicate one that does not cease to exist (Ṭs).

21 Regarding the silk and brocade (cf. 44:53) that adorn the inhabitants of Paradise, see 18:31c. Whereas the paradisal beverages mentioned in vv. 15–18 are served by immortal youths, here their Lord shall give them to drink directly with no intermediary. Most pure translates ṭahūr, an emphatic form employed to emphasize the contrast between the wine of this world and the wine of the Hereafter. Invoking another perspective, Maybudī writes: "Whoever has no wine of love today will not have the drink most pure tomorrow. Today they swallow the wine of love from the cup of gnosis; tomorrow they drink the drink most pure in the presence of the Forgiving King—today the wine of love in the paradise of gnosis, tomorrow the drink most pure in the paradise of Contentment (riḍwān)."

Ṭahūr can also be taken as an active participle, meaning "purifying." Thus some say it is a drink through which God removes vice from the heart (Sh). It is reported that the sixth Shiite Imam, Jaʿfar al-Ṣādiq, said of this drink, "It purifies them of all that is other than God" (Ṭs).

22 This refers to the drink most pure (v. 21), or to all of the rewards mentioned in the preceding verses, or to the bliss that derives from these rewards. Endeavoring refers to all the good deeds that one has done; that it is held in gratitude indicates that such deeds have been accepted by God, one of Whose Attributes is Thankful (see 2:158; 4:147; 35:30, 34; 42:23; IK, Sh, Ṭs).

23 This verse is understood as an indication of the gradual manner in which God revealed the Quran, that is, in periodic installments rather than all at once (JJ, Ṭs). Regarding the nature of the revelation and its stages, see the essay "The Islamic View of the Quran."

24 This verse is taken as counsel to the Prophet to be patient in the face of the opposition from ʿUtbah ibn Rabīʿah and al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah, two leaders of the Quraysh, both of whom said to the Prophet, "Abandon this affair of yours" (JJ, Ṭs). Sinner and disbeliever can thus be understood both as a specific reference to these two men and as a more general reference to all sinners and disbelievers (JJ).

25–26 These verses enjoin mentioning the Name of God during the daily prayers (Aj, JJ, Ṭs) or remembering God at every moment (Aj). In the context of the previous verse, they can be understood as counsel not to be overly concerned with the tribulations of this world, but to remember God always, as in 15:97–98: And certainly We know that thy breast is straitened because of what they say. So hymn the praise of thy Lord, and be among those who prostrate (Aj). In this latter sense, many Sufis take v. 25 as an injunction to invoke the Supreme Divine Name, Allāh (Aj). Glorify Him by night at length enjoins the supererogatory practice of night vigil and prayer. For other

Him by night at length. (27) Truly they love the ephemeral and put a weighty day behind them. (28) We created them and made firm their frames; and whensoever We will, We shall exchange them for others like them. (29) Truly this is a reminder; so let him who will, take a way unto his Lord. (30) And you do not will but that God wills. Truly God is Knowing, Wise. (31) He causes whomsoever He will to enter into His Mercy. And as for the wrongdoers, He has prepared for them a painful punishment.

references to night vigil, see 11:114; 20:130; 21:20; 25:63–64; 50:40; 52:49; 73:2, 6, 20. Regarding its significance and historical development, see 73:1–2c; 73:20c.

27 As with its near analog, 75:20–21, this verse indicates the manner in which preoccupation with the things of this world distracts one from the Hereafter (IK), and from the remembrance of God, as in 17:18–19: Whosoever would desire the ephemeral, We hasten for him therein whatsoever We will for whomsoever We desire. Then We appointed Hell for him, wherein he shall burn, blameworthy, banished. And whosoever desires the Hereafter, and endeavors for it earnestly, and is a believer, it is they whose efforts shall be appreciated.

28 This verse indicates either that God can replace any group of people with another (IK, R, Ṭs), as in 6:133, If He will, He can remove you, and in your place appoint whomsoever He will to succeed you, or that God can resurrect people in the Hereafter; see also 4:133; 14:19–20; 17:49–51; 35:16–17; 56:61.

29–30 These verses and a closely related passage in 81:28–29 present a notable contrast between human free will and Divine predeterminism. On the one hand, Let him who will, take a way unto his Lord could be understood to indicate that human beings are free to decide between right and wrong and to choose their own way (see also 18:29). Yet on the other hand, You do not will but that God wills (or "You do not will except as God wills") could be understood to indicate that the final determination is in God's Hands alone. A moderate position holds that there is neither absolute free will nor absolute determinism. God has willed that human beings have the ability to will, but could remove it any moment. God wills that human beings will, but does not necessarily determine the content of what they will, meaning that human beings have a limited range of freedom willed by God and that they are ultimately responsible for their own acts; for the extensive debates regarding the relationship between free will and determinism, see 54:49c.

29 Cf. 73:19. This can refer to this sūrah (Āl, IK, JJ, Ṭs), this particular group of verses (Āl), or the entire Quran, in which case it refers to the "message" (risālah; Ṭs). See 73:19c.

30 In other schools of recitation, you do not will is read "they do not will."

31 Here His Mercy is interpreted by many as a reference to the Garden (Ṭs), while others understand it to mean that God relents unto human beings so that they may die in a state of repentance, forgives their sins, and admits them to the Garden (Ṭ). In contrast, the wrongdoers are understood to be those who die without repenting (Ṭ). This verse can be seen as a continuation of the message in v. 3, in which God is said to have guided people upon the way, after which they may choose to be either grateful or ungrateful; God allows those who are grateful to enter into His Mercy and has prepared . . . a painful punishment for those who are ungrateful.

Those Sent Forth

al-Mursalāt

Al-Mursalāt is an early Makkan sūrah, although some early commentators, such as Ibn ᶜAbbās and Qatādah, maintain that v. 48 is Madinan (Āl, Q). It takes its name from the mention of those sent forth in the first verse and is also known as al-ᶜUrf after the second word in the first verse, ᶜurfan (Āl), which can mean in succession. According to a ḥadīth: "While we were with the Messenger of God in a cave, the sūrah By those sent forth was revealed to him, and we received it directly from his mouth as soon as he had received the revelation. Suddenly a snake came out, and the Messenger of God said, 'Get it and kill it!' We ran to kill it, but it outstripped us. The Messenger of God said, 'It has escaped your evil, as you too have escaped its evil'" (Āl, Q).

After a series of oaths and reminders of the Last Day (vv. 1–6) and descriptions of its signs (vv. 8–14) is the first appearance of the phrase Woe that Day to the deniers! (v. 15), which thereafter serves as a refrain repeated ten times in the sūrah. The sūrah then affirms that the guilty of all generations will meet the same end (vv. 16–19) and points to the stages of gestation as a sign of God's Power (vv. 20–24), followed by a reference to the created order as a sign of God's Power and Mercy (vv. 25–28). It then addresses the disbelievers, ordering them toward that which they deny and warning them of the punishments such denial entails (vv. 29–40). This is subsequently contrasted to the rewards of the reverent and the virtuous (vv. 41–45). The sūrah concludes with a final address to the disbelievers and criticism of their failure to pray and to believe (vv. 46–50).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) By those sent forth in succession! (2) By the storming tempests! (3) By the spreaders spreading! (4) By the discerners discerning! (5) And by those who bring forth the Reminder, (6) to excuse or to warn, (7) surely what you are promised will befall. (8) So when the stars are blotted out, (9) and when the sky is riven asunder, (10) when the mountains are scattered, (11) and when the messengers are slated, (12) for what day is it appointed? (13) For the Day of

1–5 Many interpret these first five verses as references to different types of angels (Āl, IK, Q), while al-Ṭabarī allows that v. 1 may refer to both the wind and the angels (Ṭ). Vv. 1–5 can also be understood as allusions to forms of knowledge and inspiration that God sends into the hearts of human beings.

1 In accord with the interpretation of vv. 2–3 as references to storms and violent winds, those sent forth is understood by many as a reference to the winds following one another in succession (JJ, Q, Ṭ), but it may also refer to the prophets and messengers who follow one another in succession (IK, Q).

2 Storming tempests means the wind (Ṭ).

3 Spreaders refers to the wind (IK, JJ, Ṭ), the rain (IK, Ṭ), or the angels who spread God's Blessings and revelations (Āl, Ṭ) or who spread their wings (Aj). Al-Ṭabarī allows that the verse does not specify one of these to the exclusion of others, as the wind spreads the clouds, the rain spreads over the earth, and the angels spread God's revealed books.

4 The discerners are the angels, who discriminate between truth and falsehood (Q, Ṭ), and between what is lawful and what is unlawful (Q), or the Quran, which does the same (JJ, Ṭ). Al-Ṭabarī maintains that this verse can refer simultaneously to the angels, the Quran, and anything that distinguishes between truth and falsehood.

5 This verse refers to the angels who descend with the revelation, casting it upon the prophets and messengers in various human collectivities (JJ, Ṭ).

6 The revelation that the angels bring from God to creation serves to both excuse, here meaning provide absolution and forgiveness, and warn (IK, Ṭ).

7 This is the answer to the oaths made in vv. 1–6. When the images in vv. 1–6 are taken as references to angels who bring various messages, the present verse indicates that through these angels human beings have been provided a clear message about what will befall them on the Day of Judgment and in the Hereafter (Ṭ). For similar verses, see 6:134; 51:5.

8–9 Theses verses refer to the dissolution of the heavens at the end of time. The light of the stars fades (see also 81:2; 82:2), and the sky is rent asunder (73:18) and opened as if it were gates (78:19; see also 70:8; 84:1).

10 Elsewhere it is said that the Day of Judgment is a day when the mountains are made like carded wool (70:9; 101:5) or heaps of shifting sand (73:14); for other references to mountains in the Quran's apocalyptic descriptions, see 18:47; 19:90; 20:105–6; 27:88; 52:10; 56:5–6; 69:14; 78:20; 81:3.

11–12 Slated translates uqqitat, here indicating that the messengers are gathered together at an appointed moment, understood by most to be the Day of Resurrection (IK, Ṭ, Z). Uqqitat can also mean "postponed" (IK, Ṭ, Z), indicating the manner in which God does not punish humanity immediately, but grants them respite until an appointed time; see 3:178; 7:183–84; 13:32; 15:37–38; 22:44. Others understand uqqitat to mean "promised" (IK, Ṭ); in this vein, it is related to 39:69, which says that on the Day of Division. (14) And what shall apprise thee of the Day of Division? (15) Woe that Day to the deniers! (16) Did We not destroy those of old, (17) then make those of later times follow them? (18) Thus do We deal with the guilty. (19) Woe that Day to the deniers! (20) Did We not create you from a base fluid, (21) then lodge it in a secure dwelling place (22) for a known measure? (23) Thus do We determine; what excellent determiners! (24) Woe that Day to the deniers! (25) Did We not make the earth a receptacle (26) for the living and the dead, (27) and place therein firm, soaring mountains and give you sweet water to drink? (28) Woe that Day to the deniers! (29) Away to that which you used to deny! (30) Away to a threefold shadow (31) that provides no shade, nor avails against Judgment the prophets and the witnesses will be brought forth to witness for or against humanity. For what day is it appointed? can also be read "Until what day is it postponed?" In both senses it is a rhetorical question that is answered in the following verse.

13–14 The Day of Division (37:21; 44:40; 77:38; 78:17; see also 10:28; 30:14) is another name for the Day of Judgment, indicating the manner in which the believers and the disbelievers will be definitively divided from one another (Z) and that the division between true and false, good and evil, light and dark will be made clear.

15 This is the first occurrence of a refrain that is repeated ten times in this sūrah. Each instance can be taken as a repetition for emphasis in reference to those who deny the Resurrection (Ṭ) or those who deny both the Resurrection and God. The way the warning builds through repetition increases the sense of danger and urgency. Alternately, each can be viewed in context as a reference to one of the many things that disbelievers may deny (Q on v. 49).

16–19 Those of old refers to the disbelievers among peoples of earlier ages from the time of Adam until that of Muhammad (Q, Sh). Here the guilty refers to the disbelievers among the Quraysh (Q) or to all who are guilty (N, Sh). According to some, the first instance of Woe that Day to the deniers! (v. 15) warns of the punishment in the Hereafter, while the second instance (v. 19) warns of the punishment in this world (Sh).

20–24 The creation of the human being from a base fluid (cf. 32:8) is cited in several verses to remind people of their humble origins and as testimony to God's creative power and ability to resurrect human beings in the Hereafter; see commentary on 32:7–11. The secure dwelling place is a reference to the womb (IK, Ṭ), while a known measure refers to the phases of gestation outlined in 22:5 and 23:14. An argument implied here and elsewhere is that those who do not recognize the nature of their own creation deny God and are thus a manifest adversary (16:4; 36:77) to God and to themselves. This third occurrence of Woe that Day in v. 24 can be read in connection with v. 23 and thus as a warning regarding the manner in which God determines (Sh).

25–26 These verses are understood to be a reference to the earth as a place of shelter for the living and as a container for the bodies of the dead. Thus al-Shaʿbī is reported to have said, "Its interior is for your dead, and its surface is for your living" (IK).

27 In this context, the reference to both mountains and sweet water is understood to mean that God's creation of these is as wondrous as the Resurrection, were one to reflect (Q, Sh).

28 This fourth occurrence of the sūrah's refrain can be seen as a warning to those who fail to be thankful for the blessings mentioned in vv. 25–27.

29–31 These verses can be understood as an address to the disbelievers by God or the angels

the flame. (32) Indeed, it throws up sparks like massive tree trunks, (33) as though they were yellow camels. (34) Woe that Day to the deniers! (35) That is the Day on which they speak not; (36) nor is permission granted them, that they might offer excuses. (37) Woe that Day to the deniers! (38) This is the Day of Division: "We have gathered you and those of old." (39) So if you have a scheme, then scheme against Me! (40) Woe that Day to the deniers! (41) Truly in the Hereafter, instructing the disbelievers to enter the punishment of the Fire, which they had denied (Sh). The threefold shadow refers to the smoke from the Fire of Hell. As the Quranic use of shade implies protection from heat and a comfortable state (see 56:30c), this passage implies that, although a shadow would seem to provide "shade," this shadow will neither protect them nor comfort them in the Hereafter.

32–34 Massive tree trunks translates qaṣr, which can also mean, "huge castle." In either translation, it is implied that the flames are larger than those anyone could expect to see in this life. Yellow camels can be understood to mean that they are large and long as well as yellow (Z). But this particular usage can also be taken as a reference to "dark camels," who are called yellow (ṣufr), because there is a touch of yellow in their blackish hair (JJ, Sh). It is thus understood to mean that the Fire of Hell is pitch-black (Sh). In this way it has none of the positive properties associated with fire in this world. This fifth occurrence of the sūrah's refrain in v. 34 can be seen more specifically as a reference to those who deny such attributes of the Fire (Sh).

35 On that day, people will not be asked about their deeds, since they will have already been recorded (17:71; 18:49; 50:17–18; 69:19–29; 82:11–12). People will not be given the opportunity to testify for themselves. Rather, on that Day We shall seal their mouths. Their hands will speak to Us, and their feet will bear witness to that which they used to earn (36:65); and their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do (41:20).

36 As translated, this verse is understood to mean that the deniers are not permitted to speak, and when they seek to offer excuses, they admit instead their guilt (see 67:11). The second part of this verse could also be rendered "and they offer no excuses." In this second reading, the negation that applies to the first part of the verse, nor is permission granted them (lā yu'dhanu lahum) is read as applying to the second part as well, "they offer no excuses" (ya'tadhirūn; Q). From one perspective, people are unable to offer excuses because the reality of their deeds is completely manifest.

37 This sixth occurrence of the sūrah's refrain can be taken as another reference to those who deny this Day (N).

38 For the Day of Division, see 77:13–14c. This verse refers to God's gathering every generation of humanity together on a single open and barren plain for the Day of Judgment (see 18:47c; 20:106; 79:14c).

39 This is one of several verses intended to show the folly of the disbelievers by challenging them to challenge God or to see what happens when they attempt to operate outside of the limits that God has established, as in 22:15: Whosoever thinks that God will not help him in this world and the Hereafter, let him stretch out a rope to Heaven. Then let him sever it and see if his scheming removes that which enrages (see also 55:33).

40 This seventh occurrence of the sūrah's refrain can be seen as another reference to those who deny the Resurrection (N) or, in connection with the previous verse, as a reference to those who deny God's Power and thus seek to scheme against Him.

41 This verse is similar to 15:45. For the connotations of the Quranic use of shade, see 56:30c. Springs can be seen as a reference to the common motif that God will make the believers enter Gardens with rivers running below (3:195; 4:13, 57, 122; 5:12) and to the various types of springs and drinks mentioned in other sūrahs (e.g., 76:5–6, 17–18; 83:25–28; 88:12).

the reverent shall be amid shade and springs, (42) and fruits such as they desire. (43) "Eat and drink in enjoyment for that which you used to do." (44) Thus do We recompense the virtuous. (45) Woe that Day to the deniers! (46) "Eat and enjoy yourselves a little; truly you are guilty." (47) Woe that Day to the deniers! (48) And when it is said unto them, "Bow!" they bow not. (49) Woe that Day to the deniers! (50) So in what discourse after this will they believe?

42 Cf. 52:22; 56:21. That the fruits of the Garden are available such as they desire indicates that they are available whenever believers wish, in contrast to this world where the availability of food and drink is determined by external circumstances (JJ). Several other verses also refer to the fruits of Paradise that will always be at the disposal of the believers (e.g., 37:42; 38:61; 43:73); see 36:57c.

43 See commentary on the identical verse in 52:19.

44 Cf. 6:84; 12:22; 28:14; 37:80, 105, 110, 121, 131. See 29:69c; 37:80c.

45 In relation to the previous verse, this eighth occurrence of the sūrah's refrain could be seen as a reference to those who fall into despair (Sh), as such despair indicates denial of the manifold reward of good deeds.

46 These words, which God addresses to the disbelievers, are ironic. They allude to the respite that God grants the disbelievers, though they think it good, as they are able to enjoy . . . a little; in fact, it lets them dig a deeper hole for themselves, as in 31:24: We grant them enjoyment a little, then We compel them toward a grave punishment; see also 3:178; 10:69–70; 15:3; 16:55; 26:205–7; 29:66; 30:34c.

47 This ninth occurrence of the sūrah's refrain can be seen as a repetition of the previous occurrence (Sh) or as an indication that those who enjoy . . . a little with no thought to the consequences of their actions in effect deny that all they receive is from God.

48–49 The command to bow is understood as a command to perform the prayer, as bowing is a part of the canonical prayer. The Prophet is reported to have said, "There is no good in a religion that has no bowing and no prostration" (Āl, Q, Sh). V. 48 is said to have been revealed regarding some disbelievers who protested that the positions required for prayer were an insult (Q). Others say that this injunction refers to those who are called to prostrate on the Day of Judgment, but are not able to do so (Q, Sh; see 36:8c; 68:42c; 68:43c). In this vein, the tenth and final occurrence of the sūrah's refrain in v. 49 would appear to indicate those who deny the commands and prohibitions of God (N, Sh), since the command to pray is considered foremost among the actions enjoined by God.

50 This verse asks, "So in what discourse other than this Quran will they believe?" It is similar to 45:6: These are the signs of God that We recite unto thee in truth. So in what discourse after God and His signs do they believe? Both verses can be understood to mean, "If they will not believe in revelation, then in what will they believe?" implying that those who reject revelation do not believe in anything real. Vv. 48 and 50 can be viewed as complementary; the first criticizes the disbelievers for failing to act in accord with the revelation, and the second, for failing to believe and understand in accord with the revelation.

The Tiding

al-Naba'

Al-Naba', a late Makkan sūrah, takes its name from the mention of the Great Tiding (al-naba' al-ʿaẓīm) in the second verse, which is understood by most as a reference to the Quran itself, or to the Day of Resurrection. It is also known as al-Muʿṣirāt, "The Rain Clouds," and as al-Tasā'ul, "The Questioning of One Another" (Āl). The first title comes from v. 14, and the second refers to the theme of the first verses, in which the disbelievers are said to question one another regarding the Resurrection or the revelation of the Quran or both. According to Ibn ʿAjībah, insofar as the Great Tiding refers to the Resurrection, this sūrah is connected to the previous sūrah's discussion of the Day of Division (77:13–14, 38), which is also a reference to the Day of Resurrection. Insofar as the Great Tiding refers to the Quran, this sūrah follows directly upon the last verse of the previous sūrah (Aj).

This sūrah can be seen as comprising three sections. Vv. 1–5 discuss the nature of those who do not believe in certain aspects of the Prophet Muhammad's message. Given the content of the sūrah, it is most likely a reference to those who do not believe in the Resurrection. Rather than argue against their disbelief, vv. 6–16 point to all of those things that God has created as signs that should make the truth evident to those with intellects. Vv. 17–40 then discuss the advent of the Resurrection, referred to here as the Day of Division and as the Moment Appointed, and then the different ways in which the return to God will be experienced by believers and disbelievers when they are indeed divided.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) About what do they question one another? (2) About the Great Tiding, (3) regarding which they differ. (4) Nay, but they will know! (5) Then indeed they will know! (6) Did We not make the earth a resting place, (7) and the mountains stakes, (8) and create you in pairs, (9) and make your sleep repose,

1 They is interpreted to mean the Prophet's tribe, the Quraysh (Q, R, Ṭ), most of whose leaders rejected Muhammad and the Quran at the time of the revelation of this verse, though this particular reference is not understood to limit the more general implications of the sūrah.

2 The Great Tiding (al-nabaʾ al-ʿaẓīm; cf. 38:67) refers to the Resurrection; the Quran itself (Q, Ṭ), called the Mighty Quran (al-qurʾān al-ʿaẓīm; 15:87); or the Prophet Muhammad (R). The content of the sūrah best supports the reference to the Resurrection in general or to the Day of Resurrection, which is also referred to as a tremendous day (yawm ʿāẓīm) when considered in relation to the punishment received by disbelievers (see, e.g., 6:15; 19:37; 26:189; 83:5).

3 This verse is understood as an allusion to the distinction between two parties: those who accept and confirm the Quran and the Prophet and those who reject and deny them (Ṭ). Ashʿarite theologians, who oppose a metaphorical understanding of Resurrection, have viewed it as an allusion to the different degrees and modes of rejection and denial (Qu, R), since some believe in certain aspects of the message but not in others, and some believe in a spiritual resurrection but not in a bodily one.

4–5 Nay, translating the emphatic particle kallā, could alternately be rendered "truly" or "indeed," as it is in v. 5. If the two verses are both addressed to the disbelievers, the repetition can be seen as emphasis; they can also be viewed as addressed to two groups: the first to the disbelievers, the second to the believers (Q, R, Ṭ). When both are viewed as an address to disbelievers, v. 4 can be seen as a reference to knowing the truth of the Resurrection and v. 5 to knowing the truth of the punishment; or v. 4 can be seen as a reference to the punishment in this world and v. 5 to the punishment in the Hereafter (R). If addressed to the two groups, vv. 21–30 would correspond to what the disbelievers will know, and vv. 31–36 to what the believers will know.

6 Like 22:2 and 27:61, this verse indicates both that God has made all that is upon the earth subservient to human beings (see, e.g., 22:65; 31:20) and that He has placed guidance upon the earth, as in 43:10: He it is Who made the earth a cradle for you and made paths for you therein, that haply you may be guided.

7 Several verses refer to God's having made the mountains firm; see 21:30–31c. The mention of mountains here is also connected to the resting place in v. 6, for God has made places of refuge for you in the mountains (16:81) and in other verses mountains are referred to as places with dwellings and houses (see 7:74; 15:82; 26:149).

8 Pairs (azwāj) could be a reference to the male and female, as in 53:45: And that He creates the two (zawjayn)—male and female, which are said to be "mates" (azwāj) created from a single soul (4:1; 7:189; 39:6). In this sense, this verse follows upon v. 6, for human beings find rest and repose in their mates, as in 30:21: And among His signs is that He created mates for you from among yourselves, that you might find rest in them, and He established affection and mercy between you (see also 7:189). The verse can also be seen as a reference to the creation of all things in pairs, as in 51:49, And of all things We created pairs, that haply you may remember, which is understood by some as a reference to the manner in which human beings can be said to know things through their opposites.

9 Sleep provides rest for the body and a break from external activity. Some relate this verse to 6:60, He it is Who takes your souls by night, in which the body is as if dead; for sleep as "a minor

(10) and make the night a garment, (11) and the day for livelihood? (12) And [did We not] build above you seven firmaments, (13) and make a radiant lamp, (14) and send down water pouring from the rain clouds, (15) that We might produce grain and plants thereby, (16) and luxuriant gardens? (17) Truly the Day of Division is a Moment Appointed, (18) a day when the trumpet is blown death," see 6:60c; 39:42; and the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran."

10 This verse can be seen as a continuation of v. 9, as He it is Who made the night for you, that you might rest therein (10:67), and He has made the night for repose (6:96). On the one hand, night as a garment implies that it is a protection and comfort. On the other hand, night allows the true nature of a person to manifest, as the cover of night facilitates the actions of those who incline toward wrongdoing. It also provides a stillness that facilitates devotion and vigil, as in 73:6: Truly the vigil of the night is firmest in tread and most upright for speech; for the importance of night vigil, see 11:114; 17:79; 20:130; 21:20; 25:63–64; 50:40; 52:49; 73:2, 6, 20; 76:26; 73:1–2c; 73:20c. In his Makkan Openings (al-Futūḥāt al-Makkiyyah), Ibn ʿArabī mentions that the night is a cloak for "the people of the night" (aṣḥāb al-layl), because it covers them from others and creates a spiritual retreat (khalwah) for them.

11 When v. 9 is viewed in relation to 6:60, this verse can be viewed in relation to another phrase in 6:60, by day He resurrects you. Together vv. 9–11 indicate the cycles of rest and activity essential to the functioning of the created order. The alternation of night and day is referred to as an important sign in over two dozen verses; e.g., 24:44: God alternates the night and the day. Truly in that is a lesson for those possessed of sight; for vv. 9–11, cf. 25:47. For other verses that contrast night and day, see 27:86; 28:73; 40:61.

12 Seven firmaments is a reference to the seven heavens (2:29; 17:44; 23:17; 41:12; 65:12; 67:3; 71:15). Firmaments translates shidād, which also means "strong, solid, and firm," thus implying that the heavens have no fissure and are not subject to the vicissitudes of this world (R, Ṭ). For the significance of the seven heavens, see 23:17c.

13 For v. 12–13, cf. 71:16. Radiant lamp is understood by most as a reference to the sun (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), although some interpret it as a reference to the Prophet Muhammad, as in 33:45–46, where he is said to have been sent as a luminous lamp (see also 25:61).

14 Rain clouds, translating muʿṣirāt, is read by some as "the winds" that bring the rain clouds (Q, R, Ṭ). A small minority read it as a reference to "the heavens" (Ṭ).

15–16 God remains the primary cause for all things. Therefore, it is not the rain that produces grain, plants and gardens, as some are inclined to believe; rather, it is God Himself who does so by means of rain, since God made every living thing from water (21:30; see also 24:25; 25:54).

17 Cf. 44:40. The Day of Resurrection is referred to here and elsewhere (e.g., 44:40; 77:13–14; 77:38) as the Day of Division, because it provides the ultimate distinction between truth and falsehood, right and wrong, light and dark. It is a Moment Appointed because it is guaranteed, and God will not fail the tryst (3:9; 13:31; 39:20). For the Day of Division, see 77:13–14; 77:38.

18 In 39:68 the Archangel Seraphiel is said to blow the trumpet twice: at the first blast, all of creation will swoon (see 69:13); at the second, all souls will rise from their graves and be gathered before God (see 50:20–21; 64:9). This verse may refer to the fact that the trumpet is blown twice or to the second blowing of the trumpet (see 39:68c). Throngs (afwāj) is taken by some to indicate that human communities will come in "groups" (afwāj), with each community gathered behind its prophet (see 17:71c). After all souls are gathered, they will be divided according to those who must be reckoned for their bad deeds and those who are rewarded for their good deeds. When asked about the afwāj, the Prophet said that on the Day of Resurrection his community and you come forth in throngs, (19) and the sky is opened as if it were gates, (20) and the mountains are set in motion as if they were a mirage. (21) Truly Hell lies in ambush, (22) a place unto which the rebellious return (23) to tarry therein for ages. (24) They taste therein neither coolness nor drink, (25) save boiling liquid and a cold, murky fluid, (26) a fitting recompense. (27) Truly they anticipated not a reckoning, (28) and denied Our signs with utter denial.

(ummah) would be resurrected in ten afwāj, which he then enumerated.

19 Cf. 54:11: So We opened the gates of the sky with pouring water. The word translated sky and Heaven in these two verses is the same, samā'. Most interpret v. 19 as an allusion to the descent of the angels (IK, Q), as in 25:25, where it is referred to as the Day when the sky is split open with clouds and the angels are sent down. For a more extensive discussion of the opening of the sky or Heaven, see 39:73c.

20 Cf. 81:3. Several verses indicate that the mountains will be dispatched on the Day of Judgment, as in 27:88: And thou seest the mountains that thou dost suppose are solid pass away like clouds—the work of God, Who perfects all things; see also 18:47; 70:8–9; 73:14; 101:5.

21–22 Hell is the place to which those who rebel against the truth are sent. It will come upon them like an ambush when they die, because they had been oblivious to the truth in this world.

23 For ages (aḥqāban) indicates periods of time. The vast majority of commentators maintain that it indicates Hell will be eternal, with one period following after another endlessly. Others say it indicates that, although Hell is "endless" in relation to our understanding of time; it is of limited duration, limited "ages," in the absolute sense. The relativity of Hell in relation to the Absolute is alluded to in a famous ḥadīth, "On the Day of Judgment, those who deserve the Garden will enter the Garden, and those who deserve the Fire, the Fire. Thereupon God will say, 'Take out everyone in whose heart there was as much faith as a grain of a mustard seed' [see 4:40c]. Then they will be taken out already blackened and will be cast into the River of Life. Then they will sprout as an herb sprouts by the side of a stream. Do you not see how it comes out yellow and budding?"

24–25 Therein can be taken as a reference to ages or to Hell. The former implies that there will be ages in which they drink of nothing other than boiling liquid (ḥamīm) and cold, murky fluid (ghassāq), followed by ages in which they drink of other beverages or experience other forms of punishment. The second implies that they will drink of these forever. The boiling liquid (cf. 6:70; 10:4; 22:19; 37:67; 38:57; 40:72; 44:46, 48; 47:15; 56:42, 54; 88:5) indicates something that has reached its maximum temperature, but can also indicate severe, painful cold. The cold, murky fluid (cf. 10:4; 38:57) is said to be an unbearably cold liquid with an intolerable stench gathered from the pus, sweat, tears, and wounds of the people of Hell (IK). This verse and similar verses provide an interesting window onto the nature of Hell—it is characterized not just by fire and heat but by extremes at both ends of the spectrum of temperature and all of the tension such extremes entail, whereas the Garden is described as a place of perfect tranquility. Although in the garden there are all the wine, fruits, and pure companions one could want, there is no indulgence. Peace and joy lie in moderation; torture lies in the extremes.

26 It is a fitting recompense in that it is proportionate to the offense committed, for the recompense of an evil is an evil like unto it (42:40) and God wrongs not His servants (3:182; see also 10:44; 22:10).

27 As the disbelievers did not believe in the Resurrection and Divine Judgment, they did not anticipate the reckoning and did not fear it or seek to avoid it by accounting for their own actions (Q). Their recompense is therefore of their own doing, since it is they who have wronged themselves (3:117; 10:44; 16:118).

28 Our signs indicates all aspects of revelation. With utter denial, translating kadhdhāb,

(29) And everything have We recorded in a book. (30) So taste! For We shall not increase you in aught but punishment! (31) Truly the reverent shall have a place of triumph, (32) gardens and vineyards, (33) buxom maidens of like age, (34) and an overflowing cup. (35) They hear therein neither idle talk nor lying— (36) a recompense from thy Lord, a gift abounding— (37) the Lord of the heavens and the earth, and whatsoever is between them, the Compassionate, Whom they have no power to address. (38) That Day the Spirit and could also be rendered "as deniers" if read as kudhdhāb (Q, R, Z); or kudhdhāb could be read in the singular as a name of emphasis and thus rendered "as does a great denier."

29 This verse refers to the book in which all deeds are recorded by angels (see 86:4; commentary on 43:80; 50:17–18; 82:10–12) or to the Preserved Tablet (85:22; Q). Since the disbelievers' transgressions are as described in vv. 27–28 and since God has recorded everything, theirs is a fitting recompense (v. 26); cf. 36:12. In a book, translating kitāban, could also be rendered "in writing" (Q, Ṭs).

30 So taste means, "Taste the punishment [see 3:106, 181; 4:56; 6:30; 7:39; 8:35, 50; 10:52; 22:22; 32:14, 20; 34:42; 46:34] that you have brought upon yourselves through your disbelief and your actions." According to a ḥadīth, "This verse is the most severe [verse] against the people of the Fire" (IK, R, Z). See also 17:97, which says of the punishment, Every time it abates, We shall increase for them a blazing flame; and 4:56, which promises that as often as their skins are consumed, We shall replace them with other skins, that they may taste the punishment.

31 For the Quranic understanding of the reverent, see 2:2c. Attaining "the Garden" is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of Paradise, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57.

32 Gardens will surround believers on all sides.

33 Maidens with full breasts represent those who will be fully mature, but whose bodies will not suffer the vicissitudes of time. According to some commentaries, all men and women of Paradise will be thirty-three years old. For of like age, see 56:36–37c.

34 Overflowing translates dihāq, which has several interpretations: "continuously filled," "pure," or most commonly "completely filled" (IK, R). According to the early commentator al-Ḍaḥḥāk (d. 212/827), every use of "cup" in the Quran is a reference to paradisal wine (R); e.g., 37:45–47; 76:6.

35 Cf. 19:62; 56:25; 88:11. All they hear is Peace (19:62; 56:26), because that is the greeting of the Garden (see, e.g., 10:10; 14:23). Idle talk and lying can be seen to represent the concupiscent and devious tendencies, respectively, as manifested in speech, whereas true speech is pure peace.

36 Abounding translates ḥisāb, which could also mean "sufficient" (Z). When viewed in relation to v. 26, it could be rendered "appropriate" or "fitting" (R), indicating that the reverent receive what they have earned, as do the deniers.

37 Here they is understood by some as a reference to the disbelievers (Q), as in 36:65: On that Day We shall seal their mouths. Others say they refers to all created beings (R). Some say this verse does not indicate speech as such, but that on the Day it comes, no soul shall speak, save by His Leave (11:105; Q).

38 The Spirit (al-rūḥ) is open to many interpretations. Even the Quran does not give a definitive explanation, responding instead by saying, They ask thee about the Spirit. Say, "The Spirit is from the Command of my Lord, and you have not been given knowledge, save a little" (17:85). As al-Ghazzālī writes, "'The Spirit' is found in the Quran with many meanings" (Iḥyāʾ ʿulūm al-dīn, K. al-ʿilm). Here some say it refers to the Archangel Gabriel (IK, Q, R), as in 26:192–94, where he is referred to as the Trustworthy Spirit (al-rūḥ al-amīn). Others say that here the Spirit does not specify a particular angel, but the first the angels stand in rows, none speaking, save one whom the Compassionate permits and who speaks aright. (39) That is the True Day. So let whosoever will, take a path of return unto his Lord. (40) Truly We have warned you of a punishment nigh, on a day when a man beholds what his hands have sent forth, and the disbeliever says, "Oh, would that I were dust!"

creature created by God (Q, R), which may or may not be the Archangel Gabriel. The angels refers to the most noble of angels, the protecting angels who are responsible for recording the deeds of each individual (see commentary on 82:10–12), or all angels. In rows, translating ṣaffan, could also mean "in a row." Some read the verse to mean that the Spirit and the angels stand in a single row; others take it to mean that the Spirit stands alone, while the angels stand in a row (Āl). In relation to 89:22, which refers to the angels coming row upon row, some read ṣaffan to mean that the angels stand in many rows (Āl, R). Save one whom the Compassionate permits is interpreted as a reference to those whom God permits to intercede on behalf of others, as in 2:255: Who is there that may intercede with Him save by His Leave? The referent to who speaks aright is then taken by many as those who intercede, since they will only be able to speak aright about those for whom they intercede (Āl, Q, R). Some maintain that this refers to the prophets (IK). Others say who speaks aright means those who say, "There is no god but God" (Q). Some maintain that the verse should be read, "save one whom the Compassionate permits. And he speaks aright," meaning that after permission has been granted, he cannot but speak aright.

39 It is the True Day, for it is the Day in which there is no doubt (3:9, 25; 4:87; 6:12; 42:7; 45:26). The path of return to the Lord is through belief and good deeds.

40 According to most, this entire verse points to disbelievers, for disbelievers will behold and dwell upon the evil of their deeds, whereas believers will experience the Forgiveness and Mercy of God. According to others, a man beholds what his hands have sent forth (see 75:13c; 82:5c) refers to believers, who will experience reward for their good deeds, in contrast to disbelievers, who will wish that they were nothing (R). Oh, would that I were dust could indicate that one wishes either to have never been born or to be back in the grave and not resurrected (IK, Q), as in 4:42: On that Day those who disbelieved and disobeyed the Messenger will wish that they were level with the earth, and they will conceal no account from God (R). It can also be taken as an indication that those who took pride in their high station in this world will prefer that they had had a low station that had not made them prideful and insolent; see also 69:25–27. Many commentaries convey an account that links this verse to the resurrection of animals. Traditional Islamic teachings maintain that all animals will be resurrected. Then God will rectify all injustices between them, and according to many when the judgment between them is finished, He will say to them "Be dust," and they will all become dust. Upon witnessing this, disbelievers will prefer the fate of the animals to their own and say, Oh, would that I were dust (IK, Q, Ṭs, Ṭū).

A few commentators interpret the disbeliever as a reference to Satan, who, when he sees the rewards received by believing human beings, wishes that he too had been made of dust or clay, thus altering his previous evaluation: I am better than him. Thou hast created me from fire, while Thou hast created him from clay (7:12; 38:76; Q, R, Ṭs). In some Shiite commentaries, the Arabic for Oh, would that I were dust; yā laytanī kuntu turābān, is read yā laytanī kuntu turābiyyan, that is, "Oh, would that I were a follower of Abū Turāb," meaning ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, the first Shiite Imam (Kā, Qm). This would then mean that on the Day of Resurrection all who were not among the followers of the twelve Shiite Imams would wish that they had been. In this sense Shiites may be inverting the pejorative name Turābiyyah ("the followers of Abū Turāb"), which some of their opponents gave to them, and wearing it as a badge of honor.

The Wresters

al-Nāziᶜāt

A late Makkan sūrah, al-Nāziᶜāt was most likely revealed shortly before or after Sūrah 78, al-Nabaʾ. It takes its title from the first word of the sūrah. It is also known as al-Sāhirah, "The Wide Expanse," after the reference in v. 14 to the wide expanse upon which all human beings are said to be gathered on the Day of Resurrection, and as al-Ṭāmmah, "The Calamity," after the reference to the Day of Judgment as the Great Calamity in v. 34 (Āl).

The focus of this sūrah is upon the reality of the Day of Judgment, the Hour, and the Resurrection. Thus some say that it follows directly upon the first phrase of 78:40, Truly we have warned you of a punishment nigh (Aj). The first five verses present a series of oaths in which God swears by certain aspects of creation. According to commentators, when one makes an oath by a thing, it is to show its greatness or to express the magnitude of what is to follow in the sūrah, or both. It is said that God may swear an oath by anything He has created, but that it is not proper for human beings to swear by anything other than God. Vv. 6–14 recount the questions of those who do not believe in the Resurrection and reaffirm some of its attributes. The next section, vv. 15–26, is most likely the first account of the story of Moses and Pharaoh in the chronological order of revelation, likening Pharaoh's disbelief to that of the Makkan idolaters. Vv. 27–33 then cite the wonders of creation as evidence of God's ability to resurrect. The next section, vv. 34–41, returns to a description of the Day of Resurrection, contrasting the fate of the believers with that of the disbelievers. The last five verses respond to the disbelievers who chided the Prophet for not knowing when the Hour would come.

1–5 Regarding the varying interpretations for these verses as referring to different types of angels, different modes of death, or different types and phases of stars and/or other celestial bodies, among other things, al-Ṭabarī says that they can be seen as a reference to all of these, for God is swearing by everything that exhibits the characteristics mentioned in these verses. Al-Rāzī advises that we cannot say any of the interpretations are what is meant by God, but that we can say they are possible. He adds another interpretation in which these verses represent five phases in the return of the heart from what is other than God to God: "Those that wrest (al-nāziʿāt) are the spirits that move toward (tanziʿu ilā) attachment to the most unfailing handhold [2:256; 31:22], or who are being wrested from the love of what is other than God. Those that draw out quickly (al-nāshiṭāt nashṭ) means that, after the return from bodily things, [the spirits] take to striving and assuming the character traits of God with utter zeal (nishāṭ) and great strength. Those that glide serenely is then that, after striving, [the spirits] 'glide' in the realm of sovereignty, such that they cross these oceans and swim therein. Those that race to the fore, outstripping is an allusion to the variegation of spirits in the degrees of their journeying unto God, and those that govern affairs is an allusion to the connection between the last levels of humanness and the first degrees of angelhood. So when the human spirits reach their farthest limit, which is the level of outstripping, they connect to the world of the angels, which is what is meant by those that govern affairs. So the first four are what is meant by its oil would well-nigh shine forth [24:35], and the fifth is the fire in His saying, even if no fire had touched it [24:35]."

1 Those that wrest are viewed by most as the angels who wrest the souls of disbelievers from the body (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z). They do so violently because the souls do not want to face the Judgment. Others see those that wrest as an allusion to the stars or to all celestial bodies (Q, Ṭ, Z).

2 This verse may be a reference to the angels who draw out the souls of believers who go willingly into the Hereafter (Q, Ṭ); though others say it could be another description of the difficulties confronted by disbelievers and hypocrites, because nashiṭa, here translated draw out, can also imply something that must be pulled out with great force (Q). Others say it refers to the stars as they travel from one horizon to the other; while according to others, vv. 1–2 refer to death itself (Q, Ṭ), where the soul's exit from the body is violent for some and gentle for others.

3 This verse is a reference to angels who descend with God's nourishment, or to the stars, or to ships that sail gently upon the sea (Ṭ). When taken as a reference to angels, glide serenely could also be rendered "descend in the early morning." Mujāhid viewed this as a third reference to death (R): v. 1 refers to the death of disbelievers; v. 2, to the death of believers; and v. 3, to the death of the elect among the believers.

4 This verse is a reference to either angels who race to Paradise with human souls, death, or the stars (Ṭ).

5 Most see this verse as a reference to the angels who have been charged with governing the affairs of this world (Q). Some say that it applies to all angels with such responsibilities, while others relate it to the responsibilities mentioned in vv. 1–4 (R); and others say it refers only to the Archangels Gabriel, Michael, Azrael, and Seraphiel (Q), each of whom is considered to be responsible for a particular domain. In another interpretation this verse is understood as a reference to the planets (Q), presumably in astrological terms.

6–7 Some maintain that the quaker and the successor refer to the first and second blasts of the successor follows upon it, (8) hearts that Day shall tremble, (9) with eyes humbled. (10) They will say, "Are we to be restored as we were before? (11) What! When we have become decayed bones?" (12) They say, "This, then, would be a ruinous return!" (13) Yet it shall be but a single cry, (14) then, behold, they will be upon a wide expanse. (15) Hast thou heard tell of Moses, (16) when his Lord called out to him in the holy valley of Ṭuwā? (17) "Go unto Pharaoh! Truly he has rebelled! (18) And say, 'Dost thou wish to be purified (19) and that I guide the trumpet blown by the Archangel Seraphiel on the Day of Judgment (Q, R, Ṭ); see 39:68c; 78:18c. Some say the quaker refers to earth and the mountains, for it is a day on which the earth and the mountains shake (73:14), while the successor refers to Heaven and the planets (IK, R). Another opinion is that the quaker refers to the first "shaking" of the earth, and the successor to the second shaking when it is sundered and fades away (R). Others interpret the quaker as a reference to "the event" in which the earth quakes; and still others see it as a reference to the Hour (Q, Ṭ), which is said to "quake" (22:1). A minority interpret vv. 6–7 as an allusion to death itself and all that it entails (Q, Ṭ).

8 Hearts shall tremble with fear (Q, Ṭ), as in 40:18: So warn them of the Day of the Imminent Event, when hearts will be in throats, choking in agony. Al-Rāzī interprets the fact that hearts is here indefinite in the Arabic as an indication that not all hearts tremble, only those of the disbelievers.

9 Cf. 68:43; and 70:44: Their eyes humbled, abasement shall overcome them.

10–11 These verses contain a common objection made by those who do not believe in the Resurrection; cf. 17:49; and 17:98: They say, "What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation?"

12 This verse is the response of those who deny the Resurrection. It is understood to mean that they know that if this were the case, they would be ruined (Q, R).

13 Judgment will come with a single cry; cf. 36:29; 36:49; 37:19; 38:15. See in particular 39:68, which maintains that there will be two cries of the trumpet. The present verse is then taken as a reference to the second cry, at which all human beings will be gathered. The reference to a single cry is understood by some to mean that the gathering will occur almost instantly, for as other verses say, Our Command is naught but one, like the blinking of an eye (54:50); and The matter of the Hour is as the blinking of an eye, or nearer still (16:77; IK).

14 Wide expanse is interpreted by some as a reference to the face of the earth (IK, Q). Others connect it to the open plain in 18:47 and the barren plain in 20:106 (IK), both of which are seen as allusions to the plain on which all of humanity will be gathered for the Day of Judgment. Still others believe that the wide expanse refers to a plain near Jerusalem, in the vicinity of Mt. Arīḥā, where some say the Resurrection will take place. Sāhirah, here translated wide expanse, could also mean that they are "awake" due to the intensity of their fear (R, Z).

15–25 For the full Quranic account of Moses, see 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 17:101–4; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46; 40:23–45; 43:46–56; 44:17–31. This is most likely the first account of Moses in the chronological order of revelation. As it occurred early in the Makkan period, it would appear to assume some basic knowledge of the story of Moses among the Arabs. Here it is offered as an example for the Prophet and his followers of what will eventually become of unjust rulers, like those of Makkah.

16 Cf. 20:12. Ṭuwā is either a proper name for the valley said to lie just below Mt. Sinai, where Moses first heard the Voice of God (see 20:12–16), or a term derived from the verb ṭawā/ṭayya, "to roll up," meaning that the valley is wrapped in sanctity or that it is sanctified twice (Q, Ṭ).

17 Cf. 20:24, 43.

18–19 Just as the Prophet invited the tribe of Quraysh to Islam in a peaceful manner, Moses was instructed to first invite Pharaoh to follow thee to thy Lord that thou mightest fear?'" (20) Then he showed him the greatest sign. (21) But he denied and disobeyed. (22) Then turned his back, moving swiftly. (23) Then he gathered and proclaimed, (24) and said, "I am your lord most high." (25) So God seized him with a punishment exemplary in the Hereafter and in this world. (26) Truly in that is a lesson for whosoever fears. (27) Are you more difficult to create or the sky that He has built? (28) He raised high its canopy and fashioned it, (29) darkened its night, and brought forth its day. (30) And after

God's Revelation, as in 20:44: Yet speak unto him gently, that haply he may remember or have fear. It is a common Quranic theme that no community is punished for wrongdoing until it has been offered guidance, as indicated in 28:59: And thy Lord never destroys towns until He sends a messenger to their mother city to recite unto them Our signs; and 26:208: And never did We destroy a town save that it had warners; see also 6:131; 10:13; 15:4.

20 One account mentions nine clear signs (17:101), but does not state which is the greatest sign. Some say it is the staff that became a serpent (7:107; 20:66–17; 26:32, 44–45), the hand turned white (7:108; 26:33; 27:12), the parting of the sea (7:136; 10:90; 20:77–78; 26:63–66), or all of the miracles that Moses performed. For a comprehensive list of the "signs" associated with Moses, see 17:101c.

21 Even after Pharaoh's sorcerers acknowledged the superiority of Moses and the veracity of the signs with which he had been sent, Pharaoh continued to deny, considering the staff turned serpent and the white hand mere sorcery (see 7:111–26c).

22 Some say that this verse indicates that Pharaoh turned and fled when he saw the greatest sign or the staff turned serpent (R). Others say it indicates that, upon realizing the power of Moses' message, Pharaoh quickly moved to devise a plan against him (R).

23 Most say this verse indicates that Pharaoh gathered all the people to declare his sovereignty. Others relate this verse to 26:53: Then Pharaoh sent marshalers to the cities, in which case it refers to Pharaoh's summoning his people to pursue the Israelites.

24 According to several reports, Pharaoh first said, O notables! I know of no god for you other than myself (28:38), then I am your lord most high (R, Ṭ, Ṭs).

25 A punishment exemplary renders nakāl, which also indicates weakness and inability, evoking the sense that God rendered Pharaoh impotent in opposing Moses. As translated, this verse is a reference to punishment in this world and the next, and many interpret the this-worldly punishment as the plagues sent upon his people and their drowning in the sea (cf. 20:78–79; 7:135–37). Some read this verse as "the punishment of the last and the first," saying "the first" indicates the punishment for saying, I know of no god for you other than myself, and that "the last" is for saying, I am your lord most high (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs); others say "the first" is for denying Moses and "the last" is for saying, I am your lord most high (Q). In a well-known Sufi interpretation, Alāʾ al-Dawlā al-Simnānī (d. 787/1336) is said to have seen the soul of the famous Sufi martyr al-Ḥallāj in an exalted state. So he prayed to God, asking how it was that al-Ḥallāj's soul was in a high Paradise (ʿIlliyyūn), though he had said, "I am the Real" (anā al-Ḥaqq), yet Pharaoh's soul was in Hell because he had said, I am your lord most high. God answered that Pharaoh saw only himself and forgot God, while al-Ḥallāj saw only God and forgot himself.

27 God's ability to create, which some who opposed the Prophet did accept, is here cited as evidence that God would have no problem resurrecting human beings as He wills, as in 40:57: Surely the creation of the heavens and the earth is greater than the creation of mankind. But most of mankind know not; and 36:81: Is not He Who created the heavens and the earth able to create the like thereof?

28–30 These verses describe additional dimensions of creation, which demonstrate that that He spread out the earth. (31) From it He brought forth its water and its pastures, (32) and the mountains He set firm, (33) as sustenance for you and for your flocks. (34) So when the Great Calamity befalls— (35) a day when man shall remember that for which he endeavored, (36) and Hellfire is made visible for one who sees— (37) as for one who rebels (38) and prefers the life of this world, (39) truly Hellfire is the refuge. (40) As for one who fears standing before his Lord and forbids the soul from caprice, (41) truly the Garden is the God can create and resurrect as He will. Its canopy indicates the highest level of the sky; fashioned it implies that it is whole with no fissures, cracks, or imperfections. For the perfection of the heavens, see 67:3–4c. Its day translates ḍuḥāhā, which could also mean "its light," "its morning brightness," as in 93:1, or the morning, as in v. 46. For the full range of meanings for ḍuḥā, see the introduction to Sūrah 93. The mention of the earth (v. 30) after the sky, night, and day indicates that the earth was created after the heavens had been established (Q).

31 Its pastures is interpreted by some as an allusion to all plant life and by others as an allusion to everything eaten by human beings and animals.

32 The firmness of the mountains is cited in many verses as a sign of God's Omnipotence; see 13:3; 15:19; 16:15; 21:31; 31:10; 41:10; 50:7; 77:27; 21:20–31c.

33 Cf. 80:32. God sustains all things and has made all things subservient to human beings (see 22:65; 31:20; 45:13). Human beings are thus God's vicegerents (see, e.g., 2:30; 6:165c; 35:39) and must remain thankful to God for sustenance, while sharing these resources with all of God's creatures.

34 Calamity translates ṭāmmah, which derives from the verb ṭamma, meaning "to be abundant" or "to rise over," as would a flood, implying that the ṭāmmah is the greatest of all tremendous events, because its overabundance encompasses all things. Some take the Great Calamity as a reference to the second cry of the trumpet (see 39:68c), at which all human beings and jinn are gathered; others take it as a reference to the Resurrection, because it surpasses and predominates over (yaṭimmu) all things (Q). It is also interpreted by some as a reference to the very moment when the people of Hell are led to Hell and the people of Paradise are led to Paradise. Some view the omission of a response to the conditional when (idhā) as an affirmation that what is to occur must occur (Q, Ṭs).

35 All people will remember the good and evil that they have done, for even if they have forgotten some of their deeds while in this world, their deeds have all been recorded, as in 58:6: On the Day when God resurrects them all together, then informs them of that which they did. God has kept account of it while they have forgotten it (see also 10:21; 34:3; 36:12; 43:80; 45:29; 78:29; 99:6–8).

36 One who sees is understood by some as a reference to the disbelievers and by others as a reference to all human beings (Q, R). Others argue that it could not refer to the disbelievers, because the realities of the Hereafter can only be seen by those who have eyes, and the eyes of the disbelievers are covered (see 2:7; R).

37–39 Al-Rāzī interprets one who rebels to indicate corruption of the intellect, for all who know God know their own insignificance and would thus not incline to rebellion and arrogance. Prefers the life of this world is then taken to indicate corruption in actions in accordance with the ḥadīth "The love of the world is the source of all error" (R). The two together are thus taken to indicate the greatest degree of corruption, the punishment for which is eternal. So Hellfire is the refuge for those who reach this level of corruption. Those who do not may still be punished, but Hellfire will not be their ultimate refuge (R). Many verses condemn those who prefer the life of this world over the life of the Hereafter, for the life of this world is naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20), while the Hereafter is better and more enduring (87:17; cf., e.g., 6:32; 9:38; 14:3).

40–41 Cf. 55:46: And for one who fears standing before his Lord, there are two Gardens.

refuge. (42) They ask thee about the Hour, "When shall it set in?" (43) What hast thou to do with mentioning it? (44) Unto thy Lord is [knowledge of] the end thereof. (45) Thou art but a warner for whosoever fears it. (46) The Day they see it, it will be as if they had tarried but an evening or the morning thereof.

Maqāma rabbihi, translated standing before his Lord here and in 55:46, could also be translated, "the station of his Lord." It indicates being aware of standing before God on the Day of Judgment and answering for all of one's deeds. Al-Rāzī sees this fear of standing before his Lord as the exact opposite of one who rebelled in v. 37, for just as rebellion implies ignorance, fear implies knowledge, as in 35:28: Only those among His servants who know fear God. In the same way, one who forbids the soul from caprice is the opposite of one who prefers the life of this world, for just as rebellion is seen as connected to love of the world, the fear of God is seen as leading the soul to perform acts of obedience and good deeds. From a Quranic perspective, it is caprice that leads astray; one follows either God and His Messenger or caprice. For a discussion of the significance of caprice, see 45:23c.

42 This verse is said to refer to the idolaters of Makkah, who did not ask in order to be informed, but only to mock (Āl, Q). When shall it set in? (cf. 7:187) derives from a nautical metaphor meaning, "When shall it berth?" Some take the use of this metaphor to imply that it is near at hand (Q).

43 This verse can be understood either as God's telling the Prophet that he is not to speak of that of which he does not know, or as a reference to those who contended that the Prophet had no business mentioning the Hour, its signs, the Resurrection, and other things, if he did not know when they were to transpire. The former interpretation is supported by a report from ᶜĀ'ishah that the Prophet wanted to ask God about the moment when the Hour would come, and God said to him that he was asking for knowledge of something he had no right to know.

44 Only God knows about the Hour, as in 7:187: They question thee about the Hour, when it will set in. Say, "Knowledge thereof lies only with my Lord. None save He shall manifest it at its proper time. Heavy shall it weigh upon the heavens and the earth. It shall not come upon you but suddenly." They question thee as if thou knew it well. Say, "Knowledge thereof lies only with God, but most of mankind know not" (cf. 30:34). Thus when the Prophet was asked about the Hour by the Archangel Gabriel, he responded, "Regarding that the one questioned knows no more than the questioner" (IK).

45 Cf. 36:11. The Prophet has no knowledge of the Hour and other aspects of the Unseen (see 38:69–70c), for he is only sent to warn (13:7; 22:49; 27:92; 29:50; 34:46; 35:23; 38:70; 46:9; 67:26). That prophets warn and bring glad tidings is reiterated throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 18:56), yet human beings often expect them to function as soothsayers or fortune-tellers. Thus in 46:9 the Prophet is instructed: Say, "I am no innovation among the messengers, and I know not what will be done with me or with you. I only follow that which has been revealed unto me, and I am naught but a clear warner."

46 Cf. 10:45; 17:52; 20:103–4; 23:112–14; 30:55; 46:35. Most commentators say that this verse means that the time in the grave will seem short before the Day of Judgment, when all souls are gathered before God upon being resurrected. Others say the implication is that life on earth will seem as if it were only an hour in comparison to the experience of the Hereafter (IK, Q); see also 46:35 and the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran." In this instance, morning (ḍuḥā) is said to refer to the time period of the worldly life in the eyes of the people when they see the Hereafter (IK). For the broader meaning of ḍuḥā, see the introduction to Sūrah 93.

He Frowned

ᶜ*Abasa* is an early Makkan sūrah that takes its name from the first sūrah's word. It is also known as al-Ṣākhkhah, "The Piercing Cry," in reference to v. 33, or as al-Safarah, "The Scribes," in reference to v. 15 (Āl). Some maintain that it is related to the previous sūrah by the manner in which the first ten verses reinforce the message of 79:45, Thou art but a warner for whosoever fears it (Āl), counseling the Prophet not to spend his time seeking to guide those who are indifferent, when there are those waiting who wish to be guided. These first ten verses refer to a famous incident in the early history of Islam. ᶜĀʾishah, the wife of the Prophet, reported that this sūrah was revealed about ᶜAbd Allāh ibn Umm Maktūm, a blind man, who went to the Prophet and kept saying, "O Messenger of God, guide me," while the Prophet was speaking to the leaders of the idolaters. The Prophet frowned and kept avoiding him, turning to the others (IK, Q). The verses are then said to have been revealed as a rebuke to the Prophet for preaching to those who had no interest in God's message, while turning away from one who sought guidance.

ᶜAbd Allāh ibn Umm Maktūm was among the first to embrace Islam. He is known for his devotion to the Prophet and the Quran. After the revelation of this sūrah, it is said that the Prophet would greet him by saying, "Welcome to him on whose account my Lord rebuked me" (Q). Ibn Umm Maktūm was one of the first two people to migrate to Madinah, where he taught the Quran to many people. Along with Bilāl ibn Rabāḥ al-Ḥabashī (d. ca. 20/642), Ibn Umm Maktūm would give the call to prayer (adhān) in Madinah. In later years, the Prophet would at times leave Madinah in his care when he left the city. It is also said that 4:95 was revealed regarding the particular case of Ibn Umm Maktūm, who was excused from going on military expeditions on account of his blindness. Nonetheless, he was not content with staying behind when an expedition was in progress and determined that no campaign should pass him by. He requested a role on the battlefield, saying, "Place me between two rows and give me the standard. I will carry it for you and protect it, for I am blind and cannot run away." After the Battle of Qādisiyyah in 14/636, he was found dead on the battlefield still clutching the standard of the Muslims (Q).

After the verses addressing the case of Ibn Umm Maktūm (vv. 1–10), the sūrah alludes to a book written by the angels (vv. 11–16). It then transitions into a discussion of humanity's ingratitude (vv. 17–22), followed by enjoinders to recall the bounties provided by God (vv. 23–32) and concluding with a reminder of the disparate ends of believers and disbelievers on the Day of Judgment (vv. 33–42).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) He frowned and turned away, (2) because the blind man came to him. (3) And what would apprise thee? Perhaps he would purify himself, (4) or be reminded, such that the reminder might benefit him. (5) As for him who deems himself beyond need, (6) to him dost thou attend, (7) though thou art not answerable, should he not be purified. (8) But as for him who came to thee striving earnestly (9) while fearful, (10) from him thou art diverted. (11) Nay! Truly it is a reminder— (12) so let whosoever will, remember it—

1–10 For the occasion of revelation, see the introduction to the sūrah. The Prophet is here admonished for turning away from one who sought guidance to others whom he hoped to attract to Islam, since he was not responsible for making people accept religion, only for conveying God's message and guiding those who accepted it, as in 28:56: Surely thou dost not guide whomsoever thou lovest, but God guides whomsoever He will. And He knows best those who are rightly guided. Other verses tell the Prophet to be patient and to not turn away from those who seek religion, such as 6:52: And drive not away those who call upon their Lord morning and evening, desiring His Face; and 18:28: Make thy soul patient with those who call upon their Lord morning and evening, desiring His Face. Turn not thine eyes away from them, desiring the adornment of the life of this world, nor obeying one whose heart We have made heedless of the remembrance of Us and who follows his caprice and whose affair exceeds the bounds.

Beyond need (v. 5) translates man istaghnā, which literally means "is self-sufficient" and connotes a view of oneself as "self-sufficient" vis-à-vis God. The fear mentioned in v. 9 is fear of God and the Day of Judgment.

11 Cf. 74:54. It can be taken as a reference to the Quran, this particular sūrah, or the exhortation to treat people equitably (IK, Ṭ). The verse also indicates that it is only incumbent upon the Prophet to convey God's message and remind others, not to sway those who oppose the message (see 88:21–24). For the Quran as Reminder, see 36:69c.

12 This verse could also be translated, "So let whomsoever He wills remember it," meaning that only those whom God wills will be receptive to the revelation and thus remember (Q), for as 11:114 says of the Quran, This is a reminder for those who remember. In either reading, remember it could also be rendered "remember Him," meaning "remember God" (IK). This latter reading may

(13) on pages honored, (14) exalted and purified, (15) in the hands of scribes, (16) noble and pious. (17) May man perish! How ungrateful is he! (18) From what thing did He create him? (19) From a drop He created him, then proportioned him, (20) then He made the way easy for him. (21) Then He caused him to die and buried him. (22) Then, when He willed, He resurrected him. (23) Nay! But be more accurate, as the pronoun taken as a reference to the Quran or the sūrah in v. 11 is feminine, while the pronoun rendered "it" or "Him" in v. 12 is masculine.

13 According to some, pages refers only to the Quran. According to others, it refers to the books of all the prophets (Q) or to the Preserved Tablet (85:22; Ṭ), which is said to be the source of all revelation. Pages translates ṣuḥuf in accordance with the first interpretation. Ṣuḥuf is also rendered scriptures in 53:36 and 87:18–19, where it refers to the revelations given to Abraham and Moses. They are honored or "ennobled" because of what they contain.

14 Exalted means "elevated" in the Eyes of God (Aj) and beyond all obscurity and contradiction (Q). Purified means free from any additions or deficiencies (IK) and protected from being assailed by disbelievers (Q), such that None touch it, save those made pure (56:79).

15–16 Scribes translates safarah, which can be understood as a reference to the attendant angels who "inscribe" (safara) the deeds of God's servants in books (asfār; see 43:80; 50:17–18; 82:10–12), or as a reference to the angels whom God has appointed as "mediators" (sufarā') between Himself and His messengers (Q, Ṭ). A famous ḥadīth states, "One who recites the Quran proficiently and has memorized it is with the scribes, noble and pious" (IK). Some argue that here scribes should be "mediators" to indicate the function of mediating God's message that human beings can fulfill for other human beings (Q). Safara can also mean "to unveil"; thus some take it as an allusion to the Quran's making matters clear (Q). Others say that the hands of scribes refers to the reciters of the Quran (Ṭ).

17 May man perish translates qutila al-insān, which could also be rendered, "May man be cursed" (IK, Q). Here the phrase is said to refer to those who deny the truth without any supporting argument, but only because they lack knowledge of it and think it is far-fetched (IK). Ungrateful translates afkara, which indicates both ingratitude toward and disbelief in God (for the broader meaning of kufr, or "disbelief," see 2:85–86c). Thus this verse could also be read, "Man is accursed for what he disbelieves," or "Mankind is accursed; for what does he disbelieve?" (Q). According to some, this verse relates to a specific individual who had accepted Islam, but apostatized when Sūrah 53 was revealed; so God revealed this verse, meaning that he was accursed for disbelieving in the Quran after first believing (Q).

18–19 This is one of several passages in which the creation of the human being from a drop is cited as evidence of God's Omnipotence, as in 18:37: Do you disbelieve in the One Who created you from dust, then from a drop, then fashioned you as a man? See also 16:4; 40:67; 86:6–8.

20 From one perspective, this verse refers to the ease with which a baby comes forth from the mother's womb (IK, Q); from another, it refers to God's providing all people with guidance, as in 76:3: Truly We guided him upon the way, be he grateful or ungrateful (IK). Some interpret it as an indication that God has made it easy for everything to perform the function for which it was created, as in a famous ḥadīth, "Work, for that for which each person was created has been made easy for him" (Q).

21–22 These verses are related to several passages that speak of all the phases of human existence to rebuke those who do not believe in God; e.g., 2:28: How can you disbelieve in God, seeing that you were dead and He gave you life; then He causes you to die; then He gives you life; then unto Him shall you be returned? . . .

23 Nay! is a rebuke to the disbelievers, who, when informed of the Resurrection, will say, . . . "If I am returned unto my Lord, surely with Him shall I have that which is most beautiful" (41:50;

he has not yet accomplished what He commanded him. (24) So let man consider his food, (25) that We pour down water in abundance; (26) then We split the earth in fissures, (27) and cause grains to grow therein, (28) and vines and herbs, (29) and olives and date palms, (30) and gardens densely planted, (31) and fruit and pastures, (32) as sustenance for you and for your flocks. (33) So when the Piercing Cry does come, (34) that Day when a man will flee from his brother, (35) and his mother and his father, (36) and his spouse and his children. (37) For every man that Day his affair shall suffice him. (38) Faces that Day shall be shining, radiant, (39) laughing, joyous. (40) And faces that Day shall be covered with dust, (41) overspread with darkness. (42) Those, they are the disbelievers, the profligates.

Q); or it is a rebuke to those who believe that they have accomplished what they were commanded, but, as they disbelieve in God and His Messenger, have not done so (Q). The emphatic particle kallā (nay) can also be read in the affirmative, in which case the verse would begin, "Truly, he has not..." (Q), and would not convey the same sense of rebuke.

24 Consider his food is taken by some to indicate another of the many signs upon which human beings should reflect in order to appreciate fully God's Power and Mercy (Q). Others say that it relates to reflecting upon the consumption and elimination of food, for that is an example of what becomes of the world (Q).

25 Water is mentioned as a symbol of God's Mercy in several verses and can also be taken as an allusion to all living things, for God made every living thing from water (21:30; see also 24:45; 25:54).

26 Vegetation comes through the fissures, splitting the earth. For other verses describing the manner in which God brings forth vegetation and revives the earth with water, see, e.g., 6:99; 29:63; 30:24; 31:10; 35:27; 39:21; 41:39.

27–32 These verses reflect the continuous Quranic emphasis on the benefits that God has provided through the natural world and the fact that reflecting upon them leads to a deeper understanding of God's wisdom, since God created the heavens and the earth in truth (14:19; see also 6:73), and whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorifies God (59:1; 61:1; 62:1; 64:1; cf. 57:1; 59:24); for the importance of the natural environment and the connection between creation and revelation, see 3:191c; 45:3c. As sustenance for you and for your flocks also appears in 79:33.

33 The Piercing Cry refers to the second blast from the trumpet of the Archangel Seraphiel, at which all human beings will be resurrected (Q; see 39:68c). It is said that it will almost deafen those who hear it (Bg, IK). Others say that al-ṣākhkhah, translated the Piercing Cry, is a proper name for the Day of Judgment (IK).

34–37 The terror of the Day of Judgment will be so severe that people will not be concerned with anything other than themselves. In 70:11–14 it is said that a man would go so far as to ransom himself from the punishment of that Day at the price of his children, his spouse and his brother, his kin who had sheltered him, and all who are on the earth, that it might save him. In a famous ḥadīth, the Prophet said, "People will be gathered barefoot, naked, and uncircumcised." To which a woman responded, "Will we look upon each other's nakedness?" He responded, "For every man that Day his affair shall suffice him" (IK, Q).

38–39 Cf. 75:22. These verses describe the hearts of believers, for "the face is the mirror of the heart" (Ṭb), which are then contrasted with the hearts of disbelievers in vv. 40–41. The faces of believers are shining, radiant from the joy they experience in their hearts and the glad tidings manifest on their faces (IK), because of the ablutions they performed in this life (Q, R), their performance of night vigil (Q, R), or their relief from the burdens and attachments of this world (R). The believers are joyous when they receive their reward from God (Q). Related to the event that is said to have occasioned the revelation of this sūrah (see the introduction to the sūrah), these verses can be seen as a reference to the state of Ibn Umm Maktūm, while vv. 40–42 refer to the state of him who deems himself beyond need (v. 5).

40–42 Covered with dust indicates complete and utter humiliation. According to some, the disbelievers, the profligates indicates the same group; disbelief defines their thoughts, and profligacy their actions (Āl, Ṭb); the punishment for disbelief is faces covered with dust, and the punishment for profligacy is being overspread with darkness (Āl); cf. 75:24.

The Enfolding

al-Takwīr

An early Makkan sūrah, al-Takwīr is most likely the seventh in the chronological order of revelation. It takes its name from the first verse, which refers to the enfolding of the sun as one of the signs of the Hour, and is also known by the title "When the Sun Is Enfolded" (Āl). Ibn ʿAjībah suggests that this sūrah is related to the previous one because it begins by describing the events that are related to the Last Day, the subject with which the previous sūrah ends. The sūrah can be viewed as having two sections, the first of which tells of the signs of the Hour and the Resurrection (vv. 1–14). These apocalyptic events are described in a manner that suggests an inversion of the apparent order of the created world. In this vein, a ḥadīth states, "Whosoever wishes to look at the Day of Judgment as if he is seeing it with his own eyes, let him read, When the sun is enfolded, and when the stars fade away; when the mountains are set in motion, and when pregnant camels are abandoned" (IK). The second section of the sūrah is a more elusive passage that discusses the revelation of the Quran through the Archangel Gabriel and its effect upon the human soul (vv. 15–29).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① When the sun is enfolded, ② and when the stars fade away; ③ when the mountains are set in motion, ④ and when pregnant camels are abandoned; ⑤ when the wild beasts are gathered, ⑥ and when the seas are made to swell over; ⑦ when the souls are coupled, ⑧ and when the female infant buried

1 Enfolded translates kuwwirat, which may be interpreted in various ways: it may mean that the sun is absorbed into the Divine Throne (Q), that the light of the sun is wiped out (IK, Q), or that one part of it will be folded into another and then it will be rolled up and thrown away (IK). In this vein a ḥadīth says, "The sun and the moon will be rolled up (kuwwirat) on the Day of Resurrection" (IK).

2 Cf. 77:8. Fade away translates inkadarat, which could also mean to spill out, as a container spills out when it is broken (IK, Q), or to fall upon the ground (Q).

3 Cf. 78:20. Elsewhere it is said that mountains are scattered (77:10), for the Day of Judgment is a day when the mountains are as carded wool (70:9; 101:5) or like heaps of shifting sand (73:14); see also 18:47; 19:90; 20:105–6; 27:88; 52:10; 56:5–6; 69:14.

4 Pregnant camels translates ʿishār, which is said to indicate the best type of camel when it has reached the tenth month of pregnancy (IK). Camels were central to Arabian livelihood, and a pregnant camel was doubly valuable. Abandoning a pregnant camel would thus have been a salient metaphor for the Arabs of the time, indicating that on the Day of Judgment people will be so preoccupied with their immediate state that they will have no concern for wealth, even their most precious property, or for the things of this world in general.

5 This verse is seen by most commentators as a reference to the gathering together of all created animals, other than jinn and human beings, after resurrection, even flies (IK, Q). It is said by many that God resurrects all of the animals and allows each of them to claim justice, so that those who had been wronged may retaliate against the offenders; then they all become dust (JJ, Q). For the resurrection of animals, see 6:38c. This verse could also be seen as another example of an apocalyptic inversion of the created order, since wild beasts (wuḥush) cannot be gathered in this world, but are gathered in the Hereafter.

6 Cf. 52:6. That the seas are made to swell over implies another apocalyptic inversion, in which the seas break the barrier which they transgress not (55:20), so that the sweet water mixes with the salty, becoming one (Q, R, Ṭ), and so that they burst forth (82:3), covering the earth or parts of it when the earth quakes. For the significance of the two seas, one sweet, satisfying, the other salty, bitter (25:53), see 25:53c; 35:12c; 55:19–20c. Made to swell over translates sujjirat, which could also mean "to be set on fire" and is treated in this way by several early commentators (IK, Q, Ṭ).

7 Some say that this verse means when the souls and bodies are joined together on the Day of Judgment (Q). Others maintain that it indicates that the souls of believers are coupled with wide-eyed maidens, as in 44:54 and 52:20, And We shall wed them to wide-eyed maidens (coupled and wed translate the same verb, zawwaja), while the souls of disbelievers and hypocrites are joined to satans, as in 43:36, We assign to him a satan who is then a companion unto him. Others maintain that it indicates souls being joined with like souls, as this is the Day of Division (e.g., 37:21), on which God sorts the righteous from the evil and believers from disbelievers (Q), and they are no longer mixed together as they are in this world. The last interpretation seems to be the most consistent, as a famous ḥadīth says of this verse, "Every man will be joined to every person alive is asked ⑨ for what sin she was slain; ⑩ when the pages are spread, ⑪ and when Heaven is laid bare; ⑫ when Hellfire is kindled, ⑬ and when the Garden is brought nigh, ⑭ each soul shall know what it has made ready. ⑮ So I swear by those receding, ⑯ those that move and set, ⑰ by the night as it approaches, ⑱ and by the morning as it breathes! ⑲ Truly it is the speech of who did as he did" (Āl, IK, Q). In making this connection several commentaries refer to Sūrah 56, which speaks of the division of human beings into three categories: the companions of the left, the companions of the right, and the foremost; see commentary on 56:7–10.

8–9 These verses allude to the pre-Islamic Arabian practice of burying newly born females alive. Although the verses specifically reproach those who engaged in this practice, they can also be read as indicating that all who have been wronged in this world will have the opportunity to demand justice of their oppressors and be vindicated in this life or the next.

10 When the pages are spread refers to the opening of the book in which people's deeds are recorded. Upon witnessing this life review, they will say, "What a book this is! It leaves out nothing, small or great, save that it has taken account thereof." And they find present [therein] whatsoever they did (18:49), since on the Day of Judgment no deed can be hidden. For the book in which deeds are recorded, see 17:71c; 18:49c; 50:17–18; 69:19–29; 82:11–12.

11 Laid bare translates kushiṭat, which could also mean "scraped off"; others interpret it to mean "rolled up," similar to 21:104: That Day We shall roll up the sky like the rolling of scrolls for writings (Q).

12 Hellfire will be kindled by the Anger of God and the sins of human beings (Q, R).

13 Those to whom the Garden is brought nigh are the believers who reverence God, as in 26:90: And the Garden will be brought nigh unto the reverent.

14 Every soul will know the good and evil it has done, for the pages of its book will be spread open (v. 10), and people will no longer be able to hide their sins with lies and obfuscations, since their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do (41:20), and they will say, "We bear witness against ourselves" (6:130). A well-known ḥadīth says, "There is none among you, but that God will inform him of that which is between him and his two translators [i.e., the two angels who record his deeds; see 50:17–18c]" (Q).

15–16 For the implications of I swear (lā uqsimu) here, see 75:1–2c. Those receding, those that move and set is taken by most as a reference to the planets; some say all planets; others say Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, and Mercury, which (along with the sun and the moon) are visible to the naked eye and thus appear to recede during the day and reappear at night (IK, Q, R). It could also be seen as a reference to the planets having both forward and retrograde motion.

17 Approaches translates ʿasʿasa, which is among a class of Arabic words that can mean either one thing or its very opposite. ʿAsʿasa thus means both "to approach" and "to leave" (Āl, IK, R) and can refer to either the beginning or the end of the night (Āl, IK, Q, R, Ṭ), the latter being similar in meaning to 74:33. It could also be seen as a reference to both the end and the beginning (Āl).

18 The image of the morning as it breathes alludes to both the manner in which the morning appears to awaken from the night and the way its light expands and spreads like exhaled breath until it becomes day (Āl). If v. 17 is taken as the approach of night, this verse is interpreted to mean "by the morning as it rises" (IK), alluding to the beginning of the morning. When v. 17 is taken as the receding of the night, this verse is understood to indicate either the rising of the morning or the gradual illumination of the day.

19 This verse is the response to the oath by which God swears in vv. 15–18. It is a reference to a noble messenger, (20) possessed of strength, before the Possessor of the Throne, of high rank, (21) obeyed, trustworthy withal. (22) Your companion is not possessed. (23) He surely saw him upon the clear horizon. (24) And he does not withhold grudgingly the Unseen. (25) Nor is it the speech of a satan outcast. (26) So where are you going? (27) It is naught but a reminder for the worlds, (28) for those of you who will to go straight. (29) And you do not will but that God, Lord of the worlds, wills.

the Quran. A noble messenger is taken by most as a reference to the Archangel Gabriel, though some take it as a reference to the Prophet (Q). The verse is repeated in 69:40.

20 If v. 19 is seen as a reference to the Archangel Gabriel, possessed of strength would be similar to one of awesome power, which describes Gabriel in 53:5 (Z). Gabriel's strength can be taken to mean his ability to withstand all forces from this earth, as he is said to have overcome the armies from the cities of Lot, or his steadfastness in being completely obedient to God from the beginning of creation until the end of time (Āl, Q). If v. 19 is understood as a reference to the Prophet, possessed of strength is taken to mean his ability to deliver God's message (Q). For Possessor of the Throne, see 17:42; 40:15; 85:15. God is also described as Lord of the Throne (9:129; 21:22; 23:86; 23:116; 27:26; 43:82), which is borne by angels (40:7; 69:17).

21 When vv. 19–20 are taken as a reference to Gabriel, obeyed refers to his position among other angels. When taken as a reference to the Prophet, it refers to the injunction for those who obey God to obey His Messenger (see 3:32; 4:59; 5:92; 24:54–56; 47:33; 64:12). Trustworthy translates amīn, which could also be rendered "faithful" or "secure," and is understood to mean that the Prophet is faithful to the revelation and message with which he has been entrusted, delivering it as instructed by God. Al-Amīn, "the Trustworthy," was one of the names by which the Prophet was known even before the advent of the revelation.

22–23 According to some, the Prophet had sought a vision of the Archangel Gabriel in his true form, and when he saw him upon the horizon with six hundred wings, he fell down prostrate, covering himself. So the idolaters of Makkah said that he was possessed by a jinn (majnūn) or that he was mad, and vv. 20–23 were revealed in response (Q). The clear horizon is understood by some as a specific reference to the east as the place where the sun rises (Q, R), or as a reference to 53:7, which says that Gabriel was upon the highest horizon during the Night Journey and Ascension (see 17:1c; introduction to Sūrah 53). The verse could also be rendered, "The one who makes clear saw him upon the horizon," a reading preferred by several scholars when v. 24 is read as describing the Prophet (Q).

24 Most take he in this verse as a reference to the Prophet; others as a reference to the Archangel Gabriel. In both cases it means that he teaches the Quran and the rulings (aḥkām) of God that he has been instructed to teach, withholding nothing. Many prefer an alternate reading, in which the word translated withhold grudgingly, ḍanīn, is read as ẓanīn, meaning "suspect, unreliable, or untrustworthy" (Āl, Q, R), meaning, "he is not unreliable with regard to the Unseen."

25 This verse is a response to those who are reported to have said that the Quran was inspired by Satan and that the Prophet was a sorcerer (R), an accusation made against other prophets as well (see 38:4–5; 51:52).

26 This verse asks essentially, "Where will you, who do not follow God and His Messenger, turn, for none guides but God?"

27–29 Cf. 76:29–31. As translated, v. 27 refers to the Quran. It could also be rendered as a reference to the Prophet Muhammad: "He is naught but a reminder," as in 88:21: Thou art but a reminder. But it most likely refers to the Quran, as the Quran and previous revelations are referred to as reminders in many verses (e.g., 6:90; 15:9; 16:44). That it is a reminder for the worlds is taken to indicate that it is a universal revelation for any people who desire guidance (Ṭb).

For whosoever wishes to go straight, the Quran and the Prophet will serve as a reminder, but for those who do not, He misleads many by it (i.e., the Quran; 2:26). These verses are taken to indicate that the act of traveling the straight path is dependent upon one's will and desire to do so (R). Yet none will to follow the straight path unless God wills that they will it, for the manifestation of desire within human beings is determined by God's Desire (Ṭb). From this perspective, one's will and desire to follow the path is a manifestation of God's Will and Desire within; for more on the relation between human choice and Divine determinism, see 54:49c.

The Cleaving Asunder

al-Infiṭār

Al-Infiṭār is an early Makkan sūrah most likely revealed after Sūrah 79, al-Nāziʿāt. It takes its name from the verb in the first verse, one of the many dramatic descriptions of the cataclysmic alterations that will afflict the sky on the Day of Judgment. Like other *sūrah*s from this period, the beginning verses focus upon the events that will mark the Day of Judgment (vv. 1–5), which, as in the previous sūrah, are a series of apocalyptic inversions in which the normal order both in Heaven and on earth is turned inside out. This is followed by a reproach and warning of the Last Day (vv. 6–12). The final section (vv. 13–19) contrasts the bliss of the pious with the punishment of the profligate, indicating that in the end all shall know how they have in fact lived.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) When the sky is cleft asunder, (2) and when the stars are dispersed, (3) when the seas are burst forth, (4) and when graves are turned inside out, (5) then shall each soul know what it has sent forth and what it has left behind. (6) O mankind! What has deluded you with regard to your noble Lord, (7) Who created you, then fashioned you, then proportioned you, (8) assembling you in whatever form He willed? (9) Nay! But you deny religion. (10) And yet truly over you

1–2 The "cleaving" or splitting of the sky (see also 25:25; 55:37; 84:1), when it is opened as if it were gates (78:19) is considered one of the marks of the Day of Judgment (cf. 73:18). When the sky is cleaved, the stars will be blotted out (77:8) and fade away (81:2).

3–4 These verses move from signs of the Hour in the celestial realm to those on the earth. The seas . . . burst forth, breaking the barrier which they transgress not (55:20), mixing with one another and becoming one (Q, R, Ṭ), and swell over (81:6; cf. 52:6), covering the earth or parts of it when the earth quakes. For the significance of the two seas, one sweet, satisfying, the other salty, bitter (25:53), see 25:53c; 35:12c; 55:19–20c. The seas swell because of a great earthquake that also causes the earth to overturn and cast out all human beings and jinn (see 99:1–2), at which point they emerge from the graves as if they were scattered locusts (54:7).

5 Cf. 75:13. According to some, what it has sent forth indicates the good deeds done in obedience to God and observance of His Commands, and what it has left behind indicates those deeds that, although commanded, were left undone (Ṭ). Others say this verse indicates all the good and evil that individuals have sent forth, or done, in accord with which they will be judged, and all the good and evil that was left behind, that they could have done during this life, but did not (Ṭ). Al-Ṭabarī, however, maintains that a deed is not something that can be left behind unless it has actually been performed, so that what it has left behind indicates "a good or evil practice that one has established such that if another performs it he [the one who established it] has the same reward as the one who performed it or the same burden" (Ṭ).

6 Two things are said to delude human beings, the life of this world and Satan, the Deluder; see 31:33 and 35:5: So let not the life of this world delude you; nor let the Deluder delude you concerning God.

7 Fashioned you refers to the manner in which God has made all human parts and faculties sound and functional (R). Proportioned you translates ʿaddalaka, which could also be read ʿadalaka, meaning "turned you," implying that God turns people in any direction He wills. Both readings are viable, though the former is grammatically more appropriate when v. 8 is read as a continuation of v. 7 (R, Ṭ).

8 Some take this verse to indicate the manner in which God chooses a particular human form for each individual (Q, R, Ṭ). Others take this to mean that God can assemble human beings in the form of other animals (Q, R, Ṭ), presumably as punishment, as implied in 2:65: Be you apes, outcast. Vv. 7–8 can also be taken to imply the inner qualities rather than the outer form, thus referring to states of faith or disobedience (Qu, R) or states of felicity (saʿādah) or wretchedness (shaqāwah), which are commonly understood as referring to states of damnation and salvation, respectively, as in 11:105: On the Day it comes, no soul shall speak, save by His Leave. Among them shall be the wretched and the felicitous.

9 Religion, translating dīn, could also be rendered "judgment," as in vv. 15, 17, and 18; for the broader meaning of dīn, see the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions."

10 Cf. 86:4. Guardians refers to angels who preserve the record of all the deeds of human beings; see 43:80c; 50:17–18c. In accordance with there are guardians, (11) noble, writing, (12) knowing what you do. (13) Truly the pious shall be in bliss; (14) and truly the profligate shall be in Hellfire, (15) burning therein on the Day of Judgment. (16) And they will not be absent from it. (17) And what will apprise thee of the Day of Judgment? (18) Then what will apprise thee of the Day of Judgment? (19) A day when no soul will avail another soul in any way, and the Command that Day is God's.

50:17, most maintain that each individual has two angels solely responsible for recording the deeds that he or she performs in this life.

11–12 The record the angels write is said to be the book of deeds that is given to each individual on the Day of Judgment; see 18:49c.

13 See commentary on the identical verse, 83:22. Regarding the meaning of the pious (al-abrār) and piety (birr), see 2:44c; 76:5–6c.

14–15 Profligate translates fujjār (sing. fājir), which could also be rendered "libertine." It derives from the verb fajara, meaning, "to break open," and implying that those who do evil break open what should be left closed.

16 Whereas previously the profligate had been oblivious, now they will see the reality of how they have lived (see 50:22), and they will not be able to escape its consequences.

17–18 These verses can be taken as an address directly to the Prophet, to all human beings, or to the disbelievers. Some propose that v. 17 is addressed to the pious and v. 18 to the profligate (R).

19 The Day of Judgment is the Day when no friend will avail a friend in any way (44:41), and a day on which no parent will avail his child aught and no child will avail his parent aught (31:33), meaning that no individual will have recourse to anything beyond the record of his own actions and intentions, or the state of his own soul; see also 2:48, 123. And the Command that Day is God's indicates that all intermediaries are then stripped of their power, and God alone is the direct actor. It also points to the fact that all things perish, save His Face (28:88), as God abides, while all else fades.

In another variant, this verse can be read as a continuation of the previous verse, in which case the question ends after the word "way."

Those Who Defraud

al-Muṭaffifīn

Al-Muṭaffifīn is a late Makkan or early Madinan sūrah, or a combination of the two. The first four verses were reportedly revealed just after the Prophet's arrival in Madinah (Bg, IK, Ṭ); vv. 5–28 are then considered to have been revealed in Madinah; and the last eight verses were most likely the last verses of the Quran to be revealed in Makkah. Others maintain that all of the verses except the first four were revealed in Makkah.

The sūrah takes its name from the reference to the defrauders in v. 1. Defrauders renders al-muṭaffifīn, which is based upon the word ṭafīf, deriving from ṭaff, meaning "the very edge" of something. Something that is slight or insufficient is called ṭafīf; the term also indicates a measure that is not completely full, not up to the edge. Muṭaffifīn thus implies those who "skim" a tiny bit off the top and in this way shortchange others. More broadly, it indicates those who ask that their own rights be observed, but are not willing to recognize the rights of others, or those who see faults in others, but do not see them in themselves (Qu, R). Beginning with a condemnation of those who shortchange others (vv. 1–6), the sūrah then provides a contrast between the fate of the profligate (vv. 7–17) and the rewards of the pious (vv. 18–28) and concludes with a discussion of the fate of the sinners who mocked the Prophet and his followers (vv. 29–36).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Woe unto the defrauders, (2) who, when they take measure from people, demand [it] in full, (3) and when they measure for them or weigh for them, they stint. (4) Do they not think that they will be resurrected (5) unto a tremendous day— (6) a day when mankind shall stand before the Lord of the worlds? (7) Nay! Truly the book of the profligate is in Sijjīn. (8) And what will apprise thee of Sijjīn? (9) A book inscribed. (10) Woe that Day to

1–5 Ibn ʿAbbās said, "When the Prophet first moved to Madinah, its inhabitants were the worst kind of defrauders, and so God revealed, Woe unto the defrauders, who, when they take measure from people, demand [it] in full. After the revelation of this verse, they became honest in their weighing" (Q, Ṭ, W). According to Abū Hurayrah, these verses refer directly to a man who had two scales, one that he used when buying and another for selling (Q, Ṭs). It is reported that when these verses were revealed, the Prophet recited them to the citizens of Madinah and said, "Five for five." He was asked, "What is 'Five for five'?" He answered, "No people broke their covenant, but that God set their enemies over them. None judged by other than what God sent down, but that poverty spread among them. None fornicated, but that death spread among them. None defrauded, but that their crops failed and they were plagued by famine. No community refused to pay alms, but that God withheld rain from them" (Q, R). These verses can also be extended beyond their immediate context to imply that shame and suffering will befall anyone who intentionally falls short in any matter according to what has been ordained by God. With regard to prayer, it is reported that Ibn Masʿūd, a Companion of the Prophet and early Quranic commentator, said, "Prayer is a measure. Whosoever completes [its measure] God will complete [his reward] for him. And whosoever lightens (ṭaffafa) [its measure], you have heard what God has said regarding al-muṭaffifīn [the defrauders, lit. "those who lighten"]" (Ṭs).

In a non-canonical variant reading, both instances of "them" (hum) in v. 3 can be read as an affirmation of the subject rather than as a direct object; "And when they measure, or they weigh, they stint."

6 Several aḥādīth indicate the nature of standing before God. According to one, "The people will be submerged in perspiration according to their deeds, some up to their knees, some up to the waist, and some will have a bridle of perspiration," at which point the Prophet pointed toward his mouth (Q, Ṭs). Other narrations say, "People will stand in their perspiration up to the middle of their ears" (Bg, Q, R, Ṭ). Some say that this day is fifty thousand years; others that it is a thousand years; others say three hundred, one hundred, or forty (Q, R, Ṭ); see 22:47c.

7–8 Sijjīn is derived from sijn, meaning "prison" (R, Z). Some interpret Sijjīn as a reference to a place where disbelievers are held until the Day of Judgment; most say it refers to the lowest depths of Hellfire and relate the ḥadīth: "Sijjīn is the lowest of the seven earths" (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). Some relate it to the lowest of the low (95:5), unto which God is said to have cast man, and to the narrow place (25:13) into which the disbelievers are to be cast (IK). Others interpret it as a characterization of the book in which evil deeds are indelibly recorded (Q, Qu, R, Ṭs, Z).

9 Inscribed here means "sealed" (Q, R), as what is written cannot be decreased or erased (IK, Q, R). Others say it refers to the fact that good and bad deeds are written in the book (Qu). Marqūm, translated inscribed, derives from raqm, meaning the deniers, (11) who deny the Day of Judgment, (12) which none deny save every sinful transgressor. (13) When Our signs are recited unto him, he says, "Fables of those of old!" (14) Nay! But that which they used to earn has covered their hearts with rust. (15) Nay! Surely on that Day they will be veiled from their Lord. (16) Then they will burn in Hellfire. (17) Then it is said unto them, "This is that which you used to deny." (18) Nay, truly the book of the pious is in ᶜIlliyyūn. (19) And what will apprise thee of ᶜIlliyyūn? (20) A book

"large, bold writing." It may thus imply clear, unambiguous, decisive inscriptions. Some say that this verse describes Sijjīn (R), but most agree that it describes the book of the profligate, not Sijjīn itself (Q, R, Ṭs, Z).

10 This verse is a refrain found throughout Sūrah 77 and in 52:11.

13 Cf. 68:15. Fables of those of old (cf. 6:25; 8:31; 16:24; 23:83; 25:5; 27:68; 46:17; 68:15) is an expression used in the Quran by disbelievers to deny its veracity.

14 Regarding this verse, a ḥadīth states, "Verily, when the servant commits a sin, a black spot appears in his heart. If he repents from it, his heart is polished clean. But if he increases [in sin], the spot will continue to increase. That is the statement of God, Nay! But that which they used to earn has covered their hearts with rust" (IK, Q). Some commentators say that this verse refers to inveterate sinners for whom sin upon sin has sealed their hearts from realizing the truth (Q, R), like one surrounded by his sins (2:81). According to the Prophet, the heart covered with rust must be "polished." As he says in a famous ḥadīth, "For everything there is a polish, and the polish for the heart is the remembrance of God. There is nothing more potent in saving a person from the Punishment of God than the remembrance of God." It was asked, "Not even striving (jihād) in the path of God?" Then he replied, "Not even if you were to continue striking with your sword until it breaks."

15 This verse may mean that they are veiled from God's Mercy and Magnanimity (karāmah; Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z) or that they are forbidden from seeing their Lord, for in Arabic one can say that one who is barred from seeing the king is "veiled" from him (R, Z). Many relate this to the belief that after the gathering of all human beings and jinn before God (see, e.g., 3:25; 4:87; 6:38, 128; 42:7; 64:9), the believers will see God, but the disbelievers will not (R). In this vein, the famous Persian Sufi poet Jalāl al-Dīn Rūmī writes, "Everyone sees the Unseen in proportion to the clarity of his heart, and that depends upon how much he has polished it. Whoever has polished it more sees more—more Unseen forms become manifest to him"(Mathnawī, 4:2909–10).

17 Cf. 52:14.

18–19 ᶜIlliyyūn is an unusual plural whose singular form is disputed. It indicates high places, persons who sit in high places, or those who dwell in the high parts of mountains. Here it refers to something exalted by many degrees. Contrasted with Sijjīn in v. 7, it appears to refer to a place in Heaven in which good deeds are indelibly recorded. The fifth Shiite Imam, Muhammad al-Bāqir, is reported to have said, "Sijjīn is the seventh earth, and ᶜIlliyyūn is the seventh heaven." Opinions differ. ᶜIlliyyūn is either in the seventh heaven below the Divine Throne or beyond the seven heavens to the right of the Throne (Q); it indicates heights without limit (Q) or refers to the lote tree of the boundary (53:14).

20 Most agree that this verse describes the book of the righteous (Q, R, Ṭs, Z). Some, however, say that it could describe ᶜIlliyyūn itself, in which case kitāb, or "book," would mean "writing" (kitābah), indicating that the writing of the deeds of the pious is in ᶜIlliyyūn and that it is a "writing inscribed" (R).

inscribed, (21) witnessed by those brought nigh. (22) Truly the pious shall be in bliss, (23) upon couches, gazing. (24) Thou dost recognize in their faces the splendor of bliss. (25) They are given to drink of pure wine sealed, (26) whose seal is musk—so for that let the strivers strive— (27) and whose mixture is of Tasnīm, (28) a spring whence drink those brought nigh. (29) Truly those who sinned did laugh at those who believed. (30) When they passed them, they would wink at 21 Some say that those brought nigh refers to the archangels, as in 4:172, in which case it refers to the angels who bear witness to the book of the pious (Q, R, Ṭs). Others say that those brought nigh refers to the elect among the pious, who are the foremost of the foremost (56:10–11). It could also refer to the archangels and the foremost, as both are brought nigh.

22 Cf. 82:13. Elsewhere the reverent and those who believe and perform righteous deeds are described as being in Gardens of bliss (see 5:65; 10:9; 22:56; 37:43; 52:17; 56:12); see also 9:21; 26:85; 31:8; 56:89; 68:34. Regarding the meaning of the pious (al-abrār) and piety (birr), see 2:44c.

23 Cf. 75:23; 88:13. The couches represent the state of the soul at peace (89:27), content with God, while God is content with it. The pious are gazing at the delights they are given in the Garden (Q, R, Ṭs), or at God Himself (Q, R), as in 75:22–23: Faces that Day shall be radiant, gazing upon their Lord. Some commentators say they gaze upon the punishment endured by their enemies (Q, R, Ṭs; see vv. 34–35), though this interpretation is not consonant with the sayings of the Prophet or with other passages of the Quran.

24 Thou can be read in a general sense as an address to any reader or listener or as a specific reference to the Prophet Muhammad. The verse is read by some in the passive voice, "The splendor of bliss can be recognized in their faces" (Q, R).

25 Those in Paradise drink the pure wine sanctioned by God. It may be the same as the wine in 37:46–47: White, delicious to those who drink thereof. No headiness lies therein; nor are they intoxicated by it; and 56:19: Wherefrom they suffer neither headache nor stupefaction. Some say that this pure wine is superior to the rivers of wine referred to in 47:15 (R).

26 Seal refers to either an actual seal of musk upon the wine (Ṭ, Ṭs) or the scent of musk, which appears when the end of the wine is reached (Q, R, Ṭ).

27–28 Most commentators agree that Tasnīm is the purest and noblest drink of Heaven (Ṭ). Some say that it flows from the Divine Throne into Paradise. Tasnīm is understood by some as a proper name with no specific meaning (R, Ṭ). Others propose that it derives from the verb sannama, "to raise," indicating that it raises or ennobles those who drink it (R). According to Ibn ʿAbbās, Tasnīm is what is alluded to in 32:17: No soul knows what comfort is kept hidden for it as a recompense for that which they used to do (R). Some say that Tasnīm is a spring whose waters are mixed with the pure wine sealed for the companions of the right (56:8, 27, 38, 90–91; 74:39; 90:18), but from which those brought nigh drink in its purest form (Ṭ). Similarly, others say those brought nigh drink of it unmixed, while all the other inhabitants of Paradise drink of it mixed (Ṭ). According to al-Rāzī, Tasnīm "is the knowledge of God and the delight of gazing upon the Face of God." So those brought nigh drink from none but Tasnīm, for they gaze upon none but God, whereas the companions of the right sometimes gaze upon the delights of the created (though paradisal) world and sometimes upon the Face of God, and thus drink a mixture (R). Some Sufi commentators have identified Tasnīm with the highest level of spiritual love (maḥabbah).

29–30 According to some, those who sinned refers to the leaders of the Quraysh, who used to laugh at and mock several of the more impoverished Muslims (Q, R); see also 23:109–10.

31 Blithely translates fākihīn, as it is read in most schools of Quranic recitation, though the one another. (31) And when they returned to their people, they would return blithely. (32) And when they saw them, they would say, "Truly these are astray!" (33) though they were not sent as guardians over them. (34) So that Day those who believed shall laugh at the disbelievers, (35) upon couches, gazing. (36) Have the disbelievers been requited for that which they used to do?

most widespread school of recitation, Ḥafṣ, reads it as fakihīn, which translates as "conceited" or "proud."

32 The disbelievers deem the believers to be astray for following the Prophet.

33 This verse implies that the disbelievers are not fit to judge the actions of the believers (Ṭs). Some gloss guardians (ḥāfiẓīn) as "witnesses" (shāhidīn), meaning that they arrogate to themselves the ability to bear witness against the believers, but in the Hereafter it is the believers who will bear witness against them (Ṭs).

34 That Day is the Day of Resurrection.

35 In this context, the implication is that the believers are gazing upon the disbelievers and witnessing the punishment the disbelievers receive for having mocked them (Aj). It can thus be viewed as a contrast to v. 23, or alternatively as a reassertion of the same paradisal state. See 83:23c.

36 The answer to the question posed by this verse is yes and no. On the one hand, the disbelievers have been requited with punishment for the evil deeds they committed. On the other hand, they have not been requited for what only appear to be good deeds, since they are those whose deeds have come to naught in this world and in the Hereafter (3:22; see also 7:147; 18:104; 47:8–9). From a Quranic perspective, only those deeds that are accompanied by belief in God, His prophets, His revelations, and His angels can truly be called good or righteous. Thus the phrase perform righteous deeds, which occurs over fifty times in the Quran, is always accompanied by some mention of belief in God.

The Sundering

al-Inshiqāq

Chronologically al-Inshiqāq most likely follows Sūrah 82, al-Infiṭār, making it one of the last *sūrah*s to be revealed in Makkah. It takes its name from the mention of the sky being rent asunder in the first verse and is also known as Inshaqqat, "Rent Asunder" (Āl). As a thematic thread, Sūrah 82 alludes to the guardian angels who write one's deeds in a book (82:10–12), Sūrah 83, al-Muṭaffifīn, contrasts the book of the profligate (83:7) with the book of the pious (83:18), and this sūrah contrasts the reactions of those who receive their book in the right hand (v. 7), with those who receive it from behind their backs (v. 10) on the Day of Resurrection.

The sūrah begins with allusions to events that will transpire on the Day of Judgment (vv. 1–5) and then contrasts those who will have a joyful reckoning with those who will not (vv. 6–15), followed by a series of oaths (vv. 16–18) that lead into a confirmation of the great disparity between the final ends of the believers and the disbelievers (vv. 19–25).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) When the sky is rent asunder, (2) and hearkens unto its Lord, as in truth it must; (3) and when the earth is stretched out, (4) and casts forth what is in it, emptying itself, (5) and hearkens unto its Lord, as in truth it must. (6) O mankind! Truly thou art laboring unto thy Lord laboriously, and shall meet Him! (7) As for one who is given his book in his right hand, (8) he will be reckoned with an easy reckoning (9) and will return to his people joyful. (10) But as for one who is given his book from behind his back, (11) he will cry out for destruction, (12) and will enter a Blaze. (13) Truly among his people he was joyful. (14) Truly he thought that he would never return. (15) Nay! Truly his Lord was watchful

1–2 The sky . . . rent asunder refers to the destruction of the world at the end of time (cf. 55:37; 77:9; 82:1–2); the sky hearkens unto God, because it cannot but obey its creator (IK, Q).

3 When the earth is stretched out means when all that is upon it is made flat (cf. 20:105–7). According to some, this is to prepare for the Day of Judgment, when all human beings will be gathered on a single plain (see 18:47; 20:106; 79:14).

4 This verse refers to the time when all of the graves are emptied and everyone is brought to Judgment (cf. 79:13–14; 99:2). Some say it means that all that was hidden within it becomes manifest.

5 Cf. vv. 1–2.

6 According to Ibn ʿAbbās, this verse means, "Whatever deed you do, you will meet God with it, whether it is good or bad" (IK); see commentary on 99:6–8. Maybudī understands it as an injunction to be mindful, since every moment is a step closer to God.

7 For the symbolic distinction between right and left, see 56:8–9c; for the meaning of the book in which one's deeds are recorded, see 18:49c; and for the symbolism of receiving the book in the right or left hand, see 17:71c; 69:19–29c. This verse and others (e.g., 56:27–46) display the universal identification of the right hand with goodness and light and the left hand (though not mentioned explicitly) with evil and darkness, like the Latin sinister, which means "on the left" and is the origin of the English "sinister."

8 The Prophet said, "Whosoever is reckoned on the Day of Resurrection will be punished." To which ʿĀʾishah responded, "But has God not said, As for one who is given his book in his right hand, he will be reckoned with an easy reckoning?" The Prophet replied, "That is not the Reckoning; rather, that is the presentation [of deeds]. Whosoever suffers the interrogation of the Reckoning on the Day of Resurrection will be punished" (IK, Q, Z).

9 His people (ahlihi) may refer to family if they were believers, a group of similar believers, or companions in Paradise (Z). According to 13:3; 40:8; and 43:70, the pious will enjoy the company of pious family members in the Hereafter.

10–12 To reconcile v. 10 with 69:25, which states that those who are reckoned are given their book in their left hand, the commentators say that in this instance the left hand will be tied behind the back (IK, Q, Ṭs, Z).

13–14 Among his people he was joyful refers to the life of this world; it represents the heedlessness of those who did not believe that they were laboring unto their Lord and would return to Him in the Resurrection and face the Reckoning on the Day of Judgment (cf. 83:31). Regarding this contrast, a ḥadīth says, "The world is the prison of the believer and the garden of the disbeliever" (R).

15 Nay! That is, they will in fact return. God has been aware of all their actions from the of him. (16) So I swear by the twilight, (17) by the night and what it enshrouds, (18) and by the moon when full; (19) thou wilt surely journey from stage to stage. (20) So what ails them that they believe not, (21) and that when the Quran is recited unto them, they do not prostrate? (22) Nay! Those who disbelieve deny. (23) But God knows best what they conceal. (24) So give them glad tidings of a painful punishment, (25) save those who believe and perform righteous deeds; theirs shall be a reward unceasing.

moment He created them until the moment He resurrects them (Ṭs).

16 Twilight (al-shafaq) refers to the remaining redness and light of the sun after its setting at the beginning of the night until it is close to actual nighttime (IK) or the period between the setting of the sun and the last bit of light on the horizon (Q).

17 Enshrouds (tasaqa) conveys the notion of "gathering together (in one herd)" and points to the symbolic power of night, as it gathers all things together by encompassing them in darkness, just as all things will be brought back to God in the end.

18 When full (ittasaqa) derives from the same root as "enshroud" (tasaqa). In relation to v. 19, it can be seen as a reference to the manner in which all that exists waxes and wanes as it goes through various states and phases.

19 From stage to stage is understood by some to indicate the vagaries of human existence, in which we experience "ease after difficulty, difficulty after ease, wealth after poverty, poverty after wealth, health after sickness, and sickness after health" (IK, Q). Yet others say, "From stage to stage: weaned after he was breast-fed, and an old man after he was a young man" (IK). Others understand it as a reference to the many states of being from nonexistence to life to death, then to all posthumous states of being; some say it refers only to the posthumous states of being or merely to states of being on the Day of Resurrection (Q, R, Z; see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran"). It can also be seen as a reference to the exchange of states in which those who are lowly on the earth will be exalted in the Hereafter and those exalted on earth will be brought low (R). This verse is likely an address to the Prophet, as it is in the second-person singular, in which case it is seen as a reference to his moving in degrees of nearness to God (R); or as an allusion to the night of Ascension (miʿrāj; see 17:1c; My). In this vein, it is recorded that Ibn ʿAbbās said of this verse, "That concerns your Prophet."

20 As a continuation of v. 14, this verse asks, "Seeing as all things move through phases of existence whereby they return to God, how could human beings not discern the truth from these signs and not believe in the Resurrection and in God's Power over all things?" (Q, R).

21 Here the Quran is invoked as another sign of God, as if to say, "If they cannot read the signs of God in the created world, then they should at least be able to recognize the miracle of the Quran and the signs of God contained in it." According to some, prostrate (yasjudūn) refers to prayer. Others say it refers to humility. Most maintain that this is one of fifteen verses after which one prostrates when reciting the Quran; see 19:58c. Imam Mālik does not maintain that one is obligated to prostrate after reciting this verse, but other Mālikī jurists do (Q).

22 Some are inveterate; so no matter whether they see signs that appeal to intelligence or miracles such as the Quran, they will not believe.

23 What the disbelievers are concealing within their breasts and hearts is polytheism, whatever its form, and denial (R, Ṭs).

24 Although glad tidings usually indicates the good news of salvation that prophets bring, here as elsewhere (see 3:21; 4:138; 9:3, 34; 45:8), it is used with a sense of irony indicating that hypocrites and disbelievers will receive the painful punishment that they seem to desire. Alternately glad tidings could be read as a reference to the following verse, thus indicating that the door of repentance remains open.

25 Cf. 41:8; 95:6. Some say this verse should read, "but those who believe . . ." to distinguish the fate of believers from that of disbelievers (Q, Z). Others say that it should be "save those who . . ." to distinguish the disbelievers who repent from those who do not (Q, R). For the meaning of reward unceasing, see 41:8c; 95:6c.

The Constellations

al-Burūj

Al-Burūj is a Makkan sūrah said to have been revealed immediately after Sūrah 91, al-Shams. It takes its name from the mention in the first verse of the burūj, meaning "constellations" or "mansions." The Prophet is reported to have said of this sūrah, "Whosoever recites it, God will give reward for the good deeds ten times the number of all people gathered in Friday prayer and all people gathered on the Day of ʿArafah [the most important day of the ḥajj and the ninth day of the month of Dhu'l-Ḥijjah]."

The sūrah begins with a short series of oaths (vv. 1–3), followed by the story of the inhabitants of the pit, who are said to have persecuted the believers (vv. 4–10). Their destiny is then contrasted to that of the believers in v. 11, followed by a description of God's Omnipotence (vv. 12–20) and two oft recited verses that speak of the Quran as being upon a Preserved Tablet (vv. 21–22). It is reported that the Prophet would often recite this and the following sūrah as part of the two afternoon prayers.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) By the sky possessed of constellations, (2) by the Day promised, (3) and by the witness and the witnessed! (4) May they perish, the inhabitants of the pit, (5) the fire well fueled, (6) when they sat by it, (7) and were witness to what they did unto the believers, (8) and took vengeance on them for naught but that they believed in God, the Mighty, the Praised, (9) unto Whom belongs sovereignty over the

1 For constellations (burūj), see 25:61c. Here the constellations are considered to refer to the stars themselves (Q), the largest stars (R, Z), lofty towers in the sky, or to the traditional twelvefold division of the belt of the sky through which the planets, including the sun and the moon, pass (Aries, Taurus, etc.; Q, R, Ṭ, Z). Owing to a lexical relation to tabarruj ("to display one's beauty"), possessed of constellations (dhāt al-burūj) could also be read "beautiful in its creation" (Q).

2 The Day is the Day of Resurrection (Q, R, Ṭs, Z).

3 Most commentators interpret witness and witnessed as references to Friday and the Day of ʿArafah, respectively (Bg, Q, Ṭ). Some see the Prophet Muhammad as the witness, as in 2:143 and 22:78: and that the Messenger may be a witness for you (cf. 4:41; 33:45); and human beings as the witnessed (Bg, Q). Others interpret witness as a reference to the Prophet Muhammad and witnessed as a reference to the Islamic community (ummah), while others prefer the pairing of all of the Divine messengers and their respective communities, as the messengers will bear witness for or against their communities on the Day of Judgment (cf. 4:41; 5:117; Q). Another view sees witness as the Muslim community and witnessed as all other communities, as in 2:143: Thus did we make you a middle community, that you may be witnesses for mankind (cf. 22:78). Others say that witness is human beings and witnessed is God (Q). In another interpretation witness is human beings and witnessed the black stone in the Kaʿbah that pilgrims touch in bearing witness to their covenant with God (Q, Ṭs). Others take God to be the witness, as in 4:79: God suffices as a Witness; and 6:19: Say, "What thing is greatest as testimony?" Say, "God is Witness between you and me" (Q).

4–9 Many stories attempt to identify the inhabitants of the pit. Some take it as a reference to the people of Dhū Nuwās al-Yamānī, a Yemeni king who is said to have persecuted the Christians of Yemen in pre-Islamic times (IK). The most frequently cited account in the interpretation of this verse is a ḥadīth that relates the story of a king who was enraged that the people recognized God as their Lord and as a lord above him. After he killed a young boy who was foremost among them and the people refused to renounce their religion, he ordered that ditches be dug at the entrances to the roads. It was done, and fires were kindled in them. Then the king said, "Whoever abandons his religion, let him go, and whoever does not, cast him into the fire." So they set about casting people into the fire. Then a woman came with her son, and he said, "Be patient, mother, for truly you are following the truth" (Bg, IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs). Most say that the religion of those persecuted was Christianity; others say they were Magians (Ṭs); still others say it could refer to one of the messengers not mentioned in the Quran (Bg). Although these verses are believed to pertain to a particular historical incident, they present a universal condemnation of all who persecute believers of any faith.

4 Another reading is, "Slain were the inhabitants of the pit."

6 This verse refers to either the disbelievers sitting beside the fire while the believers burned in it (Bg, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs) or the believers, either those who were burning, and thus sitting "upon" it rather than "by" it, or the believers who were not burned heavens and the earth; and God is Witness over all things. (10) Truly those who persecute believing men and believing women, then do not repent, theirs shall be the punishment of Hell, and theirs shall be the punishment of the burning. (11) Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be Gardens with rivers running below: that is the supreme triumph. (12) Truly thy Lord's assault is severe. (13) Truly it is He Who originates and brings back. (14) And He is the Forgiving, the Loving, (15) Possessor of the Throne, the Glorious, (16) Doer of whatsoever He will. (17) Hast thou heard tell of the hosts— (18) Pharaoh and Thamūd? (19) Yet those who disbelieve are in denial. (20) And God is behind them, All-Encompassing. (21) Nay, it is a glorious Quran, (22) upon a Preserved Tablet.

because they renounced their religion and then sat by witnessing the others burn (R).

7 This verse can refer to either the presence of the disbelievers at the burning of the believers or their bearing witness against themselves on the Day of Judgment, as in 24:24; 36:65; 41:20.

9 For God is Witness over all things, see also 4:33; 5:117; 22:17; 33:55; 34:47; 41:53; 58:6.

10 This verse could apply only to the inhabitants of the pit or to all who persecute believers simply for their belief (R). Hell and burning may refer to two forms of punishment suffered by those who persecute believers, or to the contrast between the eternal punishment of Hell suffered by the inhabitants of the pit and the temporary punishment of burning they inflicted upon the believers (R). Some say the punishment of Hell is for their disbelieving and the punishment of burning is for persecuting others (Ṭs).

11 The supreme triumph (al-fawz al-kabīr) most likely refers to Paradise, similar to the great triumph (al-fawz al-ʿazīm), which commentators usually identify as a reference to the Garden, indicating that it is greater than any triumph one can attain in this world (Al). For the blessings of Paradise, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57.

12 Assault renders baṭsh, which indicates a sudden seizing by God, similar to 11:102: Such is the seizing of thy Lord when He seizes the towns while they are doing wrong. Surely His seizing is painful, severe (R). Some interpret this verse as the response to the oath begun in v. 1, with what lies between constituting an affirmation of the oath (Q).

13 God originates and brings back, that is, causes things to come into being and then to return to Him, thereby giving them a new life after their life on this earth.

15 For God as Possessor of the Throne, see 17:42; 40:15; 81:20. Elsewhere in the Quran God is described as Lord of the Throne (9:129; 21:22; 23:86; 23:116; 27:26; 43:82), which is borne by angels (40:7; 69:17). If Glorious is read in the nominative, it describes Possessor; if in the genitive, it describes the Throne.

16 Cf. 22:18: Truly God does whatsoever He will. One of the basic themes of the Quran is that God is Omnipotent and His Will is supreme, as in 5:17: Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them. He creates whatsoever He will, and God is Powerful over all things (cf. 24:45; 30:54).

17–18 Hosts here refers to earlier peoples who denied prophets and were vanquished. Pharaoh provides an older example from the Biblical tradition, and the Thamūd would have likely been a more resonant example for the Arabs. These examples show that the situation faced by the Muslims is the same as the one all believers face and that the Muslims, like those who were oppressed before them, will prevail (R), whether in this life or the next. For the Quranic account of Pharaoh, see 7:103–41; 20:24–79. For the account of the Thamūd, a pre-Islamic northern Arabian tribe who rejected the Prophet Ṣāliḥ, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68.

20 Although He is "unseen," God encompasses whatsoever they do (4:108; 8:47) and is able to inflict upon the hosts of the disbelievers what He inflicted upon the hosts of Pharaoh, the Thamūd, and others (Q).

21–22 According to some, glorious (majīd) indicates the utmost in nobility, magnanimity, and grace (Q). Others say that it indicates the uncreatedness of the Quran (Q). In light of 15:9, Truly it is We Who have sent down the Reminder, and surely We are its Preserver, the present verses are understood to indicate that the Quran is guarded by God from any increase, decrease, distortion, or change (IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs,).

Some say that the Book concealed (56:78) and the Preserved Tablet are the same (R). Others say that the Preserved Tablet refers to a book recited by the angels nigh unto God (Aj, Q, R), while others relate it to the Mother of the Book (3:7; 13:39; 43:4), said to be the source of all revelation, from which the Quran and all other revealed Books are derived (Q, Ṭs). Some commentators describe the Tablet (lawḥ) as one made of white pearls that is as high as the distance between Heaven and earth and as wide as the distance between the east and the west (JJ, Q, Ṭs). Others say that it is located to the right of God's Throne (Q, R, Ṭs). In keeping with the predominant theme of the sūrah, believers prevailing over persecution from disbelievers, al-Qushayrī relates the Preserved Tablet to 29:49, Nay, it is but clear signs in the breasts of those who have been given knowledge, indicating that the Quran is preserved in the hearts of true believers. For further discussion of the Preserved Tablet, see the essay "The Quran and Schools of Islamic Theology and Philosophy."

What Comes by Night

al-Ṭāriq

An early Makkan sūrah, al-Ṭāriq was most likely revealed after Sūrah 90, al-Balad. It takes its title from the mention in the first verse of al-Ṭāriq, a word that derives from the verb ṭaraqa, meaning "to pound." Al-ṭāriq is thus understood by some to indicate "the way," because the path is pounded by the feet that walk upon it. Since doors are closed at night, when people arrive at this time, they must pound on them to gain entry, thus al-Ṭāriq is also understood to mean That which comes by night, or "The Night Visitant." Al-Ṭāriq is also understood by some as a reference to the Morning Star. The sūrah begins with an oath by Heaven and the celestial bodies (vv. 1–3). It then calls upon human beings to reflect upon the soul and the humble origins of their physical nature and the fact that all are returning to God (vv. 4–10). An oath echoing that of vv. 1–3 (vv. 11–12) then leads into a final warning (vv. 13–17). It is reported that the Prophet would often recite this and the previous sūrah as part of the two afternoon prayers.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) By the sky and that which comes by night! (2) And what will apprise thee of that which comes by night? (3) It is the piercing star. (4) Over every soul there is a guardian. (5) So let man consider that from which he was created. (6) He was created from a gushing fluid, (7) issuing from between the loins and the pelvis. (8) Truly He is able to bring him back, (9) on the Day when secrets are tested, (10) whereat man has neither strength nor helper. (11) By the resurgent sky, (12) and by the furrowed earth! (13) Truly it is indeed a decisive Word.

1–2 That which comes by night refers to either a specific star or all heavenly bodies that appear at night and disappear during the day (Bq).

3 Most say the piercing star refers to the Pleiades. Others say that it is Saturn, Venus, or a meteor. A minority say that it can be any star that glitters (Āl). In each interpretation the star is called upon because it pierces the dark (Āl) and in this sense can be seen as an allusion to overcoming ignorance (Bq).

4 A guardian refers to the angels who are said to be tasked with recording the deeds of individual human beings (cf. 40:80; 50:18; 82:10–12) or to the angels who protect human beings at all times (cf. 6:61; 13:11), though the protection here may be specifically against the whispers of Satan and jinn referred to in 114:4–6.

5 Let those who deny the Resurrection reflect upon the manner in which God created them (Ṭ). This verse can also be understood as a call to recognize that for which the human being was created, as in 51:56: I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me. In this vein, Maybudī writes: "God created a face fit for prostration, eyes fit for taking heed, a body fit for service, a heart fit for knowledge (ʿirfān), and a secret core fit for love. So remember God's Blessing upon you [2:231], for He adorned your tongues with the shahādah, your hearts with knowledge (ʿirfān) and joy, and your bodies with service and worship."

6–7 Loins (ṣulb) and pelvis (tarāʾib) are understood by some to refer to the respective parts of the man and the woman, whose sperm and egg form the fetus (Ṭ); others restrict them to the male (Ṭ, Ṭs), saying that loins and pelvis refer to the area from which a man's fluid gushes.

8 As in 19:67 and 22:5, here the Quran argues that if God is able to create human beings from dust, then from a drop (35:11), then He can surely resurrect them, as in 30:27: He it is Who originates creation, then brings it back, and that is most easy for Him. Many pre-Islamic Arabs accepted that God was the Creator, but did not accept that He could resurrect the dead (see 18:37; 19:67–73; 22:5–6c; 23:13–16; 35:11; 40:67; 76:2; 80:18–22).

9 Secrets refers to all that is hidden in the heart and mind and to all of one's deeds (Z). People's mouths, feet, hands (36:65), and even their skin (41:19–24) will bear witness to what they have done. It is related that Muʿādh ibn Jabal asked the Prophet, "What are these secrets for which the servants [i.e., human beings] will be tested in the Hereafter?" To which he replied, "Your secrets are your deeds, such as prayer, fasting, the alms, the minor ablution, the major ablution, and all other obligatory acts. All deeds are hidden secrets. For if a person wills, he says, 'I have prayed,' though he has not prayed. And if he wills, he says, 'I have made my ablution,' though he has not made his ablution. And this is God's Word (qawl), on the Day when secrets are tested" (Ṭs).

10 This verse echoes others in which God is spoken of as the sole helper or protector (see, e.g., 2:107, 120; 9:74, 116; 33:18, 65; 42:31; 48:22), and none shall avail another against God's Punishment (2:48, 123; 3:10, 116; 26:88; 31:33; 44:41).

11–12 These verses refer to the cycles of the seasons and the growing of vegetation as signs

(14) And it is not for amusement. (15) Truly they are devising a scheme, (16) and I, too, am devising a scheme. (17) So be gentle with the disbelievers; grant them respite for a while.

that God can resurrect as He wills, just as vv. 6–8 cited human beings' emergence from a base fluid. In reference to heaven, "resurgent" (rajʿ) refers to the rains that return periodically. Thus most interpret the resurgent sky as a reference to rain or to the clouds that bring rain (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs). Others interpret it as a reference to the continual return of the sun, the moon, and other celestial bodies (Ṭ). The furrowed earth is where the vegetation emerges.

13 A decisive Word refers to either the Quran or the Day of Judgment, both of which separate good from evil in a decisive manner. The Prophet said of the Quran, "It is a statement that separates right from wrong" (Āl). See 37:21; 44:40; 77:13, 38; 78:17, where the Day of Judgment is referred to as the Day of Division between truth and falsehood, right and wrong, light and dark.

15–16 Here the disbelievers among the Quraysh are likened to those who schemed against previous prophets, such as Joseph, Moses, and Hūd. But as 8:18 says, God makes feeble the scheming of the disbelievers, since God is swifter in plotting (10:21). And although God's scheme is firm (7:183; 68:45), those who are guilty only plot against themselves, though they are unaware (6:123). Thus 16:127 counsels the Prophet, Grieve not on their account, nor be distressed by what they plot (see also 52:46; 77:39).

17 Grant them respite indicates that one should not seek to hasten the Hour, as do the disbelievers (see 8:32; 42:18c), because God will deal with them in due time (see 31:24). Some say that the implication that God will deal with them refers to the Battle of Badr in 2/624, when the Makkans were defeated by the Muslims; others say that it refers to the Day of Resurrection, on which all will be judged (Ṭs). The verse can be seen as alluding to punishment in both this world and the Hereafter, but also to mercy insofar as God allows people time to repent.

The Most High

al-Aʿlā

Opinions are divided as to whether al-Aʿlā is a Makkan or Madinan sūrah, but the majority maintain that it is early Makkan. It is often placed eighth in the chronological order of revelation, immediately after Sūrah 81, al-Takwīr. Some consider the first part of the sūrah to be Makkan and the last part to be Madinan, since it contains words about prayer and the zakāh (alms) in vv. 14–15, which, according to narrations from the family of the Prophet, refer to "the prayer and zakāh on the ʿĪd al-fiṭr [Feast of Breaking Fast]," which was not institutionalized until the Madinan period (Ṭb). Others say that it can still refer to these ritual practices, although it was revealed before them, and that the whole sūrah is Makkan (Bg).

The Prophet is said to have recommended reciting *Sūrah*s 87 and 88 for the evening prayer. These same *sūrah*s were often recited by the Prophet on both the ʿĪd al-fiṭr, marking the end of Ramadan, and the ʿĪd al-aḍḥā, marking the completion of the ḥajj, and during the Friday congregational prayer (IK). He is also said to have advised his followers to recite it while in prostration (Ṭs). In the Shiite tradition, it is related that, according to Imam ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, if people knew what a blessing al-Aʿlā has, every person would recite it ten times each day, and one who recites it has, in essence, recited the Quran and the scriptures of Moses and Abraham.

The sūrah begins with glorification of God (vv. 1–5) and encouragement for the Prophet (vv. 6–9) followed by a contrast between those who heed the Quran and those who avoid it (vv. 10–15). It concludes with a sharp rebuke of those who prefer this world (vv. 16–17) and an affirmation of the connection between the Quran and previous revelations (vv. 18–19).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Glorify the Name of thy Lord, the Most High, (2) Who created, then fashioned, (3) Who measured out, then guided, (4) and Who brought forth pasture, (5) then made it as blackened stubble. (6) We shall teach thee to recite, that thou wilt not forget, (7) save what God wills. Truly He knows that which is open and that which is hidden. (8) And We shall ease thy way unto ease.

1 Regarding the relationship between the different ways in which God is glorified in the Quran, see 64:1c. The Most High can be understood to modify Lord or the Name, though most prefer the former (R, Ṭ). When Most High modifies Lord, the verse is simply an injunction to glorify God. When it modifies the Name, the verse is understood to provide instruction regarding the manner in which one should glorify God, meaning that one should refrain from associating the Name of God with any other thing (R) or that one should praise God with the Names that God has revealed, as in 17:110: Call upon God, or call upon the Compassionate (R). It is said that when So glorify the Name of thy Lord, the Magnificent (56:74) was revealed, the Prophet told his Companions, "Enact it when you bow [in prayer]," and when the present verse was revealed, he said, "Enact it when you prostrate" (Q, R). Muslims thus say "Glory be to God, the Magnificent" three times when bowing in prayer and the formula "Glory be to God, the Most High" three times when prostrating.

2–3 Here created refers to human beings in particular, to human beings and animals, or to all of creation (R). With regard to the first, God fashioned the first human being after breathing into him of His Spirit, leaving him without irregularities. Then He measured out his form and figure and bestowed the nourishment required for existence (Ṭs). Measured out renders qaddara, which can also be read qadara, meaning to have power or to determine, in which case the verse indicates that after God created and fashioned, He maintained direct power over all that He created (R).

Here guidance refers to the instinct God puts in all things to be able to seek the nourishment that He has already measured out for them or to the manner in which He guides people to His religion and to knowledge of His Unity by manifesting signs and clear proofs (Ṭs). The broader implication is that creation is as it should be, without imperfection or flaw (see 67:3–4c).

4–5 These verses allude to the manner in which God maintains power over the creation and destruction of all living things. Pasture renders marʿā, which refers to all forms of vegetation.

6 This verse is an assurance that God will grant revelation in due time and ensure the Prophet does not forget it. It is reported that when the Archangel Gabriel came, the Prophet would sometimes recite the beginning of the passage being revealed before Gabriel had finished, fearing that he might forget. So this verse was revealed (Bg, Ṭs). In 20:114 and 75:16–17, the Prophet is also counseled not to "hasten" the revelation.

7 The Prophet is counseled that if a verse has been forgotten, it is because God willed it, not because of a fault on the part of the Prophet (R). Muslims believe that God abrogated some verses and caused others to be "forgotten," but always replaced them with better verses. For a discussion of abrogation, see commentary on 2:106: No sign do We abrogate or cause to be forgotten, but that We bring that which is better than it or like unto it; and the essay "The Quran as Source of Islamic Law."

8 Some understand this verse as an allusion to the uncomplicated nature of the revealed law (JJ, R). See 2:185: God desires ease for you, and He does not desire hardship for you; and 94:5–6. Others say that in light of vv. 6–7, this verse indicates that God will make it easy for the Prophet to memorize the Quran (R). Others interpret the verse as a reference to God's easing the way for believers to enter Paradise (R).

(9) So remind, should the reminder benefit, (10) he who fears will remember; (11) while the most wretched shall avoid it— (12) he who enters into the greatest Fire, (13) then neither dies therein nor lives. (14) He indeed prospers who is purified, (15) remembers the Name of his Lord and prays. (16) Nay, but you prefer the life of this world, (17) while the Hereafter is better and more enduring. (18) Truly this is in the scriptures of old, (19) the scriptures of Abraham and Moses.

9 This verse implies that whether it is of benefit or not, all should be reminded of God's message (Bg), for all will be held accountable.

10–11 Those who are certain of the return to God and those who admit to it but are not certain of it are those who fear God (v. 10), while those who deny the return to God are the most wretched (v. 11; R). In relation to v. 9, these verses imply that the reminder only benefits those who fear God.

10 Cf. 50:45: So remind, by the means of the Quran, those who fear My Threat.

12–13 Cf. 20:74; 74:28–29. The "greatest" or "greater" Fire is that of the Hereafter, while the lesser fire is that of this world (JJ, R). Alternately, v. 12 alludes to different degrees of punishment, with the greatest Fire being that for which the most wretched are destined (R). In Arabic, to say that one neither lives nor dies is to indicate that one is suffering great trials (R); see 35:36.

14–15 According to some, He indeed prospers who is purified refers to purification from idolatry by professing God's Oneness. Others say that it refers to purification through good deeds, while still others say it refers specifically to the alms given on ʿĪd al-fiṭr (Bg, Ṭb, Ṭs). According to Shiite tradition, the sixth Imam, Jaʿfar al-Ṣādiq, stated that the order of the verses refers to the alms being given in the morning before the two cycles of the ʿĪd prayer.

Here prayer is taken by most as a reference to the five canonical prayers, and by some as a reference to the congregational prayer said on the morning of ʿĪd al-fiṭr (Bg). According to some, remembers the Name of his Lord refers to mentioning the Name of God in the basmalah at the beginning of each prayer (Ṭs); others emphasize that it means to remember with both heart and tongue, as remembering God with the tongue while being heedless of God in the heart has no benefit and no reward (Āl). These two verses can be taken together as referring to worshipping with all aspects of one's being by purifying the heart, remembering God with the tongue, and performing the actions commanded by God, the foremost of which is prayer (Āl).

16–17 According to some, you is here an address to the disbelievers, while others say that it refers to all of humanity. Regarding the relationship between this world and the Hereafter, a ḥadīth states, "The world is the prison of the believer and the garden of the disbeliever"; see 93:4c.

18–19 This refers to either the subjects mentioned in vv. 14–17 (Ṭs), the whole of this sūrah (Ṭ), or the entire Quran, as in 26:196: It is indeed in the scriptures of those of old (Āl). Although Judaism and Christianity do not ascribe a revealed book to Abraham, that Abraham had a particular scripture is implied in both the Quran and the Ḥadīth. When the Prophet was asked how many revealed books there were, he responded, "One hundred and four books. He sent down fifty scrolls to Seth, thirty scrolls to Idrīs, ten scrolls to Abraham, and ten scrolls [understood by some to be tablets (alwāḥ)] to Moses before the Torah. And He sent down the Torah, the Gospel, the Psalms, and the Criterion [i.e., the Quran]" (Āl). This tradition has a slightly different narration in Shiite sources (Ṭs); some say the scrolls revealed to Abraham were twenty in number.

The Overwhelming Event

al-Ghāshiyah

Al-Ghāshiyah was revealed in Makkah. It takes its name from the mention of the overwhelming event in the first verse, which most maintain refers to the Day of Resurrection. It can be seen as related to the previous sūrah insofar as it elaborates upon the dichotomy between the believers and the disbelievers discussed in 87:11–15. The sūrah begins with a vivid description of the torments suffered in the Fire (vv. 1–7), followed by a description of the blessings enjoyed in the Garden (vv. 8–16). It then calls people to witness the signs of God in His creation (vv. 17–20) and concludes by reminding the Prophet that he is only a warner and is not responsible for the final end of those who do not heed the call (vv. 21–26). It is reported that the Prophet would often recite this sūrah during the Friday congregational prayer along with the previous sūrah (Āl).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Hast thou heard tell of the overwhelming event? (2) Faces that Day shall be humbled, (3) toiling, weary, (4) entering a scorching Fire, (5) given drink from a boiling spring. (6) They will have no food, save a vile thorn (7) that neither nourishes nor avails against hunger. (8) Faces that Day shall be blessed, (9) contented by their endeavoring, (10) in a lofty Garden (11) wherein they hear no idle

1 The beginning of the verse can also be rendered, "Thou hast heard tell" (Āl). If understood as a question, it is rhetorical, for emphasis. In the context of this sūrah, the overwhelming event most likely refers to the Day of Resurrection, whose grandeur will overcome all of humanity (cf. 12:107; JJ). But it is also taken by some to mean that Hell will "cover" or "overwhelm" the people in layers (cf. 7:41; Āl) or that the Fire will overwhelm the faces of disbelievers (cf. 14:50; Ṭs).

2 Here, humbled means abased or humiliated (IK, JJ). Cf. 75:24. Unlike humility that one experiences in this world, this humility will reportedly be of no benefit to disbelievers (IK) since the door to repentance is open only in this world, not in the Hereafter.

3–4 Toiling, weary can be understood as a reference to their toil in the scorching Fire, which is said to be dragging chains and shackles, or to their toil in this world, which is for naught if done in opposition to God (Ṭs). Others see toiling as a reference to performing disobedient acts in this world and weary as a reference to suffering in the Fire (IK). Taṣlā, here rendered "entering," can also be read Tuṣlā, meaning, "made to enter."

5 Boiling spring refers to water at the highest possible heat (cf. 55:44; IK), a stark contrast to the flowing spring in v. 12.

6 Vile thorn translates ḍarīᶜ, which is the name given to the dry version of a bitter and thorny desert shrub called shibrīq. When dry, it is said to be so vile that no animal will eat it (Āl, Bg, Q, Ṭs). Some say that it designates a tree of the Fire (Q, Ṭ), similar to Zaqqūm in 37:62; 44:43; and 56:52. According to a ḥadīth, "Ḍarīᶜ is a thing in the Fire that resembles thorns. It is bitterer than aloes, more fetid than a putrid corpse, and more burning than fire. God has named the thing ḍarīᶜ" (Q). Some say ḍarīᶜ means "poison" (Ṭs). Others say that it derives from the verb ḍaraᶜa, meaning "to humble" or "to abase," because eating ḍarīᶜ is part of the humiliation and abasement for those in the Fire (Q, Ṭs). Most commentators agree that it is not the same as other things the disbelievers will be made to eat in Hell, such as Zaqqūm and filth (ghislīn; 69:36), but that these refer to the vegetation found in different levels of the Fire (Q).

7 It is related that in response to v. 6 the Arabs said, "Our camels are nourished by ḍarīᶜ," though it was actually shibrīq, the shrub before it dried. So this verse was revealed (Bg, Q, Ṭs).

8 For characteristics of faces in the Hereafter, see 75:22–23; 80:38; 83:24.

9 In contrast to those whose deeds bear no fruit in the Hereafter in v. 3, those referred to in this verse will realize and enjoy the fruits of their labor.

11 In Paradise there be will no vain discourse (IK); cf. 19:62; 56:25; 78:35. Here they is based upon reading the faces in v. 8 as the subject of the verb. It could also be understood as an address to the Prophet in the second person singular, "thou hearest no idle talk therein." In another variant, the verb is read in the passive talk. (12) Therein lies a flowing spring. (13) Therein are raised couches, (14) goblets placed, (15) cushions arrayed, (16) and carpets spread. (17) Do they not consider the camels, how they are created; (18) the sky, how it is raised; (19) the mountains, how they are established; (20) and the earth, how it is spread? (21) So remind! Thou art but a reminder; (22) thou art not a warder over them. (23) But whosoever turns away and disbelieves, (24) God shall punish him with the greatest punishment. (25) Truly unto Us is their return, (26) then truly with Us lies their reckoning.

with idle talk as the subject, "no idle talk is heard therein."

12 Spring can be read as having a generic import indicating a multitude of springs in heaven (IK, Ṭs, Z).

13 These are the same as the embroidered couches mentioned in 56:15. Those seated upon such couches are said to have had all rancor removed from their breasts (cf. 15:47).

14 The mention of goblets in the Quran is taken as an allusion to the wine of Paradise, which they contain; see 56:18–19c; 78:34c.

17–20 Camels, mountains, sky, and earth would be the most predominate aspects of any desert journey in Arabia, indeed of desert life itself. These verses indicate that reflecting upon the signs of God in the created order should suffice to make one understand the truth.

17 Camels were central to desert livelihood, as they were easy to domesticate; could be eaten, milked, or used as beasts of burden; and could carry large loads for many days, surviving on little water and thorny desert brush (Bg, IK, Ṭs). The camel is thus seen in many commentaries and in Islamic literature in general as one of the supreme examples of God's Wisdom and Power. The reference to camels can also be understood as an allusion to the docile nature of camels, who despite their strength will yield to one who is leading them. In this sense, the verse could be read as chastising human beings for not yielding to the guidance of God in the manner that camels yield to their guides (ST).

18 Cf. 50:6.

19–20 The mountains being made firm is cited as evidence of God's Power and Mercy in several verses (13:3; 15:19; 16:15; 21:31; 27:61; 31:10; 41:10; 50:7; 79:32) and is often joined to a discussion of the earth being spread out in such a way that human beings derive many benefits from it.

21–26 The Prophet's mission is only to remind people of the truth. He will not be held responsible for the faith or disbelief of others, as in 13:40: Thine is only to proclaim, and Ours is the Reckoning (cf. 3:20; 5:92, 99; 16:35, 82; 29:18; 36:17; 42:48; 64:12), and he does not have the ability to create faith in their hearts (IK). That judgment and reckoning lie with God alone is also mentioned in 6:52, 69; 13:40; 26:113.

The Dawn

al-Fajr

Most commentators consider al-Fajr to be an early Makkan sūrah, though some maintain that it is Madinan (Āl). Most likely the tenth sūrah in the chronological order of revelation, it takes its title from the first word of the sūrah. It follows upon the previous sūrah in that Faces that Day shall be humbled, toiling, weary (88:2–3) can be seen as applying to those for whom thy Lord poured upon them the scourge of punishment (v. 13), and Faces that Day shall be blessed, contented by their endeavoring (88:8–9) can be seen as applying to those to whom God says, O thou soul at peace! Return unto thy Lord, content, contenting (vv. 27–28). The sūrah begins with a series of oaths (vv. 1–4) followed by brief descriptions of the punishments that befell tyrannical regimes in the past (vv. 6–13). This transitions to a discussion of the human tendency to vacillate in the face of fortune or trial (vv. 14–16), a rebuke to those who are stingy (vv. 17–20), and a reminder of the Day of Judgment (vv. 21–26), culminating in an address to the souls of the believers, here referred to as the soul at peace (vv. 27–30).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) By the dawn, (2) by the ten nights, (3) by the even and the odd, (4) and by the night as it recedes! (5) Is there an oath therein for one who is mindful? (6) Hast thou not seen how thy Lord dealt with ᶜĀd, (7) Iram the pillared, (8) the like of which was never created in all the land, (9) Thamūd who

1–2 Some see these verses as a reference to the break of dawn at the beginning of Muḥarram, the first month of the Islamic calendar, and to its first ten nights. Others see them as a reference to the break of dawn at the Feast of Sacrifice at the end of the ḥajj and the first ten nights of the sacred month of Dhu'l-Ḥijjah, the month of the ḥajj (see 2:196–97; 22:27–29). Others see them as a reference to the break of dawn during Ramadan and the last ten nights of Ramadan, the period during which the Quran is said to have first been revealed (see the introduction to Sūrah 97; R, Ṭs).

3 Commentators have given this verse up to thirty-six different interpretations (Ṭb). Some interpret even as a reference to all of creation, for as 78:6–8 says, Did We not . . . create you in pairs, and odd as a reference to God, Who is One without peer, hence odd (R, Ṭs). According to a saying attributed to the Prophet, this verse refers to the prayers, most of which have an even number of prayer cycles, and one of which, the sunset prayer (maghrib), has an odd number of cycles (R, Ṭs). Others say that odd refers to the Day of ᶜArafah, which is the ninth day of the ḥajj, and that even refers to either the eighth day, when the pilgrims travel to Mt. ᶜArafāt, or the tenth day, which is the Feast of Sacrifice (Ṭs). According to other interpretations, the odd refers to Adam, and the even to Eve (R, Ṭs); the even refers to Ṣafā and Marwah, between which the pilgrims pass during the pilgrimage, and the odd refers to the Kaᶜbah (Ṭs). One Shiite interpretation maintains that the even refers to ᶜAlī and Fāṭimah and the odd refers to the Prophet himself (Ṭs).

4 Most commentators interpret this verse as a reference to night in general (Q, R), in which case it is seen to indicate the Wisdom of God's measuring between night and day (R). Some say that it could be a specific reference to the night of the ḥajj when the pilgrims gather on the plain of Muzdalifah before moving to Minā (Q, R, Ṭs). Others say it could be seen as a reference to the Night of Power (see 97:1–2; Q).

5 One who is mindful (dhī ḥijr) is derived from the verb ḥajara, meaning "to prevent" or "to prohibit." Ḥijr is thus understood to indicate the intellect, because it prevents one from falling into error and confusion (R, Z). Ḥijr can also be taken to imply self-control (ḥilm; Ṭ).

6 For the account of the ᶜĀd, a pre-Islamic southern Arabian tribe who rejected the Prophet Hūd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16; 54:18–21.

7–8 Iram is believed to refer to either a particular people or the city of the ᶜĀd. Several sources cite the Arabian legend that this city was built by Shaddād, the son of ᶜĀd, with gold and silver and trees full of jewels. Some say ᶜĀd was a son of ᶜAwṣ, the son of Iram, the son of Sham, the son of Noah, and since the name of the ancestor of a tribe was used for the tribe, the tribe of ᶜĀd was also called Iram (Z). Iram is then taken as a reference to ᶜĀd the Former (53:50), while ᶜĀd the Latter were simply referred to as ᶜĀd. According to this interpretation, pillared refers to the tall stature of the people. If taken as a reference to a city where they lived, pillared refers to the architecture of their city. Pillared can also be seen as a reference to the quality of their stature, as in Arabic to say individuals are rafīᶜ al-ᶜimād, literally "with raised pillar," means that they are of a noble stature.

9 For the account of the Thamūd, a pre-Islamic northern Arabian tribe who rejected the Prophet Ṣāliḥ, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31.

hollowed the rocks in the valley, (10) and Pharaoh of the tent poles, (11) who tyrannized the land (12) and increased corruption therein? (13) So thy Lord poured upon them the scourge of punishment. (14) Truly thy Lord lies in ambush. (15) As for man, whenever his Lord tests him, then honors him and blesses him, he says, "My Lord has honored me." (16) And as for whenever He tries him and straitens his provision, he says, "My Lord has abased me." (17) Nay, but you honor not the orphan, (18) nor urge you the feeding of the 10 For the possible meanings of tent poles (awtād) in relation to Pharaoh, see 38:12c.

11–12 These verses refer to all three groups mentioned in vv. 6–10.

13 Poured indicates the continuous nature of the punishment that is realized in this life and the next. Scourge translates sawṭ, which indicates something that is mixed in various ways. Thus it also means a "whip," which is woven of various materials. Here it indicates either the nature of the punishment in which blood and flesh are said to be mixed together or to the various punishments that afflicted the three peoples (Q, R): a howling, raging wind for the tribe of ʿĀd (69:6; cf. 41:16; 51:41; 54:19), an "overwhelming" earthquake for the tribe of Thamūd (69:5; cf. 7:78), and the drowning of Pharaoh and his host (2:50; 7:136c; 8:54; 10:90; 17:102–3; 28:40; 43:55; 44:23–24; 51:40).

14 Nothing escapes God, for He is ever watchful, hearing what people say in public and private, seeing what they do publicly and privately, and rewarding or punishing them accordingly (Q; cf. 78:21). The point is that no matter what respite God may allow for tyrants to work corruption, they will be punished for it in due time, as in 3:178; 7:182–83; 22:48.

15–16 Cf. 22:11; 23:55–56; 30:36; 41:51. Human beings are inclined to think that wealth and status are marks of true worth or signs of one's standing with God, forgetting that God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:36, 39; 39:52; 42:12; see 34:39c) and that surely the most noble of you before God are the most reverent of you (49:13). Al-Rāzī connects the present verses to 30:7: They know some outward aspect of the life of this world, but of the Hereafter they are heedless; and to 22:11: And among mankind some worship God upon a brink: if good befalls him, he is content thereby, but if a trial befalls him, he is turned over upon his face. The implication is that human beings forget the balance between the things of this world and those of the next. What appears to be a benefit in this world may in fact be a detriment in the next, and one who appears abased here may in fact be honored in the Hereafter, and vice-versa. With regard to the balance between this world and the next, the more people incline to the sensory things of this world, the more difficult will be their passage from it (R). According to a ḥadīth qudsī, "God says, 'Truly I do not honor one whom I have honored with worldly abundance; and I do not abase one whom I have abased with paucity thereof. I only honor one whom I have honored with obedience unto Me; and I only abase one whom I have abased with disobedience unto Me'" (Q).

17–20 Nay is a rebuke to those who make the errors implied in vv. 15–16 (Q, R). The accusation that they devour inheritance and do not honor the orphan alludes to the abuse of the inheritance bequeathed to orphans, a point that is addressed in 2:220; 4:2–3, 8–10, 127; 6:152 (cf. 107:1–3). Some read all of these verses in the third-person plural rather than the second-person plural (Q, Ṭ). Either reading is accepted. Following upon vv. 15–16, the implication of vv. 17–20 is that failure to appreciate the true nature of God's honoring and abasing leads people to act inequitably toward those who are less privileged (Ṭs).

18 There is disagreement about how urge you should be read. It can be read in two ways in indigent. (19) You devour inheritance with rapacious devouring, (20) and love wealth with abounding love. (21) Nay, but when the earth is ground up, grinding upon grinding, (22) and your Lord comes with the angels, row upon row; (23) and Hell is brought forth that Day—that Day man will remember; yet whence will that remembrance avail him? (24) He will say, "Would that I had sent forth for my life!" (25) That Day none punishes as He punishes, (26) and none binds as He binds. (27) O thou soul at peace! (28) Return unto thy Lord, content, contenting. (29) Enter among My servants. (30) Enter My Garden.

the second-person plural: transitive, taḥuḍḍūna, meaning "nor urge you," or reflexive, taḥāḍḍūna, meaning "nor urge you one another." And it can be read two ways in the third-person plural: transitive, yaḥuḍḍūna, meaning "nor do they urge," or reflexive, yuḥāḍḍūna, meaning "nor do they urge one another" (Q, Ṭ). When read in the third person, it is seen as applying to those mentioned in vv. 15–16 (cf. 69:34).

19 This verse means that people consume whatever they can find without knowing or questioning whether it is permitted (ḥalāl) or forbidden (ḥarām; Ṭ). Here it implies that they consume both their own share of an inheritance and that of others (Ṭ).

20 Cf. 102:1–2; 104:1–3.

21 Nay is a response to those who commit the sins mentioned in vv. 17–20. Ground up implies that all things have been destroyed and reduced to sand, as if by a great earthquake (Q, R; cf. 20:105–7; 56:5; 69:14; 79:6–7). According to some this grinding will prepare the plain on which all human beings and jinn will then be gathered for the Reckoning on the Day of Judgment (IK, Ṭ; see 18:47c; 20:106; 79:14c).

22 As God is not considered to have a body or be a "thing" that can be said to be in a particular place or to move from one place to another, some commentators read this verse as an allusion to God's Power, Decree, or Command (Q, R). Others say that it indicates God's Presence, because true knowledge (maʿrifah) of God will come on that Day, even if some had denied God before it (R, Ṭs). It is said that the angels will be lined up like Muslims in prayer (Ṭs). Others say the angels will descend from every heaven forming lines around the believers (R; cf. 78:38).

23–24 With regard to Hell . . . brought forth, a ḥadīth says, "Hellfire will be brought forth that Day and it will have seventy thousand leashes, and each leash will have seventy thousand angels pulling it" (IK, Q). These verses indicate that people will remember how they conducted themselves in this world, but there will be no opportunity for repentance or to make up for lost time. Most commentators say Would that I had sent forth for my life means, "Would that I had sent forth good deeds that would save me from the Fire" (Q, R). Yet even believers will have some regret, since as a ḥadīth says, "There is no time wherein the son of Adam does not remember God, but that it will be a source of regret for him on the Day of Judgment."

25–26 Ultimately, God will be the only one who punishes anyone on the Day of Judgment, meaning that there is no punishment like the punishment inflicted on that Day. The binding alludes to the chains and shackles mentioned in 13:5; 34:33; 36:8; 40:71; 76:4. Others read, "He punishes none with his punishment, and He binds none with his binding" (Āl, Qu, R), meaning that God will not punish anyone with the punishment of another or that God will not punish anyone as severely as He punishes the disbelievers (Qu). This interpretation could be general, meaning that no one suffers the punishment or binding due another, since none shall bear the burden of another (6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; 53:38; Āl, R, Z). It could also be specific, applying to a particular individual (Āl, Q, Z) or to Satan (Āl).

27–30 It is said that these verses are an address from the angels to human beings (Āl, Q, R, Sy) or directly from God Himself (Āl, R), delivered either at the moment of death, when the soul leaves the body, or on the Day of Resurrection (Q, R, Ṭs). They play an important role in Muslim piety, as they are often recited in eulogies for the dead and are seen by Sufis and others as a reference to the true nature of the soul when it is purified of all defilements.

27 The soul at peace is said to be the soul that has certainty (Q, Qu, R); this is the meaning of Abraham's request to God in 2:260, So that my heart may be at peace (R). The soul at peace is also said to possess true knowledge, or gnosis (maʿrifah; Qu, R). Elsewhere the soul is said to be at peace in the remembrance of God (13:28; Q, Qu, R). From one perspective, the degree of remembrance is in accord with the strength of certainty (Āl), both of which are in accord with the degree of peace. Others speak of the soul so illuminated by the heart that all blameworthy character traits have been removed and all praiseworthy character traits are manifest (Jurjānī, al-Taʿrīfāt, 239). It is reported that Ubayy ibn Kaʿb (d. 29/649), one of the leading authorities on the Quran among the Prophet's Companions, read this verse as "O thou soul secure (āminah), at peace" (Q, R), implying the soul that is not fazed by fear or sorrow (Aj, R), unlike those described in vv. 15–16.

The soul is said to have three levels: the soul at peace (v. 27), which is in command of its lusts and desires and has attained certainty; the blaming soul (75:2), which strives to overcome its lusts and desires; and the soul that commands to evil (12:53), which is at the mercy of its lusts and desires; see 75:1–2c; 12:53c. The soul at peace is said to be "that which issues from the light of the first [Divine] Address, through which it was brought into being out of nonexistence by the light of pretemporality (nūr al-qidam) and it is at peace with the Real [i.e., God], with His Address, and in union with Him (wa bi wiṣālihi). Then its Lord calls it to its first origin (maʿdin), wherein it inclines, from the first to the last, toward nothing other than witnessing God, content with God through God and content in the Presence of God" (Aj).

28 That the soul returns to its Lord is understood to imply that it was with its Lord in the Garden before creation (R). Many interpret this verse to mean content with the reward of God and contenting to God for having performed good deeds (Q, R). Others understand it as an indication that one is content with everything that God has decreed for all matters. Still others take it as an indication that the soul returns to the Divine Essence in a state of complete contentment (Aj, K), in which case, content, contenting could be read as two different levels of contentment: the first is the contentment experienced from God through God, and the second, the contentment experienced when standing before God (Aj). Some emphasize that there can be no contentment with God until God is content with souls, as in 5:119; 9:100; 58:22; and 98:8: God being content with them and they being content with Him (K). Contentment is seen by some as one of the most important virtues; it has been described as "the greatest gate of God and the paradise of this world" (Qu, Risālah).

29–30 Among My servants means among the righteous servants, as in the supplication of Solomon in 27:19: My Lord, . . . cause me to enter, through Thy Mercy, among Thy righteous servants! (Aj; cf. 29:9). In this sense it is read as an address to the spiritual elect (K). Some read, "Enter into My servants," meaning their bodies, thus alluding to spirits returning to bodies for the bodily resurrection (Q, R, Sy, Ṭs). Some say it can mean both at the same time (Āl). According to several aḥādīth, the Hereafter has progressive levels with lower and higher gardens. Thus, while most take My Garden as an allusion to Paradise in general, some take it as an allusion to the highest Garden, the Garden of the Divine Essence, in the very Presence of God (K); see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran."

The Land

al-Balad

Most commentators consider al-Balad to be from the early Makkan period, although al-Suyūṭī and others maintain that it was revealed immediately after Sūrah 50, Qāf, in the middle of the Makkan period. A minority maintain that it is Madinan, or that all but the first four verses are Madinan (Āl). The sūrah takes its title from the mention of this land in the first verse. It begins with two oaths that lead into a discussion of the human condition (vv. 1–4). It then reproaches human beings for failing to realize the nature of their condition and failing to put their faculties and possessions to proper use (vv. 5–11), followed by instruction as to how they should act (vv. 12–17), and concluding with a contrast between the companions of the right and the companions of the left (vv. 18–20).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) Nay, I swear by this land, (2) while thou art free in this land; (3) and [by] the begetter, and that which he begat! (4) Truly We created man in travail. (5) Does he suppose that none will ever have power over him? (6) He says,

1 Some read this verse without Nay, interpreting that the article lā as one of emphasis rather than negation (Q). When read as an article of negation, it can be seen as a rebuke to those who are of the disposition criticized in vv. 5–11 (Q) or as a rebuke to the Quraysh (IK). Land, translating balad, can refer to Arabia, though a majority read it as "city," referring to Makkah (Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), and a minority say it refers to Madinah (Q). Balad can also be read in a more general manner as a reference to the earth.

2 Most interpret this verse to mean that the Prophet is free to act as he deems best in Makkah (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). In this sense, it is seen as a direct response to the conquest of Makkah in 8/630 or, if revealed during the Makkan period, as a premonition of the conquest, in which a few members of the Quraysh were slain. Even in pre-Islamic times, Makkah was considered sacrosanct and fighting there was prohibited. That the Muslim armies spilled blood there during the conquest was thus seen as a grave violation. It is reported that the Prophet said, "Truly God made Makkah sacred on the day that He created the heavens and the earth. Therefore, it is sacred until the Hour is come [i.e., the end of time]. And it was not made lawful (tuḥalla) to any before me and will not be made lawful to any after me; and it was only made lawful to me for one hour of a day" (IK, Q, R, Ṭs). Others say that this verse refers to God giving the Prophet free passage through Makkah, even if the Quraysh did not (Ṭs), for, as the Quraysh were the keepers of the Kaʿbah, it was a disgrace for them to not allow someone, let alone one of God's messengers, access to it. The verse could also be read, "And thou art present in the land," alluding to the fact that this land has been honored by God with the presence of His Messenger (R).

3 The begetter, and that which he begat means Adam and his progeny, or every begetter and every begotten (Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs), thus all of humanity from its beginning to its end. Or the phrase can be seen as a reference to Abraham and Ishmael (R, Ṭs) or to Ishmael and his progeny (Q), both linking it to this land because of Abraham's association with Makkah and because Ishmael was seen as the father of the Arabs; see 2:126c. Another metaphorical interpretation states that the begetter is the Prophet and that which he begat is his community (Q). Some also read it as an allusion to the Prophet's descent from Abraham (ST).

4 Many commentators relate this verse to the interpretation attributed to al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, "Enduring the hardships of the world in life and the severities of the Hereafter" (IK, Q, Ṭs). Others relate it to 46:15, His mother carried him in travail and bore him in travail, and see it as a reference to the hardships of this world: from birth, to weaning, to earning a living, to growing old, to facing death (IK, R), for in life there is naught but toil and trial (R). Others see it as a reference to the trials of death, the grave, and the Day of Judgment (R). Travail translates kabad, which can also mean "erect" or "upright." When read this way, this verse is sometimes interpreted as a reference to man being the only creature that walks upright upon two legs (Ṭ).

5–6 V. 5 asks, "Does man not think that he will be held accountable for all his actions?" In context, the implication is that those who are deluded by their own wealth do not realize that God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:36, 39) and can remove their wealth at any moment. It also implies both that people will be taken to account for how they have spent their wealth and that they are responsible for the manner in which wealth is obtained, no matter how philanthropic they may be. Some have said that v. 6 refers to Ḥarith ibn ʿĀmir, who, when the Prophet advised

"I have squandered vast wealth!" (7) Does he suppose that no one sees him? (8) Did We not make for him two eyes, (9) a tongue, and two lips, (10) and guide him upon the two highways? (11) Yet he has not assailed the steep pass. (12) And what will apprise thee of the steep pass? (13) [It is] the freeing of a slave, (14) or him to pay money for the atonement of a sin, objected, "My money has gone to atonements and payments since the day I entered the religion of Muhammad" (Q, Ṭs), thus implying that he did not understand the spiritual value of his expenditures and thought he had squandered his wealth.

7 This verse asks, "Do people think that God will not ask how they obtained their wealth and how they spent it?" (R, Ṭ). Some say this refers to a specific individual who claimed to have spent money for Islam, though he had not spent anything (R, Ṭs). A ḥadīth says, "The servant does not move forward on the Day of Resurrection until he has been asked about three things: about his years, how he passed them; about his wealth, from what he acquired it and on what he spent it; and about his knowledge, what he did with it" (Āl); a Shiite version adds a fourth, "and about his love for the People of the Household [i.e., the family of the Prophet]" (Ṭs).

8–9 The implication is that one who is able to make these subtle instruments from which human beings derive great benefit would certainly be able to know every deed and hold human beings accountable for what they have done with these instruments.

10 The two highways are interpreted to be those of good and evil, as in a well-known ḥadīth, "O people! There are only two highways: the highway of good and the highway of evil. Make not the highway of evil more beloved to you than the highway of good" (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs). Some commentators relate this to 76:3: Truly We guided him upon the way, be he grateful or ungrateful (IK, R).

11–12 Assail translates iqtaḥama, meaning to do something with great intensity (R, Z) or to throw oneself into something without consideration of the consequences (Āl, Q). The implication is that those who contribute money for religious purposes, but then regret it, saying, I have squandered vast wealth (v. 6), or those who have failed to engage fully in similar religious duties have not achieved the full measure of sincerity—have not fully embarked upon the highway of good—and are not thankful for the great blessings God has provided, such as those mentioned in vv. 8–9. Thus al-Zamakhsharī glosses v. 11 with 3:117: The parable of what they spend in this life of the world is that of a frigid wind that strikes the tillage of a people who have wronged themselves, destroying it. God wrongs them not, but themselves do they wrong. In this interpretation, the steep pass is a metaphorical reference to distributing wealth in the manner mentioned in vv. 13–17 and accomplishing meritorious deeds. It is thus likened to "striving" (mujāhadah) for God (Q, R), as in a famous saying attributed to al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, "The steep pass of God is severe; it is the human being's striving against his soul, his caprice, and his enemy, Satan" (Q, R). Some view the steep pass as an allusion to one or several of the obstacles that disbelievers will encounter in the Hereafter (Q, R, Ṭ). Given what follows in vv. 13–17, many read v. 12 to mean, "What will apprise thee of assailing the steep pass?" (Q). Al-Tustarī likens assailing the steep pass to attaining spiritual knowledge (maʿrifah), which can only be done through the power and strength of God by which one frees the soul of desire (ST).

13 A ḥadīth states, "Whoever releases a believing slave (raqabah), he will be his ransom from the Fire" (Q, Ṭ). There is a debate as to which is more praiseworthy, charity (ṣadaqah) or the manumission of a slave. Some point to the placement of this verse before the following verses as an indication that manumission is superior (Q, R). This verse can also imply that one should free one's own neck (raqabah) through repentance (Bg, Ṭs) or by performing the acts of worship by which one attains Paradise, since that is considered to be the greatest freedom (R).

14 This verse points to the fact that giving one's wealth is more difficult in times of need, though of greater benefit. Thus al-Rāzī glosses this verse with 2:177; and 76:8: And give food, giving food at a time of famine (15) to an orphan near of kin, (16) or an indigent, clinging to the dust, (17) while being one of those who believe and exhort one another to patience, and exhort one another to compassion. (18) Those are the companions of the right. (19) And those who disbelieve in Our signs, they are the companions of the left. (20) Upon them is a Fire enclosed.

despite loving it, to the indigent, the orphan, and the captive.

15 This verse constitutes two meritorious acts, as one should be generous toward orphans and toward relatives (Q, R). Most maintain that orphan (yatīm) indicates one whose father has passed away; while some maintain it is both parents (R).

16 An indigent is one who has no home other than the dust (Q, Ṭ).

17 One does not assail the steep pass by simply performing the deeds mentioned in vv. 13–16; one must do so on the basis of belief in God, the requisite condition for God's acceptance of such deeds, as in 9:54: And naught prevented their spending from being accepted from them, save that they disbelieved in God and in His Messenger, and only come to the prayer lazily, and only spend reluctantly (Q). Exhorting to patience (cf. 103:3) pertains to encouraging one another in maintaining religious practice in the face of difficulties and opposition, and exhorting to compassion pertains to encouraging one another toward mercy unto God's creatures (R). As a famous ḥadīth states, "The merciful are those unto whom the Merciful is merciful. Be merciful unto those on earth, and He who is in Heaven will be merciful unto you."

18–19 For the companions of the right, who are said to be in Paradise, see 56:27–40, and for the companions of the left, who are said to be in the Fire, see 56:41–46. For the symbolic distinction between right and left, also see 17:71; 18:49; 56:8–9; 69:19–28; 84:7.

20 Cf. 104:8–9. Enclosed here means locked, for the doors of Hell have been locked upon the disbelievers so that they cannot leave; none of their distress will be lifted from them, and no spirit will enter upon them (R, Ṭs). Enclosed translates mu'sadah, which can also mean "covered over."

The Sun

al-Shams

Al-Shams is an early Makkan sūrah thought by most to have been revealed shortly after Sūrah 97, al-Qadr. It takes its name from the first oath that God takes in the sūrah: By the sun. The first ten verses emphasize the physical and spiritual polarity inherent in creation and the power of the Creator over it; the first eight do so through a series of oaths, the next two (vv. 9–10) by reflecting upon the human soul as it is situated between iniquity and purity. In this sense, the sūrah follows upon the previous sūrah, which distinguishes between the two highways (Āl; 90:10), and those of the left and those of the right. The last five verses focus on the story of the northern Arabian tribe Thamūd as an example of what befalls those who reject God's messengers and disobey them, thus preferring iniquity to purity. That the story of the Thamūd is discussed here and in 54:23–31, two early revelations, and then expanded in later Madinan *sūrah*s (7:73–80; 11:61–69) indicates that it was well known to the Arabs.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

(1) By the sun and its morning brightness; (2) by the moon when following it; (3) by the day when disclosing it; (4) by the night when enshrouding it; (5) by the sky and the One Who established it; (6) by the earth and the One Who spread it; (7) by the soul and the One Who fashioned it (8) and inspired it as

1 For the meaning of ḍuḥāhā, here translated its morning brightness, see the introduction to Sūrah 93.

2 This verse can be read as an allusion to the moon's receiving its light from the sun (IK, Q, R) or to the new crescent moon, which at the start of each lunar month is visible above the horizon near where the sun sets and itself sets soon thereafter (IK, Q). It could also be seen as an allusion to the differing orbits of the moon and the sun, which can be used to measure the passage of time; see 36:40c.

3 Cf. 92:2. It can be taken as a reference to the sun (Q, Ṭ) or to the world or the earth (Q). It can also be seen as a reference to "the darkness" (Ṭ), in which case the verse would read "by the day when dispersing it." From a spiritual perspective, this verse can be read as an allusion to the light of faith extinguishing the darkness of ignorance (ST).

4 This verse refers to the night enshrouding the sun (Q, Ṭ) or enshrouding the world (Q); cf. 92:1. From a spiritual perspective, it can be read as an allusion to sins, persistence in which covers the light of faith (ST).

5–7 According to some, the One Who in these three verses is not appropriate, since God could not swear upon Himself (R). They would thus read "that which" in place of the One Who. Or the three verses could be read, "its being established" (v. 5), "its being spread" (v. 6), and "its fashioning" (v. 7; Q, R, Ṭ), the reading preferred by al-Qurṭubī.

5–6 Cf. 51:47–48: And the sky We established with might; truly We make vast! And the earth We laid out—what excellent spreaders! V. 6 is taken by some to mean, "What He created in it," and by others to mean that He proportioned it (IK).

7 The One Who fashioned it means the One Who created the soul sound and well proportioned, as it was in the original primordial nature (fiṭrah), as indicated in 30:30: Set thy face to religion as a ḥanīf, in the primordial nature from God upon which He originated mankind (IK). Here the soul can be taken as an allusion to the soul of Adam, or the souls of all human beings. As such, it is a call to meditate upon the true nature of the human being, since God created man in the most beautiful stature (95:4; cf. 40:64: My). The invocation of the soul in the midst of this series of polarities implies that the soul has an inherent duality, as becomes clear in the following verses and in 79:37–41. This duality is seen by many in the pair the soul at peace (89:27), which is in control of its lusts and desires and has attained certainty, and the soul that commands to evil (12:53); an intermediate station between the two is the blaming soul (75:2); see 75:1–2c; 89:27c.

8 As translated, this verse indicates that God taught the soul the nature of evil and good and set the course for which it should follow. Thus some relate it to 90:8–10: Did We not . . . guide him upon the two highways? (Q, Sh). It could also be rendered, "He placed its iniquity and its reverence within it" (IK). In both translations it can be taken as a reference to God's instillation of the knowledge of good and evil in every human soul, even before various prophetic revelations. As other verses indicate (e.g., 75:14–15; 81:14; 82:4–5), every soul is intrinsically aware of good and evil, right and wrong, its relation to God, and the covenant to which it attested (see 7:172).

These verses can also be read as an indication that God decrees all things for each human being, the reading preferred by most Ashᶜarite to what makes it iniquitous or reverent! (9) Indeed, he prospers who purifies it. (10) And indeed he fails who obscures it. (11) Thamūd denied in their rebelliousness, (12) when the most wretched of them was dispatched. (13) Then the messenger of God said to them, "[This is] the she-camel of God; give her drink!" (14) But they denied him, then hamstrung her. So their Lord crushed them for their sin, then leveled it; (15) for He fears not the consequence thereof.
